Depositions having been taken, the circuit court was of opinion that the written contract signed by Flippo and dated 1899 was executed at a period subsequent to the date of Terrell's being adjudicated a bankrupt, and that, therefore, the interest of Terrell under this contract did not pass by the decree of the bankrupt court to the plaintiff in this cause; but as Terrell, in his answer, conceded the right of plaintiff to recover, there was nothing to prevent his surrendering whatever interest he had under the contract, and devoting it to the benefit of his creditors; and upon this theory entered a decree in favor of the trustee in bankruptcy, from which Flippo has appealed to this court.

After a careful consideration of the evidence, we have reached the conclusion that Flippo's contract with Terrell was made before the adjudication in bankruptcy, and, as a consequence, the trustee in bankruptcy has a right to sue for and recover whatever interest Terrell had in that contract. We think this conclusion is warranted by the evidence, extrinsic and intrinsic; by the testimony of Terrell, his wife, and his daughter, incidentally corroborated by Brooke, by Gant, and indeed by Flippo himself; by the letter of Brooke, which shows that the terms of the contract of purchase had been reached and agreed upon as early as October 14, 1899; by the deed of bargain and sale from Brooke to Flippo, which bears date November 15, 1899, and is acknowledged November 18, 1899; and by internal evidence to be adduced from the contract itself, which, under the hand and seal of Flippo, shows that at the time of its execution Terrell had bought a farm in Caroline county for $5,000 cash, for which Flippo agreed to pay, to take the deed in his name, and to charge Terrell with one-half of the purchase money. There is a strong probability that this contract was entered into before the execution of the deed of bargain and sale, and, in our judgment, that probability is sustained by a decided preponderance of the testimony.

This conclusion is decisive of the controversy. The case presents no question of implied or resulting trusts. It is a plain and express trust. Terrell having made the bargain with Brooke for the purchase of this land, and being unable to pay any portion of the purchase money, informed Flippo of the fact. Flippo appears to be an active and energetic man of business, engaged in the purchase, sale, and manufacture of lumber. Seeing a profit in the bargain, he signed the contract, recognizing Terrell as the purchaser, and in consideration, obviously, of being enabled to share in a profitable venture, accepted the result of Terrell's negotiation for the purchase of this land from Brooke as Terrell's input, and on his own part expressly agreed to furnish the entire purchase money. When that contract was signed, the right of Terrell to share in whatever profits accrued was established.

We have no difficulty, therefore, in affirming the decree of the circuit court to this extent.

The appellee claims that there is error in the decree prejudicial to him, which, under the rule of the court, it becomes our duty to consider.

The land having been purchased for $5,000, and the timber upon it having been sold for $7,000 in cash, the trustee in bankruptcy would be entitled to one-half of the profits, while the decree appealed from only gave him $700. This result was arrived at by charging Terrell with what it cost Flippo to negotiate the loan of $3,000, with which the balance of the purchase money for the land was paid. Flippo was bound by the terms of his contract to pay the entire purchase money. It was not a matter of grace on his part, but of obligation; his contract bound him to it; and it was error to impose upon Terrell or his trustee the cost incurred by Flippo in discharging the obligation of his contract.

It appears from the bill and from a bill of sale dated the 15th of September, 1899, that Terrell transferred certain property, valued at $1,000, to E. J. Flippo, for which Flippo has never accounted, and it is claimed that this sum should go as a credit upon the share of the purchase money due by Terrell, and, as a result, increase the amount to be recovered by the trustee in bankruptcy.

With respect to this contention we express no opinion, but will reverse the decree of the circuit court in favor of the appellee with respect to the item of $300, enter a decree in favor of the appellee to that effect, and remand the case to the circuit court for further inquiry as to appellant's liability for the property named in the bill of sale dated September 15, 1899, and which appears in the record as "Exhibit J. T. T. No. 4," with the deposition of J. T. Terrell.

COLLINS v. GEORGE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 10, 1904.)

APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS—NEGLIGENCE—FIRE—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. A party objecting to a ruling of the court has a right to have a bill of exceptions which states the truth of the case, and, if necessary, can obtain such a bill by mandamus, but where he has accepted a bill as signed by the judge it is conclusive of what did occur, and its correctness cannot be questioned.

2. The general rule is that it is too late, after a verdict, to object to instructions.

3. Persons in the lawful use of fire must exercise ordinary care to prevent it from injuring others, and what constitutes ordinary care and prudence depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. A failure to have a spark arrester upon a stationary engine is not per se negligence.

4. Where there is sufficient evidence to warrant a verdict, it will not be set aside because it is in conflict with an erroneous instruction given upon the trial.

Error to Circuit Court, Caroline County.

Action by Charles L. Collins against Lewis George. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Chandler & Chandler, for plaintiff in error.
William E. Ennis, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. This action was brought by Charles L. Collins to recover damages for injuries done his property by fire, resulting from the alleged negligence of Lewis D. George.

Upon the trial of the cause a verdict was found in favor of the defendant, which the plaintiff moved the court to set aside upon the ground that the court had misdirected the jury by an oral instruction, and because the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence. This motion was overruled, and judgment entered upon the verdict. To that judgment this writ of error was awarded.

The errors assigned here are the same as the grounds upon which the lower court was asked to set aside the verdict.

The oral instruction complained of was given under the following circumstances, as disclosed by bill of exceptions No. 2:

"After the jury had heard the evidence, had been instructed by the court, and, having heard the argument of counsel, retired to their room to consider of their verdict, and, after being out some time, returned into court, and said they could not agree, the court then told them that if they had disagreed on any question of fact it could not help them, that they were the sole judges of the fact.

"The foreman then told the court that some of the jury could not reconcile the instruction given at the instance of the plaintiff (the one relating to combustible material near the mill) and instruction No. 3 (which had been given at the instance of the defendant, and given by the court without objection by the plaintiff as given), and, as the court understood, desired some explanation as to 'ordinary care.'

"The court then read over said instruction No. 3, and orally told the jury the first thing they had to determine was whether the fire was the result of the negligence of the defendant; that if they believed from the evidence that the defendant was negligent, and believed the evidence on which the plaintiff's instruction was based, they must find for the plaintiff; that instruction No. 3 referred, for instance, to the question as to whether the fire was or was not an accident. In other words, that if they believed from the evidence the fire could not have been prevented by the exercise of ordinary care and caution on the part of the defendant in the management of his sawmill and mill site, and that the defendant had exercised such ordinary care and caution as might be expected of a man ordinarily prudent under similar circumstances, they must find for the defendant; that whether he was negligent, or whether he had exercised such care and caution, they alone must determine.

"The plaintiff did not except to the foregoing, but just as the jury were about to return again to their room to further consider of their verdict plaintiff's counsel asked the court to call the jury's attention specially to this instruction as to combustible material near the mill, but the court, thinking it had done so in sufficient terms, told the jury they must read all the instructions, and must, on the facts, reach their own conclusions."

The plaintiff insists that the bill of exceptions does not state fully nor correctly the oral instruction as understood by the plaintiff's counsel and the jury, and to sustain this contention a letter from a majority of the jury is filed with the plaintiff's petition for the writ of error.

If the bill of exceptions, as signed by the judge, did not correctly state what occurred when the oral instruction was given, the plaintiff had a right to have a bill of exceptions which did state the truth of the case, and, if necessary, could have obtained such a bill by mandamus. Collins v. Christian, 92 Va. 731, 732, 24 S. E. 472. But having elected to accept the bill as signed by the judge, it is conclusive of what did occur when the oral instruction was given, and its correctness cannot be questioned in this court.

As appears from that bill of exceptions, the plaintiff did not except to the oral instruction of the court until after the jury had rendered their verdict and been discharged. The general rule is that it is too late after a verdict to object to instructions. Newport News, etc., Co. v. Bradford, 99 Va. 117, 118, 37 S. E. 807; Richmond & Danville R. R. Co. v. Medley, 75 Va. 499, 503, 40 Am. Rep. 734. But if there be exceptions to the general rule, and this case be within the exceptions, the oral instruction is a correct statement of law, and the action of the court in giving it and in refusing to further instruct the jury upon a question as to which they had already been instructed, and very favorably to the plaintiff, could not have misled the jury to his prejudice.

The other error assigned, as before stated, is the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict because contrary to the law and the evidence.

The certificate of the court as to the testimony in the case purports to be a certificate of the facts proved during the trial. It sets forth that on the 17th day of July, 1902—the date of the fire in question—the defendant was engaged in manufacturing lumber upon a sawmill operated by a steam engine located on land adjoining the land of the plaintiff; that sparks from the engine escaped, and ignited some laps of trees which the defendant had cut down and allowed to remain just beyond the sawdust pile of the defendant; that the fire was discovered by an employé of the defendant engaged in hauling logs to the mill, who at once told the sawyer, and then tried to extinguish the fire; that the sawyer, after finishing the line he was cutting in the log on the saw carriage and running his saw back, went with the mill hands and attempted to put out the fire with water, and used other means to prevent it from escaping or from doing damage to the defendant's plant; that a spark was carried by the wind from where the fire started to a point about 50 yards distant in the woods; that the employés of the defendant pursued the fire which had thus escaped, and attempted by burning against it and by other means to arrest its progress; that the weather was hot and dry, with "considerable" wind blowing from a southwesterly direction, which carried the fire across the land occupied by the defendant and upon the land of the plaintiff, and burned over 444 acres of the same, destroying cedar, pine, and other growth of timber, damaging the plaintiff from $150 to $3,000, as variously estimated by the witnesses; that the defendant's employés did all they could to arrest the progress of the fire and to prevent its spreading; that the defendant kept constantly on hand a barrel and buckets filled with water for use in case of fire; that they were so filled and used on the day of the fire; that the defendant is an experienced sawmill man, having been in the business 23 years, owns four sawmills and a planing mill, but was not at the mill on the day of the fire; that at the time the defendant placed his sawmill upon the land where it was when the fire originated he cleared off a good millyard 100 yards around the plant, and took all the usual precautions in clearing and preparing the same, but after this he had cut down near the sawmill and engine some trees, whose laps fell together, which were allowed to remain just beyond the sawdust pile; that the outer top end of the sawdust pile was by actual measurement 95 feet from the smokestack of defendant's engine; that on the outer edge of the sawdust pile was a cartway along the far side of which the fire had turned, which was within 83½ feet of the sawmill; that the distance from the engine to the laps had never been measured, but the defendant and his witnesses estimated it at 75 yards; that the engine and its equipment were in thorough order, but the engine was not at the time of the fire, and never had been, supplied with a spark arrester or other appliance to prevent the escape of sparks; that it was not the usual practice in the county to have such appliances affixed to sawmill engines, though in some instances a few years ago they had been used; that no up to date, and what is considered a properly equipped, sawmill engine is now sold with a spark arrester, unless ordered specially with the engine; that, although the defendant's engine had no spark arrester, it was considered a modern, up to date sawmill engine fully equipped, except it had an old smokestack, which was 20 feet high; that there was no difference between the defendant's smokestack and a new one; that the use of a spark arrester impeded the powers of an engine, and measurably prevented it from generating steam; that their use requires engines with more power than usual, and because of the invariable use of green wood in sawmill engines they would not draw so well with a spark arrester attached, and that the meshes of the arrester would clog, but, if dry fuel was used, these difficulties would be overcome; that some years ago a sawmill man of the county had used an arrester, but did not always keep it closed; that another sawmill man doing business in the county of King George had some years before operated a sawmill engine with a spark arrester put in at the instance of a very particular old man; that a high smokestack would not be so apt to emit sparks, but when it did the sparks would go a greater distance before reaching the ground than those escaping from a short smokestack; that stationary engines in the county used in the manufacture of excelsior fiber are usually equipped with spark arresters, but they burn dry wood, while green wood is used in sawmill engines; that one of the plaintiff's witnesses, who was the manager of a sawmill for plaintiff's son, testified that he considered the defendant's yard a good one, and that any sawmill yard was liable to catch on fire in the summer time.

The contention of the plaintiff is that upon the facts proved the verdict of the jury was in direct contravention of the rulings of the court, to which no exception was taken by the defendant.

Instructions "a," "b," and "c" given for the plaintiff were based upon the hypothesis that the defendant had permitted combustible material to accumulate so near to his engine as to be easily ignited by sparks escaping therefrom.

The evidence as to the location of the laps, the alleged combustible material, is conflicting. The plaintiff's evidence places them just beyond a pile of sawdust, the outer top of which was only 95 feet from the engine, whilst the defendant and his witnesses locate them 75 yards, or 225 feet, from the engine. It does not appear when the trees were cut whose laps caught on fire, nor of what kind of timber they were, nor whether they were so combustible as to be likely to catch on fire easily. The mere fact that they did catch on fire on a hot, dry, and windy day was not conclusive evidence that they were dangerously inflammable, or likely to take fire the distance they were from the engine. Upon all the evidence the jury may not have been satisfied (and the question was for them) that the defendant had allowed combustible material to accumulate so near his engine as to be easily ignited by sparks therefrom. If they were not, their verdict was not in contravention of either instruction "a," "b," or "c."

The verdict of the jury not being in conflict with those instructions, and there being no objection to them, it is unnecessary to consider whether or not they correctly state the law.

The plaintiff's other instruction, "d," to the giving of which there was no objection, told the jury that if they believed from the evidence that the plaintiff sustained damages by fire about the 17th day of July, 1902, and that said fire originated from an engine operated by the defendant, and that the defendant operated the said engine without the use of the latest and best known appliances to prevent the emission of sparks from said engine, the defendant assumed the risk of so operating said engine, and they must find for the plaintiff. If the jury had followed this instruction, they could not have found the verdict they did, for there is no question that the fire did originate from the defendant's engine, and that he did not have the best known appliances to prevent it from emitting sparks.

The general rule is that persons in the lawful use of fire must exercise ordinary care to prevent it from injuring others. What constitutes ordinary care and prudence depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. The greater the danger of communicating fire to the property of others, the more precautions and the greater vigilance will be necessary in order to measure up to the requirements of ordinary care. It is the settled law of this state that a railroad company is liable where the fire is attributable to the want of proper spark arresters upon its locomotives. Brighthope Ry. Co. v. Rogers, 76 Va. 443, 450; Patteson v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 94 Va. 16, 21, 28 S. E. 393; Kimball & Fink v. Borden, 95 Va. 203, 28 S. E. 207. But it is a matter of common knowledge that locomotive engines, propelled by steam, are exceedingly dangerous, and liable to cause unintentional fires. Such great danger and the frequency with which such fires occur have doubtless caused the courts to hold that the failure of those operating such machinery to use spark arresters or other appliances to prevent the emission of sparks makes them per se guilty of negligence. There is not the same degree of danger and liability to cause unintentional fires by stationary steam sawmill engines operating in the country. The operators of such engines can minimize the danger of causing such fires by removing dangerous combustible material a greater distance from their engines than can railroad companies operating their locomotives over hundreds of miles of road on their narrow right of way. Again, operators of stationary engines can keep on hand appliances and means of putting out fires caused by their engines, which it is impossible for railway companies to do. See Peers v. Elliott, etc., 21 Can. Sup. Ct. 19; Atkinson v. Goodrich, etc., Co., 60 Wis. 141, 167, 18 N. W. 764, 50 Am. Rep. 352; Holman v. Land Co., 20 Colo. 7, 13, 36 Pac. 797; Crandall, etc., v. Goodrich, etc., Co. (C. C.) 16 Fed. 75.

The proof in this case shows that the use of spark arresters on sawmill engines was not customary in that county; that such arresters impede the powers of engines, and measurably prevent them from generating steam, when green wood is used for fuel (as is invariably the case with sawmill engines); the meshes of the arresters become clogged, and the draught of the engines lessened; and that no up to date and what is considered a properly equipped sawmill engine is now sold with a spark arrester.

We are of opinion that, while the failure to use a spark arrester upon a stationary sawmill engine is a circumstance from which negligence may often be inferred, it cannot be said that such failure is per se negligence, and that instruction "d" was therefore erroneous.

Had the verdict been in conformity with the instruction, great difficulty might arise in interfering with it, because a party objecting to an erroneous instruction must do so at the time; otherwise, in general, he will be considered as having waived the objection. But as the verdict was in favor of the defendant, against whom the erroneous ruling was made, it will not be set aside because it is in conflict with that ruling, if upon the whole case there was sufficient evidence to warrant the verdict. Richmond & Danville R. R. Co. v. Medley, supra.

Upon the evidence before the jury, as hereinbefore set out, the jury might properly have reached the conclusion they did. At least we cannot say that the evidence is plainly insufficient to sustain their verdict.

The judgment of the circuit court must be affirmed.

LOYD v. LOYD'S EX'R et al.

WILLS — CONSTRUCTION — TRUST — DISTRIBUTION OF PRINCIPAL — PERPETUITIES.

1. A will, after empowering the executor to invest testator's estate; declaring testator's children living at the time of his death, and the descendants of any of them then dead, entitled to the net income, in equal shares, except that a half share only should be paid to J., or, he being then dead, to his descendants; and providing that the fund should be held by the executor, undivided, except as thereafter directed, but, subject to the conditions declared, should be held as the property of testator's children living at his death, and the descendants of those then dead, in the proportions named, to be observed in ultimately dividing the principal—declared that on the death of any of testator's children, or of any descendant of any child dead when the will took effect, if such person leave descendants, there should be paid to such descendants the share which under the will belonged to their immediate ancestor, but "if such person have no descendants then said share shall lapse into my estate and become a part thereof to be divided thereunder," except that where the person so dying was a descendant of one of testator's children, and there be other descendants then living of the same child, the share of the person dying should pass and be paid to said other descendants of the same child. Held, that where, after testator's death, one of his children died without descendants, his share in the principal did not immediately become divisible among the surviving children, but remained part of the trust fund, as though there had been no such child.

2. A devise of property for lives in being is valid, though it is possible that the limitation over may not take effect, because of failure of the class to take thereafter.

3. A devise in trust to pay the income to testator's children for life, the share of the principal of a child dying with descendants to be then paid to them, but the share of one dying without descendants to lapse into testator's estate, and be divided among the descendants of testator's children dying, leaving descendants, does not violate the statute of perpetuities.

Appeal from Circuit Court of City of Lynchburg.

Suit by James E. Loyd against William H. Loyd's executor and others. From an adverse decree, complainant appeals. Affirmed.

Lee & Howard and E. E. McKay, for appellant. Wilson & Manson and Leon Goodman, for appellees.

WHITTLE, J. This controversy involves the construction of certain clauses of the will of William H. Loyd, deceased.

Testator was survived by seven children and six grandchildren. Two of the children, Ardella and Sarah A. Loyd, died after the testator, unmarried and leaving no descendants. Whereupon appellant, James E. Loyd, a son of testator, filed a bill in equity in the circuit court of the city of Lynchburg against the executor and beneficiaries, in which he maintains that, according to the true construction of testator's will, upon the death of appellant's two sisters, leaving no descendants, their shares in the principal fund of the estate immediately became divisible among the surviving children. The bill prays that an account may be taken to ascertain those shares, and that the executor be required to pay to complainant and the other surviving children their respective and proper proportions of such shares, and also that a similar disposition be directed to be made of the share of any other child thereafter dying without descendants.

On the hearing the circuit court, in denying the prayer of the bill, decreed:

"That, under the provisions of said will, when any child of William H. Loyd died, or hereafter dies, leaving no descendants, the share of the principal of such dead child remained or will remain a part of the corpus of the trust estate created by the will, as completely as though such child had died without descendants before the testator; and the contention of the plaintiff that such share is divisible at the death of such child, and ceases to be a part of the trust estate created by the will, to be held by the executor, is unsound, and the action of the executor in refusing to distribute and pay over the shares of Ardella Loyd and Sarah A. Loyd, who have died since the testator without descendants, to the other children of William H. Loyd, deceased, * * * was in accordance with the true interpretation of the will of William H. Loyd, deceased, as the said shares remained a part of the trust estate to be held by the executor."

The clauses of the will affected by this litigation are as follows:

"VII. All the residue of my estate, both real and personal, including the reversion in the real estate given to my wife for life, I desire shall be held by my executor and invested, and reinvested in such safe and profitable property, real or personal, as he may deem most advantageous to the beneficiaries in said fund. And to that end he is authorized and empowered to sell and convey any part of my estate, either real or personal, which he may deem most conducive to the welfare of those interested, holding the new investment subject to the same powers of sale and conveyance herein granted and to the same trusts and conditions herein prescribed. Purchasers from my said executor shall not be required to look to the application of the purchase money.

"VIII. The net income from the fund created by the last clause I desire my executor to divide in the proportions hereinafter declared, amongst my children living at my death, and the lawful descendants of any of them who may be then dead, said descendants to take only such proportion as the child from whom descended would have taken had such child been living when this will takes effect; and hereafter in this will whenever the term child or children is used it is to mean my child or children, and is to include the descendants of such child or children, should such child or children be dead when this will takes effect, in which case such descendants shall take only that proportion of the income or principal which the child or children from whom descended would have taken had such child or children been living when this will takes effect.

"IX. The net income from the fund above created and held by my executor, I desire my executor to divide and pay over semiannually to my children living at my death (the descendants of those then dead to take the share of the child from whom descended), but he shall pay to my son James E. Loyd only one-half as much as to my other children, it being my intention to give him and his descendants, should he be dead, only one-half as much as I give each of my other children and their descendants, he having already received large sums from me.

"X. The said fund shall be held by my executor undivided except as hereinafterwards directed, but it shall be held by him subject to the terms, conditions and trust herein declared, as the property of my children living at my death and the descendants of those who may be then dead; but in such proportions that the share of my son James E. Loyd and his descendants therein shall be equal only to one-half the value of the share of each of my other children and their descendants, and in ultimately dividing the principal of said fund, my executor will see that the division is so made that this proportion shall be carefully preserved. My intention is to give each of my other children double as much of my estate as I hereby give to my said son James E. Loyd, and to make the shares of my said other children all equal.

"XI. On the death of any one of my children or of any descendant of any child who may be dead when this will takes effect, if such person leave descendants, it shall be the duty of my executor to pay over to such descendants the share which under the provisions of this will belonged to their immediate ancestor. If such person have no descendants then said share shall lapse into my estate and become a part thereof to be divided hereunder, except that where the person so dying was a descendant of one of my children, and there be other descendants then living of the same child, the share of the person dying shall pass and be paid to said other descendants of the same child according to the statute of descents and distribution in Virginia."

By the seventh clause, testator empowers the executor to invest his estate in such safe and profitable property, real or personal, as he may deem most advantageous to the beneficiaries of the fund.

Clause 8 declares who are entitled to the net income arising from the principal fund created by the previous clause; while clause 9 directs the executor to divide and pay over such net income semiannually to testator's children living at his death (the descendants of those then dead to take the share of the child from whom descended), except that he is to pay to James E. Loyd a half share only. These three clauses, it will be observed, apply to and affect merely the net income from the estate; while the two succeeding clauses, 10 and 11, deal with the capital or principal fund.

Clause 10 provides that the principal fund shall be held by the executor undivided, "except as hereinafterwards directed, but it shall be held by him subject to the terms, conditions and trust herein declared, as the property of my children living at my death and the descendants of those who may be then dead; but in such proportions that the share of my son James E. Loyd and his descendants therein shall be equal only to one-half the value of the share of each of my other children and their descendants, and in ultimately dividing the principal of said fund, my executor will see that the division is so made that this proportion shall be carefully preserved. My intention is to give each of my other children double as much of my estate as I hereby give to my said son James E. Loyd and to make the shares of my said other children all equal."

Clause 11 provides for the ultimate disposal of the capital or principal fund.

From an attentive consideration of the foregoing clauses, it will be seen that it was the primary purpose of testator to limit the interest of the first takers under his will to the income from his estate only. Presumably that precaution was taken by testator with the intention of insuring a certain support to the first takers for life, by protecting the corpus of the estate against their improvidence or other fortuities.

Clause 11 contains the limitation over after the death of the first taker, and provides for three contingencies:

(1) The death of the first taker leaving descendants, in which event the trust, as to that share, is to determine; the language of the will being: "It shall be the duty of my executor to pay over to such descendants the share which under the provisions of this will belonged to their immediate ancestor."

(2) "If such person"—that is, the first taker—"have no descendants, then said share shall lapse into my estate and become a part thereof to be divided hereunder." And

(3) "Where the person so dying was a descendant of one of my children, and there be other descendants then living of the same child, the share of the person dying shall pass and be paid to said other descendants of the same child, according to the statute of descents and distributions in Virginia."

At the death of the first taker, upon the happening of either the first or third contingency, his share in the principal fund must be immediately distributed. That is to say, if the first taker dies, leaving descendants, the executor is not authorized to hold that share any longer, but must pay it over to such descendants. So, if the first taker were himself a descendant of a child who had died in testator's lifetime, and there were other descendants of the deceased child living, it would be also the duty of the executor to pay over the share of the first taker, upon his death, to the surviving descendants.

But in the second contingency, where the first taker dies, leaving no descendants, the will not only does not provide for the payment of such share to the surviving first takers, as appellant contends, but specifically prescribes that the share shall lapse into testator's estate, and become a part thereof, to be divided thereunder.

To sustain appellant's contention would not only do violence to the plain language of the will, but would likewise defeat the manifest object of the testator to limit the estate of the first taker to the usufruct of his share in the principal fund for life, without encroaching upon the corpus of that fund.

As remarked, in the first and third contingencies the will clearly provides for an immediate distribution of the first taker's share of the principal fund; but in the second contingency it as plainly declares that there shall be no immediate distribution of such share, but that it shall lapse into the estate. The requirement "to be divided hereunder," in light of the context, imports that the share is to be divided as other parts of the principal fund are to be divided, not among the first takers, but among the second takers. The contention that testator resorted to this involved method of effectuating an immediate distribution of the share in the principal fund among the surviving first takers upon the happening of the second contingency, in order to preserve the scheme by which appellant and his descendants were to receive only half portions in the shares of other distributees, cannot be maintained without a plain departure from the literal import of the language employed. It is inconceivable that the draftsman of the will, who has so clearly and intelligently expressed the wishes of the testator in all other particulars, should have been so infelicitous in dealing with this important branch of the subject. Indeed, the purpose attributed to testator in that regard, of limiting appellant and his descendants to half portions in the estate, had already been adequately safe-guarded by clause 10 of the will.

The third contingency, provided for by the eleventh clause, can never arise, because none of testator's children died during his lifetime. So that only two contingencies demand consideration, namely, (1) the death of a child with descendants; and (2) the death of a child without descendants. Both contingencies are clearly provided for by the will. In the former case, upon the death of the first taker his share in the principal fund is to be immediately divided among his descendants, while in the latter the share of the first taker lapses into the estate, to pass, not to the surviving first takers, but as a substitutional bequest, under the general scheme of the will, to the descendants of such other first takers as may die, leaving descendants.

By the death of Ardella Loyd and Sarah A. Loyd without descendants, the last contingency has happened, and there can be no distribution of their shares in the principal fund among the surviving first takers; but, as indicated, those shares, by provision of the eleventh clause, lapse into the estate, and become a part of it, to be held by the executor and divided in accordance with the requirement of the will, upon the happening of the contingency provided for in that clause, and in the proportions prescribed by the tenth clause.

It is true that if the unexpected should happen, and the six grandchildren living at the commencement of this litigation should die before their parents, and no other children should be born and survive their parents, upon the death of the last surviving child without descendants an intestacy would ensue as to the undistributed shares in the principal fund. But the circumstance that some of these limitations over may never vest cannot impair the validity of those that do vest; the general rule on the subject being that where a valid disposition of property is followed by a limitation over, which from some cause fails to take effect, that fact does not invalidate the previous disposition. Gore v. Gore, 2 P. Wms. 28; Goldsborough v. Martin, 41 Md. 488; Heald v. Heald, 56 Md. 800; Lawrences' Estate, 136 Pa. 354, 20 Atl. 521, 11 L. R. A. 86, 20 Am. St. Rep. 925; Saxton v. Webber, 83 Wis. 617, 53 N. W. 905, 20 L. R. A. 509. The limitations in this instance must all vest in interest, if at all, during a life or lives in being, and 10 months and 21 years thereafter. They do not, therefore, violate the rule against perpetuities. Frazier v. Frazier's Ex'rs, 2 Leigh, 642; 2 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 376 et seq.

In the case of Bulkley v. Depeyster, 26 Wend. 21, "where a testator by his will bequeathed annuities to five of his children, and directed that on the death of either without issue the annuity bequeathed to the child dying should be equally divided among the survivors, but, if there was issue, then the annuity to be paid to such issue during the lifetime of the wife of testator, and on her death the principal of such annuity; that, upon the decease of any of the five children after the death of the wife of testator, a like portion of the principal of his estate should be paid to the issue of the child so dying; and that a final distribution and settlement of his estate among his grandchildren should be had immediately after the death of the survivor of his children—it was held that the vesting in possession of the several portions of the estate was not postponed beyond two lives in being at the time the will took effect, and consequently that the will was a valid and operative instrument, within the provisions of the statute."

The rule is directed against future contin-gent interests only, and has no application where the limitation must take effect, if at all, immediately upon the death of life tenants in whom the previous estate is vested.

It follows from these views that the decree complained of is without error, and must be affirmed.

STANDARD SEWING MACH. CO. v. GUNTER.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 10, 1904.)

PAYMENT—PART PERFORMANCE—COMMON-LAW RULE—CODE MODIFICATION—BURDEN OF PROOF—EVIDENCE.

1. At common law an acceptance by a creditor of a less sum than that due will not satisfy the demand.

2. The burden of proof is on a debtor to bring himself within Code 1887, § 2858, providing that part performance of an obligation expressly accepted by the creditor in satisfaction shall so operate, though without any new consideration.

3. Evidence held insufficient to establish that plaintiff accepted from defendant, its agent, $3,400 in full satisfaction of demands aggregating over $4,300.

Appeal from Law and Chancery Court of City of Norfolk.

Bill for injunction and for a receiver by the Standard Sewing Machine Company against C. C. Gunter. From a decree for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

A. G. Collins and R. Randolph Hicks, for appellant. Burroughs & Bro., for appellee.

KEITH, P. It appears from the record that the Standard Sewing Machine Company from time to time furnished C. C. Gunter with sewing machines, to be disposed of by him as its agent, and to be accounted for at prices stipulated in the several contracts. Gunter's compensation was to consist of the difference between what the company was to receive, and the price at which the sewing machines were sold upon the market. Without going into the details of these transactions, it is sufficient to say that Gunter failed properly to account to the sewing machine company, and that he was investing the money, which he should have paid to his principal, in real estate.

In July, 1901, Gunter was largely indebted to the company, and on July 10, 1901, he executed a deed of trust, in which his wife united, conveying the real estate which had been thus purchased by him with the money of the Standard Sewing Machine Company, and certain other real estate, to Allen G. Collins, trustee, to secure the balance due, evidenced by a note for $3,326.95, payable on demand. By another writing, dated July 10, 1901, filed as Exhibit G, it was agreed that this note, secured as aforesaid, was to be held as security also for any additional balance which might become due under two agreements of the same date, filed as Exhibits D and E, by the first of which Gunter acknowledged that he had in his hands, as of that date, leases with the parties named, showing the amounts due under said leases, aggregating $5,254.35, which are in the name of C. C. Gunter & Co., and are for sewing machines sold for account of the Standard Sewing Machine Company, and which Gunter admitted were in his hands for collection only, and for which collections he agreed to make weekly reports, accounts, and settlements. And by Exhibit E the Standard Sewing Machine Company agreed to deliver on consignment to Gunter from time to time sewing machines and parts of sewing machines as manufactured by said company, in such quantities as the officers or agents of said company might deem sufficient to meet the trade or business of Gunter. Then follow the prices at which these machines were to be listed to Gunter, and the obligation on the part of Gunter to employ himself diligently in selling these machines to responsible parties, that he would not sell at a price less than 10 per cent. above the listed price thereof, that he would make monthly reports, and that he would remit and pay over weekly the money received by him; and concludes with the provision that at any time, upon a settlement between Gunter and said company, "the said company will take into its possession all machines of its make and all contracts of lease or sale and will proceed to collect such contracts of lease or sale and pay the costs and expenses thereof, and after the net receipts shall amount to the value of such consigned machines and parts of machines, then it will pay to said Gunter an amount equal to the surplus of sales and leases of such sewing machines over and above the consigned values, such amount to be payable in the uncollected contracts of sale or lease of machines at their face values and not in money."

After July 10, 1901, pursuant to its agreement set forth in Exhibit E, of July 10, 1901, the sewing machine company consigned many machines and attachments to Gunter, for part of which he failed to account. In the month of July, 1902, there was due from Gunter to the sewing machine company, as appears from his answer, a balance, over and above the note for $3,326.95, of $889.84, making a total of $4,216.79, with some accumulations of interest to be added.

The sewing machine company having directed Collins, as trustee, to sell the property conveyed to him, Gunter requested S. B. Lucy, the manager of the sewing machine company, to come to the city of Norfolk, with a view to the settlement of this affair; and accordingly Lucy, with his counsel, Allen G. Collins, went to Norfolk, and on the 21st of August had an interview with Gunter. Gunter stated that he had made arrangements by which he would be enabled to pay $3,500, but the sewing machine company declined to take that sum in satisfaction of its demands. After further conference, Gunter stated that he would be able to raise $3,700, and it was finally agreed between him and the sewing machine company that that sum would be accepted in full settlement of all obligations upon the part of Gunter to the sewing machine company. This sum of $3,700 Gunter expected to procure from E. M. Baum, representing a building and loan company; and on the same day they had an interview with Baum, who informed them that his company had agreed to lend Gunter $3,700 and take a deed on the property, and that he would get the money on the following day. On the next morning, which was August 22d, Lucy and Collins went to the office of Baum, who then stated that Gunter had executed the necessary papers, but that Mrs. Gunter had not, and then, for the first time, told them that, before Gunter could withdraw the $3,700, he would have to pay to the company $300—in other words, that the sum available to Gunter upon the loan would be only $3,400. Collins then went to Gunter's store, and told him that Baum was ready for Mrs. Gunter to execute the papers, and also what Baum had said about the $300. Gunter said he knew nothing about it, and knew of no reason why the $300 should be deducted, and that his understanding was that he would receive $3,700. Thereupon Gunter set out in company with Collins to go to the office of the building association. Upon arriving at the door, Gunter suggested that Collins should go up to Baum's office, on the upper floor, while he went into the office of the association to speak to the treasurer, and that he would come up at once. Collins went up to Mr. Baum's office, where Lucy was awaiting him, and in a few minutes Mr. Baum came in. When asked if he had seen Gunter, he replied that he had just left him, and that he did not know where Gunter had gone, but he was instructed by Gunter to turn the money over to the sewing machine company, and to take such papers as the sewing machine company would give to him, and stated that Gunter would pay only the sum of $3,400, a check for which was in Baum's possession. Collins and Lucy informed Baum that such was not their understanding, that they were to receive $3,700, and that they were not willing to accept the sum of $3,400. They went at once to Gunter's place of business, but he was not there, and they spent a large part of the remainder of the day trying to see him. They sent word to him, through his clerk, that they would be back on the following morning at 8 o'clock, and that they were not willing to take $3,400 in full settlement, and were anxious to see him. On the morning of the 23d of August they again went to his office at the appointed hour, and were told by Gunter's clerk that Gunter said it was unnecessary for him to see them, and that he was worried; and thereupon they returned to Baum's office, and Baum asked them to cancel Exhibits 1,

2, 3, and 4 filed with the answer of Gunter, the first two of which are contracts between the sewing machine company and Gunter for the consignment of sewing machines, dated the 8th of February, 1898, and the 12th of January, 1899; Exhibit No. 3 bearing date July 10, 1901, and which is identical with Exhibit C of plaintiff, and Exhibit No. 4 being a second contract of the same date, which is identical with Exhibit D, filed with plaintiff's bill. Thereupon Lucy complied with this demand, and turned over to Baum the leases made from time to time in the name of C. C. Gunter and C. C. Gunter & Co., and received from Baum the check for $3,400. During the interview between Baum, Collins, and Lucy on the 23d of August, Mr. Collins said to Baum that he had on the night before prepared a writing setting forth the extent of the settlement, and offered it to Mr. Baum to read, who replied: "I am not Mr. Gunter's counsel, and do not intend to sign any paper. He simply instructed me to hand you the money, and take from you such papers as you gave me, and you would know what papers they were."

This is the substance of the transaction as stated by Collins and Lucy. It appears from their testimony that they from the beginning declined to accept in satisfaction of their claims against Gunter a less sum than $3,700, and that their position was fully understood by Gunter.

Baum's account of the transaction is that they declined in the first place to receive any sum less than $3,700; that he informed them that he was authorized to enter into no negotiations; that he was Gunter's agent only to the extent of receiving from them certain papers and paying them the sum of $3,400, which he understood was to be received by them in full satisfaction of all their demands against Gunter.

The preponderance of the evidence is with the appellant. When we consider that Gunter's original proposition was to pay $3,500 in full settlement; that it was declined; that he then, as he supposed, consummated an arrangement by which he would be enabled to pay $3,700, which his creditor agreed to accept in full satisfaction; that, when it appeared that the building association would only advance the sum of $3,400, Gunter concealed himself from his creditor, and left the affair in the hands of Baum, with vague instructions to take from the sewing machine company such papers as it would deliver; that when, at the final interview between Baum, representing Gunter, and Lucy and Collins, representing the sewing machine company, as appears from the evidence of two of the three witnesses, Baum was expressly told that they would not receive the $3,400 in full satisfaction, and that to this declaration he replied, "I don't blame you, for he [Gunter] has treated you very badly"—it is impossible for us to say that the $3,400 was expressly accepted by the creditor in full satisfaction of his demands. There is no doubt, from Gunter's own statement, that his debt at this time amounted to more than $4,300. At common law, no sum less than that would satisfy the demand.

"A party never can be held to surrender his rights under contract unless it appears that he made the surrender understandingly, and intentionally and freely, nor can such surrender or release be implied by his act unless he understood at the time that such would be the effect of his act. It never can be implied by the act of a party, accepting a part of what he had a right to demand, that he released the security for the balance without consideration." Lee v. Harlow, 75 Va. 29; Smith v. Phillips, 77 Va. 548; Seymour v. Goodrich, 80 Va. 303.

That such was the law prior to the Code of 1887 is conceded. By section 2858 of the Code it is provided: "Part performance of an obligation, promise or undertaking, either before or after a breach thereof, when expressly accepted by the creditor in satisfaction, and rendered in pursuance of an agreement for that purpose, though without any new consideration, shall extinguish such obligation, promise or undertaking."

The burden of proof was upon Gunter to bring himself within the influence of that statute, and to show that the sum of money which he paid in part performance of his obligation was "expressly accepted by his creditor in satisfaction, and rendered in pursuance of an agreement for that purpose," and this he has not done.

It further appears from the record that after the transactions just narrated, which resulted in the release of the deed of trust, and the surrender and cancellation of certain papers, Gunter proceeded to notify those who owed balances upon sewing machines purchased through Gunter, as the agent of the Standard Sewing Machine Company, that he alone was authorized to collect from them, and that he would hold them responsible if they paid any other person. The Standard Sewing Machine Company, as appears from Exhibit H with its bill, dated August 30, 1902, notified Gunter "not to reclaim any machine which has been sold or leased in the name of the Standard Sewing Machine Company. We hereto attach a list of contracts marked exhibit 'A,' which shows the balances due as reported by you as of June 1, 1902. You are specially notified not to collect anything in full or on account of any lease or contract made in the name of the Standard Sewing Machine Company. * * * We hold the original contracts listed and will proceed to collect the balances due, and will look to you to strictly verify those balances." Gunter disregarded this notice, and proceeded with his efforts to collect the balances due upon the leases and contracts above referred to; and thereupon the Standard Sewing Machine Company filed its bill, charging that Gunter was insolvent, and that he had mortgaged his real estate to its full value, and, should he collect these contracts or leases, the company would be unable to recover anything from him. The bill concludes with a prayer for a receiver and an injunction, and that Gunter may be required to account as bailee or consignee for all moneys collected by him since June 1, 1902. Upon the coming of the answer and the proofs, the court of law and chancery was of opinion that the allegations of the bill were not sustained; that the sum of $3,400 was paid by the defendant on the 23d of August, 1902, and accepted by the plaintiff in full settlement of all claims against him, and he thereupon became entitled to all the leases in the bill and proceedings mentioned.

We having reached a different conclusion, it follows that the decree of the court of law and chancery must be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings to be had therein, not inconsistent with this opinion.

C. C. VAUGHAN & CO. v. VIRGINIA FIRE & MARINE INS. CO.

INSURANCE—FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

1. Evidence in an action on a fire policy held insufficient to furnish an explanation, required of insured, of the presence of false invoices in the proofs of loss.

2. The unexplained presence of false invoices in the proofs of loss avoids the policy for fraud, though enough goods actually covered by the policy are burned to have authorized recovery of the full amount of insurance.

Error to Circuit Court, Greensville County.

Action by C. C. Vaughan & Co. against the Virginia Fire & Marine Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

See 14 S. E. 754.

Davis & Davis, for plaintiffs in error.
Leake & Carter, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. This is the second time this case has been before this court. Upon the former writ of error, all questions of law involved in the case were settled, the verdict of the jury set aside because not sustained by the facts, and the cause remanded for a new trial. The proceedings had in the cause prior to that time are fully set out in the opinion of the court, and reported in 88 Va. 832-842, 14 S. E. 754.

After the case was remanded, a new trial was had, in which there was a verdict for the plaintiff. That verdict was set aside by the circuit court, and a new trial granted. Upon the new trial precisely the same evidence was introduced by the parties as was before the jury upon the last preceding trial. To that evidence the defendant demurred.

which demurrer was sustained by the court, and a judgment rendered in favor of the defendant. To that judgment this writ of error was awarded.

As stated by the plaintiff in error in his petition, the only question for our determination is whether or not, under the rules applicable to a demurrer to evidence, it appears from the record that the plaintiff's claim has been forfeited under the provision of the policy that the company should not be liable thereunder for loss or damage, if there be "any false swearing or fraud, or attempt at fraud, before or after loss or damage by him [the assured] in support of his claim for loss or in proofs of loss hereinafter mentioned."

One of the defendant company's defenses was that Lassiter, the assured, and the assignor of the plaintiff, was guilty of false swearing and of an attempt at fraud, in furnishing preliminary proofs of loss.

A day or two after the fire, the adjuster of the company went to Franklin, Va., to adjust the loss. When he reached there, he was informed by Lassiter that all his books and papers, except an inventory taken about a month before, were lost. Lassiter made a statement of his loss, and was then requested to furnish the company duplicate invoices for the bills which had been burned. This he agreed to do. Duplicate invoices were furnished, aggregating the sum of $3,028.51, which were listed and afterwards sworn to by Lassiter. The evidence as to the circumstances under which and by whom the list was made out is conflicting, but, on a demurrer to the evidence, it must be treated as made out by the adjuster of the defendant company. It was forwarded to the solicitor of the company at Franklin, with the request that he get Lassiter to sign and swear to it, and return it to the company. This was done. The certificate appended to the list which Lassiter signed, and to which he made oath, is as follows:

"I hereby certify that the duplicate invoices furnished as per above statement, amounting to three thousand and twenty-eight $\frac{51}{100}$ dollars said invoices being in the names of M. L. Beale & Co., D. Lassiter & Co., and D. Lassiter, all of which form a part of my loss, are correct and were received by me at Franklin Va. and constituted the goods burned on the morning of December 6th, 1888."

Among the duplicate invoices furnished, listed, and sworn to, are several bills for goods and items in other bills which the evidence conclusively shows did not constitute any part of the goods burned, but which had been so charged as to make it appear that they were a part thereof. One of these was a bill of goods sold to M. L. Beale, August 13, 1888, for $328.50. It was changed so as to make it appear that it was sold to "M. L. Beale & Co." on October 13, 1888. The members of the firm of M. L. Beale & Co. were M. L. Beale and D. Lassiter, and they did not go into business together until September 27, 1888. Their firm name was soon afterwards changed to D. Lassiter & Co., and on the 27th of October following the policy of insurance sued on was taken out in the name of D. Lassiter & Co. On the 12th of November, Beale withdrew from the firm, and on the 5th of December he assigned his interest in the policy to Lassiter. Beale, prior to and during the time he was in partnership with Lassiter at Franklin, was doing business in Courtland on his own account. The $328.50 worth of goods, as above stated, were sold to M. L. Beale on the 18th day of August, 1888, and shipped to him at Courtland.

Another of the invoices listed and sworn to was a bill for $171.39 for goods sold to D. Lassiter by Adelsdorf Bros. on the 18th day of September, 1888. This bill was so changed as to make it appear that the goods were sold to D. Lassiter & Co. on the 28th of September, 1888.

Another of the charged invoices was a bill of $14.40 for goods sold by the Norfolk Bottling Company in October and November, 1888. The goods were sold and shipped to M. L. Beale, Courtland, Va., and the bill, which was made out against "Mr. M. L. Beale" was changed to Mess M. L. Beale & Co." It further appeared that the Norfolk Bottling Company never had any account with M. L. Beale & Co.

Another of the invoices was for a bill of $134.93 for goods sold and shipped to M. L. Beale, Courtland, Va., on the 29th day of August, 1888, and which was so charged on the books of the seller, yet the bill was made out in the name of M. L. Beale & Co. by the bookkeeper at the request of some one—whom, he does not remember—and the date changed, after the bill was made out and delivered, from August 29 to October 21, 1888.

A business house in Petersburg had sold M. L. Beale & Co. on October 3, 1888, a bill of goods of the value of $59.40. Among the invoices listed and sworn to, there is a bill of the same date for $304.03, for goods sold to that concern. The evidence is clear that no such bill of goods was sold to that firm, or ever became a part of the stock of goods insured.

In another of the invoices—a small purchase made by Lassiter on the 6th of September, 1888—the date is changed to September 27th of that year, the day on which M. L. Beale & Co. commenced business.

It further appears that, the day after the list of duplicate invoices was signed and sworn to by Lassiter, he assigned the policy of insurance for $1,100—$400 less than its full amount.

Under these circumstances, as was said by this court upon the former writ of error, "it was undoubtedly incumbent upon the plaintiff, to entitle him to recover, to remove the suspicion which the facts proved in connection with the invoices in question justly excite, for nothing is better settled than that the assured must observe, in dealing with the insurer, the utmost good faith, without which there can be no recovery. Moore v. Va. Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 28 Grat. 508, 523 [26 Am. Rep. 373].” Because there was no such explanation offered on the first trial touching the false statements made under oath in furnishing the preliminary proofs of loss, the verdict of the jury was set aside and a new trial ordered.

An effort was made on the last trial to furnish such explanation by the examination of the solicitor of the company, who forwarded some, or perhaps all, of the duplicate invoices to the defendant company as they were furnished him by Lassiter, by showing that such invoices were not changed when he forwarded them to the company. But it is clear from the solicitor's evidence that he paid very little attention to those papers when they were handed him, and that he did not examine them with any such care as would enable him to say whether or not they were changed when he forwarded them to the company. Lassiter died before the last trial, but he was living at the date of the first trial, and did not testify, or attempt to explain at that time why or how the false and fraudulent duplicate invoices were furnished to the company. It is argued that Lassiter was not guilty of fraud, or an attempt at fraud, in furnishing proofs of his loss, because the goods destroyed, exclusive of the alleged fraudulent items, the proofs show, were worth more than $2,000, and that the plaintiff could in no case recover more than $1,500. This contention was fully answered by Judge Lewis, speaking for the court, upon the former writ of error, and need not be repeated, for, as was said then, “however that may be, the undisputed facts are that he swore to a loss in excess of the actual loss, and furnished false vouchers, for which no explanation has been offered. We must therefore infer that his sworn statements were known to him to be false, and, being upon a material matter, the law presumes that they were made with intent to deceive.”

We are of opinion that the conclusion reached by the circuit court upon the demurrer to the evidence was plainly right, and its judgment should be affirmed.

STATE v. KYER.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 16, 1904.)

GAMING—INDICTMENT—PUBLIC PLACE.

1. An indictment which charges that the defendant “did at and in a certain room in the hotel of Lahew Nutter, near the town of Spencer, in said county, said room then and there being a public place and a place of public resort, bet and play at a certain game played with cards, which said game is commonly called and known as the game of draw poker,” etc., is good as an indictment for playing at a public place, but is not good as an indictment for playing at a hotel or tavern.

2. If the prosecutor fails to show that the room was a public place, or a place of public resort, he cannot have such indictment held good as charging the unlawful gaming to have been done at a hotel or tavern.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Roane County; Linn Brannon, Judge.

Forest Kyer was convicted of gaming, and brings error. Reversed.

J. W. C. Armstrong and Thos. P. Ryan, for plaintiff in error. The Attorney General, for the State.

DENT, J. Forest Kyer obtained a writ of error to the judgment of the circuit court of Roane county fixing a fine of $5 against him for unlawful gaming, and now insists that such fine was improperly imposed upon him for the reason that the evidence did not show him guilty of the offense charged in the indictment. The indictment is as follows: “State of West Virginia, Roane County, to-wit: In the Circuit Court of said County: The grand jurors of the state of West Virginia, in and for the body of the county of Roane, and now attending said court, upon their oaths present that Forest Kyer upon the — day of —, A. D. 1902, in the said county of Roane, did unlawfully at and in a certain room in the hotel of Lahew Nutter near the town of Spencer in said county, said room then and there being a public place and a place of public resort, bet and play, at a certain game played with cards, which said game is commonly called and known as the game of draw poker, with divers persons whose names are to the grand jurors unknown, and which said game was not the game of bowls, chess, backgammon, drafts, or a licensed game; against the peace and dignity of the state. Upon the information of E. A. McCrosky sworn in open court, and sent before the grand jury to give evidence on this indictment. J. A. A. Vandale, Prosecuting Attorney.” This is a good indictment for playing cards at a public place, but is not a good indictment for playing at a hotel or tavern, as the words “in the hotel of Lahew Nutter” are merely descriptive of the place, and not of the essence of the offense. As used, they may mean a private boarding house or other building designated as the “Hotel of Lahew Nutter.” The indictment does not charge the offense as committed at a hotel known as the “Hotel of Lahew Nutter,” but it charges the offense as committed in a certain room, it being a public place and a place of public resort. But we are asked to treat all the allegations in regard to the room as surplusage, because the evidence fails to show that the room was a public place or a place of public resort. If, on the other hand, the evidence had shown that the room was a place of public resort, although not in a public hotel, and the defendant had claimed that he should be discharged for the reason that the indictment charges that the playing was done at a hotel or tavern, the state's attorneys would have then insisted that the words "in the hotel of Lahew Nutter" were merely descriptive of the place, and not of the essence of the offense, and should be treated as surplusage. Thus the indictment could thus be made to cover two distinct offenses, which would render it bad on motion to quash. The state's attorneys cannot frame the same count in an indictment to cover several distinct offenses, and then have the allegations as to the several offenses which are unsustained or wholly disproved treated as surplusage, for the defendant is entitled to plainly know the offense with which he stands charged, so that he may be able to meet it with his proof. If he is indicted for playing at a hotel or tavern, the indictment should plainly inform him of the offense. On the other hand, if he is indicted for playing in a room which is a public place or place of public resort, he should be so informed. The prosecuting attorney cannot make a conglomeration of the two, and then, when the proof is in, select which one of the two was the real offense charged in the indictment. This can hardly be regarded as the lesser offense included in the greater, for in this case the offense charged appears to have been included in the offense not charged; for the public place so charged in the indictment turns out not to have been a public place, but is within another public place not so charged in the indictment. The proof shows that the room in which the card playing was done was securely locked during the progress of the playing, and no one was permitted to enter but those engaged in the game. Hence it was not a public place or place of public resort. The words "in the hotel of Lahew Nutter" being merely descriptive of the room, and not of the essence of the offense, the indictment could not be treated as an indictment for unlawfully playing at a hotel. This case is clearly governed by the case of State v. Brast, 31 W. Va. 380, 7 S. E. 11.

The trial of the issue having been submitted to the judge in lieu of a jury, and he having found for the state, and given judgment accordingly, the judgment is reversed, and judgment entered for the defendant.

3. Where a party has actual notice of an order of injunction, although it may not have been yet served, or be defectively served upon him, the order becomes operative on him from that time.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Bill by John Wenger against Charles Fisher and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. B. Maxwell, for appellant. Harding & Harding, for appellees.

MILLER, J. John Wenger, the appellant, presented to the judge of the circuit court of Randolph county his bill in chancery against the appellees Charles Fisher, Jacob Helmick, and J. W. Goddin, Omar Conrad, and Patrick Crickard, as commissioners, composing the county court of said county, and the county court of Randolph county, a corporation, praying that said Fisher and Helmick, their agents, employés, and all other persons, be restrained and enjoined from making changes or alterations in a certain public road, as proposed by them, through plaintiff's land, as shown by his bill; and that said county court be also restrained and enjoined from appropriating to public use the plaintiff's land, or any part thereof, without rendering to him just compensation therefor. On the 5th day of March, 1901, the injunction was granted as prayed for. On the 19th day of March, 1901, the required injunction bond was given. On the 21st day of March, 1901, it was approved by the clerk of the court. On that day summons, with the said order of injunction, was issued. On the 26th day of March, 1901, it was served on Fisher, and on the 28th day of the same month was served on Helmick. It was also duly served on the other defendants.

The plaintiff, in his bill, alleges that he is the absolute owner in fee simple of a tract of land situate in Middle Fork District of said county, containing 62½ acres; that he bought the land in 1884, obtained his deed therefor some two years afterwards, and has been in the absolute and exclusive possession of said land ever since; that the said Charles Fisher is acting as surveyor of roads in Precinct No. 1 of said district under and by virtue of appointment to said office by the said county court; that said Fisher is about to take for the purpose of a public road a part of plaintiff's said land, without plaintiff's consent, or without having purchased said land from plaintiff, or without having it condemned according to law, or without just compensation therefor having been paid to plaintiff. The strip of land proposed to be so taken is alleged to be 65 rods in length and 30 feet in width, and very valuable to the plaintiff. A diagram of the old road and the proposed new road is filed with the bill. The defendants demurred to the bill on the alleged grounds that there is a misjoinder of defendants, and that the bill is without equity. The court overruled the demurrer, and properly so. In Foley v. County Court (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 246, it is held that, where private property is being taken for public use without compensation, equity has jurisdiction to enjoin the act. In the opinion of the court by Brannon, J., it is said: "This is not a mere trespass, transient and passing, slightly affecting the freehold, because the bill alleges, and the answer admits, that the county was taking the strip of land for permanent public use, without compensation, forever wresting the land from the plaintiff, if her property; and it is settled that, where a town or county is taking property for public use without compensation, not merely injuring it, there is no legal remedy answering the emergency, and injunction will lie. Boughner v. Clarksburg, 15 W. Va. 394; Yates v. West Grafton, 33 W. Va. 507, 11 S. E. 8; Mason City S. & M. Co. v. Mason City, 23 W. Va. 211; Ward v. Ohio R. R. Co., 35 W. Va. 481, 14 S. E. 142; Spencer v. Railroad, 23 W. Va. 406." An injunction will be granted to prevent the laying out and establishing a road through a farm and improvements without prior compliance with the requirements of the law in such cases. 1 Spelling, Inj. §§ 295, 354. We think there is no misjoinder of parties. Under the law the county court is charged with the establishment, regulation, and maintenance of public roads. Fisher was the road surveyor, and Helmick the road contractor, who was assuming to open the proposed road on appellant's land, under an alleged contract with Fisher as road surveyor. Fisher answered the bill, and admitted plaintiff's ownership and possession of the land as alleged. He also admitted that he was road surveyor, and acting as such, but denied that he was about to take the said strip of land for the purpose of a public road without plaintiff's consent. He further averred that the location of the road, marked on the said diagram, "Present Road," was such as to make the road along that line practically impassable on account of the steepness thereof at certain points, and for other reasons; that respondent, deeming a change of the road from the location necessary, asked and received from plaintiff his unqualified consent that such change should be made from the then location to the line marked as the "Proposed New Road" on said diagram; that at the first sale at which respondent offered the making of this proposed new road for sale plaintiff was a bidder therefor; that said new location places the road on better ground, does not increase the length thereof, reduces the grade, does not require more work to keep it in repair, does not render said road in any respect worse than it was before; and that on the 9th day of February, 1901, he, as road surveyor, sold the making of said road upon the changed line to said Helmick. Respondent further avers that the change in said road was made with the full knowledge and consent of the plaintiff. The said county court, as individuals and as such court, also answered the bill, and admitted the appointment of Fisher as road surveyor under the alternate road law of 1881, and his full authority to act as such; that they had knowledge of the change made in the road complained of by said plaintiff, but were not intimately acquainted with the ground; that they had been informed and believed that said change was made pursuant to law; that the county court did not by any proceeding, such as condemnation or purchase, acquire the right to make such change, but that they understood that said surveyor was having it done legally and properly, by virtue of his statutory authority; and that, if he had exceeded the same, they are in no way responsible therefor. Helmick filed his answer, in which he, among other things, says that plaintiff was fully cognizant of the advertising and selling of said road, and of the purchase by respondent of the making of the same, and that he had completed the making of said road several days before he was served with the order of injunction in the cause. Depositions were taken by both plaintiff and defendants, and filed in the cause.

The determination of the case depends upon the evidence as to whether or not the plaintiff consented that his land might be taken for the proposed change in the public road. Plaintiff was asked: "Q. State whether or not you consented for the county court of Randolph county, or Charles Fisher, or any one else to change the present road through your land, and place it where the map shows the 'proposed new road.' A. No, never. On the contrary, I told the county court I would never consent to it. Q. State whether or not the county court ever gave you any notice that it proposed to make said change. A. No, sir; never. Q. State whether or not Charles Fisher, or any road surveyor or road official of your district, ever gave you any notice that they proposed to make the said change. A. No, sir; they did not." He further testified that the work on the change was commenced soon after February 9, 1901, and was "got done with soon after the 16th day of March—anyhow before the last of March"; that the work was completed on the 25th or 26th of March; that Jacob Helmick was the contractor who made the change; that the road, as changed, runs 98 rods through his land; that about 50 or 58 rods of it were completed when Fisher and Helmick were notified of said injunction; and that plaintiff, on the 16th day of March, 1901, served notice in writing on Fisher and Helmick that he had, on the 5th day of March, 1901, obtained from the judge of the circuit court the injunction. The notice referred to is a part of the record, bears date on the 5th day of March, 1901, is ad-pressed to Charles Fisher and Jacob Helmick, and notifies them that plaintiff had on that day obtained from the judge of the circuit court of Randolph county an injunction restraining and enjoining them and their employes from making the change in the public road through plaintiff's land, upon which they were then engaged. The notice is signed by said Wenger, and appears to have been served on Fisher and Helmick in person, by copies thereof, on the 16th day of March, 1901.

On behalf of defendants, said Fisher testified that he was authorized by the county court to make the change in the road on Wenger's land without any extra expense, and that he also had Wenger's consent; that Wenger agreed to the change when he bought that section of road. It appears from the record that at a road sale made by Fisher on the 4th day of April, 1899, said Wenger, the plaintiff, bid in sections 2 and 3, said section 2 being the road running through his land. The specifications of No. 2 state: "This section has a change to be made in it near John Wenger's place," etc., "sold to John Wenger." The bond of Wenger given as contractor recites that "the above-bound John Wenger was on the 4th day of April, 1899, awarded the contract for repairing and keeping in repair section 2 in Precinct 1 of Middle Fork District and also to make change in said section for the sum of \$17 per year for the term of 3 years." It is also proved that at the time of this sale the said proposed change had not been located; that when Wenger made his said contract for section 2 he was not shown what the change was to be; that the change was not located by the road surveyor until about the 1st of June following; and that Wenger then objected to a change, and wrote Fisher a letter objecting to the work. It is further shown that Wenger did no work under his said contract or otherwise on said alteration, but surrendered his contract, and that about the 9th day of February, 1901, the work on the road, as attempted to be changed by the road surveyor, was sold to defendant Helmick. The notice under which said second sale was made recites that "the undersigned, Charles Fisher, surveyor of roads, will sell to the lowest and best bidder the constructing of a piece of public road near John Wenger's on the Pickens and Newlon Road, distance not exceeding $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile. Said change was made by the Randolph county court at its last regular session, and ordered made," etc. There are a number of other depositions in the record, showing the advantage of the change to the public, and that when Wenger bought section 2 at the first sale it was fully understood that a change was to be made in the location of the road. The said contract indicates as much. But it is undisputed that no change had then been located, or agreed upon between Wenger and Fisher, and that the surveyor did not go upon the land of Wenger to locate the change until the following June.

The evidence and circumstances of the case, including the contradictory statements in the answers, preponderate very much in favor of Wenger's contention that he at no time consented to the location of the change in the road as made and as shown by the diagram filed. An evasion of the injunction is sought by showing that the order had not been served on Fisher and Helmick until after they had completed the work thereby enjoined. It is proved, and not disputed, that they had notice of the injunction before the work was much more than half done. Beach on Injunctions, vol. 1, § 248, says: "Persons who have actual knowledge of the existence and effect of an injunction order are bound by it, though it is not personally served on them." In considering the question of a defendant's liability for a breach of injunction, it is to be borne in mind that the injunction becomes operative from the time of the order being made, and not from the date of the writ itself, or from the time of its being drawn up. The mandate of the court being effectual upon all parties having notice thereof, from the time it is given, to fix defendant's liability for a violation, it is only necessary to show that he was actually apprised of the existence of the order at the time of committing the acts constituting the violation. High on Inj. vol. 2, § 1421; Osborn v. Glasscock, 39 W. Va. 761, 20 S. E. 702.

It seems that the injunction should not have been dissolved. Therefore the decree of the circuit court must be reversed, and set aside, and the injunction granted by the judge thereof perpetuated here.

LAW v. LAW et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 16, 1904.)

BILL OF REVIEW—SETTING ASIDE DECREE— AMENDMENT.

1. If a decree in a cause has been procured by fraud, discovered after the decree is entered on the record, and after the adjournment of the term at which it is entered, it can be set aside only by an original bill in a new suit, and cannot be annulled by a bill of review.

2. Where a bill of review is filed in a cause to set aside certain decrees therein, alleged to have been procured by fraud, and a demurrer is sustained to said bill as a bill of review, and the plaintiff therein asks leave to amend the same, and have it taken and treated as an original bill, for the purpose of setting aside said decrees for fraud, and said bill can be so amended as to make it a bill sufficient in substance for the purpose sought, it is error in the court to refuse to allow such amendment to be made therein, and to treat the same, when so amended, as an original bill.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lewis County;
W. G. Bennett, Judge.

Bill by Marie E. Law against Thomas E. Law and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Linn & Bland, for appellant. Geo. C. Cole, for appellees.

MILLER, J. Thomas F. Law, as administrator of the estate of F. E. Law, deceased, instituted in the circuit court of Lewis county his suit in chancery against Marie E. Law, widow, and Adda Law, Thomas F. Law, and J. W. O. Law, children and heirs at law, of said F. E. Law, deceased, and Joseph Evans and Howard Neely, trustee. The bill was filed at the June rules, 1899. The object of the suit was to subject to sale certain lands owned by F. E. Law at the time of his death to the payment of his debts. The indebtedness of the decedent was ascertained, a gross sum was decreed to said widow in lieu of her dower in the lands of which her husband died seised, and the said lands were sold free from her dower, at which sale one M. L. Law became the purchaser. At September rules, 1902, Marie E. Law, widow, filed in the clerk's office of the circuit court of said county what she styles "The Bill of Review of Marie E. Law against Thomas F. Law, Administrator of F. E. Law, Deceased; Adda Law and J. W. O. Law, Children and Heirs at Law of the Said F. E. Law, Deceased; Joseph Evans; Howard Neely, Trustee; W. W. Brannon, Special Commissioner; M. L. Law; and W. O. Law"; the said Brannon being the person who sold said land under decree, and the said W. O. Law being the surety on the notes given by M. L. Law for the deferred installments of the purchase money for the land so sold. The said bill of review avers that the bill in said original cause was filed at June rules, 1899, and that said cause was ended at the March term, 1901; that in the original bill the plaintiff therein alleged that at the time of said F. E. Law's death he was the owner in fee of certain real estate situate on the waters of Hacker's creek, in the county of Lewis; that two tracts of said land had been conveyed to Howard Neely, trustee, by said F. E. Law and wife, by deed, and, as it otherwise appears, to secure a debt which F. E. Law owed to said Evans, and that Law was the owner of another tract, known as his home farm; that the plaintiff averred that said F. E. Law at the time of his death owed other debts to other parties; that the amount of said debts was unknown to the plaintiff, but was not less than $5,000; that the plaintiff further averred that the rights of the said Evans under his deed of trust were superior to the dower right of the widow of said F. E. Law, by reason of the fact that she united in the deed of trust aforesaid; that the said widow would be entitled to the interest which the law would give her in the surplus proceeds of the sale of the said two tracts covered by the said Evans deed of trust, but that she desired to relinquish any claim to such proceeds, or any part thereof, on account of her dower right, and wished the whole net amount of such proceeds to be devoted to the discharge of the debts of the said F. E. Law, so as to leave, as far as possible, the home farm undisturbed, and, should the court be of opinion that, by reason of her relinquishment of her interest in such net proceeds of sale, her demands in the other tract would be augmented, she might thereafter claim the same. The said original bill prayed that the accounts of the administrator might be settled; that the net amount of personal estate be ascertained and fixed; that the debts against the said decedent, together with their amounts, and priorities thereof, be also ascertained and fixed, according to law, both as to the personal and real estate; that the said two tracts of land described in the Evans deed of trust, after the application of the personal estate to the indebtedness, be subjected to sale in satisfaction of the debts; and that such portion of the other farm as might be necessary, and as would be least injurious to the said widow and heirs, be also subjected to sale in satisfaction of the balance of said indebtedness. The bill of review further avers that, in said original suit, George Woofter was, at the rules, appointed guardian ad litem for the said defendant J. W. O. Law, who was a minor; that said minor, by his said guardian ad litem, filed an answer to the original bill; and that on the 28th day of June, 1899, a decree of reference was entered in said cause, in which decree it is recited that the "adult defendants appeared and demurred to the bill, in which demurrer the plaintiff joined, and the court, having considered the questions arising on said demurrer, overruled the same. Thereupon the said demurring defendants waived their right to answer the bill. And the cause came on to be heard upon the bill taken for confessed against said adult defendants, exhibits, answer of said infant defendant by his guardian ad litem, process, and was argued by counsel." On consideration of all of which the said cause was referred to W. J. Smith, commissioner, who was directed to ascertain and report certain matters specified in the decree. It is further averred that on the 17th day of October, 1899, a further decree was pronounced in said cause, the same having been on that day heard upon the papers read on a former hearing, former orders and decrees, and upon the report of Commissioner W. J. Smith, filed on the 14th day of October, 1899, "upon the waiver of notice from said commissioner, by W. W. Brannon, the only attorney of record, to which report there was no exceptions," and thereupon the estate of F. E. Law was decreed to pay to its creditors the several sums therein mentioned; and it was ascertained by said decree that the age of the widow of said F. E. Law was 51 years. It was also adjudged, ordered, and decreed thereby that W. W. Brannon, special commissioner, should sell the two tracts of land therein mentioned in the manner and upon the terms specified, unless the debts, interest thereon, and costs decreed against the said estate should be paid within 30 days. It was further decreed that both of the said tracts of land should be sold free from the dower of said widow, and that, on her motion, she might look to any surplus proceeds of the sale of the said tract of 115 acres over and above the Evans debt and interest, and to the entire proceeds of the sale of the other tract of 105 acres (the home farm) for a gross sum, in lieu of her dower, to be fixed upon the incoming of the report of sale. The bill of review further shows that a sale of said lands was afterwards made to said M. F. Law; that W. O. Law signed the purchase-money notes given therefor, as surety; that by decree made and entered in said cause on the 25th day of June, 1901, said sale was confirmed; that the cause was then referred to a commissioner to ascertain and report the gross sum, in lieu of dower, to which said Marie E. Law was entitled out of the proceeds of the sale of each of said tracts of land; that by decree made and entered in said cause on the 29th day of October, 1901, it was "adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the said Marie E. Law is entitled to the sum of $702.83, as a gross sum in lieu of her dower, from the proceeds of the sale of the tract of one hundred and five acres of land theretofore sold under decree herein."

Plaintiff in said bill of review alleges that she is aggrieved by the said decrees of October 17, 1899, and October 29, 1901, respectively; that she ought not to be bound by either of them; that both of said decrees are erroneous, and should be reversed; and, for assignment of error therein, she further alleges that said decrees show upon their face that said cause in which the same were pronounced was heard upon the plaintiff's bill therein taken for confessed as to her and the other adult defendants thereto; that she was not represented by counsel therein, and that no one had authority to bind her. She avers that, although it appears that she demurred to the bill, as a matter of fact that statement is untrue, and that such appearance on her behalf was unauthorized and fraudulent, and that she is not bound by the allegation in the plaintiff's bill that she was willing to accept a gross sum in lieu of her dower. She charges, upon information and belief, that W. W. Brannon, Esq., was the only attorney of record in the said cause, and that he was counsel for the plaintiff therein, she being a defendant, as hereinbefore shown. It is admitted in the briefs that said Brannon filed said demurrer and made said appearance on her behalf. She further alleges that she never at any time employed said Brannon to represent her in said cause, and never authorized any other person to employ him for her. Plaintiff charges, upon information and belief, that the defendant M. L. Law, who afterwards became the purchaser of said land, procured said Brannon to appear for her as attorney in said cause the said M. L. Law, having represented to Brannon that plaintiff desired him to represent her as her counsel; that said M. L. Law conspired against her for the purpose of having the said property sold free from her dower right therein, and in order that he might be in position to purchase the same free from her claim of dower therein; that Law misrepresented the true situation to said Brannon, imposed upon him, and made him the victim of false representation and fraud. She also avers that dower in said lands was not assigned to her in kind before said decree of sale, and that she at no time elected to take the value of her dower in said tract of 105 acres in money; that there is nothing in the record of the said cause showing an election made by her to accept a sum of money in lieu of dower; that she has never accepted the said gross sum decreed to her; and she charges that it was error to decree to her said sum in lieu of her right to dower in said 105 acres. The bill prays that said decrees of October 17, 1899, and October 29, 1901, respectively, be reviewed and altered to the extent of decreeing to her, as the widow of F. E. Law, deceased, dower in kind in the said tract of 105 acres of land, instead of the value of such dower in money; that all proper orders and decrees in respect to said dower be entered; and for general relief. To this bill of review the defendant M. L. Law on the 28th day of October, 1902, filed his demurrer, assigning therein several reasons why the same should be sustained. No appearance of any kind was made to said bill by any of the other defendants thereto. On consideration thereof, the court sustained the demurrer. Thereupon the plaintiff asked leave to amend her said bill by inserting therein, on the seventh page thereof, after the words "was unauthorized and fraudulent," the following: "She avers that no process in said cause was ever served upon her, and the decrees so obtained were without process as to her, and without her knowledge or consent;" and also by inserting in the prayer of the bill the following: "And if the relief herein prayed for cannot be granted upon this bill, treated as a bill of review, that the same be treated and held as an original bill for relief upon the facts herein alleged;" to which amendments the defendant M. L. Law objected, and the court sustained the objection, refused to allow said amendments, and dismissed the bill, at the costs of the plaintiff, but without prejudice to the right of plaintiff to file an original bill, to impeach the decrees complained of, for fraud. Plaintiff, Marie E. Law, was granted an appeal from that decree, and complains that the circuit court erred in sustaining said demurrer, and in refusing to allow said proposed amendments.

The decrees complained of are based upon the bill taken for confessed as against Marie E. Law and her adult codefendants. The bill of review is not for newly discovered evidence. It would not lie for that cause to a decree taken pro confesso. Camden v. Ferrell, 50 W. Va. 119, 40 S. E. 368; Hogg's Eq. Proc. vol. 1, § 210. If the present bill can be maintained for any reason, it must be on the ground that there is error of law apparent on the face of the said decrees, such as appear in the decrees themselves, the opinion of the court, or from the pleadings in the cause, and exhibits filed therewith, or from such error as arises from facts, either admitted by the pleadings, or stated as facts settled, declared, or allowed by the decree. Neither the depositions nor the other evidence in the cause can be looked to, to show error. Dunn's Ex'rs v. Renick, 40 W. Va. 349, 22 S. E. 66; Hogg's Eq. Proc., supra, § 211.

What errors of law are apparent on the face of the decrees? The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit in which the said decrees were made and entered. Code 1899, c. 86, § 7. Process had been issued therein, but whether or not service thereof had been made upon the defendants, or any of them, the record does not state. The infant defendant answered the bill by guardian ad litem, and, as recited in the record, "the adult defendants appeared and demurred to the bill, in which demurrer the plaintiff joined; and the court, having considered the questions arising on said demurrer, overruled the same. Thereupon the said demurring defendants waived their right to answer the said bill. And the cause came on to be heard upon the bill taken for confessed against said adult defendants, exhibits, answer of said infant defendant by his guardian ad litem, and process, and was argued by counsel." As shown by the face of the record, the court also had jurisdiction of the parties to the suit. Upon examination, we find no error of law on the face of the record. The decrees are such as are warranted by the pleadings and the facts admitted therein. In State v. Vest, 21 W. Va. 796, it is held that "a record imports such absolute verity, that no person against whom it is pronounced will be permitted to aver or prove anything against it." Judge Green, who delivered the opinion of the court in that case, says upon that point: "It is certainly a rule invariably recognized by the courts that a record imports such absolute verity, that no person against whom it is pronounced will be permitted to aver or prove anything against it. This rule is well established, and we now here refer to but a few of the many cases in which this doctrine has been held. See Rex v. Carlile, 2 Barns. & Ad. 971; 23 Eng. Ch. R. 226; Braden v. Reitzenberger, 18 W. Va. 286; Carper v. McDowell, 5 Grat. 212, 226; Harkins v. Forsyth, 11 Leigh, 294; Taliaferro v. Pryor, 12 Grat. 277; Vaughn et al. v. Commonwealth, 17 Grat. 386; Quinn et al. v. Commonwealth, 20 Grat. 188. Whatever, therefore, on the face of a book of record, has been duly authenticated by the signature of the judge, must be held to be an absolute verity, and it cannot be contradicted; and so, also, any paper actually referred to on the record book as filed or as constituting a part of the record is to be regarded as a part of the record, and is as much a verity as if it had been spread out at length as a part of the record." But in Springston v. Morris, 47 W. Va. 50, 34 S. E. 766, it is also held that the recitals of a decree which is directly attacked for fraud are not presumed to be absolute verities, but are subject to impeachment. Judge Dent, speaking for the court, says: "Defendants insist that the plaintiffs have no right to question the recitals of the decree confirming the sale. State v. Vest, 21 W. Va. 796. This is not the rule where a decree is directly impeached for fraud or surprise in its procurement. It may be an absolute verity as to what occurred in court and was there recorded, but not as to the recitals therein contained as to what occurred other than in the presence of the court at the time of the entry of the decree. Black. Judgm. § 238. If such rule were to be held good in all cases, no decree could be impeached for fraud or surprise, and yet such is ordinary equity jurisdiction. Bart. Ch. Prac. (2d Ed.) p. 841. The doctrine of the absolute verity of the record must always yield to that higher equitable doctrine that fraud vitiates all things. 'It is the just and proper pride of our mature system of equity jurisprudence that fraud vitiates every transaction; and, however men may surround it with forms, solemn instruments, proceedings conforming to all the details required in the laws, or even by the formal judgment of courts, a court of equity will disregard them all, if necessary, that justice and equity may prevail.' Warner v. Blakeman, *43 N. Y. 507; Freem. Judgm. § 489. The proper way in which to attack such decree, when the object is merely to set aside the decree, and then permit the original suit to continue to final hearing, is by an original bill in the nature of a bill of review. Manion v. Fahy, 11 W. Va. 482."

Therefore the demurrer to plaintiff's bill, treated as a bill of review—there being no error of law apparent on the face of the record—was properly sustained. Plaintiff, however, asked leave to amend her bill, as hereinbefore stated. Such amendments would not contradict any recitals in the record. It does appear that the cause was heard upon process, but it is not stated that the process had been served. If the proposed allegations be true, the plaintiff had the right to aver and prove them in some appropriate proceeding. The learned judge who decided the case evidently thought that plaintiff had the right to maintain an original bill for the purpose of impeaching the decrees complained of, for fraud. Such seems to have been the opinion of this court in the case of Man- ion v. Fahy, 11 W. Va. 491. It is there said: "If a decree has been procured by fraud, discovered after the decree is entered, but before it is enrolled, the proper mode of correcting it, by the English practice, is neither by a petition for a rehearing, nor by a supplemental bill, in the nature of a bill of review, but the correction must be asked by an original bill in the nature of a bill of review. See Mussell v. Morgan, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 74, 79. Such a bill is not a continuance of the former suit, as a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review is, but it is a new suit; and, like any other original bill, it may be filed without the leave of the court. After the decree has been enrolled, no matter what may be the character of the decree—whether it be an interlocutory decree, in the sense in which we use the term, or a final decree—it can, according to the English practice, be modified or annulled by the court who pronounced the decree only by bill of review, which may be filed for error of law apparent on the face of the record, or because of newly discovered matter. If, however, this enrolled decree was procured by fraud, it can only be set aside by an original bill in a new suit, and cannot be annulled by a bill of review. Mussell v. Morgan, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 74." Plaintiff asked the court not only to allow her to amend her bill, but also to then treat it as and for an original bill for relief upon the facts therein alleged. When amended, the bill would have been, in effect, an original bill for the proposed purpose of setting aside the decrees for fraud.

The plaintiff may, of right, amend his declaration or bill at any time before appearance of the defendant, or after such appearance, if substantial justice will be promoted thereby. Code 1890, c. 125, § 12. Plaintiff had filed her bill in the clerk's office at rules. Defendant M. F. Law appeared in court and interposed his demurrer thereto as a bill of review. If insufficient or improper as such bill of review, but sufficient, or capable of being made so by proper amendment, for the object sought, it was error in the court to refuse such amendment, and it was also error to dismiss the bill. In Sturm v. Fleming, 22 W. Va. 404, it is said: "The name and form are immaterial. Substance is all that is required. In Virginia the practice of courts of equity, which is the rule of practice in this state, allows the greatest liberality with respect to pleadings." In Riggs v. Armstrong, 23 W. Va. 760, it is held: "It is the disposition of courts of equity to regard substance, rather than mere form; hence in this case a bill was filed as a cross-bill which could not be sustained as such, but, having all the elements of an original bill, was held to be sufficient as an original bill, and treated as such." Skaggs v. Mann, 46 W. Va. 209, 219, 33 S. E. 110; Cunningham v. Hedrick, 23 W. Va. 579.

If, then, the remedy in such case is by an original bill, and the bill of review filed in this cause could have been properly amended, and then treated as an original bill for the purposes sought, it is plain that the court should have permitted the amendments, and then treated the bill, so amended, as an original bill, without dismissing the plaintiff, to do again what she had done, and then and there proposed to do. The bill should have been amended and remanded to rules, to have been there properly matured for hearing.

Appellant, in her bill, and her counsel in his brief, fully acquit and exonerate W. W. Brannon, the attorney who assumed to act for her in the circuit court, from intentional wrong in the premises; but this disavowal on their part is in no way to be taken or treated as a waiver of any of the legal rights of appellant in the cause.

For the reasons stated, we are of opinion that there is error in the said decree of October 28, 1902. We therefore reverse and set the same aside, and remand the cause to the circuit court of Lewis county, to be therein further proceeded with according to the views herein expressed, and further in accordance with the rules and principles governing courts of equity.

TIBBS v. ZIRKLE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 16, 1904.)

POWER OF ATTORNEY—CONSTRUCTION—SALE OF LAND—OPTION—RIGHTS OF PARTIES—REVOCATION.

1. The written power to sell land does not include the power to option, unless so expressed.

2. An option not authorized by a written power to sell is not binding on the landowners or a co-agent under such power to sell, without express ratification.

3. A co-agent under a power to sell is not bound by an unauthorized option not given or ratified by himself, and, if he purchase the land for himself, he cannot be held as a trustee for the claimant under such option.

4. An option given for a valuable money consideration cannot be revoked until the time limit therein has expired. If such option is without consideration, it may be withdrawn or revoked at any time before acceptance.

5. An option given without authority, while not binding on the landowners who did not authorize or ratify it, is binding and enforceable against the optionor whose land is included therein.

6. A person who has taken an option upon land, but has not paid the purchase money in full, is not a purchaser for value without notice.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barbour County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Bill by R. B. Tibbs against A. D. Zirkle and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part.

Ice & Ice and W. S. Meredith, for appellant. W. T. George and E. D. Talbott, for appellees.

DENT, J. This is a suit for specific performance instituted in the circuit court of Barbour county by R. B. Tibbs, plaintiff, against A. D. Zirkle et al., in which the circuit court decreed specific performance against A. D. Zirkle individually, but refused it against N. G. Keim and the other defendants. The plaintiff appeals.

The suit is founded on the following optional contract:

"This agreement witnesseth: That A. D. Zirkle, attorney in fact, party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, do hereby sell and convey to R. C. Dunnington & Co., party of the second part, heirs and assigns, the right to purchase all the coal except from one to three acres of each of the sixteen farms hereby represented in and under that certain tract of land in Valley District, Barbour County, W. Va., bounded by lands of N. T. Arnold, on East, North by P. Monahan and O'Brien tract, on West by Middle Fork River, on the South by Middle Fork River and N. T. Arnold, and containing eighteen hundred acres, more or less, together with the right to mine and remove every part of the same without being required to provide for the support of overlying strata or surface, and without being liable for any injury to the same or to anything therein or thereon by reason thereof and with all reasonable privileges for ventilating, pumping and draining the mines, together with the free and uninterrupted right of way into and through said lands and to build, keep and maintain roads and ways in and through said mines for ever, for the transportation of said coal, etc., and of coal and other things necessary for mining purposes from and to other lands.

"For which the parties of the second part, their heirs or assigns, shall pay eighteen dollars per acre for each and every acre of coal, no allowance being made for outcrop, as follows: Eighteen hundred dollars within sixty days after this date, the balance on or before the 3rd day of May, 1903, and it is agreed that said second party shall pay expenses of survey, abstracting of titles, &c., and further the party of the first part reserves the right to bore through said coal for oil and gas and to market same without being liable for damage.

"A good deed, clear of all encumbrances, with a general warranty, to be made to said second parties, heirs or assigns, when so notified by said second party.

"It is expressly understood and agreed that if the said coal is not accepted and paid for by the party of the second part, heirs or assigns, on or before the 3rd day of May, 1903, this agreement may be considered rescinded and neither party shall be bound thereby. And it is agreed that if the said 1,800 dollars is not paid on or before the 3rd day of March, 1903, this contract is null and void, further, if said payment is made and the balance $17.00 dollars per acre not paid on or before the 3rd day of May, 1903, this contract is null and void and said payment is a forfeiture.

"In witness whereof, the said parties have hereto set their hands and seals this 3rd day of January, A. D. 1903.

"Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of A. D. Zirkle, Attorney in Fact. [L. S.]

"Attest: C. Morris."

"Be it remembered that we the undersigned hereby appoint A. D. Zirkle to sell our coal except enough for domestic use and hereby give him power of attorney to make said sale not to sell for less than $15.00 per acre and give him full control of said sale, and we agree to abide by the said sale that he may make, and we further agree to let him manage the sale and have the power to make said sale as long as he thinks there is a chance to sell and we further agree to pay the said A. D. Zirkle reasonable compensation for his time and his expenses for making sale as aforesaid if he make said sale, but if he fail to make the said sale no compensation is to be paid the said A. D. Zirkle for his time and expenses except agreed upon by the majority of the undersigned and we further agree to give him all the time necessary to make tests or opening and also not to interfere with any sale that may be pending if he thinks there is a chance to sell.

"Witness our hand this the 14th day of September, 1900. Jacob Zirkle, 400 A. Patrick McGinnis, 156 A. Bridget Caughlin, 102 A. H. W. Goss, 110 A. D. T. Goss, 45 A. Lewis Zirkle, 200 A. N. Rohrbaugh, 70 A. B. F. Wiseman, 180 A. G. C. Wiseman, 20 A. Valeria Wilson, 50 A. A. B. Wilson, 150 A. M. E. Gower, 60 A. A. D. Zirkle, 100 A. J. D. Zirkle, 110 A."

The defendant Keim between the 22d of January, 1903, and the 10th of February, 1903, took options on the coal of A. D. Zirkle, Lewis Zirkle, Nathan Rohrbaugh, Henry W. Goss, A. B. Wilson, B. F. Wiseman, Anna Goss, Jacob Zirkle, Margaret E. Gower, J. D. Zirkle, G. C. Wiseman, and Valeria Wilson, and paid a down payment on the purchase money to each, which was forfeitable. None of Keim's optioners had actual notice of the plaintiff's option prior to the date of Keim's options. While Zirkle, whose deposition alone is taken in behalf of defendant Keim, testifies that Keim did not have notice of such option, he admits that there was a contract between himself and Keim at the time the option was taken by which Keim was interested in such option, and, if the same matured into a sale, he (Keim) was entitled to share equally with Zirkle in the profits of the sale, and about the time and just previous to the taking of the options by Keim, with Zirkle's assistance, Zirkle endeavored to get the optioners to abandon their options; thus plainly showing that Zirkle was working in Keim's interest, and, no doubt, with the full knowledge and approval of Keim.

So the important questions in this case are narrowed down to two: First. Did Zirkle's power of attorney authorize him to execute the plaintiff's options? Second. Did Keim occupy such a relation toward the plaintiff as prevented him from taking advantage of Zirkle's lack of authority to execute such option?

If it had been shown that Keim had done anything to ratify or approve of the Zirkle option, or that Zirkle was interested in Keim's options, a different case would have been presented. But there is no evidence, other than suspicious circumstances directly opposed by Zirkle's evidence, tending to prove Zirkle's interest in Keim's options, while the fact that Keim took these options shows that he did not approve or ratify Zirkle's option. If Zirkle had authority under his power of attorney to execute the option, Keim, under his contract with Zirkle, by which he was to have an equal interest in such power of attorney, would have been equally bound with Zirkle by such option, as they would have been mutually interested therein. But if Zirkle exceeded his authority in the execution of such option, then Keim would be no more bound thereby than the landowners, and this could only be by ratification thereof. The landowners stand indifferent in this suit, and their failure to answer the bill and deny its allegations might be deemed a willingness on their part to ratify the plaintiff's option, but this they could not do without Keim's consent after the execution of his options. We cannot hold otherwise than that Zirkle exceeded his authority under his power of attorney in executing plaintiff's option, for he was only authorized to make sale, while an option is not a sale, although it may eventuate in a sale. For the time being it prevents a sale, it matters not what the event thereof may be; and, if Zirkle had authority to give an option for three months, he had the right to extend such option for three years, and in this manner he might indefinitely tie up the property, and prevent, instead of securing, a sale thereof. This certainly was not had in view by the landowners when they authorized Zirkle to make sale for them. Those dealing with Zirkle must take notice of the extent of his power. 1 Am. & En. En. Law (2d Ed.) 1010; Field v. Small, 17 Colo. 386, 30 Pac. 1084; Dyer v. Duffy, 39 W. Va. 148, 19 S. E. 540, 24 L. R. A. 339. Zirkle's option being without authority, neither Keim nor the landowners were bound by it, and, without waiting to see whether it would result in a sale, they had the right to repudiate it, and enter into any other arrangement, either between themselves or others, for the option or sale of their coal. Keim held no confidential relation whatever towards the plaintiff, in so far as the unauthorized option was concerned. It would have been otherwise, had Zirkle made a sale, instead of giving an option, as Keim would have been bound thereby by reason of his contract with Zirkle. Keim was in no sense the agent of the plaintiff, and was under no obligation of duty towards him. Keim was not bound to ratify Zirkle's option, nor await its consummation. The option gave plaintiff no vested interest in the land, but was a mere right to purchase within a limited time, binding only upon Zirkle. Keim was not in duty bound to make it good. 1 Perry on Trust, § 206, p. 301; Farley v. Kiltson, 27 Minn. 102, at page 105, 6 N. W. 450, 7 N. W. 287.

The plaintiff not being entitled to be substituted to Zirkle's rights under his power of attorney, since his option was in violation thereof, he is not entitled to be substituted to any of the rights that Zirkle might have by virtue of his contract with Keim. The option is not binding on Keim, and could not be made so by substitution, so as to make Keim plaintiff's agent or trustee in taking his options. The power of attorney was binding on Keim, and he had no right to take options for his own benefit without Zirkle's assent; but, as plaintiff is not entitled to enforce such power of attorney against the landowners, he cannot enforce it against Keim.

Keim's agency grew out of, and is controlled by, the power of attorney. Plaintiff's rights grow out of, and are controlled by, his option, and he acquired no vested rights under the power of attorney that can be affected by Keim's purchasing in disregard thereof. Zirkle was under obligation to prevent and, no doubt, could have prevented, the revocation of his power of attorney for the time limited in his option; but he had no legal right to compel such extension, and his acquiescence in the revocation thereof imposes no binding legal duty on either Keim or the landowners to the plaintiff. Zirkle's breach of duty to the plaintiff, though fraudulent, imposes no legal duty on those who are not participants in such fraud. Plaintiff's rights are wholly limited to his option, which imposes neither express nor implied legal obligations upon Keim. Hence Keim has committed no breach of legal duty he owes to the plaintiff, except in taking an option on A. D. Zirkle's 100 acres of coal. The circuit court so decreed, but, instead of canceling Keim's option as a cloud on plaintiff's title, or reserving the right to do so, it finally and completely dismissed the bill as to Keim, thus refusing complete relief between the parties. Hotchkiss v. Fitzgerald Plaster Co., 41 W. Va. 357, 23 S. E. 576. While the landowners and Keim were not bound by the option, Zirkle is, for he received a money consideration therefor, and he could not revoke it during the time limited. The law is otherwise if he had received no consideration. 21 Am. & En. En. Law (2d Ed.) 929; Weaver

v. Burr, 31 W. Va. 736, 8 S. E. 743, 3 L. R. A. 94; Eclipse Oil Co. v. South Penn Oil Co., 47 W. Va. 84, 34 S. E. 923.

The plaintiff complied with the terms of the option, and tendered Zirkle the sum of $1,800, the full cash value of his 100 acres of coal. As to him, the court did not err in decreeing specific performance. The court did, however, err in dismissing the bill as to defendant Keim, as he held a recorded option on A. D. Zirkle's coal; and, as he has not paid the purchase money, he could in no event be treated as an innocent holder for value without notice. Webb v. Bailey, 41 W. Va. 463, 23 S. E. 644. His option should therefore be canceled as a cloud on plaintiff's title, if the plaintiff elects to take the Zirkle coal.

The decree will therefore be reversed in so far as it dismisses the bill as to defendant Keim, and in all other respects affirmed, and the cause is remanded to the circuit court for further proceedings according to the rules and principles governing courts of equity. The reversal is at the costs of the defendants A. D. Zirkle and N. G. Keim.

POLING v. WILLIAMS et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 16, 1904.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE—SETTING ASIDE—
SUIT BY GRANTOR—SUBSEQUENT SALE—PAROL TRUST—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—APPEAL—REVIEW.

1. Where a conveyance has been made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors of the grantor, all the estate of the grantor subject to the rights of creditors passes by the deed to the grantee, and equity will not, at the suit of the grantor or any person claiming under him as purchaser from him after such conveyance, set the deed aside.

2. No interest or estate in land so conveyed remains in the fraudulent grantor for his benefit, which can form the basis of such a contract of sale by him, as will create an equity respecting the land.

3. A purchaser from the grantee in such deed is not prejudiced by prior notice of a pretended contract of sale of the land so conveyed, made between such fraudulent grantor and a third person.

4. A voluntary or fraudulent conveyance is binding upon the parties thereto.

5. Equity will not aid any person in an effort to profit by his own fraudulent act.

6. One who conveys land to another voluntarily, and without consideration, cannot set up a parol trust in the land in his favor, unless the circumstances be such as to bring the case within the rule stated in point 3 of the syllabus in Troll v. Carter, 15 W. Va. 567.

7. One who claims such a trust vests no equity affecting the land by his contract for the sale of it to another.

8. Where two persons are attempting to purchase the same property, neither is bound by any notice of the acts of the other until an enforceable contract is made with one of them.

9. When a bill in equity sets up a claim that is unenforceable, and the evidence offered in support of it does not prove a good cause of action, and the relief asked has been decreed by the court below, the appellate court will, on appeal, reverse the decree and dismiss the bill, although no demurrer was interposed in the lower court.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Bill by U. S. Poling against R. P. Williams and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, and bill dismissed.

Harding & Harding and Linn, Byrne & Cato, for appellants. L. Hansford, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, P. U. S. Poling sues to enforce the specific performance of a contract of sale of a tract of land containing 40 acres, situated in Randolph county, made between him and R. P. Williams on the 18th day of February, 1901, whereby Williams agreed to sell the plaintiff said land; and also to set aside a deed made by said R. P. Williams April 4, 1900, conveying the same land to his brother, E. L. Williams, "for the purpose of evading the payment of some small debts due from" the defendant R. P. Williams "to various persons," according to the allegations of the bill; and also to set aside another deed made by said E. L. Williams April 12, 1901, conveying the same land to H. E. Stout, wife of W. F. Stout; and also to enjoin and restrain the defendants from cutting and removing the timber from the land and otherwise interfering with complainant's possession of the land. After a full hearing on the bill, exhibits, answers, general replications, and depositions, the court, by its final decree, perpetuated the injunction awarded at the commencement of the suit, canceled the deed from E. L. Williams to Mrs. Stout, ordered R. P. Williams and E. L. Williams to execute a deed conveying the land to Poling upon his payment of the balance of the purchase money, and appointed a special commissioner to make said conveyance on their failure to do so within 30 days from the date of payment of said balance. From this decree H. E. Stout, W. F. Stout, and E. L. Williams have appealed.

By his contract of purchase, U. S. Poling could acquire only such right, title, and interest in the land as R. P. Williams then had. That Williams then had no interest in it is manifest. He had conveyed the legal title to his brother. He could claim nothing under or against that deed for two reasons: First. It was made with intent to defraud his creditors, and equity will not relieve a party from the consequences of his fraudulent act, nor aid him in an effort to profit by it. McClintock v. Loiseau, 31 W. Va. 865, 8 S. E. 612, 2 L. R. A. 816; Billingsley v. Meneer, 44 W. Va. 651, 30 S. E. 31; Edgell v. Smith, 50 W. Va. 349, 40 S. E. 402. "This rule applies not only to the original parties to the fraudulent transaction, but also to their heirs, and to all parties claiming under, or by title derived from, them, where no equitable rights intervene to protect such parties." McClintock v. Loisseau, cited. Second. If the deed was not made to defraud the creditors of the grantor, he cannot set up an interest in the land by way of parol trust, and convey, or contract to convey, that to a third party. The statute of frauds and the rule against the admission of parol evidence to contradict, vary, or add to written contracts, make it impossible to create such an equitable title. Troll v. Carter, 15 W. Va. 567. It is not claimed here in any form that E. L. Williams procured the deed by any fraud perpetrated upon R. P. Williams, the grantor; nor that the latter owed the former a debt for which the land was conveyed as security; nor that the land was conveyed to the former by a third person in consideration of money paid or furnished by the latter. The case is not within any of the exceptions to the rule noted in point 2 of the syllabus of Troll v. Carter. The grantor here claims the grantee was to hold the land upon a secret parol trust for him, the grantor, in direct contradiction of the terms of the deed, and has sold that alleged equitable title to Poling. It is for that Poling sues, and it is a nonentity. The case, in this aspect of it, falls exactly within the principle announced in point 3 of the syllabus of Troll v. Carter.

But it is urged that Mrs. Stout had notice of Poling's contract with R. P. Williams. That is wholly immaterial. He clearly had nothing under that contract of which anybody could take notice. It was like waste paper. It conferred no right, title, or interest of any kind in the land. Parties are presumed to know the law, and in view of this principle Mrs. Stout knew Poling had acquired nothing by his contract, for R. P. Williams had nothing to sell him.

As stated in the bill, therefore, the case is wholly without any equity. It does not aver any purchase from, or contract of purchase with, E. L. Williams, nor that R. P. Williams was the agent of E. L. Williams, and made the alleged contract with Poling as such agent and on behalf of said E. L. Williams. Although not demurred to, the bill cannot support a decree, as it sets out an alleged bad claim, unenforceable in any court, and not a good cause of action insufficiently stated. It should have been dismissed at the hearing, unless the case made by the evidence showed that the bill could be made good by amendment and sustained by proof. Nor is it proved that R. P. Williams, as agent of E. L. Williams, had made a contract of sale to Poling. The evidence of both Poling and R. P. Williams conforms to the allegations of the bill. Poling says he bought the land of R. P. Williams and his wife, and the written contract reads as follows:

"Parsons, W. Va., Feb. 18th, 1901.

"I, this day, sell to U. S. Poling 40 acres of land I now own on Salt Lick in Randolph County, W. Va., for the sum of $95.00. I hereby receive as a part of said consideration $13.33 which sum is to be deducted from the total consideration of $95.00 and I further agree to make or cause to be made to the said Poling a deed properly acknowledged and stamped ready for recordation.

"R. P. Williams.

"Amanda J. Williams."

He immediately showed it to W. F. Stout, and does not say he told him he had had any communication whatever with E. L. Williams, or that R. P. Williams was acting for E. L. Williams. Under this contract he says he immediately went upon the land, and did some clearing, and put out fruit trees. R. P. Williams testifies that he was the owner of the land, sold it to Poling, and sent his brother a deed to execute, which the latter returned unexecuted, but told him to sell the land, and later wrote witness another letter saying he had better not make a deed, but hold it awhile. One of the letters is in the record, and says, under date of March 20, 1901: "Lony I cannot get away from the children to acknowledge the deed. I don't think it necessary anyhow. I will just say in this letter I give you all claims I have on the land, if you sell it do so you and I can settle afterwards. I send you the deed. I have no claim on it now." It does not appear that either Poling or Stout ever saw this letter, if it can be treated as a power of attorney or evidence of agency. Poling did nothing on the faith of this letter, for it is dated a month after the alleged contract was made under which he says he immediately took possession, and he does not say he ever saw it, or had any communication with E. L. Williams. It gives no authority to represent E. L. Williams as agent. He disclaims any interest in the land and uses no word or phrase which binds him to do anything. It is not a communication to Poling, nor an adoption of or agreement to carry out the contract made by R. P. Williams. Mrs. Stout was not bound or estopped by notice of anything short of a contract between E. L. Williams and Poling. She was bound by notice of any interest he had acquired in the land, but nothing short of an enforceable contract with E. L. Williams, made in person or by agent, amounted to such interest. Notice of mere negotiations pending is not sufficient if it can be said that any were pending. The principle invoked is that, if a subsequent purchaser has notice of a contract relating to the property, he is liable to the same equity, and stands in the same place, and is bound to do the same acts which the person who contracted, and whom he represents, would be bound to do. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 296; Fry, Spec. Per. § 135, p. 113; Bryant v. Booze, 55 Ga. 438; Taylor v. Sibbert, 2 Ves. Jr. 437; Potter v. Sanders, 6 Hare, 1; Wade on Notice, § 55. E. L. Williams was inactive, passive, suffering his brother to do as he pleased with the land, and did not act binding upon himself until he executed the deed to Mrs. Stout, and then all the purchase money was received by R. P. Williams. There never was any promise or agreement on the part of either Poling or Mrs. Stout to pay any money to E. L. Williams, nor any agreement by him to convey to either of them. Hence Poling had no interest of which Mrs. Stout could take notice, nor any contract with E. L. Williams enforceable in this suit, so far as appears from either his bill or his evidence. Therefore he was not entitled to any decree on his bad bill, and it appears that an amendment would be useless.

For these reasons the decree complained of is reversed, the injunction dissolved, and the bill dismissed.

TYREE v. VIRGINIA FIRE & MARINE INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 16, 1904.)

INSURANCE—INSURABLE INTEREST—APPLICATION—FALSE STATEMENTS—CONDITIONS OF POLICY.

1. A husband living with his wife in a house which is on her separate estate has no insurable interest therein.

2. A false statement by an applicant for insurance to the agent that such applicant is sole and absolute owner of the house, the agent not knowing to the contrary, avoids the policy.

3. An insurance policy provides that, "if the title or interest of assured is less than the entire, absolute, unconditional, unincumbered, fee-simple ownership," the insurance company shall not be liable under the policy. Such provision is reasonable, and, if the insured has not such title or interest, no recovery can be had on the policy.

Error from Circuit Court, Greenbrier County; J. M. McWhorter, Judge.

Action by W. F. Tyree against the Virginia Fire & Marine Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

Williams & Dice, for plaintiff in error. Gilmer & Gilmer and Preston & Wallace, for defendant in error.

BRANNON, J. The Virginia Fire Insurance Company issued a policy to W. F. Tyree insuring a house and some furniture. The policy is in Tyree's name. The policy contains a clause that the company should not be liable under it "if the title or interest of assured is less than the entire, absolute, unconditional, unincumbered fee-simple ownership" in Tyree. The land was the separate estate of his wife. He built the house upon it at his own expense, and lived in it with his wife. When Tyree applied to the agent for insurance, Tyree says he said to the agent, "I want my house insured," but the agent did not interrogate him as to his title. There is controversy only as to the loss from destruction of the dwelling house. The company tendered return of the premium. Tyree brought suit on the policy, recovered verdict and judgment for $1,875 of the $2,000 insurance on the house, and the company brought the case to this court.

A vital question is, had Tyree an insurable interest in the dwelling house, it being his wife's separate estate? I am perplexed upon the question. "It has become a fixed rule of insurance law that the assured must have an interest of some kind in the subject-matter of insurance, whether property or life. Two reasons may be assigned for this rule. In the first place, it is inexpedient that a contract so necessary for the protection of legitimate business should be prostituted to illegal uses as a mode of speculation; and, in the second place, it is opposed to public policy, because demoralizing to the insured, that he should be permitted to enter into any contract under which he would have an interest in the destruction of the subject-matter, rather than in its preservation." 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 846. "When there is no interest at all to be protected, a policy will be invalid, as counter to the spirit and purpose of the contract, as well as against public policy." "When the insured has nothing to lose, but everything to gain, by the event insured against, it would be dangerous and demoralizing to subject the insured to so great a temptation to destroy the property or the life upon which the insurance is effected." May on Ins. §§ 74, 75. "The question whether the husband has insurable interest in the wife's property must depend in great measure upon the statutes of the several states by which the rights of a husband in the wife's property are governed. If the loss of the property will deprive him of its possession, enjoyment, or profits, or any certain benefits growing out of it, or of a security or lien therein, it would seem that he has an insurable interest in such property. But, on the other side, if the wife's management of her property is not limited; if she may control absolutely its income; if she may lease it without his consent, and her lessee may expel him from possession; if during her lifetime he has no interest, no inchoate rights therein, nor even a right of occupancy, and after her decease his only rights would be acquired by descent, and not inchoate, which would be perfected thereby—he would, on general principles, seem to have no such pecuniary interest in the preservation of her property as would constitute an insurable interest." Joyce on Ins. § 1049. Under this statement it is hard to say that he has an insurable interest in this state. The wife has by statute power to lease, take all rents and profits to her sole use, and the husband has no control over her separate estate, does not take by descent, and has no right of possession by law during marriage, and has no curtesy initiate. The able jurist Judge Cooley said that, if the husband could insure in his own name his wife's property, "it is manifest that any person may obtain insurance upon property without any right in it whatever. He has but to disclose the facts, and the policy, though only a wager policy, will be as legal as any other. But such a doctrine is at war with the fundamental principles of insurance, which require that a person shall have an insurable interest before he can insure. A policy issued when there is no such interest is void, and it is immaterial that it is taken in good faith, and with full knowledge. The policy of the law does not admit of such insurance, however willing the parties may be to enter into it. The doctrine of waiver has obviously nothing to do with such a case. The agent cannot do for the company by waiver what it is powerless by express contract to do for itself. He cannot, by waiver, invest the insured with an interest he does not own. There was occasion to consider this question in Peoria v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202, and it was held that an insurance of partnership property by one partner in his own name could not be made to embrace the interest of the other partner, though it was written by the agent with full knowledge of the fact. The reason is the one above assigned. It is not competent to write an insurance where an insurable interest is wanting. The difficulty is inherent in the case, and is beyond the reach of waiver. It is proper to say that under our statute the husband has no control whatever over his wife's property; so that the question arises here precisely as it would had the silver been owned by a stranger." So was the decision Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Montague, 88 Mich. 548, 31 Am. Rep. 326. This holding is sustained by Trott v. Woolwich Co., 83 Me. 362, 22 Atl. 245, holding that a policy issued on a dwelling in the name of the husband when title was in his wife, the company not being informed that he was not the owner, is void. The reasons are fully stated in Clark v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 81 Me. 373, 17 Atl. 303. "The Married Women's Acts take away from the husband all right to the possession or control of the wife's separate estate. He has no present right of enjoyment, no interest in the rents. A policy of insurance secured thereon by the husband, who has no insurable interest therein, is unenforceable." Traders' Ins. Co. v. Newman, 120 Ind. 554, 22 N. E. 428; Traders' Ins. Co. v. Barraciff, 45 N. J. Law, 543, 46 Am. Rep. 792, is to the reverse. American Central Co. v. McLanathan, 11 Kan. 533, cited to the contrary, is not so, as the policy was got by the husband as his wife's agent for the benefit of both, though in his name, and the insurer was aware of the facts. Merrett v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 42 Iowa, 11, is cited on this side, but the court said the husband was by the Iowa Code entitled to hold possession against his wife's will. In this state he is on her property not by binding law, but by leave and sufferance—has no legal tenure. Horsch v. Dwelling Ins. Co. (Wis.) 45 N. W. 945, 8 L. R. A. 806, is a case where the husband had the entire beneficial use and possession, had paid for the land, managed it exclusively, took exclusive control of rents and profits, and had an agreement with his wife that she would convey the land to him on request. He thus owned the land. So where he has lien on her land. Rohrbach v. Germania Co., 20 Am. Rep. 451. The case of Mutual Ins. Co. v. Deale, 79 Am. Dec. 673, is no support for the husband's insurable interest, because in it he had a marital estate. It is so stated. Clarke v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 18 La. 431, does not support the claim, because the opinion says that by the law of Louisiana the husband has control and management of his wife's personalty. Cohn v. Va. Ins. Co., 3 Hughes, 272, Fed. Cas. No. 2,970, cited in Joyce on that side, is a case where the husband's action was defeated on the pleadings, the court saying he could only insure his "right to use" the wife's personalty, thus implying that he could not insure the property. Of course, he can insure where he has curtesy; but he has no estate, only an expectancy of curtesy, like a child. McNesley v. Oil Co., 52 W. Va. 616, 44 S. E. 508, 62 L. R. A. 562. I see no case except the New Jersey case holding that the husband has an insurable interest, except under special circumstances giving him a right in the property. An insurance company wants to insure the person who has vested property right, which will move him to protect it; not one who has no motive to protect it. In the latter case the insurance tempts him to burn the property. A husband may want to get money from his wife's property for his own use. If he could insure her house, this would be an easy way to accomplish the very thing which the law seeks to frustrate by demanding a property right in the insured. In this case it is charged that Tyree set fire to the house, and evidence given tending to show it. It is true that Sheppard v. Peabody Ins. Co., 21 W. Va. 368, holds that, to give an insurable interest, one need not have any actual right of property, but it is sufficient if he or those he represents will suffer injury by the destruction of the property. Still it is meant that he must himself have an interest recognized by law, or those he legally represents must have, as the creditors of an estate are entitled to charge its assets. But in this case the husband did not have any estate, or represent any one. Why did he not insure in his wife's name? He wanted the money himself. By destruction of the house he lost a home is all we can say to support the policy.

Another question: Tyree represented to the agent that he owned the house. As he himself says, he said to the agent, "I want my house insured," and in the policy he represented that he had "entire, absolute, unconditional, unincumbered fee-simple ownership." An insurer has the right to know the truth about ownership. It would be willing to insure the fee owner, because he would have a motive not to burn the property, but not willing to insure one not owning, for he might have a motive to burn it and get the money. "If the insured states the nature or extent of his interest, he must state it truly. If the nature of the insured's interest is such that it would influence the underwriter to charge a higher premium, or not insure at all, it must be disclosed, for it is material to the risk." "In cases where the misrepresentation is positive, and of a fact actually material, it is not necessary to prove that the representation was fraudulently made. The materiality of the misrepresentation and its falsity does away with the necessity of showing actual fraud." Joyce on Ins. §§ 1858, 1897, 1894. "A false representation as to the interest of the assured in the property is regarded as material, and such as, if substantially false, avoids the policy." Wood on Ins. § 179. Chief Justice Marshall said: "Insurances against fire are made in confidence that the assured will use all precautions to avoid the calamity insured against which would be suggested by his interest. The extent of his interest must always influence the underwriter in taking or rejecting the risk and estimating the premium. So far as it may influence him in this respect, it ought to be communicated to him." Columbian Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 2 Pet. 48, 7 L. Ed. 335. If the policy requires a statement of interest, it is thus made material, and must be true. 1 May on Ins. §§ 285, 287. "When the condition requires the applicant to have the entire, unconditional, and sole ownership, a policy issued to one who described the property as his frame dwelling house, when his title was only a quitclaim deed from a second mortgage, avoids the policy under the sole ownership clause." Id. § 287b. "A representation may be made by express stipulation material in the sense that inquiry into its materiality is thereby precluded, and the insured will be bound in such case even though the fact be actually immaterial. The truth of the statements being generally made in such cases the basis of the contract, it is sufficient to show they are actually untrue." Joyce on Ins. § 1912. In the same section we find it said, "If a fire insurance policy is conditioned to be void 'in case of any misrepresentation whatever,' any misrepresentation, whether material or not, will avoid it." If a person does not like the conditions, he need not accept the policy. Tyree in words represented that he was sole owner. He assured the company that he had absolute fee simple, and he agreed that, if he had not, the policy should be void. The agent had no knowledge to the contrary. Surely, the company had the right to insert this condition as a reasonable one for its protection. "A condition that, if the insured is not the sole, entire, and unconditional owner, the policy shall be void, is reasonable and valid, and violation of it will prevent recovery." May on Ins. § 287a. "As the insurer is entitled to rely on the statements of the applicant, the insurer will not be charged with knowledge of the land records, where title might have been investigated." 1 Biddle on Ins. § 671.

Plaintiff's instructions 1, 3, and 4 and special replication to plea 2 are bad for reasons above given. The defendant's five instructions should have been given for the same reasons.

Judgment reversed, and new trial awarded.

PRINCE v. HOLSTON NAT. BLDG. & LOAN ASS'N et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Feb. 16, 1904.)

BUILDING ASSOCIATION—LOAN—CONDITIONS—USURY.

1. Plaintiff, P., and wife, executed to defendant a bond as follows: "$1,500. Bristol, Tennessee, Dec. 1, 1891. On or before nine years from date we promise to pay the Holston National Building and Loan Association, at its Home office, Bristol, Tennessee, Fifteen hundred dollars, and a premium of $7.50 per month, together with interest on the sum of Fifteen hundred dollars at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable monthly"—with an underwritten condition that said interest on the $1,500, and the monthly premium of $7.50, and the monthly payments on the shares of stock, and any fines assessed under the rules of said association, and taxes, insurance, etc., as set out in the bond and mortgage securing said loan, should be paid "until said stock becomes fully paid in and of the value of $100 per share, then it is understood that upon the surrender of said stock to said association this note shall be deemed fully paid and canceled."

Held, that under said contract the obligor was bound to pay the premium of $7.50 per month until the maturity of the stock upon which the loan was made. Held, further, that the time of the maturity of the stock being indefinite and uncertain rendered the amount of the premium to be paid uncertain, and thereby the monthly payments of premium were required to be paid for an indefinite period, and so rendered illegal, and making the contract usurious.

2. P. having subscribed for 20 shares of the stock of defendant association for the sole purpose of borrowing the par value thereof, $2,000, and not to hold any part of said stock as investment stock, and the association having refused to loan P. on more than 15 of said shares $1,500, it was not error to apply all payments of dues made by said P. on the 20 shares of stock on account of the debt of $1,500 and its legal interest.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County; J. M. Sanders, Judge.

Bill by Ash M. Prince against the Holston National Building & Loan Association and another. Decree for plaintiff. Defendant association appeals. Affirmed.

W. Walter McClaugherty, for appellant.
H. A. Ritz and A. W. Reynolds, for appellee.

McWHORTER, J. Ash M. Prince subscribed for 20 shares of stock, of the par value of $100 per share, in the Holston National Building & Loan Association, of Bristol, Tenn., and a certificate of said 20 shares of stock was issued to him on the 13th day of July, 1891. On the 4th day of August, 1891, the said Prince applied to the association for an advance or loan to him of the full amount of the par value of his stock, $2,000, and, in his application, offered to pay a premium of 50 cents per month on each $100 borrowed, and to secure the premium and the loan, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, by a deed of trust to be executed upon certain real estate in the city of Bluefield, county of Mercer, state of West Virginia. The application having been approved by the association to the extent of a loan of $1,500 on 15 of the shares, the said Ash M. Prince and Emma J. Prince, his wife, executed the following note or bond:

"$1,500.00. Bristol, Tennessee, Dec. 1st, 1891. On or before nine years from date, we promise to pay the Holston National Building and Loan Association, at its Home Office, Bristol, Tennessee, Fifteen Hundred dollars, and a premium of $7.50 per month, together with interest on the sum of Fifteen Hundred * * * Dollars, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable monthly.

"This note is for money borrowed on Fifteen shares of the ninth series stock of said Association, and is secured by a mortgage of even date herewith, upon a lot of land in the county of Mercer * * * and State of West Virginia. Now if we pay promptly the monthly interest on said sum of $1,500.00 and the monthly premium of $7.50 bid by us for said loan and the monthly payments on said shares of stock and any fines assessed under the rules of said Association, and the taxes accruing on the lot of land described in the mortgage securing this obligation, and the premiums necessary to keep the house on said lot insured in such sum as said Association may require (not exceeding $1,500.00) until the said stock becomes fully paid in and of the value of $100 per share, then it is understood that upon the surrender of said stock to said Association this note shall be deemed fully paid and canceled. But if we fail to pay promptly when due and payable, the said taxes and insurance, premiums, or default in the payment of said monthly interest, monthly premiums, fines and monthly payments of said stock for a period of six months after the same are, or any installment thereof is due, then, at the option of the said Association the whole indebtedness evidenced by this obligation (including any taxes and insurance premiums due or paid by said association) shall at once become and be due and collectible, and a foreclosure of said mortgage in the manner therein provided may be had.

"It is further understood that this Note is made with reference to, and under the laws of said State of Tennessee; and if paid before seven years from its date, such rebate from the premium included herein will be allowed, as the Board of Directors of said Association shall deem equitable.

"Witness our hands and seals the day and year first above written. Ash M. Prince.
[Seal.] Emma J. Prince. [Seal.]"

And at the same time they executed a deed of trust to W. W. McClaugherty, trustee, with covenants of general warranty of title, on certain real estate therein described, to secure the said note or obligation, and the payments therein provided for, according to its provisions, and provided that, if the obligors should comply with their undertaking in said obligation till the same should be paid or canceled as therein provided, then the conveyance should become and be void, but that if default should be made at all, or in any of the particulars mentioned in said note or obligation which should make the same due, then the trustee was authorized, when thereto required, in writing, by any party interested, and after having given notice required by section 6 of chapter 72 of the Code of West Virginia of 1884, to proceed to sell the property conveyed to the highest bidder at public auction. Default in some of the payments having been made as provided for in the deed of trust, and the trustee, McClaugherty, being requested so to do by the association, he advertised the property for sale on the 23d of October, 1897. On the 6th of October, 1897, Ash M. Prince presented his bill in equity against the Holston National Building & Loan Association and W. W. McClaugherty, trustee, alleging that the contract was usurious and unlawful, and that the payments that he had made to said association had more than paid his debt and interest to the said association, and alleging that, under the facts and circumstances set out in his bill, he was entitled to have the sale of the property forever enjoined, and to have the usury expunged from said contract, and to have a decree compelling said defendant loan association to release the lien of said trust deed, and to have a decree against the defendant loan association for whatever sum might be ascertained to be due to the plaintiff by the defendant loan association, for which, and for general relief, plaintiff prayed; and on the said 6th of October, 1897, the said judge granted the plaintiff an injunction as prayed for until the further order of the circuit court of Mercer county, or of the judge in vacation, which injunction was to take effect upon bond being given as required by the order. The defendant association filed its demurrer and separate answer to the bill, denying the material allegations thereof, and claimed there was yet due the association from the plaintiff on account of said loan on the 1st day of September, 1897, the sum of $962.79, and filed a statement of account with its said answer. Depositions were taken and filed in the cause, and on the 13th day of May the same was argued and submitted to the court, and time taken until the next term, with leave to counsel to file briefs before the judge in vacation. On the 21st of February, 1900, the cause was heard upon the bill and demurrer and answer of the defendant association, the orders made, and the depositions of witnesses, and upon the motion of the defendant association to dissolve the injunction, and upon the written briefs of counsel. And the court was of opinion that there was usury in the contract set up in the bill and proceedings, and that the defendant association was entitled to recover the sum of $1,500, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 1st day of December, 1891, subject to be credited by all sums paid by plaintiff (premiums, interest, and dues on stock) as of date of their payment, and referred the cause to a commissioner to ascertain and apply such credits as the plaintiff might be entitled to to the debt of the association, and to ascertain the status of the account between the parties, and report his calculations and any evidence taken by him to the court, and to report such other matter as might be deemed pertinent by himself, or which might be required by the parties in interest; and the injunction was continued until the coming in of the report of the commissioner. The commissioner filed his report, based upon said decree of February 21, 1900, showing a balance due from Prince to the association of $57.43, as of May 14, 1900. The defendant association filed exceptions to said report, and on the 17th of May, 1900, the cause was again heard upon all the former proceedings, and upon said report and the exceptions thereto; and the court overruled the exceptions to the report, and confirmed it in all respects, and entered a decree in favor of the defendant association for $57.43, as the correct amount remaining unpaid on its lien set up in the cause, and gave the plaintiff his costs, of $60.03, recovered in the cause, to offset and discharge the said balance due on the lien, and discharged and released the lien, and perpetuated the injunction. From which decree, the defendant association appealed.

The first error assigned is the overruling of the demurrer to plaintiff's bill; the second and third, in refusing to dissolve the injunction on motion made in vacation on the incoming of the answer of the defendant. There is nothing offered on the first assignment of error in the briefs of the defendant to sustain the demurrer, and the bill, on its face, appears to be good. It is insisted in support of the second and third assignments that the plaintiff, having conveyed the real estate in question prior to the institution of the suit, had no interest therein, and could not maintain his suit; that the plea of usury was personal to himself, and the same could not be maintained for the benefit of his grantees.

The defendant filed as an exhibit with its answer a deed of conveyance made by the plaintiff and his wife to Jacob Bloch and Abraham Bloch, dated on the 2d day of October, 1897, and acknowledged on the 5th, and recorded in the clerk's office of Mercer county on the 14th day of the same month, conveying to said Blochs, in consideration of $5,708.32, with general warranty, except as to $5,500 which was secured by deed of trust on the property conveyed, certain property in the city of Bluefield, including the property conveyed and described in the deed of trust made by said Prince and his wife to secure the loan to the defendant association. Appellant insists that, the property having been conveyed before the institution of this suit, which was begun on the 8th day of October, 1897, plaintiff had no further interest in the real estate, having conveyed the same as stated, and the injunction should be dissolved and his suit dismissed. It is true, the defense of usury is personal to the debtor, and that one who purchases land that is under deed of trust for a usurious debt cannot set up the usury against that debt. Smith v. McMillan, 46 W. Va. 577, 33 S. E. 283 (Syl., points 1, 2). And point 3 holds that, "where a stranger assumes to pay a usurious debt of another, the intervention of this stranger purges the usury, and he cannot set it up against his obligation to pay." See, also, 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 937. It appears from the evidence in case at bar, however, that the Blochs, vendees of said Prince, did not assume the payment of the said lien, and the same was not included in the $5,500, to secure the payment of which Prince took a deed of trust. It further appears from the evidence that the deed to the Blochs was not delivered until the 12th day of October, four days after the filing of plaintiff's bill. Defendant's counsel, in support of their position on this question, cite the Virginia case of Saunders v. Baltimore Building & Loan Association, 37 S. E. 775. That was a case in which it was alleged in the bill that, on a date prior to the institution of the suit, plaintiff had conveyed the property advertised to be sold under the deed of trust to the loan association, in consideration of a large sum of money mentioned, and the further consideration that the grantees should assume the incumbrance on the real estate thereby conveyed, which included the debt to the loan association; and, the bill having failed to allege that his grantees were insolvent, or that the mortgaged premises would not sell for enough to discharge the lien, or that defendant would have a right of action against him in case the premises did not bring enough to satisfy the first mortgage, it was held that the demurrer to the bill should have been sustained; and, further, it was held that "the demurrer was improperly overruled, since the relief sought would inure to the benefit of complainant's grantees only, who were not entitled thereto, being bound to discharge the first mortgage by assuming the payment thereof." In Smith v. McMillan, supra (Syl., point 5), it is held: "If a sale of land is about to be made for a debt including usury, an injunction lies against it." So it appears from the record in case at bar the plaintiff had the right to interpose the defense of usury, and the court did not err in refusing to dismiss the bill on that ground.

It is well insisted by counsel for appellee that the principles announced in the cases of Gray v. Baltimore Building & Loan Association, 48 W. Va. 164, 37 S. E. 533, 54 L. R. A. 217, Archer v. Baltimore Building & Loan Association, 45 W. Va. 37, 30 S. E. 241, and Floyd v. National Loan & Investment Company, 49 W. Va. 327, 38 S. E. 653, 54 L. R. A. 536, 87 Am. St. Rep. 805, are conclusive of the case at bar; it being held in said causes that a building and loan association may fix a minimum premium, payable in advance or in periodical installments, but such premium must be a lump sum, certain and definite, and not a percentage payable indefinitely at fixed periods. All those cases were based upon contracts fixing a premium to be paid in periodical installments, which payments were to be continued just as the interest and dues on the stock subscribed were to be paid until the stock subscribed for, and upon which the loan was made, should be matured. The date of the maturity of stock, being contingent upon the amount of business done by, and the judicious and economical management of, the association, was necessarily indefinite and uncertain. The payments of premiums in those cases were not for a fixed period of time, but were to continue until the maturity of the stock, which was liable to run indefinitely, and depended upon the economical management and the business prosperity of the association. A close inspection of the contract in the case at bar makes it clear to my mind that it is liable to the same objection. Notwithstanding the bond is payable "on or before nine years from date," it specifically provides that "the monthly interest on said sum of $1,500, and the monthly premium of $7.50 bid by us on said loan," and the dues on the stock, fines, taxes, insurance premiums, etc., shall continue to be paid "until the said stock becomes fully paid in and of the value of $100 per share," which can mean nothing but the time of the maturity of the stock upon which the loan was made, which renders the time which the periodical payments of premiums shall run indefinite and uncertain; thus bringing this case clearly within the rulings of this court in the cases cited and relied upon by appellee.

The contract in the case at bar has been construed by the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia in the case of Counselman v. Holston National Building & Loan Association (Va.) 33 S. E. 603. The form of the contract in that case is precisely that used in the case at bar. It is there held (Syl., point 2): "Where the premium bid by a borrowing member of a building and loan association is payable only on maturity of the loan, and that period is fixed by the bond and the deed securing it, the amount of the premium is sufficiently certain." Judge Riley, in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The ground of the objection is that the premium is not definite and certain, because its payment in installments is provided for in the bond, and in the deed of trust securing the same, until the stock of the appellant matures, which time is necessarily indefinite, and renders the amount of the premium uncertain. This is an erroneous construction of the contract. The premium is only payable until the maturity of the loan. That period is fixed by the bond and the deed of trust securing it. The payment of the premium cannot be exacted beyond that time. The date of the maturity of the loan is fixed and definite, and renders the amount of the premium definite and certain." And he cites Thompson on Building & Loan Associations, § 190, which says, "A premium bid for the right of precedence in taking a loan cannot be collected after the maturity of the loan;" citing Savings, etc., Association v. Stevens, 3 Wkly. Law Bul. 113. I have been unable to find the case of Association v. Stevens, cited by Mr. Thompson, but it seems that case is the only authority upon which his section 190, touching this point, is based. I find, also, section 232, Th. & Bl. on Building & Loan Associations, is to the same effect, and based solely upon the same case, in 3 Wkly. Law Bul. 113. A distinct provision could have been, but was not, inserted in the bond, that monthly payments of premium should cease at the end of nine years, and probably it was so in the case cited by Mr. Thompson (Savings, etc., Association v. Stevens, 3 Wkly. Law Bul. 113); but, on the contrary, the bond now under consideration provides that the premium and other things mentioned shall continue to be paid until the maturity of the stock. I cannot understand how the Court of Appeals of Virginia could come to the conclusion that payments of the premium could not be required after the loan became due, when the contract itself is so explicit in its language that monthly payments of premium shall be paid "until the said stock becomes fully paid in and of the value of one hundred dollars per share." Section 2 of article 8 of the by-laws of defendant the Holston National Building & Loan Association provides, "The payments of each share shall be sixty cents per month for each and every month until maturity, commencing the last day of the month following the date of the certificate." It is impossible to tell when these payments and the fees, fines, and the earnings of the association will mature the stock to the par value of $100 per share; that being contingent upon the management and conduct and prosperity of the business. Indeed, it may turn out that the stock may never be matured, as is the case with many of the national building and loan associations, largely because of the expense of maintaining a corps of officers on large salaries, in consequence of which the association has to borrow money at a high rate of interest to meet the demands of applicants to borrow. This necessarily renders the time the payment of installments of premium has to be kept up very indefinite and uncertain. Our statute (section 26, c. 54, Code 1899) provides that a loan association "may charge and receive the premium bid by a stockholder for the priority of right to such loans in periodical installments; but the by-laws of every association shall set forth whether the premium bid for the prior right to the loan shall be deducted therefrom in advance or be paid in periodical installments." In the Cases of Archer, Gray, and Floyd, before referred to, where it is held that the minimum premium "must be a lump sum, certain and definite, and not a percentage payable indefinitely at fixed periods," it is so held because in the contracts then under consideration there was no definite time fixed at which the monthly payments of premium should cease, and beyond which further payments should not be collected; hence the whole amount of the premium was not, and could not be, fixed, definite, and certain. But where it is provided that the monthly premiums of a specified amount for each monthly or periodical payment shall continue not exceeding a given number of months, it is rendered certain and definite, because it cannot go beyond the number of months designated; and if it should cease, by reason of maturity of the stock and the consequent payment of the loan, in a shorter time, surely the borrower could not complain.

It is contended by appellant the contract involved in this cause is a Tennessee contract, and that the "matters connected with the performance of the contract (i. e., its interpretation and the like), and operations of the parties thereto, are regulated by the law prevailing at the place of performance, whether the place of performance is different from, or the same as, the place of execution." This proposition is well settled as applying to the case at bar in the case of Floyd v. National Loan & Investment Co., supra (Syl., point 3): "A foreign corporation, coming into this state to transact business, must conform to the law of this state, if there be any, regulating similar corporations organized under the laws of this state; and its contracts, although in terms solvable in the foreign state in which such corporation has its domicile, must be such a contract as a similar domestic corporation is authorized to make, or the courts of this state cannot enforce, or permit the enforcement of, its performance." The defendant company organized in Mercer county, of this state, a local board, and induced the plaintiff, Prince, to take stock and borrow money from it as a building and loan association, securing the loan upon real estate in Mercer county, and attempts to enforce the said contract in the courts of this state, when such contract, if made with a similar corporation organized under the laws of this state, could not be enforced, because usurious. This being the case, the defendant will not be permitted to enforce the same.

The appellant says the court erred in overruling its exceptions to the commissioner's report in crediting upon the loan all the money paid by plaintiff as dues upon the 20 shares of stock subscribed by him, when it should have been applied to the maturity of the stock. It is true, plaintiff only borrowed on 15 shares, but it was all one transaction. The record shows that he subscribed only for the purpose of borrowing, and was to have $2,000 on loan, and hence subscribed for the 20 shares. But after he had subscribed for the 20 shares the defendant refused to loan to him more than the par value of 15 shares. The plaintiff did not subscribe for the purpose of holding the 5 shares as investment stock, and, the loan being, because of its usurious nature, a straight loan of $1,500 at 6 per cent. per annum, all payments made by plaintiff on account of dues, premiums, fines, etc., were properly applied to the payment of the debt and interest.

There is no error in the decree, and the same is affirmed.

RATLIFF v. SOMMERS et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 16, 1904.)

EQUITY—PLEADING—AMENDMENT—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—PAROL PURCHASE.

1. It is impracticable to lay down a rule in reference to amendments of equity pleadings which shall govern in all cases. Their allowance must at every stage of the cause rest in the discretion of the court, and that discretion must depend largely on the special circumstances of each case. The ends of justice should never be sacrificed to mere form, or by too rigid an adherence to technical rules of practice.

2. Courts are much stricter in permitting amendments to answers than to bills.

3. Where a purchaser under a parol contract has been placed in possession, and held under the contract, and paid all or part of the purchase money, and made valuable, permanent improvements upon the land, and such possession has been actual and exclusive, and not as a tenant of the vendor, he may maintain his bill in a court of equity for specific performance.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lewis County:
W. G. Bennett, Judge.

¶ 3. See Frauds, Statute of, vol. 22, Cent. Dig. § 326; Specific Performance, vol. 44, Cent. Dig. §§ 126, 127.

Bill by William Ratliff against Martha M. Sommers and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Linn & Bland, for appellants. Edward A. Brannon and Louis Bennett, for appellee.

McWHORTER, J. William Ratliff filed his bill in the circuit court of Lewis county against Martha M. Sommers et al., heirs at law and administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of G. D. Camden, deceased, for the purpose of enforcing specific performance of a contract made with the said G. D. Camden in his lifetime for a tract of 88½ acres of land on Oil creek, setting forth the metes and bounds thereof in his bill—alleging that negotiations were commenced as early as 1874 for the purchase of said land—and filed with his bill, as exhibits, certain letters and fragments of letters from G. D. Camden indicating such negotiations, and also two letters as follows:

"Wm. Ratliff, Esq.: Your letter was duly received some weeks before we left home and I expected to have written you before we left but was too busy to look over your account since coming here I have looked it over and find it all right. I wish you would buy the land and you can have it for $4 an acre. I will let your account of $150 go as a payment on the land. If you wish it and you can have all the time you wish to finish paying for the land. Please see that no one cuts any of the timber on adjoining lands. Yours truly, G. D. Camden, per Mrs. G. D. Camden, Florida, March 28th, 1884."

"Eureka Springs, March 20th, 1888. Wm. Ratliff, Esq. I received your letter and I am glad to hear you are well. I am much improved since I came here. I thank you very much for the money you sent $160. This about or quite pays off your land and you better take the other little piece that joins you and you will have a nice farm on Oil Creek. My lands give me so much trouble to keep people from stealing the timber that I am going to sell them all. Please regard this letter as a receipt. I will be home soon and will make a deed. Yours truly, G. D. Camden, per Mrs. Camden."

He alleged that said letters so received constituted a valid and binding contract against said Camden and his estate for the specific conveyance by deed to plaintiff of said tract of land; that plaintiff had control and management of quite a quantity of said Camden's lands in Lewis county, and was employed by Camden to watch and look after the same, and keep trespassers from cutting timber and doing damage to the same, and for which work Camden promised, verbally and in writing, to pay him therefor, and the same was to go as a credit on said land purchase, which work, with the cash shown by said receipts to have been paid on said land, had fully and more than paid for said tract at the price of $4 per acre; that, at the date of the letters written from Florida, Camden possessed a large number of tracts in Lewis county, and had extensive business interests generally, and about the date of the said letters his health became impaired, but he retained his mental vigor up to the time of his death, and during the period of 1884, and up to 1889, his wife, Mrs. Camden, was authorized by him to do and perform such work and acts as were represented by said letters, contracts, and receipts, which he would dictate to her, and she would write at his instance and request, and she would sign many of his important legal papers, such as contracts for sale of land, receipts for purchase money, and other papers, as appear by the contracts, letters, and receipts made a part of the bill; that Charles W. Lynch was appointed and qualified as administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of G. D. Camden—and praying that the said heirs at law be required to execute and deliver a good and sufficient deed conveying to plaintiff the said tract of land, and for general relief.

The defendant Charles W. Lynch, administrator, filed his demurrer and answer to the bill, and for ground of demurrer said that Myra H. Camden, who was named in the process, but not made a party by the bill, but expressly stated therein not to be a necessary or material party, was a necessary party to the bill, and pleaded the statute of limitations, and answered, denying that G. D. Camden had ever sold the land to plaintiff as claimed in his bill, and averring that John J. Davis and T. B. Camden, trustees named in a settlement made between the heirs and Myra H. Camden concerning the contest of the will, by deed dated the 21st of March, 1895, conveyed to the said heirs at law, "all and singular, all the unsold and remaining lands that were conveyed to parties of the first part [trustees] by the deed aforesaid for the purposes in said deed mentioned, in the State of West Virginia, and elsewhere in any other state or country, and all the lands conveyed by said G. D. Camden to said Myra H. Camden and not sold and not conveyed by the said G. D. Camden, or sold and conveyed to her by parties of the first part."

The defendants Martha M. Sommers et al., heirs at law, also filed their demurrer and answer, insisting that Myra H. Camden was a necessary party to the suit, and denying the sale to the plaintiff as alleged in the bill.

Depositions were taken and filed in the cause, and on the 18th day of March, 1899, the plaintiff tendered his amended bill, which was filed, and remanded to rules, for the purpose of issuing process thereon and maturing the cause for hearing. The amended bill alleged that Myra H. Camden, who had intermarried with G. W. Atkinson, was a necessary party to the suit; and alleging in said bill that said G. W. Atkinson, by reason of his marital relations, had also become a necessary party, and asking that the original bill be read as a part of the amended bill, and alleging that the said G. D. Camden, being the owner thereof, at one time sold to one James Gay, by specific metes and bounds, which are set out in the bill, as well as the amended bill, the said 88% acres of land on Oil creek, which sale was afterwards canceled and annulled, and the same again became the property of Camden, who for many years owned this and other lands in that section, and employed Ratliff to look after the same for him, and to attend not only to his general interests there, but especially to his interests in a warmly litigated suit about land pending in the circuit court of Lewis county between the said Camden and one John Keith et al., and promised to pay Ratliff a proper consideration for his services; that, in pursuance of said employment, he had, at great inconvenience to himself, and at the loss of the friendship of many of his neighbors, done work and performed services up to the spring of 1884 to the amount of $150 and more, which said Camden then agreed to pay to him, and still continued in the service and employment of Camden, and his service thereabouts amounted to a large sum, which Camden agreed to pay; that about 1886 or 1887 he and said Camden had an oral agreement by which Camden sold him the land at $4 per acre, he to have credit for the amount due him for services, and the residue, when ascertained, to be paid by Ratliff, who took possession of said land under said purchase with full knowledge and by the express consent of Camden, and had continued in adverse possession under said sale ever since; that Camden then and repeatedly thereafter promised Ratliff to draw up and execute a writing setting out the sale and the terms thereof, but, being old and feeble in health, he put off and delayed the execution of the same until the 24th of June, 1888, when, plaintiff having fully paid up the entire purchase money on said land, said Camden authorized and directed W. B. McGary to execute and deliver for him to plaintiff a writing setting forth said sale and the payment of the purchase money, which he did, being general agent for Camden to sell his Oil creek lands, as well as other lands, and, in pursuance of his general as well as of his special authority, executed on behalf of G. D. Camden a writing selling said tract of land to said Ratliff at said $4 per acre, and stating that the entire purchase money had been duly settled with said Camden, signing the same with the name of G. D. Camden, by W. B. McGary, his attorney, and delivered the same to plaintiff; alleging that said Camden died on the 21st of April, 1891, without having made him a deed for said land, though he had repeatedly promised to do so; that he left surviving him the heirs at law named, and his wife, Myra H. Camden; that he left a will in which he devised all of his real estate to his said wife (now Myra H. Atkinson); that said will was duly admitted to probate; that proceedings to set aside the will were instituted by the heirs at law of Camden, which were finally compromised, and Myra H. Camden conveyed to John J. Davis and T. B. Camden many of said G. D. Camden's lands, but expressly reserved in herself the title to all lands sold by G. D. Camden in his lifetime, and remaining unconveyed at the time of his death; and that said trustee, after having sold many tracts of said land under the trust, conveyed the residue of the tracts to the said heirs at law. Therefore plaintiff says that the title to said tract of 88% acres of land was still in said Myra H. Camden, unless the court should hold that there was never a sale in the lifetime of said Camden, in which case it would be in the said heirs at law; that neither the said Myra H. Atkinson, nor the said heirs at law, had ever conveyed the land to plaintiff, and refused to do so, but that said land was sold to plaintiff and fully paid for, and prayed that it be decreed to him.

On the 23d of June, 1899, the defendants the heirs at law and R. M. Ramsburg, administrator of G. D. Camden, deceased, who had been appointed in the place of Charles W. Lynch, moved the court to reject the said amended bill for the reasons set out in a paper filed with the said motion, and also excepted to so much of the deposition of Louis Bennett, filed March 11, 1899, and the depositions of R. B. Brinkley and W. C. Ratliff, filed March 1, 1899, as related to the alleged contract or writing made by W. B. McGary, referred to in the amended bill. The court overruled the motion to strike out the amended bill, but sustained the exceptions to the depositions of Louis Bennett, R. B. Brinkley, and W. C. Ratliff, and suppressed so much of said depositions as related to the alleged contract; and said defendants then and by leave of the court filed their several answers to the said amended bill, and leave was granted to plaintiff to retake the deposition of Louis Bennett, R. B. Brinkley, and W. C. Ratliff as to the matters suppressed, so far as relevant, upon proper notice. The paper filed with the motion to strike out the amended bill and suppress the depositions asks that the amended bill be rejected because the new matter alleged therein, if true, must have been known by plaintiff and by the attorney who wrote the original bill at the time, as well as when the amended bill was written, and that, according to his own showing, plaintiff had been guilty of such neglect that he was not entitled to maintain his amended bill; citing Foutty v. Poar, 35 W. Va. 70, 12 S. E. 1096 (Syl., point 2), and other authorities. It also moved the court to strike out all that part of the amended bill which alleged a contract, written and signed and delivered by McGary, as agent for Camden, and that McGary was the agent of said Camden, and also all that part alleging an oral purchase of the land made by the plaintiff in 1886 or 1887, because, by said amended bill, if issue was joined on the amended bill and answer, and evidence had been taken on both sides departs from the foundation of the suit, by seeking to set up and rely upon a written contract made by W. B. McGary as agent, and the evidence shows that said McGary wrote the original bill. The depositions of Louis Bennett and W. C. Ratliff were retaken.

The cause was heard on the 1st day of April, 1901, when the court decreed that William Ratliff purchased said tract of land from Camden, as alleged in his bills, at the price of $4 per acre; that the purchase price had been fully paid and satisfied, and that plaintiff was entitled to a specific execution of said sale and conveyance of said land to him; that the legal title thereto was in said Myra H. Atkinson—and decreed that she and her husband, G. W. Atkinson, convey the same to plaintiff by proper deed, and, in default of their executing such deed, appointed W. B. McGary and Louis Bennett special commissioners to make the deed on their behalf, and decreed costs against appellants. The defendants Dora E. Ramsburg, Genevieve B. Parr, Martha M. Sommers, and Wilson L. Camden appealed from said decree, assigning as errors that the contract was not proved as alleged; that the evidence in support of plaintiff's pretensions was insufficient, and much of it fabricated; and in hearing the cause on the amended bill and entertaining that bill; and because the court should have refused relief to plaintiff because the evidence shows he came into court with unclean hands.

It clearly appears from the record that Myra H. Atkinson was a necessary party to the suit, as the legal title to the land in question remained in her, if the negotiations between Ratliff and Camden in his lifetime amounted to a sale of the land; and, if the court should so hold, it would then become necessary for her to make the conveyance to the plaintiff, so that, as far as parties to the suit were concerned, an amended bill was necessary to bring her and her husband in as parties. In Rexroad v. McQuain, 24 W. Va. 32 (Syl., point 1), it is held: "It is a cardinal rule in equity that all persons materially interested, either legally or beneficially, in the subject-matter of the suit, must be made parties to the suit." Gall v. Gall, 50 W. Va. 523, 40 S. E. 380; 1 Hogg's Eq. Proc. §§ 36, 323, 324. When the proofs in a cause show that the plaintiff has a cause of action which entitled him to relief, that it is of similar nature to that alleged in his bill, and such as might be made available by proper amendments of his bill, the court will not dismiss the original bill without giving plaintiff an opportunity to amend within a reasonable time. Doonan v. Glynn, 26 W. Va. 225. "A plaintiff in a suit in chancery can only obtain relief upon the case made in his bill, and not on a substantially different case made by the proof. But where the case made by the proof shows a right to relief, and is not so different from the case made in the bill that, under the rules of chancery pleading, it could not be amended, the plaintiff will be allowed to amend his bill to conform to the true state of the case." Lamb v. Cecil, 25 W. Va. 288 (Syl., point 3); Id., 28 W. Va. 653; and, to the same effect, 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 485, and cases there cited. The amended bill in the case at bar in no wise contradicts the allegations of the original bill, or is inconsistent therewith. It alleges a parol sale of the land in 1886 or 1887, as shown by the original bill, showing negotiations and acknowledgments of plaintiff's payments and rights; and, as further evidence of said sale and its payment, the amended bill also refers to the writing made by McGary at the instance of Camden and at the request of plaintiff. Section 12, c. 125, Code 1899, makes ample provision for amendment to a declaration or bill before, or even after, appearance of the defendant, "if substantial justice will be promoted thereby"—of course, exacting such terms on the part of the plaintiff as justice in the premises may demand. See Bird v. Stout, 40 W. Va. 43, 20 S. E. 852 (Syl., point 4). "Subject to the rights of the opposing party, amendments to the pleadings can usually be made at any time before the jury have retired, or the hearing in equity is at an end." A. & E. Enc. (1st Ed.) 553, and cases there cited; 1 Hogg's Eq. Pr. § 322. In Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 756, 5 Sup. Ct. 771, 28 L. Ed. 1141, Justice Harlan, in delivering the opinion of the court, at page 761, 113 U. S., and page 773, 5 Sup. Ct., 28 L. Ed. 1141, says: "In reference to amendments of equity pleadings, the courts have found it impracticable to lay down a rule that would govern all cases. Their allowance must, at every stage of the cause, rest in the discretion of the court, and that discretion must depend largely on the special circumstances of each case. It may be said generally that, in passing upon applications to amend, the ends of justice should never be sacrificed to mere form, or by too rigid an adherence to technical rules of practice." Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Railway Co., 142 U. S. 396, 413, 12 Sup. Ct. 188, 35 L. Ed. 1055; Crockett v. Lee, 7 Wheat. 522, 5 L. Ed. 513; Watts v. Waddle, 6 Pet. 389, 8 L. Ed. 437; Parkhurst v. Van Cortlandt, 1 Johns. Ch. 273; Walden v. Bodley, 14 Pet. 156, 10 L. Ed. 398; Neale v. Neale, 9 Wall. 1, 19 L. Ed. 590. The case of Foutty v. Poar, 35 W. Va. 70, 12 S. E. 1096, cited by the appellants to show that the court should not have permitted the filing of the amended bill, is not in point. "Courts are much stricter in permitting amendments to answers than to bills." 1 Hogg's Eq. Proc. § 343, and authorities cited under "188." In case of Foutty v. Poar it is said: "To file an amended answer, it should appear that the reasons for it are cogent and satisfactory; that the mistakes to be corrected or facts to be added are made highly probable, if not certain; that they are material; that the party has not been guilty of gross negligence; and that the mistakes have been ascertained and the new facts have come to the knowledge of the party since the original answer." Citing Matthews v. Dunbar, 3 W. Va. 138; Wyatt v. Thompson, 10 W. Va. 645; McKay v. McKay's Adm'rs, 33 W. Va. 736, 11 S. E. 213. In the case at bar W. B. McGary prepared the bill, and in his deposition he gives sufficient reasons for not filing it with the original bill. There is no negligence on the part of plaintiff himself in the preparation of his bill. In Davison v. Davison, 13 N. J. Eq. 246: "The bill in this case permitted to be amended after final hearing so as to make the contract alleged agree with that proved." Abbott v. L'Hommedieu, 10 W. Va. 677 (Syl., point 2), it is held: "The exercise of the equity branch of jurisprudence respecting the rescission and specific performance of contracts is not a matter of right in either party; but it is a matter of discretion in the court, not, indeed, an arbitrary or capricious discretion, dependent upon the mere pleasure of the judge, but of that sound and reasonable discretion which governs itself, as far as it may, by general rules and principles, but at the same time which withholds or grants relief according to the circumstances of each particular case, when these rules and principles will not furnish any exact measure of justice between the parties." And in Lowry v. Buffington, 6 W. Va. 249 (Syl., points 1 and 2): "(1) When there has been a part performance of a contract for the sale of land, by the purchaser being put into possession of the property, and payment of the purchase money, or a part thereof, and an offer to pay the residue according to contract, and valuable improvements have been made on the land by the purchaser on faith of the contract, the statute of frauds cannot be successfully pleaded in bar to the performance in a court of equity. (2) Applications to the court to compel specific performance are addressed to its discretion, but it is not an arbitrary or capricious discretion, but a sound judicial discretion, regulated by the established principles of the court." "It is apparent that the general rule requires the contract sought to be specifically enforced to be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged, or his agent. But courts of equity treat parol contracts for the sale or exchange of real estate, when there has been part performance, as valid and as effectual as things evidenced by the most solemn instruments in writing." Hogg's Eq. Proc. § 398, and cases there cited. And in the same section it is said: "In order to prevent the possibility of fraud, however, in ingrafting this exception upon the statute of frauds, it is settled that the parol agreement relied upon must be certain and definite in its terms; the acts proved in part performance must therefore result from, or be in pursuance of, the agreement; and the agreement must have been so far executed that a refusal of full execution would operate as a fraud upon the party, and place him in a situation which would not allow of adequate relief by way of compensation in damages."

Where the purchaser has been placed in possession, and held under the contract, and paid all or part of the purchase money, and made valuable and permanent improvements upon the land, and such possession having been actual, adverse, and exclusive, and not as a tenant of the vendor—when this can be shown to the satisfaction of a court of equity—he can maintain his bill for specific performance. Miller v. Lorentz, 39 W. Va. 160, 19 S. E. 391; Gallagher v. Gallagher, 31 W. Va. 9, 5 S. E. 297; Goodwin v. Bartlett, 43 W. Va. 332, 27 S. E. 325; Middleton v. Selby, 19 W. Va. 167 (Syl., point 4).

The original bill does not set up the writing made by W. B. McGary, agent of Camden, dated the 24th day of June, 1888. While the paper written by McGary is sometimes referred to as a sale of the land, yet it was not, strictly speaking, a sale. It was a mere memorandum to show that the sale had formerly taken place, and that the purchase money for the land had been paid by Ratliff, and that he was entitled to a deed. The evidence of Brinkley and McGary touching the interview between Camden and Ratliff at the Bailey House, leading up to the making of the paper by McGary, was competent to be given under the original bill, as it referred to negotiations which had taken place between Camden and Ratliff at times prior to that, and to statements then made by Camden as to Ratliff's right to the land and to a deed therefor.

As to the introduction of the paper writing prepared by McGary, it is insisted by appellants that the foundation is not sufficiently laid to prove its contents as a lost paper. Witness Louis Bennett states that W. C. Ratliff brought the paper to him, and showed it to him; that he made a memorandum of it, and he thinks he gave it back to Ratliff, intending to make it a part of his deposition, as proof of the sale; that he had looked carefully through his papers first, wherever he thought it might be found, and had insisted upon W. C. Ratliff making a like search; that they had not succeeded in finding it, and that witness did not know where it was; that the paper was dated June 24, 1888, and was in the handwriting of W. B. McGary; that it bore evidence of some age, and described the paper upon which it was written, and stated that his memorandum taken from the paper at the time that he saw it was as follows: "G. D. Camden to Wm. Ratliff by W. B. McGary his agt. & atty, dated June 24th, 88—sells land where Ratliff lived on Oil Crk at $4 an acre settled with Judge Camden." W. C. Ratliff swears that he took the paper from Robert Brinkley, he thinks about a year and a half before he testified, on the 15th of August, 1899, and took it to Weston, and gave it to Mr. Louis Bennett to look at; that he did not recollect whether Bennett returned the paper to him or not; that he had made diligent search for it, had looked through all the papers about the house, and was unable to find it, and that he knew no other place where he could reasonably expect to find it; and that he never gave it to anybody else after he showed it to Mr. Bennett. This traces the paper to the possession of Bennett and W. C. Ratliff, and that it was never given to any other person, and they were both sufficiently definite as to their search for it and their inability to find it. Mr. McGary states that Judge Camden had considerable transactions with plaintiff; that he was at Weston on one occasion, and plaintiff and Robert Brinkley were there at the same time; that Ratliff was at Judge Camden for a deed for the land on Oil creek that witness understood Judge Camden had sold him. "Judge Camden told Ratliff and told me to go on and have the matter fixed up, or he would have me to fix it up, and whatever I did would be all right; that he intended Ratliff to have this piece of land, or words to this effect. I told the judge Ratliff's claim about the matter—that Ratliff had done some work on a run which went through the place, which, if it had not been done, would have washed all the bottom land on this piece away. When I left the judge at this time, I was to fix the necessary writing to suit Ratliff, or satisfy him that he would get the land." That after writing the contract between himself, as agent of Camden, and Ratliff, he delivered the same to Brinkley or Ratliff; that, if he delivered it to Brinkley, it was because Ratliff was under the influence of liquor, and did not want to run the risk of his losing it, and the delivery was to Brinkley for Ratliff; "that the contents of the writing was what I gathered and understood from both parties at the time, and prepared it in conformity therewith." There is no question about the sufficiency of the evidence that plaintiff went on to that tract of land and took possession of it as a purchaser about 1887, and has been in such possession of it ever since. Witness Samuel Gay says plaintiff moved on to the place, he thinks, in 1887. That he heard Camden "tell Mr. Ratliff to go on to that place; that the land was his. * * * Mr. Camden says, 'You made me, or saved me, $800.' He says, 'William, there is a piece over here across the hill adjoining that,' and he would let him have it right." That the piece Ratliff was to go onto was the Jimmy Gay tract. When asked why it was called the Jimmy Gay tract, he answered: "Well, Jim Gay bought the land in the first place, and it was run out to him, and he failed to pay for it, and left it." He also testified that the improvements made upon the place by plaintiff were worth, in his judgment from $500 to $600. Joseph O. Keith also testified that he lived adjoining the land; that plaintiff moved onto the place in 1887; that he made fencing on it, and put some buildings on it—a granary, stable, dwelling house, and other small buildings. J. S. Riffle, a witness 52 years of age, living on Oil creek, and who knew the land claimed by the plaintiff, by the boundaries described, said it had been called the Jimmy Gay tract until since Ratliff bought it, since which time it was called the Ratliff land; that he was with Ratliff and Judge Camden at Clarksburg, and was asked to state the conversation, if any, that he heard between Ratliff and Judge Camden concerning the purchase of this Gay or Ratliff piece of land on Oil creek; and stated as follows: "Well, what I heard stated was this: Mr. Ratliff asked Mr. Camden, 'Have you got my deed made yet?' Mr. Camden says, 'I have not. I have not been well. I have had a heap of work to do. Mr. Ratliff, just as soon as I get able I am coming to Oil Creek, and then I will make you your deed. Mr. Ratliff, you go back home, tend to my land matters, and other matters which I have been directing and writing for you to do for me concerning this Keith matter. Now, Mr. Riffle, I want you to aid Mr. Ratliff all you possibly can concerning this Keith matter. Mr. Riffle, I would like to show to you the charges that Mr. Keith has made against me in the last ten or twelve years. I am sorry to tell you Mr. Keith is trying to rob me of a considerable sum of money. I want you, Mr. John Wellen, to aid, and all other honest men there in that neighborhood, concerning this Keith matter. I will amply pay all you gentlemen for all the trouble that you put yourselves to in trying to hold my own in this Keith matter. Now, please, you gentlemen, do all for me you possibly can.' Now Mr. Ratliff says again, 'I would love to have my deed made.' 'Mr. Ratliff, I told you just a little bit ago that when I come to Oil Creek that I would make that deed. Mr. Ratliff, I want to tell you that my word is as good as my bond. I let you have that land more reasonable that I would any other man, on account of being willing and ready to assist me in everything that I have called upon you to do.'" Asked whether in the conversation about the deed he heard anything about whether the land had been paid for, answered, "No, sir; I didn't hear money mentioned by either party." That his understanding about it was that all that was between the two men was the deed; and stated that the conversation was then about 10 or 12 years ago; that about 1875 or 1876 Ratliff collected rent for Judge Camden, and continued from that time on to look after Judge Camden's interest on Oil creek, and he would not have performed the services Ratliff did for less than $25 a year, and maybe a little more. R. B. Brinkley testifies to an interview between Mr. Camden and Mr. Ratliff as follows: "Well, to the best of my judgment, it was on the 24th day of June, 1888, at Weston, at the Bailey House. Mr. Ratliff asked Mr. Camden to give him a deed or writing to show that he had a right to this piece of land—that he didn't want to lose what he paid for it. And he told him that he was old, broke down, and couldn't do any business any further that time, and to go on; that the land was his; to make such improvements as he wanted to; that his word was as good as his bond. Ratliff insisted that he should make him some writing, and he said that he could not; that McGary was his attorney, and he would fix the matter up." And said that McGary drew a writing, and gave it to him for Ratliff, and he kept it for him, and about a year before the taking of his deposition, which was in February, 1899, he gave the writing to W. C. Ratliff, son of plaintiff; that he thinks the writing was dated the 24th of June, 1888. Witness further states that plaintiff was acting as agent and doing business for Judge Camden, he thought, about 20 years, and that Ratliff had placed improvements—he had built a stable, house, granary, and barn, and he thought they would be worth from $700 to $800. J. D. Wellen testified to a conversation he heard between plaintiff and Judge Camden at the Bailey House, in Weston. "Mr. Ratliff wanted possession of this land; that he wanted to make some improvements. Mr. Camden said to go ahead—that the land was his—to the best of my knowledge." And he also states Ratliff had built a house and a granary and a barn, and that the improvements ought to be worth from $500 to $700; that he did not think he could do it for less.

It would seem that this evidence of the fact that Camden had placed plaintiff in possession of the land, which he has ever since held, under the contract of sale, and promised to make a deed to the plaintiff, would be quite sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to relief, but, taken in connection with the evidence of services rendered to Judge Camden by the plaintiff after March, 1884, the date of the allowance for services of $150, seems to me to fully meet the requirements of the law as laid down in Gallagher v. Gallagher, 31 W. Va. 9, 5 S. E. 297; Boggs v. Bodkin, 32 W. Va. 566, 9 S. E. 891, 5 L. R. A. 245; Harris v. Elliott, 45 W. Va. 245, 32 S. E. 176; Hogg's Eq. Proc. 398, and cases cited. In addition to the oral testimony just mentioned, the two exhibits filed with the original bill, being letters dated March 23, 1884, and March 20, 1888, together with the evidence establishing the genuineness of these letters and receipts, makes a decided preponderance of evidence sustaining the decree.

The principal defense attempted in this case is to establish a conspiracy, in which Mrs. Camden, now Atkinson, was the chief actor, to injure and destroy the estate, as far as it might be, of Judge Camden; and appellants have injected into the case, in the way of testimony, quite a large part of the trial of Owens and Mrs. Camden upon indictments against them in Gilmer county. But all this goes for naught here, if these two letters are proved genuine, and they fail to connect the plaintiff with such conspiracy, if such there was; and, if the letters were written at the dates they bear, they utterly fail to connect him with it. Such conspiracy, if it existed, could not have been even thought of at the dates the letters bear. Without mentioning the testimony of Elizabeth C. Ratliff, the wife of plaintiff, in regard to the payment of the $160 mentioned in the letter of the 20th of March, 1888, the fact of the money being sent and letters received, as well as the receipt of the letter of March 24, 1884, is proved by W. G. Ratliff. The letter of March 20, 1888, is also proved by Martha A. Ratliff, and Joseph O. Keith testifies that he saw these two letters with Ratliff's papers in 1888; and no attempt is made to impeach any of these witnesses. These facts being true, whatever there may have been in the way of a conspiracy such as is attempted to be shown cannot affect the case, because the letters were in the possession of Ratliff before the death of Judge Camden.

As to the question of the statute of limitations, the plaintiff was in possession from 1887, and, being in possession, the doctrine of laches does not apply. Abbott v. L'Houmedieu, 10 W. Va. 678; Zane's Devises v. Zane, 6 Munf. 406; Ballard v. Ballard, 26 W. Va. 470 (Syl., point 3).

Appellants, in their brief, raise the question as to the propriety, at least, of attorneys for appellee testifying in the cause, and cite authorities disapproving the practice. We agree with appellants that, as a rule, it is not proper, but, like all other rules, there are exceptions, as stated in Potter v. Inhabitants of Ware, 1 Cush. 519, cited by appellants, where it is held: "In most cases counsel cannot testify for their client without subjecting themselves to just reprehension. But there may be cases in which they can do it not only without dishonor, but in which it is their duty to do it. Such cases, however, are rare, and whenever they occur they necessarily cause great pain to counsel of the right spirit." We think it clearly appears that this case is a just exception to the rule, especially in the case of the attorney and witness Louis Bennett, to whom the witness W. C. Ratliff had delivered the writing which was lost, and it could not be accounted for without the testimony of Bennett, who was the only person who had possession of the paper, besides W. C. Ratliff, after Brinkley delivered it to said Ratliff; and it was absolutely necessary for him to show what he did with it, or to account for it by showing that, if left with him, it was lost or mislaid, and could not be found. The possession of it laid between him and W. C.

Ratliff, and neither one of them alone could account for it. The evidence of both was necessary.

Appellants, in their brief, assert that the judge who heard the case and rendered the decree was disqualified, and base their charge of disqualification upon the affidavit of R. M. Ramsburg, administrator of G. D. Camden, deceased, to the effect that in a suit pending in Harrison county in the name of Despard et al., plaintiffs, v. G. D. Camden and J. M. Bennett, defendants, wherein the heirs and devisees of J. M. Bennett, the said judge (being one of the heirs), and the heirs and devisees of Despard and the heirs of G. D. Camden were parties, it was sought to recover against the estate of said J. M. Bennett, deceased, a large sum of money on account of moneys collected by the said Bennett on account of sales of lands which belonged to the said J. M. Bennett, G. D. Camden, and B. Despard, in which suit the heirs and devisees of Bennett claimed a large sum as credit or offset against the demand so made for services claimed by them to have been rendered by the said J. M. Bennett in looking after the interests of the joint owners in the lands and the proceeds, and to prove an express promise on the part of G. D. Camden to pay said Bennett for the alleged services. Mrs. Camden was introduced as a witness on behalf of said Bennett's heirs and devisees, she then being the widow of said Camden, and the same person who wrote the papers filed in this cause which were charged to be fraudulent; said affidavit setting forth the fact of the indictments of Mrs. Camden and J. P. Owens in Gilmer county for fraudulently uttering said papers; Mrs. Camden being indicted as accessory before the fact; and that Louis Bennett, with others, had become her surety in recognizance for her appearance to answer the indictment; that affiant was reliably informed that Louis Bennett, a brother of said Judge Bennett, and a witness for plaintiff, Ratliff, had openly declared that the Camden heirs were fighting him, and that he was fighting them, and further declaring that to be a reason that he would not give consent for the Camdens to cross his land with timber, or sell to them, over which lands was the only way the said Camdens could get certain of their timber to market, but would hold it so as to prevent said timber from being marketed (this on account of said litigation in Harrison county), and that the interests of said W. G. Bennett, judge, and Louis Bennett, in said litigation, were identical; and further alleging that in an equity suit in Webster county of R. C. Ferrell against the administrator and heirs at law of said Camden, based upon alleged receipts for $4,000, purporting to be dated a short time before the death of G. D. Camden, and to be for lands in Webster county, which were signed G. D. Camden, per Mrs. Camden, and which suit was decided by said Bennett, judge, in favor of said Ferrell; that, some time after said decision in favor of said Ferrell, persons acting under said Ferrell began to strip the land in controversy of valuable timber, and that said administrator and heirs presented to said Bennett, in vacation, a bill of review, alleging newly discovered evidence, and that timber was being removed, and asked for an injunction, which bill of review so praying for the injunction was held by said judge about two months, and leave to file the same then refused; and that the administrator and heirs, to protect their rights, were driven to an appeal to the Supreme Court from the order of refusal, which appeal was then pending in the Supreme Court. It appears from the brief of counsel for appellants that the theory of the disqualification is the fact of the judge having an interest in the litigation mentioned in Harrison county, wherein his brother Louis Bennett and Mrs. Camden, witnesses for appellants in this case, are also witnesses in the litigation there mentioned in Harrison county, and that it was improper for the judge in this case to pass upon the weight of their testimony, as he would be interested in sustaining the testimony of the witnesses; that he is interested in maintaining their credit. It is not contended that he has any pecuniary or other interest in the case at bar. In Forest Coal Company v. Doolittle (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 239 (Syl., point 3), it is held, "In order to disqualify, the interest of the judge must be in the subject-matter of the cause, and not merely in a legal question involved in it." It may not be out of place to say here that the first appeal mentioned in the affidavit of Ramsburg as pending in the Supreme Court of Appeals was dismissed by the court (Ferrell v. Camden, 49 W. Va. 225, 38 S. E. 531), and the second appeal from the order of refusing the filing of the bill of review was affirmed by that court (50 W. Va. 119, 40 S. E. 868).

There being no reversible error in the decree, the same is affirmed.

MCKINNEY v. CARMACK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Feb. 12, 1904.)

WITNESS — IMPEACHMENT — HOMICIDE — THREATS — EVIDENCE — INSTRUCTIONS.

1. For the purpose of impeaching a witness, his testimony on the commitment trial of one accused of a felony may be proved as well by a person who heard it, as by the notes or memoranda of the evidence taken by the court. Brown v. State, 76 Ga. 623. The same rule will apply in the case of a coroner's report of the substance of the testimony delivered before him at an inquest.

2. As a general rule, evidence of threats previously made by one who is killed by another, but uncommunicated to the latter, are not admissible on the trial of a case involving the question whether or not the slayer was justified in taking the life of the deceased; but when the evidence tends to show that the person killed began the mortal conflict, and that the slayer killed his adversary in self-defense, proof of threats of this character may be received to show the state of mind or feeling on the part of the deceased, and thus illustrate his conduct and throw light upon his intention and purpose at the time of the fatal rencontre. May v. State, 17 S. E. 108, 90 Ga. 797, and cases therein cited and reviewed.

3. The court below committed no material error in charging, or in failing or in refusing to charge, as to the law touching the issues on which the jury were called on to pass; and there was evidence which warranted their verdict.

DARLINGTON OIL CO. v. PEE DEE OIL & ICE CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Jan. 8, 1904.)

APPEAL—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

1. The grant of a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence will not be disturbed where no abuse of discretion is shown.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Darlington County; Aldrich, Judge.

Action by the Darlington Oil Company against the Pee Dee Oil & Ice Company. From order granting new trial, after verdict, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The following are the exceptions:

"(1) There was error on the part of his honor, the presiding judge, in sustaining, as he did, the plaintiff's fifth ground of motion for a new trial, which was, as given in his honor's order, 'Because your honor omitted in submitting to the jury the question as to compensatory damages,' and ordering a new trial thereon: First, because, even had his honor used the words 'punitive' or 'exemplary' where he intended to use, and should have used, the word 'compensatory,' it could not have misled the jury when taken in connection with the rest of his charge, inasmuch as his honor in the body of the charge, as stated by him in his said order, explained fully to the jury what were compensatory and what exemplary damages, and when each of such classes of damages should be given by the jury. Second, because in his charge to the jury there was no such 'slip of the tongue' as his honor supposed he had made, and his honor did not use the word 'exemplary' where the word 'compensatory' should have been used, either in directing the jury as to the form of the verdict, or elsewhere in his charge, as will appear from an examination of his charge in full delivered to the jury.

"(2) His honor, having held that the verdict of the jury was not against, but was in keeping with, the weight and force of the evidence, both as to plaintiff's claim for compensatory or actual, and also for exemplary or punitive, damages, erred in granting a new trial upon the ground that plaintiff was entitled to nominal damages: First, because, even if plaintiff was entitled under the view of his honor to a verdict for nominal damages, such verdict would be merely to establish plaintiff's right to the use of the property, to wit, the track scales in question, and failure to render such verdict would not entitle the plaintiff to a new trial on all the issues involved both as to actual and exemplary damages, upon both of which the verdict was correct, and was concurred in by the court; the way being still open to plaintiff for a full hearing upon the question of its right to use said scales. Second, because the issue as to plaintiff's easement, or its right to the use of the property, which might have been established by a verdict for nominal damages, still remained an issue for the court to determine after the rendition of the verdict; the right of the plaintiff to have such issue tried and determined by the court having been fully recognized, and an order granted by his honor directing that an issue involving the right to such use of the property be tried by a jury. Third, because the question of nominal damages was not submitted to the jury, nor was there any request to charge the jury thereon, plaintiff having relied entirely upon its claim for compensatory and exemplary damages as to which the verdict was sustained by the court, and upon having the issue as to the use of the property tried by the court, which right of plaintiff was fully preserved.

"(3) His honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in sustaining another of plaintiff's grounds, to wit, the fourth ground, and thereupon ordering a new trial, because in the opinion and judgment of his honor, as stated in his said order, the testimony overwhelmingly sustained the plaintiff's allegations that the track scales were attached to the realty, and were fixtures: First, because the failure of the jury to find according to the weight of the testimony on that question could only bear upon the right to a verdict for nominal damages, or the mere establishment of plaintiff's right to use the property, upon which an issue is now pending, and would not entitle the plaintiff to a new trial upon the whole case, as his honor sustained the verdict of the jury in favor of the defendant upon the claim of plaintiff both as to compensatory, or actual, and exemplary damages, and did not charge, and was not requested to charge, the jury as to the right to recover nominal damages. Second, because his honor should have concluded that the jury solved the said question of easement according to the weight of the evidence, and in keeping with his charge, and yet found a verdict for defendant, as there was no proof of damages, and thus sustained the verdict, inasmuch as his honor held that only nominal damages could have been found under the testimony; thereby holding, in effect, that the verdict of the jury was correct upon all the issues submitted to it, or as to which he was requested to charge. Third, because, not only did his honor sustain the verdict of the jury as to plaintiff's claims for compensatory and exemplary damages, and did not charge the jury, nor was he requested to charge, as to the right to a verdict for nominal damages, but also because the plaintiff's right to the use of the property in question could be determined by the court after the rendition of the verdict, and a hearing by the court thereupon was asked for by plaintiff after the order granting a new trial, which said request was complied with, and an issue thereon was ordered and is now pending.

"(4) His honor erred in sustaining so much of the plaintiff's fourth ground of the motion for a new trial, to wit, that the 'verdict of the jury was against the weight of the evidence as to the force necessary to constitute a cause of action,' and also so much of the sixth ground, as he sets out in his said order, to wit, 'because the verdict was contrary to your honor's charge on the question of * * * force necessary to constitute a cause of action and as to damages'; it being respectfully submitted that in considering said grounds his honor's conclusions should have led to a refusal thereon of the motion for a new trial, because, according to the conclusion of his honor as to the failure of plaintiff to prove either compensatory or actual, and exemplary or punitive, damages, the jury could only have found a verdict for nominal damages at all events, which would merely have established the right to the use of the property, which issue is now pending, and which the plaintiff may yet have determined as dictated by the court; and also because neither did his honor charge upon the right to nominal damages, nor was he requested by the plaintiff so to charge.

"(5) Because, as it is respectfully submitted, the said question relating to an easement, or the right to the use of the property in question by the plaintiff, is involved in the equitable issue yet to be heard upon the pleadings and as directed by the court, and was not necessarily involved in the legal issue of damages passed upon by the jury, and there was no right in the plaintiff to have such issue submitted to the jury, and thereon a right to a new trial could not arise.

"(6) Because the conclusion of the jury upon the question of damages submitted to them, upon which alone they could find a verdict, was correct, and was entirely in accord with the view or conclusions of his honor upon the question both of compensatory or actual, as well as exemplary, damages, as expressed in his order granting plaintiff's motion, and the motion for a new trial should have been refused."

Woods & Macfarlan, for appellant. W. F. Dargan and E. Keith Dargan, for appellee.

GARY, A. A. J. This action was commenced September 26, 1900, by the service of a summons and complaint upon the defendant, a notice of no personal claim on the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company, and the legal issue of damages was tried before his honor, Judge James Aldrich, and a jury, at the spring term of the court in Darlington, in March, 1902, between plaintiff and the defendant, the Pee Dee Oil & Ice Company. The jury rendered a verdict for the defendant in the words, "We find for the defendant." Upon the rendition of this verdict, the plaintiff gave notice of a motion for a new trial. The presiding judge (Aldrich) granted the motion in an order bearing date March 27, 1902, and which is set out in full in the "case." In this order it appears that he sustained the motion for a new trial on the fourth, fifth, and sixth grounds set out in the "notice of motion." From this order the Pee Dee Oil & Ice Company appeals to this court.

The fourth ground is as follows: "Because the verdict of the jury was against the weight of the evidence as to the plaintiff's easement, as to the notice of the reservation in the deed, as to the force necessary to constitute a cause of action, as to the compensatory damages, and as to the exemplary damages." The fifth ground is: "Because your honor omitted in submitting to the jury the question of compensatory damages." And the sixth is: "Because the verdict was contrary to your honor's charge on the question of easement, the construction of the deed, notice of the deed, force necessary to constitute a cause of action, and as to the damages."

In passing upon the fourth ground the presiding judge uses this language: "The fourth ground is as follows: 'Because the verdict of the jury was against the weight of the evidence as to plaintiff's easement.' This ground is sustained. In my opinion and judgment, the testimony overwhelmingly sustains the plaintiff's allegations, viz., that the track scales were attached to the realty, fixtures, and intended to be such and to remain such. It is not certain that the jury did decide that said scales were not fixtures, but the jury may have so decided, and therefore this is a ground for granting a new trial. * * * The fourth ground also charges that the 'verdict of the jury was against the weight of the evidence * * * as to the force necessary to constitute a cause of action'; and the sixth ground is: 'Because the verdict was contrary to your honor's charge on the question, * * * and on the question of force necessary to constitute a cause of action, and as to the damages.' The request of defendant to charge referred in various ways to this question. I passed upon these requests, but these requests did not cover the issue. * * * I read this admission to the jury and in several places stated it in my charge. This admission or statement in answer, considered in connection with the testimony and the charge, sustains so much of these two grounds as I have set out: The verdict was, in my judgment, against the great weight of the testimony, and was contrary to the charge of the court." (Italics mine.)

The exceptions to the order granting a new trial should be set out in the report of the case, which in different language imputes error to the circuit judge in granting a new trial in this cause. Section 2734 of the Code of Laws provides that "the circuit courts shall have the power to grant new trials in cases where there has been a trial by jury for reasons for which new trials have been granted in the courts of law in this state." Section 286 of the Code of Procedure, in subdivision 4, contains a provision that the judge who tries a cause may, in his discretion, entertain a motion, to be made on his minutes, to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, upon exceptions or upon insufficient evidence, or for excessive damages; but such motions, if put upon the minutes, can only be put at the same time at which the trial is had. In Dent v. Bryce, 16 S. C. 14, Mr. Chief Justice Simpson uses this language: "It needs no authority, then, to say that the jury is bound to take the law from the court. This opinion applies in every class of cases, except one not necessary now to be considered. And when the law is announced by the court, it is the law of the case until overruled by a higher authority. It follows, then, that a verdict in direct conflict with the law of the court is a verdict against the law, and will in all cases be vacated in the first instance, either sua sponte by the judge, or on motion of the aggrieved party. Any other doctrine would lead to the utmost confusion. If the jury could question the charge of the judge, the result would be that in every case the whole case, both law and facts, would go to the jury under the hope that, whatever might be the charge of the judge at the time, he could be satisfied afterwards that he was in error. This could not be tolerated. It would degrade the judiciary and unhinge the whole system. The argument of the respondent, by which he attempts to draw a distinction between a verdict contrary to the charge of the judge and one contrary to law, though ingenious, fails to meet the case. In fact, that doctrine would open the door to the very evil which a separation of the powers and duties of the court and jury was intended to prevent. So far as the jury is concerned, there is no such thing as the charge of the judge being contrary to law, because, whatever may be his charge, it is the law to them."

From the foregoing it appears that a sound discretion is very properly vested in the trial judge in passing upon a motion for a new trial, and, unless it is shown that he has abused such discretion, his judgment will not be impugned by this court. The burden, therefore, is upon the appellant to show that there has been some abuse of such discretion, or, as in Epperson v. Stansill, 64 S. C. 485, 42 S. E. 426, the new trial was granted for misdirection of the jury, when, in fact, it appeared that the jury were properly instructed. The record in this case fails to show any such abuse. While it is true, as contended by appellant, that the fifth ground was sustained under a misapprehension of fact as to what instruction had been given the jury in the charge of the presiding judge, yet we are of opinion that the result should not be changed, for the reason that it would only be supplementary to the main ground, viz., that the verdict was, in the opinion of the trial judge, against the great weight of testimony, and was contrary to the charge of the court.

It is therefore ordered that the appeal be dismissed.

STATE v. DAVIS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 8, 1904.)

HOMICIDE — DYING DECLARATIONS — INSTRUCTIONS — QUESTIONS FOR JURY — ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL — APPEAL AND ERROR.

1. A charge in a prosecution for homicide that the dying declarations of the deceased should be carefully weighed and considered for the reason that there was no cross-examination before the jury of the declarant, is proper.

2. The refusal of a general charge for defendant in a prosecution for homicide is proper where the dying declarations of the deceased were coherent, and made to several persons, and, if believed, were explicit as to the guilt of the defendant.

3. The weight of dying declarations as evidence is a question for the jury.

4. The credibility of testimony of a medical witness in relation to the condition of deceased at the time of making dying declarations is a question for the jury.

5. Where defendant in a prosecution for homicide let pass an argument of counsel for the state without objection being made at the time, and again kept silent when repeated by the court as one of the contentions of the state, it is too late to ask a new trial predicated on an objection thereto by an exception to the recital of the contention made for the first time in the statement of the case on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; Brown, Judge.

Frank Davis was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals. Affirmed.

T. C. Wooten and Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

CLARK, C. J. The prisoner was convicted of murder in the first degree. The first, second, fourth, and eighth prayers for instructions asked by the prisoner were given. The third prayer—"that the dying declarations of the deceased should be received with caution and care, for the reason there being no cross-examination before the jury of the declarant"—was given, merely substituting "should be carefully weighed and considered" in lieu of the words "should be received with caution and care." We find no error in the modification. It is not essential that the exact words of the prayer should be given, even when correct, if substantially given. State v. Hicks, 130 N. C. 710, 41 S. E. 803. Here the substituted phrase was more proper than that asked, and is in accordance with the rule stated. 1 Bishop, New Cr. Pr. (4th Ed.) p. 743, § 1216. The fifth and sixth prayers were properly refused, because containing recitals not found in the evidence. Harris v. R. R. Co., 132 N. C. 160, 43 S. E. 589. The only other prayer, the seventh, was "that, in no event can the jury find the prisoner guilty of the crime set out in the indictment under all the evidence in this case." This was properly refused. The dying declarations were coherent, and made to several persons, and, if believed, were explicit as to the guilt of the prisoner. There was also other evidence, though it may be that, in the absence of the dying declarations and the identification of the prisoner by the deceased as the man who shot him, the jury might not have convicted. The prisoner's counsel insisted that the testimony of one of the physicians as to the condition of the dying man, and its probable effect upon his memory, would justify the court in setting aside the dying declarations. The other physician testified that when the declarations were made to him the deceased was in his right mind. The credit to be given to the physician's testimony and opinion, as well as the weight to be given to the dying declarations, was a matter solely for the triers of the fact—the jury. This court can review only the rulings of the court below upon the law.

The prisoner further excepts that in summing up the contention for the state his honor said: "The state contends that Frank Davis might have had his shoes hidden in the woods, and that he might have put on his shoes, stood behind the stump, and shot Pate, then removed the shoes, and returned home barefooted, and that this might have been a mere subterfuge." The court was stating and arraying the contentions of both sides. It is not denied that this argument had been used by the solicitor, and had not been objected to. The prisoner could not let it pass unobjected to when made in the argument, and again keep silent when repeated by the court as one of the contentions of the state, and then ask a new trial by an exception to the recital of the contention, made for the first time in the statement of the case on appeal. State v. Tyson, 133 N. C. 692, 45 S. E. 838. The object of all criminal trials is a just and strict enforcement of the law by the conviction of the guilty, with such care for the rights of the accused that the innocent may be protected. But this does not permit the accused and his counsel to be silent in face of what they may deem prejudicial, and when it might be corrected by the judge (if erroneous) by objection taken in apt time. Besides, in this case, while there was no evidence to the exact purport of the contention of the state, it was not an unfair or unreasonable argument upon the testimony. The solicitor stated it merely as an inference—"might have"—from the testimony, and the jury could not have misunderstood it.

The only other exception is to the recommendation of the court to the jury—doubtless given at a late hour, and after a long and fatiguing session—not to consider the case till next morning, and is without merit. It is not shown that it prejudiced the prisoner in any way, nor can we see that it was likely to do so.

No error.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF CHARLOTTE
TP. v. PIEDMONT REALTY CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 15, 1903.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — BRIDGES — AID FROM PRIVATE PARTY—CONTRACTS
—ULTRA VIRES—ESTOPPEL.

1. Where public necessity required the building by a town of a bridge of sufficient strength to permit street cars to cross it, and a corporation owning suburban property, which would be rendered accessible if the bridge was built and the car line extended, agreed with the town that, if it would erect a strong and substantial bridge, it would defray a portion of the expense, the contract was not unenforceable, as against public policy.

2. Where a corporation owning suburban property contracted with a town to pay a portion of the cost of erecting a bridge which would accommodate street car traffic to the suburb where its property was located, it was, after the construction of the bridge by the city, estopped from pleading that the making of the contract was ultra vires.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Neal, Judge.

Action by the board of trustees of Charlotte township against the Piedmont Realty Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Tillett, for appellant. Burwell & Cansler, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. The plaintiff alleged its corporate existence, and the power to establish and maintain the public highways and bridges in Charlotte township, Mecklenburg county, and to do all things necessary and incidental to the exercise of such power. That the defendant was a corporation, with power and authority to buy, sell, hold, and deal in suburban and other real estate in the county aforesaid. "(3) That prior to the 19th day of July, 1901, the defendant was, and is still, the owner of a large tract of land just east of the city of Charlotte, which is divided up into building lots, and thrown upon the market to all persons wishing to invest therein for the purpose of erecting thereon suburban residences, the value of which, as such, would be materially enhanced by the extension through it of the city street car line. (4) That it was necessary to erect over Sugar creek, just beyond the eastern limit of Seventh street, on one of the public highways in Charlotte township, a bridge of sufficient strength and capacity to permit the street cars to cross the same, in order that said street car line might be extended through the suburban property of the defendant, hereinbefore described; and for that purpose the defendant, by its duly authorized agents, urged the plaintiff to erect and construct across said creek at said point a strong and substantial bridge, in order that its suburban property might be materially benefited and enhanced in value thereby, and offered to pay as a consideration therefor one-fourth of the costs of erecting said bridge, if the plaintiff would undertake the same, and defray the balance of the costs thereof. (5) That, during the negotiations between the plaintiff and the defendant concerning the erection of said bridge, the defendant contracted to sell to divers parties a number of building lots from the property aforesaid, by representing to said persons that said bridge would be erected, and the street car line extended through said property, and urged upon plaintiff the fact that it had made such contracts and representations as an additional reason why said bridge should be erected by the plaintiff as soon as possible. (6) That thereupon the plaintiff agreed to erect and construct said bridge, in consideration of which the defendant agreed to pay to plaintiff one-fourth of the costs thereof, when the same should be completed, whereupon the plaintiff undertook to erect, and did erect, across said Sugar creek, upon said highway, in accordance with said agreement, a large and substantial bridge, of sufficient capacity to permit said street car line to cross the same and to accommodate all public travel, at a total cost to it of $6,178.68, on account of which the defendant's property was materially enhanced in value, in the manner and for the reasons hereinbefore stated. (7) That the cost of said bridge was greatly increased, at the defendant's request, and in order to make it of sufficient strength and durability to permit the electric street railway and its cars to cross it in the extension of said railway line to and through the suburban property of defendant as aforesaid. (8) That, after the completion of the erection of said bridge by the plaintiff, it duly demanded of the defendant, on the 19th day of July, 1902, the payment to it of the sum of $1,544.67, being one-fourth of the costs of said bridge, which the defendant had theretofore agreed to pay, but which it refused, and still refuses, to pay. (9) That, on account of the matters and things hereinbefore stated, the defendant is now justly indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,544.67, with 6 per cent. interest thereon from the 19th day of July, 1902, until paid. Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant for the sum of $1,544.67 and the costs of this action, to be taxed by the clerk."

Demurrer: "The defendant, demurring to the complaint herein filed, for grounds of demurrer says: First. That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in this: (1) That it appears from the complaint that the contract alleged to have been made by the defendant company was one in its nature ultra vires, and beyond the power of the corporation to make, in that it was a contract to expend money in aid of the construction of a public bridge on a public highway that was not on any part of the land belonging to the defendant company; and, further, that it was a contract made with public officers acting in derogation of their duty, and was against the policy of the law. (2) That it appears from the complaint that the contract alleged to have been made by the defendant company is one which was beyond its power to make, and, moreover, was against the policy of the law, in this: that, it being the duty of said officers to erect on the highway of the said township all bridges for public use, it became their duty to erect this bridge at public expense if the same was necessary for the public use, and the contract, being one to erect a bridge not necessary for the public use generally, but for the benefit of a private landowner, was unauthorized by law, and against its policy."

The demurrer is based upon two propositions: First, that the contract made by the plaintiff, whereby it agreed to construct a stronger and more expensive bridge, to be paid for out of the public funds, was ultra vires; and, second, that said contract was against public policy. It was admitted by defendant's counsel on the argument of this case that the demurrer should be overruled, unless the court should not hold that by proper interpretation of the complaint in this action it was alleged therein that the contract sued upon contemplated an expenditure of public funds for private uses. It was admitted that the court had no right to control the plaintiff in the expenditure of the public funds, so long as these funds were being expended for public purposes; but it was urged that the contract set out in the complaint clearly showed that it contemplated an expenditure of public funds in excess of what the plaintiff deemed necessary for public needs, and that, this appearing from the face of the complaint, the court should sustain the demurrer, because, in the first place, it was a contract to expend the funds of a municipal corporation for private uses, and, in the second place, such contract was void as being against public policy. Treating the complaint as alleging a contract to expend public funds for private uses, it was contended that the state Constitution forbade such a contract, unless it was submitted to a vote of the people, and that in such sense the contract was ultra vires of the plaintiff corporation, and, again, that a contract contemplating the expenditure of the funds of a municipal corporation for private enterprises was against public policy, and therefore void. These principles are fundamental. A very different question, however, is presented by the complaint and demurrer in this case. It is admitted by the demurrer that public necessity required the building of the bridge over the creek crossed by a public highway of said township. The defendant urged, not the building of the bridge, but that it should be strong and substantial, in order that the property of the defendant might be benefited. It was for this that the defendant promised to pay one-fourth of the whole cost. It is also admitted that the cost of said bridge was greatly increased, at the defendant's request, in order to make it of sufficient size and durability to permit the street railway and its cars to cross it in extension of said railway to and through suburban property of the defendant. It being admitted that the bridge was necessary, the strength, durability, width, etc., were questions entirely within the province of the board of trustees to decide. This court could not have undertaken to pass upon or control the exercise of their judgment in that respect. In Broadnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, Pearson, C. J., says: "Who is to decide what are the necessary expenses of a county? The county commissioners, to whom are confided the trust of regulating all county matters. 'Repairing and building bridges' is a part of the necessary expenses of a county—as much so as keeping the roads in order or making new roads. So the case before us is within the power of the county commissioners. How can this court undertake to control its exercise? Can we say such a bridge does not need repairs, or that, in building a new bridge near the site of an old bridge, it should be erected as heretofore, upon posts, so as to be cheap, but warranted to last for some years, or that it is better policy to locate it a mile or so above, where the banks are good abutments, and to have stone pillars, at a heavier outlay at the start, but such as will insure permanence and be cheaper in the long run? * * * This court has no power, and is not capable if it had the power, of controlling the exercise of power conferred by the Constitution upon the legislative department of the government, or upon the county authorities." It certainly was not violating any constitutional or statutory restriction upon the power of the board to build the bridge of such strength and durability as the commissioners, in their judgment, thought proper. That being conceded, we are at a loss to perceive how it can be contrary to public policy to enter into a contract with the defendant by which it agreed to share a part of the burden and cost of building the bridge. It does not appear that the cost of the bridge was enhanced to the extent of one-fourth at the request or for the benefit of the defendant. Judge Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, says: "A promise by individuals to pay a portion of the expense of public improvements does not fall within this principle, and such promise is not void as being against public policy; and, if the promisors have a peculiar and local interest in the matter, their promise is not void for want of consideration, and may be enforced against them."

The question seems to have been presented in Townsend v. Hoyle, 20 Conn. 1, cited in the plaintiff's brief. The court, in discussing the question, says: "The defendants are not only benefited in common with other citizens, but obviously they had a peculiar and local interest, and well might obligate themselves to indemnify the city for assuming the burdens and responsibilities of a new public highway. * * * We must not be considered as assenting to the proposition that a promise by individuals to pay a part of the expense of public improvements ordered by public authority is, of course, illegal and void. We think the amount of a public burden or the cost to the public of an improvement may properly enough enter into the question of expediency or necessity. A canal, a railroad, a bridge, a new street, a public square, or a sewer is called for. If made in one way or in one place, it will be much better for the public, though more expensive; but individuals especially benefited stand ready, by giving their land, their money, or their labor, to meet the extra expense. Will these promises be void, as being without consideration or against public policy? We think not." This language fully meets our approval, and would seem to be decisive of this case. Of course, if there was any improper or corrupt motive controlling the commissioners in a public work of this character, or if it were manifest that its real purpose was to promote the private interest of the defendant, and not the public necessity, a very different question would be presented. But the complaint negatives any such suggestion, and the demurrer admits the facts to be as stated in the complaint. If the county commissioners, finding it necessary to open a public road from one point to another, should, at the request and in consideration of the payment by a landowner of the additional cost, change its course, keeping in view always the convenience of the public, we cannot see how such contract would be open to the criticism of being against public policy. We think such a contract would come within the principle laid down in the cases cited.

This court, in Stratford v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 131, 32 S. E. 396, says: "There can be no objection to the contributing of an individual to the expense of laying out or altering a street; nor will such an act prove that the property was taken for the accommodation of private individuals, and not for public use. If, in point of fact, the public necessity and convenience require the improvement of a street, or the opening of one, it can make no difference who pays the damages of condemnation. It might be that a party contributing a part or the whole of the assessed damages in the condemnation of land for a public street, when the public necessity requires such street, might have lands adjacent which might be improved by the opening of the street, and surely, if nothing else appeared, it would not be either immoral or illegal for him to pay the damages growing out of the condemnation proceedings." The opinion cites Parks v. Boston, 8 Pick. 218, 19 Am. Dec. 322, in which it is said: "If the public necessity and convenience required the alteration, it is immaterial at whose expense it was made. A donation or contribution from individuals to relieve the burden upon the city has no tendency to prove that the enlargement of the street was not a public benefit. A street or highway is not the less public because it accommodates some individuals more than others."

There is no suggestion that the public credit has been pledged to build this bridge. So far as appears from the record, the bridge has been paid for. Surely, as was well suggested by the plaintiff's brief, if the defendant will perform its part of the contract, and replace the money thus expended at its request and upon its promise, there will be no injury to the public; assuming that the cost of the bridge was enhanced for the defendant's benefit. It would lead to a singular result if the defendant could induce the plaintiff to expend public money for its benefit, and then, by refusing to repay the money, successfully justify its refusal upon the ground that the public treasury was depleted by the plaintiff. It would seem that such depletion is the result of the defendant's conduct, rather than the plaintiff's. If the contract set out in the complaint was ultra vires, it would seem that after it is executed, and the defendant has received the benefit thereof, it would be estopped from setting up this defense. The defendant's counsel admitted that if this was an ordinary case of ultra vires, where a private corporation had entered into a contract which was not within the express powers granted to it, then a receipt of benefits would estop the corporation; but it was contended that there could be no estoppel where the contract in question was made with a municipal corporation in direct violation of the constitutional restriction, or in violation of the law of public policy. The authorities cited fully sustain the position of the plaintiff that, if the corporation has performed the contract on its side, the other contracting party cannot plead that it was ultra vires. We can see no reason in law or in good morals why the defendant should not perform the contract which it admits was made with the plaintiff, which has been performed by the plaintiff, the full benefit of which the defendant has received.

We think his honor correctly overruled the demurrer. The judgment must be affirmed.

WALKER, J., did not sit on the hearing of this case.

HOOKER v. WORTHINGTON et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 1, 1904.)

PLEADING—ANSWER—SUFFICIENCY—LIMITATIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

1. Where limitations are pleaded, the burden is on the other party to show that the cause of action accrued within the time limited.

2. In an action by the purchaser of a judgment to set aside conveyances made by the judgment debtor as fraudulent, and to subject the land conveyed to the payment of the judgment, which had been purchased within three years of the action, limitations having been pleaded, it was incumbent on plaintiff to show that his assignors had not discovered the fraud more than three years before the action was commenced.

3. In an action to set aside conveyances made by a husband to his wife and to subject the lands to plaintiff's judgment against the husband, where the wife's answer was sufficient in form and substance, it was a sufficient answer on the part of the husband that he adopted the answer of the other defendant as his own, under Code, § 248, providing that an answer must contain a general or specific denial of each material allegation controverted, or of information sufficient to form a belief.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pitt County; Moore, Judge.

Action by Oscar Hooker against Alfred Worthington and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. L. Fleming, for appellant. Jarvis & Blow, Skinner & Whedbee, and L. I. Moore, for appellees.

MONTGOMERY, J. The original complaint in this action does not clearly show upon what ground the plaintiff seeks relief. Upon a cursory reading of that pleading it would appear to be the purpose of the pleader to have the defendant S. A. Worthington, the wife of the other defendant, A. Worthington, declared a trustee, by way of resulting trust, of the property mentioned in the complaint, for the benefit of the plaintiff. Such a position could not be maintained, because enough appears in the complaint to show that there were no contractual relations between the plaintiff and either of the defendants, and that the very purpose of Mrs. Worthington was to hold the property adversely to all claimants. The amendment to the complaint, however, together with section 33 of the complaint, makes it certain that the plaintiff's purpose in the action is to charge fraud upon Mrs. Worthington and her husband, the fraud being alleged to be that Worthington procured the sale of the property for the purposes of having it bought in by his wife, thereby hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors. It seems, taking the whole evidence into consideration, that the husband, being very much indebted, executed several mortgages or deeds of trust to secure certain of his creditors, and that the property conveyed by him was afterwards sold and purchased by his wife. Between the times of the execution of the mortgage deeds and the sale of the property under the same, and after the last-mentioned date, various unsecured creditors of Worthington procured judgments against him, some of them in courts of justices of the peace, and some in the superior court of Pitt county. The plaintiff bought up a large number of these judgments, his purchases embracing some of the justice of the peace court and some of the superior court, and brought this action to have Mrs. Worthington declared a trustee for the benefit of the plaintiff, and for such other relief as the plaintiff might be entitled to. The defendants, in their answer, set up a defense on the merits of the case, and also pleaded the statute of limitations, that is, subdivision 9 of section 155 of the Code, treating the complaint as an action to have the deeds made by the mortgagees to Mrs. Worthington set aside for fraud, and the property applied, under the order of the court, to the payment of the plaintiff's debts. We are of the opinion that that was the true nature of the cause of action as set out in the complaint, notwithstanding the prayer of the plaintiff for a technically different judgment. And, the defendants having pleaded the statute of limitations, it became necessary for the plaintiff to show that a discovery of the fraud alleged in the complaint had not been made by the plaintiff or his assignors more than three years before the commencement of the action. That requirement on the part of the plaintiff is analogous to the several rulings which have been made by this court, viz., that, where the statute of limitations has been pleaded, the burden is on the other party to show that the cause of action accrued within the time limited. House v. Arnold, 122 N. C. 220, 29 S. E. 334; Houston v. Thornton, 122 N. C. 365, 29 S. E. 827, 65 Am. St. Rep. 699.

The plaintiff offered no evidence upon the issue tending to show when the discoveries of fraud were made by the plaintiff's assignors. It is true that he, as a witness for himself, stated that all he had ever learned on the subject of the frauds charged in the complaint he learned about 30 days before he bought the judgments, the date of which was within 3 years of the commencement of the action. But nearly 10 years had elapsed since the matters complained of occurred, and the plaintiff's assignors transferred their rights to the plaintiff in the judgments more than 3 years after the dates of the badges of fraud set out in the complaint, and he can occupy no better position than his assignors would have if they had brought the action. It was incumbent on him to show that his assignors had not discovered the fraud earlier than three years before the action was commenced. The burden was on the plaintiff, as we have said, to repel the plea of the statute of limitations, and, as the plaintiff failed to offer any evidence on that issue, the judge could either direct a verdict against him, or dismiss the action under chapter 109, p. 155, of the Acts of 1897. House v. Arnold, supra, and cases there cited.

This view of the case on the defendants' plea of the statute of limitations renders it unnecessary to discuss the questions of law argued here by the counsel on the merits of the case.

In her answer the defendant S. A. Worthington pleaded the statute of limitations as a defense against the justice's judgment against her husband, and the plaintiff admitted that the plea was sufficient in form and substance. The defendant's husband, for answer, said simply "that he adopts each and every section of the answer of S. F. Worthington, herein filed, as his own," and signed it. His honor was asked by the plaintiff's counsel to sign a judgment for the plaintiff's debt against the defendant's husband, including the justice's judgments which he had bought, on the ground that the defendant's answer was not a sufficient denial of each section of the complaint, and he declined to sign such judgment. We think there was no error in the refusal to sign the judgment as requested. We think the defendant's answer was a sufficient compliance with section 243 of the Code. The answer of his codefendant was sufficient in form and substance, admittedly so, and A. Worthington's answer adopted each and every section of his wife's answer.

It follows as a matter of course, from what we have said, that the plaintiff was not entitled to have his judgment against A. Worthington declared a lien upon the defendant's homestead, as it was sold under the deeds of trust and purchased by Mrs. Worthington; and his honor was right in refusing to adjudge it a lien on any of the lands described in the complaint. His honor, on motion of the defendants, dismissed, as of nonsuit, the plaintiff's action, and in doing so there was no error.

DEEDS—DELIVERY—PROOF—CHANGE IN GRANTEES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—SUFFICIENCY—TENANTS IN COMMON—RIGHT TO POSSESSION.

1. The question of title to real estate and the right to possession cannot be adjudicated in an action between alleged tenants in common where it appears that the premises are in possession of a third person not a party to the action.

2. In an action between alleged tenants in common to establish plaintiffs' title to the land in controversy, to which defendants claimed title by deed from a common deceased ancestor, the decedent's widow is not disqualified as a witness for defendants under Code, § 590, where she is not a party to the action and is disinterested in the event.

5. Where a deed is written in favor of certain grantees, but retained in the possession of the grantor without delivery to any of the grantees until after the death of one of them, when it was handed to one of the other grantees, who was told by the grantor to erase the deceased grantee's name, and then to have it recorded, which was done, there is a sufficient delivery to the remaining grantees.

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Moore, Judge.

Action by M. C. Wetherington and others against Mary Williams and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. D. McIver, for appellants. D. L. Ward, for appellees.

WALKER, J. This is an action by the plaintiffs to recover their interest as tenants in common with the feme defendants in a tract of land which was formerly owned by Lewis Wetherington. The latter was married twice. The plaintiffs M. C. and G. L. Wetherington are children of the first marriage, and the plaintiff Stephen Oliver, who has died since the action was commenced, without issue, was a grandchild. The feme defendants Cornie Wetherington and Mary Williams are children of the second marriage, and the plaintiff Hyman Stubbs is a grandchild, he being the child of Leah Wetherington, who intermarried with Levi Stubbs. The plaintiffs allege that M. C. and G. L. Wetherington and Hyman Stubbs and the feme defendants are tenants in common of the tract of land described in the complaint in equal shares, and that the defendants are in possession of the land, claiming title to the whole thereof. These allegations are denied by the defendants in their answer.

There was no evidence introduced by the plaintiffs to show that the defendants were in possession of the land at the time the action was brought. On the contrary, their own witness Gaston Wetherington testified that Mary Wetherington, the widow of Lewis Wetherington, was in possession. Before a tenant in common can bring an action against his co-tenant to recover his share in the land, he must allege and prove that he has been ousted by the latter. If the co-tenant is shown to be in possession of the land, and in his answer denies the plaintiff's title, he thereby admits an ouster; at least for the purpose of the action. Halford v. Tetherow, 47 N. C. 398; Day v. Howard, 73 N. C. 1; Withrow v. Biggerstaff, 82 N. C. 82. The plaintiffs brought this suit, not only for the purpose of establishing their title to the shares in the land which they allege are owned by them, but also for the purpose of being let into possession with the defendants. This relief cannot, of course, be granted, unless the defendants are in the possession, and certainly not when a third person, who is not a party to the action, is shown to be in possession of the land. But perhaps the case as it was tried below comes within the provisions of chapter 6, p. 37, of the Acts of 1893, which is entitled "An act to determine conflicting claims to real property," and we may therefore consider the case so far as it is necessary to decide whether the plaintiffs have any interest in the land, or whether by any erroneous ruling of the court they have been prevented from showing that they have an interest. The court submitted to the jury the following issue: "Are the plaintiffs and defendants tenants in common of the lands described in the complaint, as alleged in said complaint?" The plaintiffs alleged that Lewis Wetherington died seised and possessed of the land in dispute, and that it descended to his children, who are his heirs, as tenants in common. The defendants introduced in evidence a deed from Lewis Wetherington and wife, Mary Wetherington, to the defendants Cornie Wetherington and Mary Williams. The execution of this deed was acknowledged by the wife, Mary Wetherington, on January 29, 1898, which was after the death of her husband, and was proven as to Lewis Wetherington by G. S. Wilcox, the subscribing witness, on October 11, 1902, and was registered on that day. The said G. S. Wilcox, who was a witness of the plaintiffs, testified that he wrote the deed, and his recollection was that the names of the three daughters of Lewis Wetherington by his second marriage, namely, Mary, Leah, and Cornie, were in it; that the deed was signed by Lewis Wetherington, and then witnessed by him, and returned to Lewis Wetherington, or to his wife, or to some member of his family, but that he did not remember who took it from his hands, or who kept it. He did not see the deed again until after the death of Lewis Wetherington, when it was handed to him by some member of the family to be registered. The name of Leah had been erased. He proved the execution of the deed as subscribing witness before the clerk of the court, and it was registered. The name of Leah Wetherington, afterwards Leah Stubbs, was not in the deed when he proved it. The certificate of probate annexed to the deed shows that the execution of the deed was proven before the clerk by the oath and examination of G. S. Wilcox, the subscribing witness thereto. The defendants introduced as a witness Mary Wetherington, the widow of Lewis Wetherington, who testified that her husband, who had the deed in his possession, handed it to his daughter, Mary Wetherington, now Mary Williams, one of the defendants, and "told her to take Leah's name off, and she did so. He said Stubbs was a dissipated man, and he did not wish him to handle anything he had. Leah was dead at that time. After he had Leah's name erased, he gave the deed to Mary, and told her to have it registered." The plaintiff objected to this evidence upon the ground that Mary Wetherington was not a competent witness, under section 590 of the Code, to testify concerning the matters stated by her. The witness is not a party to the action, and we do not see how she is interested in its event. If the deed is effectual as to her, she has conveyed away all of her interest; that is, her dower or right of dower. If it is not valid as to her, she is entitled to dower in the land, but this will be in no way affected by the result of this suit. If the defendants recover, they will become the sole owners in fee of the land, and the witness will acquire no interest whatever in it that she does not already possess, nor will any interest that she now has be in the slightest degree impaired. The witness whose competency is in question must be either a party to the action or interested in the event of the action, and must testify in behalf of himself or herself or in behalf of the person succeeding to his or her title or interest. Bunn v. Todd, 107 N. C. 266, 11 S. E. 1043. We do not think the witness is disqualified by the statute. While it is not necessary to decide the question, if we concede that the witness is interested in the result, we doubt very much whether her testimony relates to a personal transaction or communication between herself and her husband. She testified only to what she saw and heard, and, so far as appears in the case, she took no part whatever in the transaction or communication between her husband and his daughter, Mary Wetherington. Norris v. Stewart, 105 N. C. 455, 10 S. E. 912, 18 Am. St. Rep. 917; McCall v. Wilson, 101 N. C. 598, 8 S. E. 225; Dobbins v. Osborne, 87 N. C. 259.

We come now to the question as to the state of the proof in the case, the court having charged the jury that, if they believed the evidence, they should answer the issue, "No." Gaither v. Ferebee, 60 N. C. 310; Mc-

Quay v. R. R. Co., 109 N. C. 588, 13 S. E. 944; Nelson v. Ins. Co., 120 N. C. 302, 27 S. E. 38. The defendants introduced in evidence the original deed, which appeared by the certificates annexed thereto to have been duly proved and registered. The fact of registration is not conclusive as to either the execution or the probate of the deed. The factum of the instrument may be disputed after its registration, and the party who assails the deed may show, if he can, that it was not in fact delivered. But so long as the probate and registration stand unimpeached and unimpaired, they furnish sufficient prima facie evidence of the execution of the deed, which, of course, always includes delivery. He who would avoid this presumption arising from registration must do so by proof sufficient to rebut it or to repel its legal force and effect. Redman v. Graham, 80 N. C. 231; Love's Ex'rs v. Harbin, 87 N. C. 249; Helms v. Austin, 116 N. C. 751, 21 S. E. 556. In the case last cited this court referred with approval to the case of Mitchell's Lessee v. Ryan, 3 Ohio St. 377, and said "that a recorded deed is prima facie evidence of delivery, and it is to be presumed that the maker meant to part with the title, and clear proof ought to be required to warrant the court in holding otherwise." The question in controversy in our case is whether the deed had been delivered to Leah Stubbs before her name was erased therefrom, and, if not, then whether it was delivered to her two sisters after her death. If the deed had not been delivered to Leah, or to any one for her use or benefit, which is the same thing, the grantor had the right to erase her name, for it was not his deed until it was delivered, and he still retained full power and control over it with the right to change it as he might see fit. The witness Wilcox did not testify that it was delivered to Leah, nor did he testify to any facts from which delivery could be inferred. His testimony did not tend to show delivery. Baldwin v. Maulsby, 27 N. C. 505; Bailey v. Bailey, 52 N. C. 44. He merely said that when the deed left his hands it had the name of Leah in it, and that he did not know to whom he gave it—whether to Lewis Wetherington, who signed the deed, or to some member of his family. This tends to prove only that the paper he witnessed was not the one he produced before the clerk, and which was afterwards registered. It must follow, therefore, as there was no other proof bearing on this point, that the deed had not been delivered to Leah when her name was erased; and the only question remaining in the case is, did the testimony of Mrs. Wetherington, if believed, or if the jury found the facts in accordance therewith, establish the delivery of the deed to Cornie Wetherington and Mary Williams, the defendants? It appears from this testimony that Lewis Wetherington, who had possession of the deed, and who, so far as appears, kept it continuously from the time it was written, told

Mary Wetherington, his daughter, to erase Leah's name, for the reason then given by him, and to have the deed registered, which was done. This was surely a sufficient delivery, whether the deed was afterwards registered or not. Phillips v. Houston, 50 N. C. 302; Helms v. Austin, supra. If we eliminate from the case the force and effect of the probate and registration as creating a presumption of delivery, the evidence of the defendants, which was uncontradicted, was sufficient to prove an actual delivery of the deed by the maker to Cornie and Mary, his two daughters. The jury believed this evidence, because, under the instructions of the court, they answered the issue in favor of the defendants. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to pass upon the other exceptions of the plaintiffs.

No error.

STATE v. CAPPS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 1, 1904.)

MURDER—INTENTION OF ACCUSED—MALICE—PRESUMPTION—EVIDENCE—SENTENCE.

1. Where the killing with a deadly weapon is proved, and nothing else appears, the law implies malice, and it is murder in the second degree, as defined by Acts 1893, p. 76, c. 85.

2. On a trial for murder, where the accused had deliberately shot into a house through an open door and killed an inmate, evidence held insufficient to rebut the presumption of malice arising from the reckless act, or to reduce the grade of the crime to manslaughter, though there was no actual intention to injure any one.

3. Where one accused of murder had deliberately shot into a house and killed an inmate, evidence that the accused was on friendly terms with the family living there was inadmissible.

4. On a conviction for murder in the second degree, a sentence to 20 years' imprisonment was not excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Beaufort County; Council, Judge.

George Capps was convicted of murder in the second degree, and appeals. Affirmed.

The defendant was indicted in the court below for the murder of Augustus Tuten, and, having been convicted of murder in the second degree, appealed to this court. The evidence tended to show that the deceased, who was a boy seven years old, lived with his grandmother Mary McCulloch, whose house was about 30 or 40 yards from the home of the defendant. The house had only one room, and at the time of the homicide there were in this room Mary McCulloch, her three daughters, Georgia, Florence, and Annie, and the little boy, who was killed by the defendant some time in the afternoon, between 4 o'clock and sunset; one of the witnesses stating that he heard the gun fired about 5 o'clock, and another that she heard it about 4 o'clock. The defendant came directly from his house to the McCulloch house, and had with him a single-barreled gun, into which he placed a shell as he was approaching the house of Mary McCulloch. The principal facts are stated by one of the witnesses for the state (Georgia McCulloch), who testified as follows: "When the defendant got to the house, he called me and said, 'Georgia, come here a minute.' I said, 'I have not got time.' He said again, 'Come here a minute,' and I said, 'I have not got time.' Defendant was at the gate when he began calling me. When I said, 'I have not got time,' he said, 'You are scared of me, ain't you?' I said: 'No, sir; I ain't scared of you. I am cool.' He said: 'You act like you are scared of me.' I was sitting at the sewing machine during this conversation. I left the machine about the time it was over, and went up to the fire to warm my hands. While I was warming my hands, my sister Florence said, 'Mr. Capps, when I go to your house, I recognize your house; and, when you come to mamma's, I want you to do the same.' He then said, 'Florence, 'tain't worth while for you to begin to cut up, God damn it! I am going to shoot.' At the time the defendant and Florence were talking, defendant was standing on the door step. He then raised his gun, and presented it, and fired it right through the door into the house. When the defendant shot, I saw the boy fall in the middle of the floor, between the two doors. I saw the boy after he fell. He was shot in the side. As the boy fell, he put his hand to his head and side, and said, 'Uncle George has shot me.' I was about three steps (nine feet) from the boy when he was shot. The boy, myself, my mother, and my sisters, Florence and Annie, were in the house when the shooting occurred. After the shooting, the defendant walked around the house and went away." This witness further stated that the defendant did not like any of the McCulloch family much, that he sometimes quarreled with the little boy, that the gun was pointed in the direction where the deceased stood at the time he was shot, and that the defendant said nothing to or about the boy before he fired the gun. The evidence of the witness Georgia McCulloch was in all essential particulars corroborated by the testimony of Mary McCulloch and her daughter Florence. The witness Florence Tuten also testified: That the defendant "shot right through the house," and when he shot he was 12 or 15 feet from where the boy fell. After the defendant fired the gun, he immediately left the house, and went towards the main road, and passed by his own house without stopping. That "he put up the gun to his face and seemed to take aim," but she was unable to say whether or not he put the breech to his shoulder. She further stated that before the shooting occurred the defendant's wife came over to their house, and she heard her say, "George, your gun is going to get you into trouble." Laura Collins, a witness for the state, testified: "I remember when Gus Tuten got killed. I saw the defendant twice that day. The last time I saw him was in the evening, at Mary McCulloch's house. I heard a noise or fuss over there. I stopped, and heard the defendant say, 'I am going to shoot,' and saw him raise his gun, and take sight along the barrel, and fire into the house. After shooting, he turned and walked away from the house. I hid in the bushes, and he passed me with his gun in his hand. It was a single-barrel breech-loading shotgun. I heard the defendant doing loud talking before the shot was fired. When he passed me, after the shooting, the defendant had passed his own house, going on. The shooting occurred about four o'clock on Saturday evening. I saw the defendant with the greens in his arms that evening as he went towards Mary McCulloch's house. On his way over there, he did not stop at his house or at the gate. His wife was behind him as he went over. The gun was against his face when he shot." Annie McCulloch, a witness for the state, testified: "I was present at the time the boy was shot. I heard the defendant say, 'I am going to shoot, damn it!' and he raised his gun up and shot right in the house, and struck Gus and killed him. I dodged out of the way when I saw he was going to shoot. The defendant left after the shooting. The back and front doors were both open at the time he shot. The defendant gave Georgia some greens that evening when he came over to our house, and she took them. I do not know where the boy was standing when the defendant came to the door." Alexander Watson, a witness for the state, testified: "I live about a quarter of a mile from the defendant and Mary McCulloch. I recall the time Gus Tuten was said to have been shot. I heard the gun fire about 5:15 that evening. I saw the defendant as he was going home that evening about 5. He had his gun then. His wife and Mary McCulloch were with him. They had some greens. I did not speak to the defendant, nor he to me. About 8 or 9 o'clock that night I saw the defendant again. He came to my house, and wanted me to go to his wife and get his clothes for him. I said, 'You had better leave here.' A few minutes later he came back to the house, and asked me to let him go upstairs, and I agreed that he could do so." There was testimony tending to show that the defendant was not drinking or under the influence of liquor when he committed the homicide. The jury rendered a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree, and judgment was entered thereon, to which the defendant excepted and appealed.

Small & McLean and E. F. Simmons, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The defendant's counsel, at the close of the testimony, requested the court to give certain instructions to the jury, which it refused to do; but we do not deem it necessary to consider or discuss them, as all of the questions intended to be presented by the other exceptions of the defendant are raised by the defendant's exception to one of the instructions given by the court in its charge to the jury. The court charged the jury correctly in regard to murder in the first degree, and also as to the circumstances under which the defendant would be entitled to an acquittal, but told the jury that in no view of the evidence could they convict him of manslaughter; and in this connection the jury were instructed as follows: "If you find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant shot the deceased with a gun, inflicting a wound from which death resulted, but you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the shooting and killing were the result of willful premeditation and deliberation, then your verdict should be that of murder in the second degree. If it resulted from willful premeditation and deliberation, then your verdict should be guilty of murder in the first degree. In no view of the evidence, if you believe it, can you return a verdict of manslaughter."

The question, then, is, was there any evidence, if the testimony is considered in the most favorable light for the defendant, upon which the jury could have returned a verdict that the defendant was guilty only of manslaughter? The defendant could not have his case presented here in a more favorable aspect for him than it is by this charge of the court, because if there is any view of the evidence which the jury might have taken, and which would have reduced the grade of his offense from murder to manslaughter, he is entitled to have us consider the case in that view. We have not discovered any evidence which entitled the defendant to an acquittal, if the jury found as a fact, which fact seems to have been admitted at the trial, that he killed the deceased with a deadly weapon; and we do not understand it to be seriously contended before us that there was any such evidence. The defendant's counsel, as it appears in the record, virtually admitted the killing with a deadly weapon, and also requested the court to charge the jury "that upon all the evidence in the case, if believed by them, the jury can find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree or of manslaughter." The real question, therefore, is whether there was any evidence to reduce the grade of the offense from murder in the second degree to manslaughter.

There is no principle in the criminal law better settled than that, where the killing with a deadly weapon is admitted, or proved, in the sense that it is established as a fact

In the case, the law implies or presumes malice; and at common law the killing, if nothing else appears, is murder. State v. Willis, 63 N. C. 26; State v. Johnson, 48 N. C. 266; State v. Brittain, 89 N. C. 481. When this implication is raised by an admission or by proof of the fact of killing, the burden is upon the defendant of showing all the circumstances of mitigation, excuse, or justification to the satisfaction of the jury (State v. Johnson and State v. Willis, supra; State v. Vann, 82 N. C. 631; State v. Barrett, 132 N. C. 1005, 43 S. E. 832), and that burden continues to rest upon him throughout the trial (State v. Brittain, supra). As malice is an implication or presumption raised by law from the fact of the killing, it must needs be a matter of law as to what facts or circumstances which the evidence tends to establish will or will not rebut the presumption. State v. Matthews, 78 N. C. 523; State v. Byrd, 121 N. C. 684, 28 S. E. 353; State v. Wilcox, 118 N. C. 1131, 23 S. E. 928; State v. Craton, 28 N. C. 164; State v. Johnson, supra. Whether the evidence sufficiently establishes the facts or circumstances which will constitute a rebuttal of the implication of the law must as surely be a question of fact for the jury to pass upon; and when, therefore, there is any evidence tending to show these facts or circumstances, it is the duty of the court to submit them to the jury, with proper instructions as to what will be sufficient to rebut the presumption, so that the jury may finally decide whether or not the presumption has been met and overcome by the defendant. It follows that whether there is any evidence in this case to rebut the implied malice is a question of law. When there is a killing with a deadly weapon, the law, as we have said, implies the malice, and the offense, at common law, is murder, and under the Acts of 1893, p. 76, c. 85, it is murder in the second degree, if there is nothing in the case to reduce the homicide to a lower grade. State v. Wilcox, 118 N. C. 1131, 23 S. E. 928. This being so, all matters in mitigation or excuse must be shown in the same way as at common law, if the defendant would reduce the offense to manslaughter, or acquit himself altogether of the charge.

We have examined the testimony set forth in the record with great care, and have been unable to find anything which tends, in law, to extenuate the crime of which the defendant was convicted, and there is certainly nothing to excuse it. Instead of rebutting the implied malice, the evidence tends to strengthen and confirm the presumption raised against the defendant from the act of killing with a deadly weapon. The malice necessary to constitute murder may exist, though there was no intent to kill or even to injure the particular person or any one else. It is implied when an act dangerous to others is done so recklessly or wantonly as to evince depravity of mind and a disregard of human life, and, if the death of any person is caused by such an act, it is murder. Dunaway v. People, 110 Ill. 338, 51 Am. Rep. 686; Pool v. State, 87 Ga. 530, 13 S. E. 556; Golliher v. Commonwealth, 87 Am. Dec. 493; Washington v. State, 60 Ala. 16, 31 Am. Rep. 28; State v. Edwards, 71 Mo. 312; 1 McLain, Cr. Law, § 325; 1 Wharton, C. L. § 819; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 153.

We believe the authorities cited support the general rule laid down, and several of the cases, while not presenting precisely the same facts, cannot be distinguished in principle from the case under consideration. In Clark's Criminal Law, p. 180, the rule is thus substantially stated: Where a person does an act with knowledge that it will probably cause death or grievous bodily harm to some person, although he has no actual intention to injure any person, but may wish the contrary, and death ensues from his act, he is guilty of murder. Thus, if a man recklessly throws from a roof into a crowded street a heavy piece of timber, which kills a person in the street, or if he intentionally fires a pistol in a crowded street and kills another, in either case it is murder. In Pool v. State, supra, the court says: "The law infers guilty intention from reckless conduct, and, where the recklessness is of such a character as to justify this inference, it is the same as if the defendant had deliberately intended the act committed. When, therefore, one recklessly fires a pistol, with criminal indifference as to the consequences, and another is killed, it is not necessary, in order to constitute this killing murder, that the accused should, at the time of firing, have been engaged in the commission of some unlawful act, independent of and in addition to the reckless firing itself." In Brown v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 17 S. W. 220, it is said by the court: "If we are mistaken as to there being evidence of the appellant's malice towards the deceased in particular, it is clearly established that the appellant, without lawful excuse, intentionally fired the pistol in a room crowded with persons. If he did this, not with the design of killing any one, but for his diversion, merely, but killed one of the crowd, he is guilty of murder, for such conduct establishes 'general malignity and recklessness of the lives and personal safety of others, which proceed from a heart void of a just sense of social duty and fatally bent on mischief.'" In the case of Alken v. State, 10 Tex. App. 610, 618, it appeared that the defendant fired his pistol into the window of a passenger car, in which he knew there were passengers; and the court said, in discussing the case, that "where an act unlawful in itself is done with deliberation and intention of mischief or great bodily harm to particular individuals, or of mischief indiscriminately, fall where it may, and death ensues against or beside the original intention of the party, it will be murder. The intention to commit an offense is presumed whenever the means used is such as would ordinarily result in the commission of a forbidden act, and this rests upon the principle that a man is always presumed to intend that which is the necessary or even probable consequence of his acts, unless the contrary appears." It is further said by the court that, "according to the evidence, the defendant fired his pistol into the window of a passenger car of a railroad train, in which, it is shown, he must have known and did know there were passengers. The deceased was struck by the ball, and died in a minute or two thereafter from the effects. More reckless disregard of human life was never shown, and can scarcely be imagined; and the act, under the circumstances developed, is, and could be, in law, nothing short of murder." If it be suggested that the killing might have been done accidentally and without negligence, in which case the defendant would be entitled to an acquittal, or that it was done recklessly, but without intention to kill, in which case the defendant would be guilty only of manslaughter, there is no evidence, as we think, to sustain either view. Such a suggestion is fully met and answered by the case of State v. Vines, 93 N. C. 496, 53 Am. Rep. 466, in which Merrimon, J., speaking for the court, says: "The test of responsibility depends upon whether the conduct of the person accused was unlawful, or, not being so, was so grossly negligent, reckless, or violent as necessarily to imply moral impropriety or turpitude. In some cases it may be difficult to determine the grade of the offense, but the case before us leaves no ground for doubt or hesitation in determining that it is at least one of manslaughter. Indeed, in one aspect of the case, it was murder. There was some evidence going to show the willful purpose of the prisoner to shoot without regard to the consequences, and, if this purpose existed, it was murder. If he had been allowed to say that, in his opinion, the shooting was accidental, this could not have materially changed the case, because the prisoner had used the loaded pistol in an unlawful and reckless manner, and whether the firing was accidental or not made no difference. The law does not tolerate such use of deadly weapons, and, when fatal consequences result from it, the offender cannot be held guiltless. In such case he must answer for the consequences. It would be monstrous and shocking to reason to allow a man to so use a loaded pistol, and then take shelter behind the fact that the firing was accidental."

The defendant, on the cross-examination of some of the state's witnesses, proposed to show that he had been friendly with Mary McCulloch and her family at the time when the homicide was committed, and also proposed to show certain facts and circumstances from which his friendly feeling towards them could be inferred by the jury. The court excluded the evidence, and we think it did so properly. This evidence, if admitted, could not have reduced the grade of the homicide. A defendant must show something more than a mere friendly disposition towards the person killed, if he would justify, excuse, or mitigate his offense. It was so decided, as it seems to us, in State v. Johnson, supra.

The evidence in this case tends to show that the defendant's anger was aroused by the refusal of Georgia McCulloch to come to the door of the house when he called her, and perhaps by what Florence Tuten said to him at the time. This reference to the testimony is made not so much to show that there was evidence in the case of actual malice as to show that the evidence not only does not rebut the implication of malice, but rather tends to confirm it.

The defendant excepted to the judgment upon the ground that the punishment imposed is excessive. The sentence of the court was entirely within the limit fixed by the law. It imposed only the extreme punishment for manslaughter. We do not think, in any view of the evidence, that it was excessive. State v. Miller, 94 N. C. 904.

Upon a review of the whole case, our conclusion is that the rulings and charge of the court were correct. No error.

STATE v. TEACHEY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 8, 1904.)

HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—STATEMENTS OF WITNESSES.

1. In a prosecution for homicide, where defendant's father testified that defendant was at home at 7 o'clock on the night of the shooting, and that he, the father, went to bed early and did not see defendant until the next morning, and deceased was shown to have been shot about 9 o'clock that night, testimony of a state's witness that, a few days after the shooting, the father said, on hearing that the shooting was done at 9 o'clock, that he might as well give the case up, as he could not account for defendant after 7 o'clock, was inadmissible, for it was neither contradictory of any statement of defendant's father, nor connected with any fact concerning the shooting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Duplin County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Dan Teachey was convicted of homicide, and appeals. Reversed.

James O. Carr and John D. Kerr, for appellant. The Attorney General and Stevens, Beasley & Weeks, for the State.

MONTGOMERY, J. In addition to the statement of witnesses concerning the dying declarations of the deceased, there was strong evidence that the prisoner shot and killed the deceased. His honor, however, in the course of the trial, received a certain piece of evidence offered by the state which was so clearly incompetent, and which may have been harmful to the prisoner, that we are on that account compelled to order a new trial.

Robert Teachey, the father of the prisoner, testified, for the defense, that his son, the prisoner, was at his home at 7 o'clock on the night of the shooting, and that he (the father) went to bed early and did not see the prisoner until next morning. The deceased was shot about 9 o'clock at night. W. D. Teachey, a witness for the state, was allowed to testify, over the prisoner's objection, that on Sunday after the shooting he, at the house of Robert Teachey, was asked by Robert if he (W. D.) had heard anybody say at what time the shooting took place, and that he answered, "About 9 o'clock," and that in reply Robert said, "I might as well give the case up, as I have no grounds to fight upon. I cannot account for Dan after 7 o'clock." Joe Bostick testified that he heard Robert Teachey say that he could not account for Dan after 7 o'clock. At the close of his testimony the jury were instructed "that the evidence as to what Bob Teachey [who is the same as R. Teachey] said was not to be considered, unless they found from the evidence of said Teachey that he fixed Dan Teachey at home that night after 7 o'clock, and he [Bob Teachey] was thereby contradicted." Assuming that this instruction to the jury had reference to the testimony of W. D. Teachey as well as to that of Bostick, it could not have the effect of curing the error in the admission of the testimony of W. D. Teachey. In no sense could the testimony of W. D. Teachey be considered as contradictory of any statement made by Robert Teachey as to the whereabouts of Dan on the night of the shooting. The despair of the father (Robert) in successfully defending his son against the charge of murder had no connection with any statement made by the father as to the time when he saw the son last on the night of the shooting. It was entirely independent of all reference as to the time of the shooting, and was but the individual opinion of a distressed parent about the difficulties surrounding his son's condition. It was not contradictory of any statement made by the witness, and was not connected with any fact concerning the alleged homicide.

RILEY et al. v. PELLETIER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 8, 1904.)

VENUE—PARTIES TO ACTION—MOTIONS FOR CHANGE—TIME OF MAKING—WAIVER OF RIGHT.

1. Under Code, § 195 (2), providing that the court, in its discretion, may change the venue when the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change, such motion may be made at any time in the progress of the cause.

2. The filing of an affidavit and motion for change of venue, in vacation, before the clerk, is invalid; the motion must be made before the judge.

3. Under Code, § 195, providing for change of venue when the county designated is not the proper county, and requiring such motion to be made before the time of answering expires, the motion must be made at the return term if the complaint is then filed, and, if not, as soon as the complaint is filed, and before answering; and either the filing of an answer without suggestion or demand for removal, or the acceptance of a special order extending the time to answer, is a waiver of the right to remove.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by J. T. Riley and others against J. W. Pelletier. From an order granting a removal of the cause, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

N. J. Rouse, for appellants. Simmons & Ward, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. Plaintiffs, other than Lovett Hines, are nonresidents of the state. The defendant resides in Carteret county. The summons was returnable to April term, 1902, of Lenoir superior court; complaint was filed at that term, and entry made, "time to answer." The next term began 11th November, at which term the answer was filed. In the meantime, on 17th October, 1902, the defendant filed an affidavit and motion to remove the cause to Carteret, but it does not appear that notice of this motion was served on any of the plaintiffs or their attorneys. At November term, 1902, and succeeding term, the motion and cause were continued. At March term, 1903, the motion to remove was granted.

"Lovett Hines, Agent," who resides in Lenoir county, was joined as party plaintiff. It is alleged in the complaint that he was the agent of his coplaintiffs, and as such rented out the lands, and was authorized to collect the stipulated rent thereon for the conversion of which this action was brought. The answer, while denying information upon the above allegation, admits that said Hines was agent for his coplaintiffs in taking possession of the crop, and sets up as a defense that he took more of the crop than was due. The Code (section 177) requires that the real party in interest should be plaintiff, "except as otherwise provided," and section 179 authorizes, among others, "a trustee of an express trust" to sue, and defines him to be "a person with whom, or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another." It is suggested that Hines, upon the averments in the complaint, was the "trustee of an express trust," the alter ego of the landowners to rent the land and collect the rents, and hence that he was prima facie a proper party, and, being a resident of Lenoir county, it was therefore error to remove the cause on the ground assigned in the motion, under Code, § 192, for the residence of defendant in Carteret. We do not find it necessary to pass upon this point.

The court, in its discretion, may remove the trial "when the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change" (Code, § 195 [2]), and such motion may be made at any time in the progress of the cause. The restriction that the motion to remove must be made "before the time of answering expires" applies only when "the county designated in the summons and complaint is not the proper county" (Code, § 195) and the defendant seeks to remove as a matter of right.

We may note, further, that filing the affidavit and motion to remove, in vacation, before the clerk, was invalid. Such motion must be made before the judge (Howard v. R. Co., 122 N. C. 944, 29 S. E. 778), and notice given (State v. Johnson, 109 N. C. 855, 13 S. E. 843; Stith v. Jones, 119 N. C. 430, 25 S. E. 1022). Even if valid, the filing of the answer, without suggestion or demand for removal, and before action had upon the motion, was a waiver of the motion. McMinn v. Hamilton, 77 N. C. 301; Co. Board v. State Board, 106 N. C. 81, 10 S. E. 1002; Cherry v. Lilly, 113 N. C. 27, 18 S. E. 76.

Besides, the Code requires that the motion to remove should be made "before the time for answering expires." While this language is slightly different from the federal statute regulating motions to remove to the federal court, which specifies that said motion must be made "at the time or any time before the defendant is required by the laws of the state or the rule of the state court, in which such suit is brought, to answer or plead to the declaration or complaint of the plaintiff," we think the tenor and object of the two statutes are the same, i. e., to require the defendant to object to the jurisdiction in limine by moving to remove as soon as he is afforded opportunity, from filing the complaint, to know definitely the scope of the action. The language of the statute in both cases has reference to the time at which the answer should be filed under the statute or the general rules of court, and not the special order granting extension of time to answer, which is of itself, if asked or accepted by the defendant, an acceptance of the jurisdiction, and therefore a waiver of the right to remove. Howard v. Railroad, supra. In County Board v. State Board, supra, the motion to remove was made before the expiration of the extension of time to answer, but after the answer was filed, and it was held too late. The only case which seems to militate against our ruling in this case is Shaver v. Huntley, 107 N. C. 623, 12 S. E. 816, but there time was given to file the complaint, and when it was filed in vacation, disclosing the nature of the action, the defendant, before answering, made a demand for removal, and gave notice of the motion to the opposite party. In that case the court repeats that the motion must be made in limine. The question here decided was raised in Roberts v. Connor, 125 N. C. 45, 34 S. E. 107, but not passed upon, as the order of removal was reversed upon another ground. If the defendant seeks to remove, as a right, because the action is brought in the wrong county, the motion must be made at the return term, if the complaint be then filed, and, if it is not, then as soon as the complaint is filed, and before answering.

OUTLAND v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 8, 1904.)

CARRIERS—CONTRACT TO FURNISH CARS FOR FREIGHT—REASONABLE TIME—AUTHORITY OF AGENTS—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR—DAMAGES.

1. Plaintiff wrote defendant that he was cutting and expected to cut 50 car loads of props at a certain point, which he could not load at any siding, and asked for a train to load them on the main line. Defendant wrote that it had considered his application to load a train on the main line and was prepared to permit it, and concluded, "Please let me know when you desire a train, and we will take up with the superintendent the question when it can be furnished." Held, that there was an unconditional and complete contract to furnish cars for transportation of the props; the day when the superintendent should send them being a mere matter of detail and in law to be done within a reasonable time after plaintiff should make known his readiness therefor.

2. One may contract with the general freight agent of a division of a railroad as having authority to furnish trains for moving freight under special contract.

3. Even if the superintendent of transportation of a railroad had power to decline to furnish cars where the general freight agent had made a special contract for the furnishing of a train to move freight, there is a complete contract where plaintiff sent to the superintendent a request for a train, and the superintendent sent it to the general freight agent, who wrote plaintiff referring to his letter to the superintendent, and saying that they had considered his application to be permitted to load a train and were prepared to permit it.

4. Under the contract, consisting of plaintiff's letter, stating that he expected to cut 50 car loads of props and asking defendant "to grant me train to load my props on the main line," and defendant's letter, agreeing to furnish "a train," there is no error in an instruction to allow plaintiff such damages as he sustained by defendant's failure to furnish "trains" of cars sufficient to transport 50 car loads of props; no train having been furnished.

5. An instruction that if the jury believed the evidence they should find that defendant agreed to furnish plaintiff with cars "as alleged in the complaint" (which was at such time as plaintiff might need them) is harmless, though the contract merely required them to be furnished within a reasonable time, they also being instructed that they were to allow such damages as plaintiff sustained by reason of cars not being furnished in a reasonable time, and there having, as matter of law, been an unreasonable delay in furnishing them.

6. As a matter of law, a railroad company which contracts to furnish cars for transporting timber does not, by tendering them 75 or 80 days after the contract is made, perform its contract in a reasonable time.

7. A railroad company is not relieved of liability for breach of its contract to furnish cars to transport freight by the fact that it used reasonable effort to procure foreign cars.

8. A railroad company which contracts to furnish, for a certain amount to be paid as freight, cars to transport a certain amount of props cut and to be cut, having broken the contract, is liable for damages as respects the props cut at the time of the contract, as well as those thereafter cut, including those cut after it gave notice that it could not furnish cars.

Action by W. F. Outland against the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Day & Bell, T. W. Mason, and Murray Allen, for appellants. Peebles & Harris, for appellee.

MONTGOMERY, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for an alleged breach of a contract which was made between the plaintiff and the defendant in November, 1901. The contract is in writing, and is embraced in a written correspondence between the plaintiff and the agents of the defendant. On the 22d of October, 1901, the plaintiff wrote to C. R. Capps, the general freight agent of the First Division of the defendant's road, at Portsmouth, Va., and also on the 31st October, 1901, to C. H. Hix, division superintendent, in the same words, as follows: "Dear Sir: I am cutting and expect to cut 50 car loads of mining props, 27 feet long, near Roxobel, N. C. There is absolutely no accommodation for loading the same at Roxobel siding as it is all taken up with cordwood, Brown and Bundy's place where they have to pile their lumber prior to shipping and C. T. Harrell's gin house and site. Also S. T. Hedgepeth tells me that he has 50 or 60 thousand feet, which he expects to begin to cut and load now soon at Roxobel if he has not already started, and further, were it possible for me to load at Roxobel, your company has not any place for me to drop the props on, prior to loading, and Liverman, the party who owns the land adjoining the depot will not allow any one to drop props on his premises without paying him one cent per log for use of same, which charges I am not willing to pay. Consequently under the many existing circumstances, I respectfully ask you to grant me train to load my props on the main line. I think that there is no doubt but what I could load a train in one day." The letter to Hix was sent by him to Capps, and on the 18th of November, 1901, Capps wrote to the plaintiff, at Woodland, in Bertie county, N. C., along the line of the First Division of the defendant company, a letter in the following words: "Dear Sir: Referring to your letter of October 31 to Mr. Hix, we have considered your application to be permitted to load a train of mine props on the main line near Roxobel, N. C., and are prepared to permit this, subject to the rules governing the loading of cord wood on the main line, with which you are familiar. These rules of course provide that you will be allowed from sunrise to sunset for loading, and that the special train must make way at all times for other trains. The rates to be charged you will be the full local rates from Roxobel to destination. Please let us know when you desire a train, and we will take up with Superintendent Hix the question of when it can be furnished." There was evidence tending to show that before the 18th of November, 1901, the date of the contract, the plaintiff had already cut a large number of the mine props, and that after the 22d of November, 1901, when Capps notified the plaintiff that he feared he would be unable to furnish him the train if the props were to be shipped to some point in Pennsylvania or beyond the defendant's line, the plaintiff cut other props. There was further evidence that the plaintiff hauled a large number of the props to the defendant's railroad, and was ready and able to load as many as 350,000 feet. The defendant did not offer to furnish the cars or a train until about the last of February, 1902, when the plaintiff refused to use them.

The chief contention in the case of the defendant is that there was no contract between the plaintiff and the defendant to furnish cars for the transportation of the props, for that the letter from Capps to the plaintiff of the 18th of November, upon its face, was but a conditional contract, dependent upon the ratification or approval by Hix, the division superintendent, and that the condition is found in the last three lines of the letter, which is in these words: "Please let us know when you desire a train, and we will take up with Superintendent Hix the question when it can be furnished." It is clear to us that the letter of the 18th of November, in its entirety, read in connection with the plaintiff's letter of the 22d of October to Capps, furnishes an unconditional and a complete contract to furnish the plaintiff with the cars to transport the props. The day when Hix, the division superintendent, should send the cars to the place of shipment, was a mere matter of detail, and in law to be done within a reasonable time after the plaintiff should make known his readiness for the cars.

But the defendant insists, further, that, if the contract was a complete one, the general freight agent Capps had no power or authority to bind the defendant by his act. The defendant introduced two witnesses who testified that the power to make contracts for furnishing trains on the First Division actually reposed in Hix. Capps had no such power. We think that that testimony, in a case like this, is in effect a conclusion of law on the part of the witnesses, and that it was not a correct conclusion. The defendant held Capps out as its general freight agent of its First Division, and that designation carries with it, in law, the power to do all acts connected with the handling of freight and fixing special rates, the furnishing of trains for the movement of freight under special contract, and all matters pertaining to the subject of freights, which the company itself could do. It could not be that Hix, the superintendent of transportation, could have the power to decline to furnish cars to a customer at certain times and places, in cases where the general freight agent had made special contract with customers to furnish them. But if that were not so, the contract is a complete one, because Hix sent the plaintiff's letter in reference to the transportation of these props to Capps, and Capps, after that time, in his letter to the plaintiff, stated that he had knowledge of the plaintiff's letter to Hix, "and that we have considered your application to be permitted to load the train of mine props on the main line near Roxobel, and are prepared to permit this, subject," etc. So the correspondence discloses the joint consideration of this contract by both Capps and Hix, even if Hix's approval is necessary. His honor was therefore right when he refused to charge the jury, at the request of the defendant, that there was no contract between the plaintiff and the defendant in respect to furnishing the cars; and also in his refusal to instruct the jury "that if they believed the evidence that Capps, the general freight agent, had no authority to make a contract."

The next in importance of the defendant's contentions is that the evidence on the fourth issue did not warrant his honor in instructing the jury that if they believed the evidence they should answer the issue in the affirmative. The language of the fourth issue was as follows: "Did the defendant, on or about the 18th of November, 1901, contract and agree with the plaintiff to furnish the plaintiff with trains of cars upon which to load mine props and to allow him to load the same at his log yard on the main line of the defendant's road, as alleged in the second cause of action stated in the complaint?" The allegation on that subject in the complaint was that the defendant was to furnish the plaintiff, at such time as he might need the same, trains of cars upon which to load the mine props. The contract, as we have seen, in its treaty, was based upon the letter of the plaintiff to Capps and Hix, which is set out above. In those letters the plaintiff said he was cutting, and expected to cut, 50 car loads of props, and asked the defendant "to grant me train to load my props on the main line." The letter of Capps of the 18th of November refers to the letter from the plaintiff to him, and in that letter Capps writes of furnishing a train. [Italics ours.] That is the ground on which the defendant rests his contention that the evidence did not fit the issue. His honor, no doubt, considered that the defendant had notice that the plaintiff would require accommodations in the way of train service to transport the 50 car loads of props mentioned in the contract, and he instructed the jury upon the evidence (the contract) that they should allow the plaintiff such damages as he sustained by reason of the failure of the defendant to furnish the plaintiff trains of cars [Italics ours] at his log yard on the defendant's main line, sufficient to transport 50 car loads of mine props within a reasonable time. We think the construction his honor put upon the contract was a correct one, and, that being so, no fault can be found with the instruction which he gave.

But the defendant further says that it nowhere appears in the evidence that the cars were to be furnished at such time as he (the plaintiff) might need the same, as was declared in the complaint. That is true, but the charge was not harmful, because his honor said that the defendant was required to furnish the cars within a reasonable time. On the question of the reasonableness of time within which the defendant was to have furnished the cars, raised by the fifth issue, his honor told the jury that if they believed the evidence they should say that the defendant had failed to perform its part of the contract within a reasonable time. His honor then decided that that question was a question of law, and in that view we concur. "What is a reasonable time within which a contract must be performed is a matter of law for the court, when it depends upon the construction of a contract in writing, or upon undisputed extrinsic facts." 9 Cyc. 615, and cases there cited. Seventy-five or eighty days had passed between the date of the contract and the time when the defendant tendered the cars. That, in law, was an unreasonable delay, and is not palliated by the fact that the defendant used reasonable efforts to procure foreign cars upon which the props might be loaded. That was a matter which the defendant should have looked to before making the contract.

The defendant further contends that the plaintiff ought not to recover damages for any loss he may have sustained by reason of the defendant not having furnished cars to ship such props as were cut by the plaintiff before the contract was made. There is no force in that contention, for the defendant knew from the letters of the plaintiff that a large number of props had been cut before the day of the date of the contract, and that he wanted to ship them. The agreement to pay the freight for such shipment was a sufficient consideration to support the contract.

Then, again, the defendant insists that such props as were cut after the defendant had said that it might not be able to furnish the cars could not be made the subject of damages. The contract being a valid one, as we have said, the plaintiff had a right to proceed under it, and it was not in the power of the defendant to put an end to its obligation to perform its part of the contract, simply because it could not carry it out. If that were the law, no person who may have been aggrieved by a breach of contract could have redress against one who had violated his part of it because he could not specifically perform what he had agreed to do.

But the defendant says that the plaintiff should have stopped his operations when he found that the defendant could not furnish cars to transport the props to Northern points. Under the contract there was nothing said about the point of destination of the shipment of the props, and it was the defendant's duty to have furnished the cars and to have transported the props to any point on its own line.

The question of the measure of damages does not arise, for it was agreed on both sides that if the plaintiff was entitled to recover anything he was entitled to recover $2 per thousand feet, or a total of $350, and the sixth issue was answered accordingly.

Upon a full examination of the case, we are satisfied that there is no error.

CRESLER et al. v. CITY OF ASHEVILLE.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 8, 1904.)

MUNICIPALITIES—DEFECTIVE STREETS—ACCUMULATIONS OF ICE—CARE REQUIRED OF CITY—INSTRUCTIONS—NOTICE OF CLAIM FOR INJURIES—PROOF.

1. A municipality is not liable in damages for injuries sustained by a person by slipping on a natural formation of ice, unless it has formed in unusual quantity and remained unremoved for a longer period than necessary, or could not have been removed except at a greater expense than could reasonably be incurred.

2. In an action against a city for injuries sustained by plaintiff owing to her having slipped on ice on a sidewalk, defendant requested an instruction that, if the ice came from a hydrant situated on private property and which the city did not control, defendant would not be liable, and the instruction was given, but the court added that if the hydrant was not on private property, and the city had control of it, and was negligent in allowing the water to escape and form ice, whereby plaintiff was injured, the city would be negligent. Held, that the instruction as given was erroneous, as it was the province of the jury to find the facts about the accumulation of the ice; and because the formation of ice from the hydrant, during the course of a night or a few hours, was made negligence as a matter of law.

3. The error was not cured by other instructions in which the jury were fully and accurately instructed on the issues.

4. Evidence held insufficient to show notice of claim for injuries by defect in street given to city as required by charter.

Action by Jane H. Cresler and others against the city of Asheville. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

MONTGOMERY, J. It is the positive duty of the governing authorities of cities and towns to keep the streets, including the sidewalks, in proper repair, that is, as was said in Bunch v. Edenton, 90 N. C. 431, and Russell v. Monroe, 116 N. C. 720, 21 S. E. 550, 47 Am. St. Rep. 823, "the streets must be kept in such condition as that the people passing and repassing over them might at all times do so with reasonable ease, speed, and safety; and proper repair implies that all bridges, dangerous pits, embankments, dangerous walls, and the like perilous places and things, very near and adjoining the streets, shall be guarded against by proper railings and barriers." It was also decided in those cases that all persons using the streets, including sidewalks, must do so in an "orderly manner," but that they have a right to assume that the town authorities have properly discharged their duties under their powers, and that the streets are in good repair, that the sidewalks are in safe condition, and that nuisances near to and adjoining them have been properly guarded.

In the case before us the plaintiff's claim for damages against the defendant city is based on the alleged negligence that the city allowed water to escape from a hydrant, to flow over the sidewalk, and to freeze thereon during a spell of cold weather, whereby the plaintiff, in going to her work early in the morning, before it was light, was caused to slip and fall into a washout or gully by the side of the sidewalk, and thereby became seriously injured. The alleged negligence, then, was not that the sidewalk was per se dangerous, that is, built or erected or kept in bad condition, but that the icy condition of the sidewalk was the only negligence, or, rather, that it was the negligent failure of the defendant to remove the ice that lies at the foundation of the action. The defendant requested his honor to instruct the jury that "the slippery condition of a sidewalk, resulting from ordinary accumulation of ice in winter, is not an actionable defect if such accumulations are smooth; and, if you find in this case that the alleged injury of the plaintiff was due to such cause, you will answer the first issue 'No,' and not consider the other issues." His honor gave the instruction, with the modification added, after the word "winter," "not from neglect of city." We think the modification was certainly misleading to the jury, and was therefore erroneous. The instruction, as originally prayed for, simply meant that the law would not hold liable in damages a town or city for an injury caused through the slipping of a person on its sidewalk, on account of ice formed there at a season of the year when such formation of ice might be reasonably anticipated, and not through an unusual accumulation and after being allowed to remain there for an unreasonable length of time. Putting that interpretation upon the prayer for instruction, we think it ought to have been substantially given.

It will never do to lay down the rule that in the cities and towns of North Carolina, covering, as they do in many instances, large areas not built upon, but provided with sidewalks, the municipalities should be liable in damages in cases of injury to persons caused by slipping, upon the natural formation of ice and sleet and fall of snow during our winter season. It would be an impossibility to keep these streets free from such obstructions. The true rule seems to us to be that, unless ice or snow or sleet has been allowed to fall in such quantities as are unusual, and to remain unremoved for a longer period than was necessary, or could not have been removed except at a greater expense than could reasonably be incurred, the municipality would not be liable.

Again, his honor was requested to instruct the jury: "(6) If you find as a fact in this case that the ice which formed on the sidewalk and caused the plaintiff's injury came from a hydrant situated on private property, and which the city of Asheville did not control, then the defendant would not be liable, and you will answer the first issue 'No.'" He gave the instruction, but added: "But if you find the hydrant was located on private property, and the city had control of the same, and the city was negligent in allowing water to escape and accumulate and form ice on the street, by reason of this the plaintiff fell and was injured, then the city would be negligent, and you should answer the first issue 'Yes.'" That instruction was erroneous, and for the same reason that it was the province of the jury to find the facts about the accumulation of the ice, and that of his honor to instruct them as a matter of law upon those facts, whether the defendant was negligent or not; and for the further reason that under that instruction the formation of ice from the hydrant during the course of a night or a few hours was made, as a matter of law, negligence on the part of the city. It is but just to add that in his charge in chief his honor instructed the jury pretty fully, and, in the main, accurately, on these questions. But where instructions are contradictory, and on serious phases of the case, a new trial must be granted, for the reasons we have often pointed out—that we cannot tell which instruction the jury followed.

The defendant further requested the court to instruct the jury that the plaintiff could not recover in this action because there was no evidence that she had given the board of aldermen the notice required in sections 96 and 97 of chapter 352, p. 628, Priv. Laws 1895 (the amended and consolidated charter of the city of Asheville):

"Sec. 96. No action shall be instituted or maintained against said city upon any claim or demand whatsoever of any kind or character, until the claimant shall have first presented his or her claim or demand in writing to said board of aldermen and said board shall have declined to pay or settle the same as presented, or for ten days after such presentation neglected to enter or cause to be entered upon its minutes its determination in regard thereto; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any statute of limitation from commencing to run at the time such claim accrued or demand arose, or in any manner interfered with its running.

"Sec. 97. No action for damages against said city of any character whatever, to either person or property, shall be instituted against said city, unless within ninety days after the happening or infliction of the injury complained of, the complainant, his executors or administrators, shall have given notice to the board of aldermen of said city of such injury in writing, stating in such notice the date and place of the happening or infliction of such injury, the manner of such infliction, the character of the injury and the amount of damages claimed therefor; but this shall not prevent any time of limitation prescribed by law from commencing to run at the date of the happening or infliction of such injury, or in any manner interfere with its running."

In the complaint as originally filed there was no allegation of notice to the defendant of the plaintiff's injury as required by the statute, but an amendment was made to the complaint, in which notice was alleged, and the defendant made no answer to the amendment. The plaintiff contends that, notwithstanding the requirements of sections 96 and 97 of the act of 1895, proof of notice to the city by the plaintiff of her injury was not necessary, because of the Code rule that matters of fact alleged in the complaint, not denied in the answer, are to be taken as true. The defendant, however, contends that those sections of the act of 1895 are in effect a bar to the plaintiff's right of action, unless she both alleges and proves, by evidence, that she gave to the defendant such notice as is required by law, and that the act is not a statute of limitations, but a bar to the plaintiff's action, unless it is shown on the trial that the notice was given. His honor did not deem the failure on the part of the defendant to answer the amendment of the plaintiff as of sufficient consequence to allow the plaintiff to recover without proof of the notice required, and the plaintiff introduced three witnesses to show that the notice was given. That evidence was not even a scintilla going to show that the notice had been given by the plaintiff to the defendant as required by the statute.

Error.

JONES v. WARREN et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 8, 1904.)

MORTGAGE NOTES—REFORMATION—MUTUAL MISTAKE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—QUESTION FOR JURY—VARIANCE OR CONDITION OF WRITTEN INSTRUMENT.

1. In an action to correct a mutual mistake as to the amount of mortgage notes given for the purchase of land, evidence of declarations by plaintiff, before the papers were drawn, as to the price agreed on, was competent to corroborate his testimony as to the same.

2. An exception to a refusal to nonsuit plaintiff at the close of his evidence is waived by the introduction of evidence by defendant.

3. Where the testimony, if believed, is sufficient to be submitted to the jury, the court should not state that the evidence is not strong, clear, and convincing.

4. Evidence in an action to reform mortgage notes on the ground that by mutual mistake, or the misapprehension or imposition of the draftsman (the defendant), the contract was not correctly reduced to writing, considered, and held sufficient to present a case for the jury.

5. In an action to reform mortgage notes defendant cannot complain that his error in drawing up the same for an amount more than was agreed on, as shown by the evidence, was not charged as a fraud on his part, and that the action was restricted by the complaint and issue, submitted without objection, to an inquiry whether there was a mutual mistake.

6. Where plaintiff sought to reform notes on the ground that they were incorrectly put into writing by the mutual mistake of defendant, who drew them, and of plaintiff, who, being unable to read and write, was unable to correct the error, they not being read over to him, it cannot be objected to as an attempt to vary or contradict a written instrument by a contemporaneous parol agreement.

7. Though one party's mistake will not entitle him to correct a written instrument when there is a mutual mistake or mistake on one side, and either fraud, undue influence, or like cause on the other, giving rise to plaintiff's mistake, the court will grant relief.

Appeal from Superior Court, Chowan County; Council, Judge.

Action by Martin Jones against James O. and T. D. Warren. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant James O. Warren appeals. No error.

Pruden & Pruden and Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellant. W. M. Bond, for appellee.

OLARK, C. J. This is an action to ascertain the balance due upon a mortgage executed by the plaintiff to the defendant to secure the balance of the purchase money upon the land which had been conveyed to the plaintiff by the defendant, and an injunction pending the action. The complaint alleged that the purchase price was $8 per acre; that the deed recites a consideration of $1, but that the mortgage notes were written upon the basis of $10 per acre, allowing credit for amounts paid before the execution of the mortgage; that the plaintiff is an ignorant man, unable to read or write, and that the defendant wrote all the papers. The jury found that the plaintiff was entitled to the credits claimed, and that the agreed price was $8 per acre; and there was judgment in favor of the defendant for the balance due upon such findings, and a decree of foreclosure if such balance was not paid by a day named. The defendant appealed.

The plaintiff was allowed to state that, after he had contracted with the defendant, and before the papers were drawn up, he (the plaintiff) stated to one Byrum that the agreement to buy was for the price of $8 per acre; and, further, Byrum testified that the plaintiff did make such statement to him at that time. The first and second exceptions were to the above evidence, but it was competent to corroborate the plaintiff who had testified that $8 per acre was the agreed price. Burnett v. R. Co., 120 N. C. 517, 26 S. E. 819, and cases there cited; Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 N. C. 431, 42 S. E. 887.

The third exception—for refusing to nonsuit the plaintiff at the close of his evidence—was waived by the defendant introducing evidence. Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 N. C. 428, 42 S. E. 887; McCall v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 298, 40 S. E. 67; Means v. Railroad, 126 N. C. 424, 35 S. E. 813.

The fifth exception is that the court refused to tell the jury that the evidence was not strong, clear, and convincing. In Cobb v. Edwards, 117 N. C., at page 253, 23 S. E. 244, the court said: "The judge has no more right, when the testimony, if believed, is sufficient to be submitted to the jury, to determine in the trial of civil actions what is strong, clear, and convincing proof, than he has, in the trial of a criminal action, to express an opinion as to whether guilt has been shown beyond a reasonable doubt." This has been cited and approved in Lehew v. Hewitt, 130 N. C. 22, 40 S. E. 769, and by Douglas, J., in Ray v. Long, 132 N. C. 891, 44 S. E. 652.

The fourth exception (for refusal to nonsuit the plaintiff at the close of all the evidence) and the fifth and sixth exceptions (for refusal to charge that there was not sufficient evidence, and that upon all the evidence the jury should answer the first issue "No") present substantially the same question, and should be considered together. Fraud is not charged, and the case in its general features resembles Day v. Day, 84 N. C. 408, and Lehew v. Hewitt, above cited. The action is in the nature of a proceeding to reform the mortgage notes on the ground that by mutual mistake or the misapprehension or imposition of the draftsman (the defendant) the contract was not correctly reduced to writing. The plaintiff testified that the contract price was $8 per acre; that the defendant made the calculations and wrote all the papers; that these were not read over to the plaintiff, who could neither read nor write; that he signed them because the defendant told him they were written according to the contract, and that he believed him. The plaintiff is corroborated by Byrum, who says the plaintiff told him at the time the contract price was $8 per acre; also by Charles Jones and William Jones, who testified that they were present when the contract was made, and that the bargain was $8 per acre. The plaintiff further testifies that he did not know, till just before bringing this action, that the notes were drawn upon the basis of $10 per acre, and that he had tried to find out from the defendant what was the amount due on the notes, but he had put him off; that he did not see the notes till after this action was begun; and that the only paper he had—the deed, drawn also by the defendant—did not set out the purchase price, but recited a consideration of $1 only. The only testimony that the contract price was $10 per acre is that of the defendant, who had himself drawn the papers. If this evidence might tend to sustain a charge of fraud, the defendant certainly cannot complain that such charge is not made, and that the action is restricted by the complaint and issue (submitted without objection) to an inquiry whether there was a mutual mistake in drawing up the notes. It is no prejudice to the defendant, the draftsman, that his error in drawing up the notes is claimed to be due to mistake, and not to fraud on his part. Moffitt v. Maness, 102 N. C. 457, 9 S. E. 399, and Taylor v. Hunt, 118 N. C. 171, 24 S. E. 359, relied on by the defendant, seem to us not to be in point. Those were cases in which it was attempted to vary or contradict a written instrument by a contemporaneous parol agreement. Here the contention is that the agreement made was incorrectly put into writing by the mutual mistake of the defendant, who drew the papers, and of the plaintiff, who, being unable to read and write, was unable to correct the error, the papers not being read over to him. A mistake of one party will not entitle him to correction of a written instrument, but when there is mutual mistake, or mistake on one side, and either fraud, surprise, undue influence, misapprehension, imposition, or like cause on the other, giving rise to the plaintiff's mistake, the court will give relief. White v. Railroad, 110 N. C. 460, 15 S. E. 197; Day v. Day, supra; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. (2d Ed.) 823.

No error.

STATUTES—PASSAGE—CONSTITUTIONAL REQUIREMENTS—READING BILL—EVIDENCE.

1. Const. art. 2, § 14, declares that no law shall be passed to pledge the faith of the state, directly or indirectly, or to impose any tax, or to allow any town to do so, unless the bill is read three times in each house. A bill which had passed the House, and been read once in the Senate, authorized a certain town to issue bonds, fixed their maturity, provided when the first annual tax for their payment should be levied, and provided that $2,000 of the bonds should be paid in a specified year; and, after a first reading in the Senate, an amendment was made whereby the date of maturity was postponed, and the other dates so postponed as to preserve the harmony of the scheme, and the bill, as amended, passed upon its second and third readings. Held, that the statute was valid, notwithstanding that the amendment was not read three times, since it imposed no tax, etc., within the Constitution.

Controversy between George H. Brown and others and E. T. Stewart, as mayor of the town of Washington, and others, submitted without action, pursuant to Code, § 567. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is a controversy submitted to the court without action, pursuant to section 567 of the Code. The facts upon which the parties desire the decision of the court are set forth with care and clearness. The affidavit is in strict conformity with the statute. The plaintiffs are creditors of the defendant the city of Washington, and hold the bonds and other evidences of indebtedness referred to in the act of the General Assembly (chapter 48, p. 92, Priv. Laws 1903). Said bonds, etc., were issued for money borrowed for necessary expenses incurred in repairing streets, public buildings, etc. It is admitted that said bonds, etc., constitute valid and binding obligations of said city. The General Assembly, at its session of 1903, enacted chapter 48, p. 92, of the Private Laws of 1903; said act being ratified February 9th. The said act recites that the city is indebted in the sum of $32,000, said debt being contracted for the purposes therein set forth, and evidenced as aforesaid, and is entitled "An act to authorize the board of commissioners of the town of Washington, North Carolina, to issue bonds to pay its existing indebtedness." The board of commissioners of said town are by said act authorized to issue bonds to the amount of $32,000, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent., and payable semiannually. The denomination of the bonds, the mode of authentication, and manner of sale, etc., are fully set forth therein. It is provided that the proceeds of the said bonds shall be applied exclusively to the payment of the aforesaid indebtedness. Section 2, p. 93, of the act, provides that "the principal of all said bonds shall be due and payable on the first day of May 1933, but it shall be the duty of the board of commissioners of said town to pay two thousand dollars of the principal of said entire bond issued on the first day of May 1918, and two thousand dollars on the first day of May of each year thereafter until the entire principal of each bond is paid." Provision is made for selecting by lot the bonds to be paid at the end of each year. By section 4 it is provided that the board of commissioners shall levy an annual special tax, sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and "shall also levy during the year 1917 and each year thereafter, a special tax to produce an annual sum sufficient to pay and discharge two thousand dollars of the principal of said bond as each installment falls due under the provision of this act." Said act was passed in strict conformity to the provisions of article 2, § 14, of the Constitution. The General Assembly at the same session enacted chapter 170, p. 355, of the Private Laws of 1903, being entitled "An Act to incorporate the city of Washington." Said act was introduced into the House of Representatives and read on three several days, passing its several readings. Upon each reading the yeas and nays were called and entered on the journal in strict accordance with section 14, art. 2, of the Constitution. The bill, after having passed the House, was sent to the Senate, duly read, and passed upon its first reading without amendment. On a subsequent day, sections 84, 85, and 86 were offered as an amendment, adopted by the Senate, and made a part of the bill. After being so amended, the bill passed upon its second and third readings, upon two several days, upon a call of the yeas and nays, recorded on the journal in accordance with the constitutional requirement. Section 85 of chapter 170, p. 388, Priv. Laws 1903, is as follows: "The several sections and provisions of an act of the General Assembly ratified February 9th, 1903, entitled 'An act to authorize the board of commissioners of the town of Washington, North Carolina, to issue bonds to pay its existing indebtedness,' are hereby made a part of this act, with the following amendments, viz.: Where figures or words occur in section two of said act of February 9th, 1903, they shall be changed to 1933, and where words or figures 1918 occur in said section of said act they shall be changed so as to read 1923, and where words or figures 1917 occur in the 4th section of said act of February 9th, 1903, they shall be changed so as to read 1922. All the bonds issued in pursuance of this act or the act ratified February 9th, 1903, shall be exempt from municipal taxation by said city, and all shall be payable in the gold coin of the United States, and all the coupons receivable in payment of taxes by said city and the interest upon all shall be payable semi-annually upon 1st days of November and May of each year at such place as the board of aldermen may designate." The said bill, after being passed by the Senate as aforesaid, was returned to the House. The Senate amendment was concurred in, and the bill as amended duly read and passed on two several days; the yeas and nays being taken and recorded in accordance with the Constitution. Section 14, art. 2. Both of said acts were duly enrolled, ratified, and published by the Secretary of State as provided by law. It is admitted that the indebtedness for the payment of which said bonds were directed to be issued is past due and unpaid. The defendants duly advertised said bonds for sale in accordance with chapter 48, p. 92, of the Private Laws of 1903, as amended by section 85, c. 170, p. 388. They were bid off by one Stafford, who declined to take and pay for them; assigning as reason therefor that section 85 of chapter 170, p. 388, was not read three times in the Senate. The plaintiffs insist that it is the duty of the defendants to again offer said bonds for sale, as required by said acts of the General Assembly. His honor, upon the foregoing agreed state of facts, was of the opinion that chapter 170, p. 355, of the Private Laws of 1903, was duly and regularly enacted into law and ratified on February 27, 1903, in accordance with article 2, § 14, of the Constitution; that the amendment thereto having been adopted on and before the second reading of the bill, and the bill, so amended, having passed its several readings in accordance with the Constitution, said amendment constituted a part of said act, as passed and ratified; that the effect of the enactment of section 85, c. 170, p. 388, was to amend chapter 48, p. 92, of the Private Laws of 1903. It was thereupon adjudged that the defendants proceed to again offer the bonds for sale, and issue same in manner and form as set out in chapter 48, as amended by section 85 of chapter 170, and apply the proceeds as therein directed. From this judgment, defendants appealed.

S. G. Bragaw, for appellants. S. B. Shepherd, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. We do not entertain any doubt of the correctness of the conclusion reached and the judgment rendered by his honor. The board of commissioners of the town of Washington were empowered by chapter 48, p. 92, Priv. Laws 1903, to issue the bonds for the purpose of paying a valid, outstanding, and past-due indebtedness of said town, as therein stated. This act is full and complete in its provisions, having been enacted in strict conformity to the constitutional requirement, as uniformly construed by this court, and there can be no possible doubt of its validity. We are unable to perceive how by any rule of construction the provisions of section 85 of chapter 170, p. 388, can be said to "pledge the faith" of the town, or "impose any tax." It will be observed that by chapter 48, § 2, p. 93, the bonds were to mature May 1, 1933. This date is changed to 1938. Two thousand dollars of the bonds were to be paid in 1918. The date is changed to 1923. The first annual tax to pay the first installment is directed to be levied in 1917. The date is changed to 1922. The effect of the amendment is to postpone the date of maturity five years, and the other dates are so changed that the harmony of the original scheme is preserved. Upon the principle announced in Glenn v. Wray, 126 N. C. 730, 36 S. E. 167, we can see no reason why the bill, as amended, was not passed in the Senate in conformity with the Constitution, and the well-known rules of procedure in both houses of the General Assembly of this state. We can see no reason why the amendment, imposing no tax, creating no debt, nor increasing the amount of the bonds, or the rate of interest thereon, could not be adopted by the senate, and incorporated into the original bill, on and before its second reading. Certainly this ruling in no manner conflicts with what is said in Glenn v. Wray, supra. His honor was of the opinion that the effect of section 85 of chapter 170 was to amend chapter 48. Much could be said in support of the view that chapter 48, as amended, was incorporated into, and made a part of, chapter 170. It is not very material which view we take, as the result will be the same. The judgment of his honor is affirmed.

To prevent any possible misconception, we think it proper to say that we have decided this case upon "an agreed state of facts," in a controversy without action. We do not pass upon the admissibility of the journals or other evidence for the purpose of invalidating or affecting the integrity of the certificates of the presiding officers that said act was "in the General Assembly read three times." It does not appear that there was any objection made to the evidence in Glenn v. Wray, supra. The court has held in Bank v. Commissioners, 119 N. C. 214, 25 S. E. 966, and several recent cases, that the journal is competent evidence to show whether the provisions of section 14, art. 2, of the Constitution, have been complied with. The writer of this opinion thinks it is not improper to say, speaking for himself, that, unless compelled by overwhelming and controlling authority, he would hold that the principle announced in Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, is to be rigidly adhered to, save in the clearly defined exception made in Bank v. Commissioners, supra.

The judgment of his honor is affirmed.

(24 N. C. 641)

STATE v. DANIELS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 8, 1904.)

GRAND JURY—SELECTION—RACE DISCRIMINATION—QUALIFICATIONS OF INHABITANTS—FINDING OF COMMISSIONERS—CONCLUSIVENESS—REQUIREMENT OF PAYMENT OF TAXES—EFFECT OF DISREGARDING—HOMICIDE—CONFESSION—ADMISSIBILITY—FOOTPRINTS—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

1. The conclusion of county commissioners, on whom the duty of passing on the qualifications of the inhabitants of the county in making up the jury list is imposed by Code, §§ 1722-1725, is final, and not subject to review, in the absence of a finding that they failed to exercise good faith.

2. Code, c. 39, §§ 1722-1725, make it the duty of the county commissioners, at a stated time in each year, to select from the tax returns of the preceding year the names of such persons only as have paid their taxes for that year, and are of good moral character, etc., to constitute the jury list. This list is to be revised each year by the commissioners, etc. Held that, while the failure by the commissioners to make the payment of taxes a prerequisite to a place on the jury list was a censurable irregularity, it did not afford ground for quashing an indictment by a grand jury, the members of which were in fact duly qualified under the statute.

3. Code, c. 39, §§ 1722-1725, require the county commissioners yearly to select from the tax returns of the preceding year the names of such persons only, for the jury list, as have paid their taxes, and are of good moral character and sufficient intelligence. This list is to be revised each year, and the names of all inhabitants qualified to serve added thereto. The commissioners are to "carefully examine" the list, and "diligently inquire" whether any qualified persons are omitted, and whether any persons not qualified have been inserted, and to correct the list accordingly. On a motion to quash an indictment, the court found that the jury box from which the grand jury was selected contained 430 names. It did not appear, and the court was unable to find, whether any of these were negroes. There were 528 colored males in the county, qualified to serve as jurors. There were as many white males over 21 whose names were not in the jury box as there were colored males of the same age whose names were omitted. The jury boxes were revised as required by law, the commissioners selecting the names of those they thought competent and morally fit to sit on the jury. In making the selection the commissioners did not think of or discuss the race question, but passed on various negroes and white men, and rejected the names of those they thought incompetent. Before the commission of the offense charged, the grand jury was selected as required by law, and the members thereof were all duly qualified, and were all white. The defendant was a negro. The total population of the county was 8,239, of which 4,479 were whites, and 3,760 were colored. Held, that the motion was properly overruled.

4. A negro arrested for the murder of a white man was carried to another county, and, when brought back by the sheriff, on alighting from the train, saw a big crowd of colored "camp-meeting" people, and seemed to be scared. About halfway between where he left the train and the town, he said, "Do not let them hurt me." The sheriff said, "No one shall hurt you," and added that he would sit beside the prisoner, and that if they shot they would hit both. Two other persons were with the party, one of whom asked the prisoner "how it was." He then made a statement concerning the homicide. Held, that the statement was admissible.

5. Evidence of footprints near the scene of the crime is admissible in a prosecution for murder, though it is not shown that accused made tracks at the time similar to those found.

6. In a prosecution for the murder of a landowner by a poacher, it appeared that deceased had gone into the woods early in the morning of the day of the homicide, his body being found the next day, and that the accused crossed the river on that morning, with various circumstances tending to show his presence in the vicinity of the crime. There was evidence of threats by the accused against decedent, and of a statement made by accused that the homicide was in self-defense. Some circumstances, however, contradicted the idea of self-defense. Held, that allowing state's counsel to argue at length that accused waylaid the deceased was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Jones County; Moore, Judge.

Alfred Daniels was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. L. Harris, for appellant. A. D. Ward and the Attorney General, for the State.

CONNOR, J. The prisoner was charged with the murder of F. G. Simmons, and in apt time filed a plea in abatement, and moved the court to quash the indictment, for that the list of 36 jurors drawn by the county commissioners of Jones county, from which the grand jury was drawn, and which found the bill of indictment, was revised with partiality, unjustly and purposely, against competent persons of the negro race, to which the prisoner belongs, on account of the race or color of such persons. The officers whose duty it was to revise the jury lists, and to draw the panel to be summoned, from which the grand and petit jury were drawn for the present term of the court, at which the indictment was found against the prisoner, with the unlawful and avowed purpose of discriminating against persons of the negro race, excluded persons who of right, being competent, should not have been excluded from the jury lists. That such unjust and unlawful discrimination against the prisoner deprives him of a fair and impartial trial in this court, as is guaranteed to him under the Constitution of North Carolina, and the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and the acts of Congress. That there are in Jones county about 7,000 persons, more than one-third of whom are of the negro race, who pay taxes on more than $30,000 worth of property, a large number of whom are equal to the average citizen of said county. In accordance with the request of the prisoner, the court caused subpoenas duces tecum to issue to the chairman of the board of commissioners, the register of deeds (ex officio clerk to the board), and the sheriff of the county, commanding them to bring their several records into court, and also the jury boxes, etc. The motion to quash was founded upon the affidavit of the prisoner. The court, after hearing the testimony offered in support of the motion, found the following facts: The jury box contains the names of 430 persons. It does not appear, and the court is unable to find, whether any of said persons are negroes. There are 528 colored males residing in Jones county, over 21 years of age, who had paid their taxes for the year 1902, prior to June 1, 1903. There are as many white males over 21 years of age and upwards, residing in said county, whose names are not in the jury box, as there are colored males of the same age whose names are not in said box. The jury boxes were revised on the first Monday in June, 1903, as required by law; the commissioners taking the tax books or lists for the preceding year, and selecting from said tax books or lists the names of such persons as they thought were competent and morally fit to sit on the jury, and placing the names thus selected in the jury box. In selecting the names to be placed in the jury box, the commissioners did not think of or discuss the race question. They considered only the question of competency and fitness. They did not make the payment of taxes a prerequisite. They discussed the qualification of various negroes and white men, and rejected their names when they decided they were not competent and fit. The only test which was applied was capacity and fitness of persons whose names appeared on the tax list. The commissioners, at their regular meeting in September, 1903, before the commission of the alleged offense for which the prisoner is indicted, drew from the jury boxes of the county the names of 36 persons to serve as jurors at this term of the court. They were drawn in the manner required by law. The 36 persons whose names were so drawn, and were summoned to serve as jurors at this term of the court, were all white persons. The grand jury was regularly drawn from the 36 jurors drawn and summoned as above set forth. It appeared from an examination of the said grand jurors before they were impaneled that each of said grand jurors had paid his tax for the year 1902. The total population of Jones county is 8,239, of which 4,479 are whites, and 3,760 are colored. The prisoner is a negro. Upon the foregoing findings of fact, the motion to quash the bill of indictment was overruled, and the defendant excepted, assigning as cause thereof, first, that the court erred in not finding that none of the names contained in the jury boxes are the names of negroes; second, that the court should, from the evidence, have found that the test was not honestly applied, and that negroes or persons of the colored race were unjustly excluded on account of race and color; third, that there is no evidence upon which to base the findings. The prisoner was thereupon arraigned, and pleaded "Not guilty." From a judgment pronounced upon a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, he appealed.

The prisoner, by his motion to quash the indictment for the causes set forth, evidently intended to present the question passed upon by this court in State v. Peoples, 131 N. C. 784, 42 S. E. 814. In accordance with the ruling in that case, his honor granted to the prisoner a subpoena duces tecum for the chairman of the board of commissioners, with the jury box, and such other witnesses as the prisoner desired to examine. Counsel for the prisoner in this court conceded that there was nothing in the statutes prescribing the qualification of grand or petit jurors, or the mode of selecting them, conflicting with the Constitution of the United States, or the amendments thereto. His honor finds that, "in selecting the names to be placed in the jury box, the commissioners did not think of or discuss the race question. They considered only the question of competency and fitness. They did not make the payment of taxes a prerequisite. They discussed the qualifications of various negroes and white men, and rejected their names when they decided they were not competent or fit." In Carter v. Texas, 177 U. S. 442, 20 Sup. Ct. 687, 44 L. Ed. 839, the defendant, in apt time, and by a proper motion, alleged that all persons of the colored race, etc., were excluded from the jury list "on the ground of their race and color," etc. He offered to introduce witnesses, and requested the court to permit him to do so, to sustain the allegation. The court declined to hear any testimony in support of the motion, and overruled the same. The Supreme Court of the United States, reversing the Texas court, held that, upon the allegations made in the motion, the defendant had been denied a right duly set up and claimed under the Constitution of the United States. This ruling was followed by this court in State v. Peoples, supra. His honor, in strict conformity with these authorities, granted the subpoenas, heard the testimony, and found the facts in regard to the manner of making up the jury lists as set out in the record. The prisoner's counsel properly conceded that, upon the record, it does not appear that the prisoner has been denied any right secured to him by the federal Constitution. He insisted, however, that, upon the findings of the court, it appears that the commissioners have failed to comply with the statutes regarding the manner of making up the jury list from which the grand and petit jurors were drawn. He says: "According to section 1724 of the Code, the jury list must contain the names of all the inhabitants who are qualified, as provided in section 1722, to serve as jurors; and, if the list as made out by the clerk of the board of commissioners does not contain all the inhabitants, the commissioners are required to insert the names of such persons or inhabitants in the jury list. That section 1725 provides that the commissioners, after the jury list has been laid before them by the clerk, shall diligently inquire whether any person qualified to serve as a juror has been omitted, and, if so, to insert his name, and strike off such as were not qualified." That the commissioners violated section 1722, by making competency and fitness the qualification, instead of obeying the requirements of that section. That the number of jurors whose names are in the box being less than one-third of the voting population of the county, and the further fact that there are 528 negro males more than 21 years of age who have paid their taxes, and that there are as many white males over 21 years of age residing in Jones county as there are colored males of the same age, whose names were not in the jury box, "emphasize the fact that the commissioners did not revise the jury list, but made a selection of the persons whom they desired to serve as jurors, and that there were gross irregularities in making up the jury list. * * * He insists that, upon these facts found by the judge, his motion to quash the indictment should have been allowed.

We do not care to place the disposition of this case upon the fact that the contention made in this court is different from and foreign to that made in the court below. The prisoner made his motion in apt time, and in accordance with the provisions of section 1741 of the Code. If, upon the facts found, there be any legal ground for quashing the indictment, we should not hesitate to grant the motion, although such grounds be different from those assigned in the superior court. Any suggestion made pursuant to the rules of practice prescribed either by statute or the procedure prevailing in the courts, involving the integrity of the jury lists, or the manner in which the law in respect to making up such lists has been executed, is entitled to the respectful and careful consideration of the court. It affects not only the honor of the state, but the lives, liberties, and property of the citizens. "At common law no such thing was known as the preparation of a list of persons who were liable to be summoned to serve as jurors at a succeeding term of the court, but the uncontrolled discretion was vested in the sheriff, in the coroner, or in officials called 'elisors,' of summoning such 'good and lawful men' as they might choose under the command of the writ of venire facias. This led to enormous abuses, chiefly in the packing of juries and the blackmailing of citizens, to remedy which American statutes have generally provided, with more or less particularity, for the preparation a given time before the commencement of any term of court, or at other stated periods, of a list of persons within the county or other jurisdiction from whom jurors are to be summoned." Thompson on Trials, § 13. In accordance with this policy of the law, there have been in force in this state, from the earliest period of our history, statutes prescribing the mode of making the jury lists from which the jurors to serve at each term of the court shall be selected by drawing the names thereof from a box provided for that purpose, by a child not more than 10 years of age. The law in this respect is set forth in chapter 39 of the Code; the only change since the adoption of the Code being that the time at which the jury lists shall be revised is the first Monday in June, instead of September. It is made the duty of the commissioners, at the time stated, in each year, to cause their clerks to lay before them the tax returns of the preceding year for their county, from which they shall proceed to select the names of such persons only as have paid their taxes for the preceding year, and are of good moral character and sufficient intelligence. The names thus selected shall constitute the jury list. This list shall be revised on the first Monday in June of each year, and the names of all inhabitants qualified to serve, who may not be of said list, shall be added thereto. The commissioners are further required to carefully examine the list as already made out, compare the same with the tax returns, and diligently inquire whether any persons qualified to be jurors, as provided, are omitted, and whether any persons not qualified have been inserted, and to strike such names from the list. In these four sections is comprised the entire legislation on this subject in force in this state. The remaining sections of the chapter are directed to the manner of drawing from the list thus prepared the jurors to be summoned to attend upon the succeeding term of the court. It has been held from the earliest period of our judicial history that the provisions of these statutes are directory, and not mandatory. State v. Seaborn, 15 N. C. 305. In State v. Haywood, 73 N. C. 437, Bynum, J., says: "The facts are that the jury list, from which the grand jury finding the indictment was drawn, contained the name of 451 qualified jurors, but did not contain the names of 241 others who were also qualified, and ought regularly to have been on the list, but were omitted therefrom by the county commissioners in preparing and revising the jury list, from some cause not appearing, and not alleged to have been intentional or corrupt. Was the indictment well found? is the question. There is no allegation that any of the jurors comprising the grand jury were not properly qualified jurors and were not properly on the list drawn from, or that they were not in every other respect regularly drawn and impaneled in the manner prescribed by law." The learned justice further says: "It is highly conducive to the fair and impartial administration of justice that these details should be strictly observed and followed, and any intentional nonobservance of them is the subject of censure, if not of punishment. But it is well settled that they are only rules and regulations which are directory only, and have never been held to be mandatory, where the persons summoned are qualified jurors in other respects." State v. Martin, 82 N. C. 672; State v. Smarr, 121 N. C. 699, 28 S. E. 549. The record in this case does not show that any persons qualified to serve upon the jury as jurors were excluded from the list. The argument that such is the case is based upon the facts found by the judge in respect to the number of inhabitants in the county, and the number of persons who had paid their taxes. There is no evidence and no finding that persons of good moral character or of sufficient intelligence, residing in the county, were omitted from the jury list. The duty of passing upon the qualifications of the inhabitants of the county in this respect is imposed upon the commissioners, and in the absence of any finding that they failed to discharge such duty, or exercise good faith in doing so, their conclusion is final and not subject to review. If, however, it be conceded that such persons were omitted from the jury list, it seems to be well settled both in this country and in England that this would not be a ground to quash the indictment. In the celebrated case of O'Connell and others v. The Queen, 11 C. & Fin. 155, it was held by the House of Lords, after a most able and exhaustive discussion, that a challenge to the array in the Court of Queen's Bench, alleging that the jurors' book had not been completed in conformity to the act of Parliament, in that the names of a number of persons qualified to act on juries had been fraudulently omitted from the general list from which the book was made up, for the purpose of prejudicing the defendants, could not be sustained. From this judgment, Lord Denman, in a masterly opinion, dissented. We are not called upon in this case to adopt the law as therein laid down, as there is no evidence or finding that there was any fraudulent omission of the names of persons from the list. We do not understand the American authorities upon this subject to approve the doctrine to the extent held in O'Connell's Case. The extent to which they go is thus stated in Thompson on Trials, § 33: "Statutes which prescribe the manner of selecting by county, town, or other officers the general list of persons liable to jury duty, from which the panel is drawn, are generally treated as directory, merely. It is hence a general rule that irregularities in the discharge of this duty constitute no ground for challenging an array. If the jurors who have been selected and drawn are individually qualified, that is generally deemed sufficient." In People v. Jewett, 3 Wend. 314, Savage, C. J., says: "By the act directing the mode of selecting grand jurors, passed in 1827 (Laws 1827, p. 312, c. 286), the duty of making the selection is conferred upon the supervisors of the several counties of the state. They are required to select such men only as they shall know, or have good reason to believe, to be possessed of the necessary property qualification to sit as petit jurors; to be men of approved integrity, of fair character, of sound judgment, and well informed. Thus the qualifications of the grand jurors are defined by statute, and, if those selected possessed the required qualif-cations, there can be no objection to the array. * * * A grand jury should be selected with a single eye to the qualifications pointed out by the statute, without inquiry whether the individuals selected do or do not belong to any particular society, sect, or denomination, social, benevolent, political, or religious." The learned chief justice says: "But if they did thus err, the array cannot for that purpose be challenged. Whilst those who are selected are unexceptionable, the fact that others equally unexceptionable are excluded is no cause of challenge of the array. A challenge can be supported only by showing that the persons selected are not qualified according to the requirements of the statute."

In this case his honor expressly finds that the grand jurors were examined before they were impaneled, and that each of them had paid his taxes for the year 1902. There is no suggestion that in any other respect they were not qualified in accordance with the statute. The jury list was revised several months before the commission of the homicide for which the prisoner is indicted. While we cannot approve the course pursued by the commissioners in failing to make the payment of taxes a prerequisite as required by the act, it having been found that the grand jurors were qualified in this respect, we can see no reason for quashing the indictment upon that ground. It is to be regretted that those who are commissioned to perform this important duty in the administration of public justice should fail to observe the clear and unmistakable requirements of the statute. In Moore v. Guano Co., 130 N. C. 229, 41 S. E. 293, it appeared that there were gross irregularities in drawing the jury from the box, which this court held constituted good cause for challenge to the array. The conclusion to which we arrive in this case does not conflict with what is there said. We have carefully examined the several grounds set out by the prisoner in his motion to quash the indictment for alleged irregularities in making the list, and find no error in his honor's refusal to grant the motion. The law secures to him, as to every other citizen of the state, without regard to race, color, or other condition, the right to a fair and impartial grand jury, composed of the inhabitants of the county qualified to serve as jurors. This, upon the finding of the court below, he has had, and he has no just cause of complaint. We find in the record no other objection to the petit jury, either by way of challenge to the array or to the poll.

We proceed to pass upon the exceptions made to his honor's rulings on the trial. The testimony tended to show that the deceased was shot upon his own land, a short distance from the river low grounds; that he was last seen early in the morning of the day of the homicide, going into the woods; that about 9 o'clock a witness introduced by the state heard two guns fire down the river, and, after the last firing, heard some one "holler." The deceased was 77 or 78 years old. The body was found, on the day following the disappearance of the deceased, about 150 yards from the road. It was lying on side. His gun was about 10 steps from him, and had not been discharged. Shells looked as if they had been in the gun 3 or 4 weeks. The woods where the body was found were right thick. One could not see the deceased from where he was found, to the river. The leaves were disturbed somewhat. Shot in the front. Six wounds just over the heart, ranged slightly up. There was evidence tending to show that the prisoner crossed the river on the morning that the deceased was missing; that he made a paddle of cypress boards. He had a gun with him. The paddle was found near the river, and identified as being the same one that the prisoner had made. One witness testified that, "on the morning the deceased was found, several persons took a boat, went up the river, and looked at the bank. Found that a boat had landed right off against where they found the body. The bank looked like some one had slipped in. Saw two tracks made by some foot, measuring 8 or 9 shoe. Sole of left shoe was cut and left there, and there was an impression where the man got up and got in a boat. Tracks went up to where the body was found, almost straight from where the boat landed. The witness got into a boat, and saw a boat, which in the morning had been a little down the river, on the opposite side of the river. Went across and landed, and saw tracks where a man had got out. A paddle was in the sunken boat. A chain was thrown around the cypress knee, but not fastened. Tracks on each side of the river were the same, sometimes walking and other times running. Followed the tracks up to the fields." The witness described the course of the tracks. One witness testified that he was with the prisoner in the woods some time before the homicide. The prisoner went to the house and got a gun and shot a squirrel, and hid the squirrel under bushes. Asked him why he did that. He said that Ed. Cox was as damned a rascal as Furney Simmons, the deceased, and that he would be out there directly. Said that Simmons would come into the woods and get after him for shooting. Said that he wished F. G. Simmons would run on him one time, and he would give him his dose and leave him there. Glen Simmons was the son of the deceased. This was in 1901. There was testimony to the effect that the prisoner had bought shells about two weeks before the homicide. They had No. 4 shot in them. There was evidence of some conversation between the prisoner and other persons in regard to hunting on posted land, and that the land of the deceased had been posted. The prisoner said frequently that he was going to hunt upon the land of the deceased. If he had to kill him. One witness swore that he saw the prisoner about sunrise on the day of the homicide; that he said he was going towards Quaker Bridge, and down by the side of the river, and kill some squirrels. There was much other evidence of the same character, to which no exception was made. The prisoner was carried to the jail of Craven county. When brought back to Jones county in custody of the sheriff, he got off the train, and saw a big crowd of colored "camp-meeting" people, and seemed to be scared. About halfway between Core Creek, where he left the train, and Trenton, he made a statement. No one besides the sheriff, Will Barker, and the witness were with him. The prisoner said, "Do not let them hurt me." Sheriff Taylor said, "No one shall hurt you;" said that he would sit beside the prisoner, and, if they shot, they would hit both. The witness Brogden asked the prisoner how it was. He said he was coming up the river, and Mr. Simmons beckoned to him to come across the river. He said when he got up to the bank the deceased told him to stop; that he was close enough. The deceased said that he was tired of these negroes and white people hunting on his land, and that he was going to shoot him. The deceased threw up his gun to shoot him, and that he (the prisoner) began to "holler"; that the deceased took his gun down to cock it, and he shot him; that he then went across the river. The witness then asked him if the tracks found were his, and he said, "No;" that he was in the boat on the river when he shot the deceased, and the deceased was on the bank; that he was coming up the river. To all of this the prisoner objected, and excepted to its admission. This witness further testified that he went to where the body was found; that the banks were about six feet high, and the bushes were thick, and could not be seen by one on the river; would have to be on the bank. He saw where the boat had landed. Saw the track, which looked like a man had jumped downhill and slid. Did not see any tracks above there on the hill. The body was in the woods when he got there. No shots in the arm. Butt of the gun was towards the river. If the deceased was pointing the gun towards the prisoner, the muzzle would have fallen toward the river. We find no error in his honor's ruling in admitting this testimony. No threats were made. There is no suggestion that the crowd of people made any demonstration or did anything to put the prisoner in fear.

The prisoner objected to testimony in regard to the tracks, because no comparisons were made, and no similarity of tracks shown, other than that they were made by an 8 or 9 shoe. It is well settled that evidence in regard to tracks is of little value, unless it is shown that the person charged with the crime made tracks at the time similar to those found at or near the place of the crime. They are competent, however, in connection with other testimony, and entitled to such weight as the jury may give them.

The prisoner excepted because his honor allowed the state's counsel to argue at length that the prisoner waylaid the deceased, whereas there was no evidence to support his argument. We are of the opinion that there was no error in that respect. We find no exceptions to his honor's charge in the record. We have carefully examined the testimony and the entire record, and find no error therein. The question as to the prisoner's guilt depended entirely upon the finding of the jury as to the truth of the testimony, and the conclusions to be drawn therefrom.

Upon a careful consideration of the entire record, we think there is no error.

SHEPHERD'S POINT LAND CO. v. ATLANTIC HOTEL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 16, 1904.)

NAVIGABLE WATERS — RIPARIAN OWNERS — GRANT—CONSTRUCTION—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. Code 1883, § 2751 (Pub. Laws 1854-55, p. 45, c. 21), provides that lands covered by navigable waters shall be subject to entry by riparian proprietors for the purpose of erecting wharves on the side of deep waters next to their lands. The Supreme Court decided that a grant by the state to persons as "owners and riparian proprietors" of a lot in a harbor, in a navigable arm of the sea in front of their lands, from high-water mark on the shores to the deep water, conveyed, under the statute, only an easement, which ran with the land, for the particular purpose of erecting wharves. Held that, the decision being but a construction of the contract, it cannot be contended that it violates U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10, providing that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of a contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Carteret County; Moore, Judge.

Action by the Shepherd's Point Land Company against the Atlantic Hotel. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lindsay Patterson and W. W. Clark, for appellant. Simmons & Ward and O. L. Abernethy, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. When this cause was called for trial at the October term of the superior court of Carteret, pursuant to the judgment of this court rendered at the February term, 1903 (44 S. E. 39, 61 L. R. A. 937), the plaintiff company obtained leave of court, and, pursuant thereto, amended its complaint, alleging: "That the decision of the Supreme Court of North Carolina rendered in this cause at February term, 1903, impairs the obligation of the contract entered into between the state of North Carolina and its grantees, John M. Morehead and W. H. Arendell, in the grant from the state to said Morehead and Arendell, of date May 24, 1856, and the obligation of the contract entered into between said grantees and the plaintiff by their deed to the plaintiff, of date July 2, 1857. That said decision of the Supreme Court is violative of the provisions of section 10, art. 1, of the Constitution of the United States." The defendants, by way of answer, denied the averment contained in the amendment to the complaint. The parties thereupon entered into a written agreement of record that the court should determine the rights of the parties, and direct the jury to answer the issues upon the same evidence, oral and documentary, set out in the case on appeal in this cause upon the trial before Judge Brown. It was further admitted by defendant that the conveyances introduced by the plaintiff cover lot No. 1 in the plot, and that defendant obtained title thereto through intermediate conveyances from the plaintiff. His honor instructed the jury to answer the issues as set out in the record, and rendered judgment against the plaintiff, to which exception was duly entered, and appeal taken to this court.

The plaintiff insists that the grant of May 24, 1856, was a contract between the state and the grantees, and for this contention relies on the case of Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 88, 3 L. Ed. 162. There can be no doubt, we think, that this is true. This court, in the decision of this cause, certainly did not question it. Conceding the truth of the proposition, we endeavored to ascertain and declare the rights of the grantees under the grant. We stated the question presented thus: "A correct decision of this case involves an inquiry as to the extent to which the state has parted with the title to the land described in the grant under which the plaintiff claims, and what effect shall be given to the words, 'for the purpose of erecting wharves on the side of the deep waters next to their lands.'" The conclusion to which we arrived, after a careful consideration of the authorities, and upon "the reason of the thing," is thus stated: "We are of the opinion that the grant to Morehead and Arendell of square 83 operated to give them an exclusive right or easement therein as riparian owners and proprietors to erect wharves, etc.; that, when they ceased to be the owners of the land by conveyance to the Shepherd's Point Land Company, such easement passed as appurtenant thereto, and that it has passed by the several conveyances of the land as appurtenant to lot No. 1; that such easement passed to the defendant company, and the plaintiff has no such title to the soil under the navigable waters as entitles it to maintain this action." That we may determine whether a statute or decision of a court violates the obligation of a contract, we must first determine what are the relative contractual rights and obligations under the contract. This we have endeavored to do. If we have arrived at a correct conclusion in that respect, it is difficult to perceive how it can be said that we have violated the obligation of the contract. The proposition advanced by the plaintiff assumes that its construction of the contract is correct, and from this assumption concludes that the obligation of the contract has been violated. The assumed premises constitutes the very question to be decided. This process of reasoning would always, when the rights of parties to a contract are controverted, place the court in the dilemma of violating the contract clause of the federal Constitution. We simply construed the contract in the light of the statute. Section 2751, Code 1883. For the reasons set forth in the opinion filed in this cause, and reported in 132 N. C. 517, 44 S. E. 89, 61 L. R. A. 937, we find that there is not error in the judgment of the superior court. Let this be certified to the superior court of Carteret county.

No error.

HARGETT v. BELL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 16, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—VIOLATION OF LOCAL OPTION LAW—VALIDITY OF LICENSE—INJUNCTION—QUO WARRANTO—PROPRIETY OF REMEDY.

1. The question whether a liquor dealer has violated the local option law, involving the validity of a license issued to him, cannot be tested by injunction, but only by a criminal proceeding, in which the right of trial by jury guaranteed by Const. art. 1, § 13, can be accorded defendant.

2. A license to keep a dramshop is neither a "franchise," nor an "office," nor "letters patent," which, under Code 1883, §§ 607, 2788, can be tested or vacated by quo warranto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Onslow County; Ferguson, Judge.

Suit by the state, on the relation of F. W. Hargett, against J. F. Bell. From an order dissolving a restraining order, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed, and action dismissed.

Frank Thompson, A. D. Ward, and Busbee & Busbee, for appellant. W. D. McIver and E. M. Koonce, for appellee.

OLARK, O. J. This is an action in the nature of a quo warranto, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from further selling spirituous liquors in the town of Jacksonville, alleging that an election was held for said town, under the provisions of chapter 233, p. 288, Laws 1903, on 10th December, 1903, whereat the majority of qualified voters cast their ballots "Against Saloons," and the result of said election was duly canvassed and declared accordingly; that after said election there was, notwithstanding, a license issued by both the county and town commissioners to defendant to sell liquor from 1st January, 1904, to 1st July, 1904.

The sole question is as to the validity of this license which the relator claims to be void. That matter can properly be determined, as to defendant, only by a criminal prosecution. When the license is set up as a defense, the court will pass upon its validity. The defendant, if he is selling liquor without a valid license, is entitled to a trial by jury, and cannot be deprived of it by a proceeding for contempt for violation of an injunction commanding him not to commit the crime. An injunction was held invalid to test the validity of a town ordinance in Paul v. Washington (at this term) 47 S. E. 703; Scott v. Smith, 121 N. C. 94, 28 S. E. 64; Wardens v. Washington, 109 N. C. 21, 13 S. E. 700; Cohen v. Commissioners, 77 N. C. 2, in which Reade, J., says: "We are aware of no principle or precedent for the interposition of a court of equity in such cases."

There is no equitable jurisdiction to enjoin the commission of crime. 1 High, Inj. (3d Ed.) § 20. The court of equity cannot enjoin the judge and solicitor from the enforcement of the criminal law, and an adjudication between the parties to this action would be a vain thing, for the solicitor could notwithstanding proceed in the criminal action, in which the validity of the alleged license must still be determined. On this ground, injunction against an alleged illegal sale of liquor was denied. Atty. Gen. v. Schweickhardt, 109 Mo. 515, 19 S. W. 47. In Patterson v. Hubbs, 65 N. C. 119, Pearson, C. J., says that an injunction is "confined to cases where some private right is a subject of controversy." As is above said, if an injunction to prevent the commission of a crime could issue, the violation of the order—the crime—could be punished by proceedings for contempt by the judge without a jury, but the Constitution guaranties to one charged with crime the right of trial by jury. Article 1, § 13. The method here attempted, if sustained, would be "government by injunction."

Nor are we prepared to say that "a license to keep a dramshop comes within the definition of a franchise." People v. Matthews, 53 Ill. App. 805 and Railroad v. People, 73 Ill. 541, are directly in point, and hold that such license is not a franchise. Such business is not an office, so that the defendant's right to it shall be tested by a quo warranto under Code 1883, § 607; nor is the license "letters patent," to be vacated by a quo warranto under Id., § 2788.

By proper proceedings the declaration of the result of the election might be examined into, but the complaint does not impeach its validity, and, on the contrary, asserts it. Besides, such action would not be brought against this defendant.

The court below properly dissolved the restraining order, and, there being no cause of action stated, the court here will, ex mero, dismiss the action. Action dismissed.

WALKER, J., concurs only in result.

DUVAL v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 8, 1904.)

RAILROADS — CROSSING ACCIDENT — NEGLIGENCE — EXCESSIVE SPEED — VIOLATION OF CONTRACT — IMPUTABLE NEGLIGENCE.

1. On the question of negligent speed of a train which collided with a team at a crossing in a city, evidence that the speed was in excess of that provided by a contract of the railroad company with the city, under which it obtained the grant of its right of way, is admissible, equally with the violation of an ordinance.

2. The negligence of one with whom plaintiff was riding as a guest in a buggy struck by defendant's train is not imputable to plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Jones County; Moore, Judge.

Action by Della Duval against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

D. L. Ward and M. De W. Stevenson, for appellant. Simmons & Ward and N. J. Rouse, for appellee.

DOUGLAS, J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries. The jury found that the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of the defendant, and that she contributed to her injury by her own negligence. There are but two exceptions that we think it necessary to pass upon in this appeal, both to the charge of the court.

Among other things, the court charged as follows: "The plaintiff introduced a contract wherein it is provided that East Carolina Land & Railway Company shall not run its locomotive through the streets of New Bern at a speed greater than three miles an hour; that the whistle shall be sounded before entering upon said street, and the bell upon the engine tolled while passing through the streets, etc. And it is admitted that the defendant has succeeded to the rights and liabilities of the East Carolina Land & Lumber Company. The court charges you that this is a contract between the city and the defendant company, and that there is no evidence that its provisions have been enacted into an ordinance by the city, and the jury cannot consider the provisions of the same as bearing upon the question of the negligence of the defendant." In this we think there was error. The only object the city could have had in limiting the rate of speed at which a train was permitted to run through its streets was the protection of the traveling public. It was similar to an ordinance in purpose and legal effect, at least in civil actions. We do not feel compelled in this case to go to the extent of saying that the violation of such a provision in a contract gives rise to a cause of action; but we hold that, equally with the violation of an ordinance, it is evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant. If the defendant obtained the grant of its right of way by virtue of such a contract, it has no right to complain at the reasonable enforcement of its conditions and limitations. Gorrell v. Water Supply Co., 124 N. C. 328, 32 S. E. 720, 46 L. R. A. 513, 70 Am. St. Rep. 598.

The court further charged the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence, by the greater weight or preponderance thereof, that the plaintiff was riding in a buggy driven and controlled by her father, that the plaintiff's father was negligent in approaching the crossing, and that such negligence contributed to the injury of which the plaintiff complains as a proximate cause thereof, then such negligence of the plaintiff's father is imputable to the plaintiff as her own negligence." This also was error. Imputable negligence, or "identification," as it is sometimes called from analogy to the Roman law, has never been recognized in this state, and has received but scant recognition in any part of this country. The question was directly presented and expressly decided in Crampton v. Ivie, 126 N. C. 894, 36 S. E. 351, in which this court says: "We may regard it as settled law that the negligence of a driver of a public conveyance is not imputable to a passenger therein, unless the passenger has assumed such control and direction of said vehicle as to be considered as practically in exclusive possession thereof. In other words, the possession of the passenger must be such as to supersede for the time being the possession of the owner, to the extent of making the driver the temporary servant of the passenger."

In the case at bar it appears that the plaintiff was not traveling in a public conveyance, but in a buggy driven by her father. We will assume that she was not a passenger for hire, but was riding in her father's buggy as his guest. We do not think this makes any difference, either in principal or in legal liability. She was certainly not in exclusive control of the vehicle, nor could her father be considered in any sense as her servant. We are aware that in a few instances it has been held that, while contributory negligence cannot be imputed to one riding in a hired vehicle, it may be imputed to him if he is a mere guest. The overwhelming weight of authority is against any such distinction, and, in common with nearly all the courts of final jurisdiction, we are utterly unable to see any reasonable basis for such a conclusion.

The only ground for the doctrine of imputable negligence in any of its phases is the assumed identity of the passenger and driver, arising out of an implied agency. It is contended, as he selected his own driver, he made him his agent, not only for the general purposes of his employment, but for all possible contingencies that might happen. Under this doctrine it would seem that if the driver broke the passenger's neck he would be acting within the scope of his agency. This may be so, but it does not seem so to us. Of course, if the passenger were injured through the negligence of the driver alone, he must look alone to him or to his master for his recovery; but if he is injured through the concurring negligence of the driver and some one else, he may sue either. This is equally true whether the plaintiff is a passenger for hire or a mere guest. We see no reason why the latter should be placed at any legal disadvantage. In fact, it would seem that, if there were any difference, the passenger for hire, having the legal right to the services of his driver, would be in a position to exercise a greater degree of control than one whose presence was merely permissive. An examination of the origin, growth, and decadence of the doctrine seems to us to show the correctness of our conclusions, aside even from the weight of authority.

The doctrine that the negligence of driver was imputable to the passenger is considered to have originated in the English case of Thorogood v. Bryan, decided in 1849, and reported in 8 C. B. 115. The action was brought against the owner of an omnibus by which the deceased was run over and killed. The omnibus in which he had been carried had set him down in the middle of the road instead of drawing up to the curb, and before he could get out of the way he was run over by the defendant's omnibus, which was coming along at too rapid a pace to be stopped in time to prevent the injury. The court directed the jury that, "If they were of opinion that want of care on the part of the driver of Barber's omnibus in not drawing up to the curb to put the deceased down, or any want of care on the part of the deceased himself, had been conducive to the injury, in either of those cases, notwithstanding the defendant, by her servant, had been guilty of negligence, their verdict must be for the defendant." This case, after being much criticised, was expressly overruled in 1888 by the House of Lords in the case of The Bernina, 13 App. Cas. 1, in which opinions were delivered by Lords Herschell, Bramwell, and Watson.

Among other things in his opinion, Lord Herschell says: "In support of the proposition that this establishes a defense, they rely upon the case of Thorogood v. Bryan (1), which undoubtedly does support their contention. This case was decided as long ago as 1849, and has been followed in some other cases; but though it was early subjected to adverse criticism, it has never come for revision before a court of appeals until the present occasion. * * * It is necessary to examine carefully the reasoning by which this conclusion was arrived at. Coltman, J., said: 'It appears to me that, having trusted the party by selecting the particular conveyance, the plaintiff has so far identified himself with the owner and her servants that if any injury results from their negligence he must be considered a party to it. In other words, the passenger is so far identified with the carriage in which he is traveling that want of care of the driver will be a defense of the driver of the carriage which directly caused the injury.' Maule and Vaughan Williams, JJ., also dwelt upon this view of the identification of the passenger with the driver of the vehicle in which he is being carried. The former thus expresses himself: 'I incline to think that, for this purpose, the deceased must be considered as identified with the driver of the omnibus in which he voluntarily became a passenger, and that the negligence of the driver was the negligence of the deceased.' Vaughan Williams, J., said: 'I think the passenger must, for this purpose, be considered as identified with the person having the management of the omnibus he was conveyed by.' With the utmost respect for these eminent judges, I must say that I am unable to comprehend this doctrine of identification upon which they lay so much stress. In what sense is the passenger by a public stagecoach, because he avails himself of the accommodation afforded by it, identified with the driver? The learned judges manifestly do not mean to suggest (though some of the language used would seem to bear that construction) that the passenger is so far identified with the driver that the negligence of the latter would render the former liable to third persons injured by it. I presume that they did not even mean that the identification is so complete as to prevent the passenger from recovering against the driver's master, though, if 'negligence of the owner's servants is to be considered negligence of the passenger,' or if he 'must be considered a party' to their negligence, it is not easy to see why it should not be a bar to such an action. In short, so far as I can see, the identification appears to be effective only to the extent of enabling another person whose servants have been guilty of negligence to defend himself by the allegation of contributory negligence on the part of the person injured. But the very question that had to be determined was whether the contributory negligence of the driver of the vehicle was a defense as against the passenger when suing another wrongdoer. To say that it is a defense because the passenger is identified with the driver appears to beg the question, when it is not suggested that this identification results from any recognized principle of law, or has any other effect than to furnish that defense, the validity of which was the very point in issue. Two persons may no doubt be so bound together by the legal relation in which they stand to each other that the acts of one may be regarded by the law as the acts of the other. But the relation between the passenger in a public vehicle, and the driver of it, certainly is not such as to fall within any of the recognized categories in which the act of one man is treated in law as the act of another. I pass now to the other reasons given for the judgment in Thorogood v. Bryan. Maule, J., says: 'On the part of the plaintiff it is suggested that a passenger in a public conveyance has no control over the driver. But I think that cannot with propriety be said. He selects the conveyance. He enters into a contract with the owner, whom by his servant, the driver, he employs to drive him. If he is dissatisfied with the mode of conveyance, he is not obliged to avail himself of it. * * * But, as regards the present plaintiff, he is not altogether without fault; he chose his own conveyance, and must take the consequences of any default on the part of the driver whom he thought fit to trust.' I confess I cannot concur in this reasoning. I do not think it well founded either in law or in fact. What kind of control has the passenger over the driver which would make it reasonable to hold the former affected by the negligence of the latter? And is it any more reasonable to hold him so affected because he chose the mode of conveyance, that is to say, drove in an omnibus rather than walked, or took the first omnibus that passed him, instead of waiting for another? And when it is attempted to apply this reasoning to passengers traveling in steamships or on railways, the unreasonableness of such doctrine is even more glaring. The only other reason given is contained in the judgment of Creswell, J., in these words: 'If the driver of the omnibus the deceased was in had, by his negligence or want of due care and skill, contributed to an injury from a collision, his master clearly could maintain no action. And I must confess I see no reason why a passenger who employs the driver to convey him stands in any better position.' Surely, with deference, the reason for the difference lies on the very surface. If the master in such a case could maintain no action, it is because there existed between him and the driver the relation of master and servant. It is clear that, if his driver's negligence alone had caused the collision, he would have been liable to an action for the injury resulting from it to third parties. The learned judge would, I imagine, in that case have seen a reason why a passenger in the omnibus stood in a better position than the master of the driver. I have now dealt with all the reasons on which the judgment in Thorogood v. Bryan was founded, and I entirely agree with the learned judges in the court below in thinking them inconclusive and unsatisfactory."

In his opinion Lord Watson says: "It humbly appears to me that the identification upon which the decision in Thorogood v. Bryan is based has no foundation in fact. I am of opinion that there is no relation constituted between the driver of an omnibus and its ordinary passengers which can justify the inference that they are identified to any extent whatever with his negligence. He is the servant of the owner, not their servant; he does not look to them for orders, and they have no right to interfere with his conduct of the vehicle, except, perhaps, the right of remonstrance when he is doing, or threatens to do, something that is wrong and inconsistent with their safety. Practically they have no greater measure of control over his actions than the passenger in a railway train has over the conduct of the engine driver."

We have quoted at length from this case because it is the distinct and final repudiation of the doctrine by the highest judicial tribunal in England, where it originated, as well as from the further fact that the reasoning upon which the learned and able opinions are founded apply equally to cases where the plaintiff is a mere guest. The same may be said of Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 386, 6 Sup. Ct. 391, 29 L. Ed. 652, which is cited with approval by Lord Herschell in The Bernina. Hackett, the plaintiff, was injured by the collision of a railroad train with the carriage in which he was riding. The evidence tended to show that the accident was the result of the concurring negligence of the managers of the train and of the driver of the carriage—of the managers of the train in not giving the usual signals of its approach by ringing a bell and blowing a whistle, and in not having a flagman on duty; and of the driver of the carriage in turning the horses upon the track without proper precautions to ascertain whether the train was coming. The defense was contributory negligence in driving on the track, the defendant contending that the driver was thereby negligent, and that his negligence was to be imputed to the plaintiff. The court left the question of the negligence of the parties in charge of the train and of the driver of the carriage to the jury, and no exception was taken to its instructions on this head. But with reference to the alleged imputed negligence of the plaintiff, assuming that the driver was negligent, the court instructed them that unless the plaintiff interfered with the driver and controlled the manner of his driving, his negligence could not be imputed to the plaintiff. Upon appeal the judgment was affirmed. Justice Field, speaking for a unanimous court, says on page 374, 116 U. S., and page 394, 6 Sup. Ct., 29 L. Ed. 652: "Cases cited from the English courts, as we have seen, and numerous others decided in the courts of this country, show that the relation of master and servant does not exist between the passenger and the driver, or between the passenger and the owner. In the absence of this relation, the imputation of their negligence to the passenger, where no fault of omission or commission is chargeable to him, is against all legal rules. If their negligence could be imputed to him, it would render him, equally with them, responsible to third parties thereby injured, and would also preclude him from maintaining an action against the owner for injuries received by reason of it. But neither of these conclusions can be maintained; neither has the support of any adjudged cases entitled to consideration. The truth is, the decision in Thorogood v. Bryan rests upon indefensible ground. The identification of the passenger with the negligent driver or the owner, without his personal co-operation or encouragement, is a gratuitous assumption. There is no such identity. The parties are not in the same position. The owner of a public conveyance is a carrier, and the driver or the person managing it is his servant. Neither of them is the servant of the passenger, and his asserted identity with them is contradicted by the daily experience of the world." Again the court says, on page 379, 116 U. S., and page 397, 6 Sup. Ct., 29 L. Ed. 652: "There is no distinction in principle, whether the passengers be on a public conveyance, like a railroad train or an omnibus, or be on a hack, hired from a public stand in the street, for a drive. Those on a hack do not become responsible for the negligence of the driver if they exercise no control over him further than to indicate the route they wish to travel or the places to which they wish to go. If he is their agent, so that his negligence can be imputed to them, to prevent their recovery against a third party he must be their agent in all respects, so far as the management of the carriage is concerned, and responsibility to third parties would attach to them for injuries caused by his negligence in the course of his employment. But, as we have already said, responsibility cannot, within any recognized rules of law, be fastened upon one who has in no way interfered with and controlled in the matter causing the injury. From the simple fact of hiring the carriage or riding in it no such liability can arise. The party hiring or riding must in some way have co-operated in producing the injury complained of before he incurs any liability for it. 'If the law were otherwise,' as said by Mr. Justice Depue in his elaborate opinion in the latest case in New Jersey, 'not only the hirer of the coach, but also all the passengers in it, would be under a constraint to mount the box and superintend the conduct of the driver in the management and control of his team, or be put for remedy exclusively to an action against the irresponsible driver or equally irresponsible owner of a coach, taken, it may be, from a coach stand, for the consequences of an injury which was the product of the co-operating wrongful acts of the driver and of a third person, and that, too, though the passengers were ignorant of the character of the driver, and of the responsibility of the owner of the team, and strangers to the route over which they were to be carried.'"

The court further cites with approval the case of Dyer v. Ry., 71 N. Y. 223, in which the facts are very similar to those in the case at bar, in the following words: "The plaintiff was injured while crossing the defendant's railroad track on a public thoroughfare. He was riding in a wagon by the permission and invitation of the owner of the horses and wagon. At that time a train standing south of certain buildings, which prevented its being seen, had started to back over the crossing, without giving the driver of the wagon any warning of its approach. The horses, becoming frightened by the blowing off of steam from engines in the vicinity, became unmanageable, and the plaintiff was thrown or jumped from the wagon, and was injured by the train, which was backing. It was held that no relation of principal and agent arose between the driver of the wagon and the plaintiff, and, although he traveled voluntarily, he was not chargeable with negligence, and there was no claim that the driver was not competent to control and manage the horses."

In Transfer Co. v. Kelly, 36 Ohio St. 86, 38 Am. Rep. 558, the plaintiff below (Kelly) was injured while riding on a street car in collision with a car of the Transfer Company, and was permitted to recover, although it appeared that the servants of both companies were negligent. The Chief Justice, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It seems to us, therefore, that the negligence of the company or of its servants should not be imputed to the passenger, where such negligence contributes to his injury jointly with the negligence of a third party, any more than it should be so imputed where the negligence of the company or its servants was the sole cause of the injury." "Indeed," the Chief Justice added, "it seems as incredible to my mind that the right of a passenger to redress against a stranger for an injury, caused directly and proximately by the latter's negligence, should be denied on the ground that the negligence of his carrier contributed to his injury, he being without fault himself, as it would be to hold such passenger responsible for the negligence of his carrier whereby an injury was inflicted upon a stranger. And of the last proposition, it is enough to say that it is simply absurd."

In Robinson v. Railroad, 66 N. Y. 11, 23 Am. Rep. 1, Church, C. J., a distinguished jurist, speaking for an able court, says: "It is therefore the case of a gratuitous ride by a female upon the invitation of the owner of a horse and carriage. The plaintiff had no control of the vehicle, nor of the driver in its management. It is not claimed but that Conlon was an able-bodied, competent person to manage the establishment, nor that he was intoxicated or in any way unfit to have charge of it. Upon what principle is it that his negligence is imputable to the plaintiff? It is conceded that, if by his negligence he had injured a third person, she would not be liable. She was not responsible for his acts, and had no right and no power to control them. True, she had consented to ride with him, but as he was in every respect competent and suitable, she was not negligent in doing so. Can she be held, by consenting to ride with him, to guaranty his perfect care and diligence? There was no necessity for riding with him. It was a voluntary act on the part of the plaintiff, but it was not an unlawful or negligent act. She was injured by the negligence of a third person, and was free from negligence herself, and I am unable to perceive any reason for imputing Conlon's negligence to her." Again, the court says, on page 13, 66 N. Y., 23 Am. Rep. 1: "I am unable to find any legal principle upon which to impute to the plaintiff the negligence of the driver. The whole argument on behalf of the appellants on this point is contained in the following paragraph from the brief of its counsel: 'So, if the plaintiff had proceeded on this journey upon the invitation of Conlon for the like purpose, she having voluntarily intrusted her safety to his care and prudence, and thus exposed herself to the risk of injury arising from his negligence or want of skill, she would be precluded from recovering, if he thereby contributed to her injury.' If this argument is sound, why should it not apply in all cases to public conveyances, as well as private? The acceptance of an invitation to ride creates no more responsibility for the acts of the driver than the riding in a stage-coach or even a train of cars, providing there was no negligence on account of the character or condition of the driver, or the safety of the vehicle, or otherwise. It is no excuse for the negligence of the defendant that another person's negligence contributed to the injury, for whose acts the plaintiff was not responsible. The rule of contributory negligence is very strict in this state, and should not be extended, nor should the rule of imputable negligence be extended to new cases, where the reason for its adoption is not apparent."

In Railway Co. v. Lapsley, 51 Fed. 174, 2 C. C. A. 149, 16 L. R. A. 800, Sanborn, C. J., speaking for the court, says: "But where the owner and driver of a team and carriage invites another to ride in his carriage, no relation of principal and agent is created; no relation of master and servant is established: the owner and driver of the team are not controlled by, and are not in any sense the agents of, the invited guest; and to hold him responsible for the negligence of the former, by whose permission alone he rides, is unauthorized by the law and repugnant to reason. That he who suffers injury from another's negligence may recover compensation of the wrongdoer is a principle founded in natural justice and sustained by every precedent. That where the negligence of the person injured has contributed to the injury he cannot so recover, because it is impracticable, in the administration of justice, to divide and apportion the compensation in proportion to the varying degrees of concurring negligence, is equally well settled. But that he whose wrongful act or omission has caused the injury and damage, and who, upon every consideration of justice and reason, ought to make compensation for it, shall be permitted to escape because a third person, over whom the injured person had no control, and whose only relation to him was that of a guest to his host, has been guilty of negligence that contributed to the injury, is neither just nor reasonable. According to the verdict of this jury, a loss of $1,000 was entailed upon the decedent by the negligence of this defendant. The defendant's wrongful omission was the proximate cause of this damage. The decedent in no way caused or contributed, by any act or omission of hers, to this injury. She had no control over her brother, the driver, who may have contributed, by his carelessness, to the damage. Upon what principle, now, can it be justly said that the decedent must bear all this loss, when she neither caused, was responsible for, nor could have prevented it, because this third person assisted to cause the injury, the proximate cause of which was the wrongful act of the defendant company? If there exists in the realms of jurisprudence any sound principle upon which so unrighteous a punishment of the innocent and the discharge of the guilty may be based, we have been unable to discover it."

In Dean v. Railway, 129 Pa. 514, Clark, J., delivering the opinion of the court, says, on page 524, 18 Atl. 720, 6 L. R. A. 143, 15 Am. St. Rep. 733: "Quotations might be given, from many cases in the different states, illustrating the very firm and emphatic manner in which the doctrine of this celebrated case has been denied. The authorities in England and the great current of authorities of this country are against it. Nor can I see why, upon any rule of public policy, a party injured by the concurrent and contributory negligence of two persons, one of them, his common carrier, should be held, and the other released from liability. As to this, I speak only for myself. In my opinion, there is no principle consonant with common sense, common honesty, or public policy which should hold one not guilty of any negligence, either of omission or commission, for the negligence of another imputed to him under such circumstances. Although, in Carlisle v. Brisbane [113 Pa. 544, 6 Atl. 372], I may appear to have accepted that doctrine, I mean merely to state that the ground upon which this court had rested that rule was better than that taken by the English courts. But if this were not so, Fields was not a common carrier. Dean was riding in the wagon merely by invitation of Field, who happened to be going in the direction of Dean's home with a load of provisions. He was carried without compensation, merely as an act of kindness on the part of Fields, who had sole control of the team and of the wagon. The case is similar in this respect to Carlisle v. Brisbane, supra, and to the case of Follman v. City of Mankato [Minn.] 29 N. W. 317, 59 Am. Rep. 340. We are clearly of opinion that, if Dean himself was guilty of no negligence, the negligence of Fields cannot be imputed to him."

This case was expressly approved in Bunting v. Hogsett, 139 Pa. 363, 21 Atl. 31, 33, 34, 12 L. R. A. 268, 23 Am. St. Rep. 192, where the court uses the following language, on page 376, 139 Pa., page 33, 21 Atl., 12 L. R. A. 268, 23 Am. St. Rep. 192: "But Thorogood v. Bryan, supra, which is the leading case, has been recently overruled in the English Court of Appeals. The Bernine (Mills v. Armstrong) 12 Prob. & D. 58. And the doctrine, although formerly accepted in many of the states, is now generally disapproved. The authorities in England and the great current of authority in this country are against it. The cases are collected in Dean v. Railroad, supra. They are numerous, and it is unnecessary to refer to them here. What was there said was given as an individual opinion merely, and was to some extent, perhaps, obiter dictum; but we are now unanimously of opinion that the views there expressed, somewhat in advance, contain the proper exposition of the law. The identification of the passenger with the negligent driver, or the owner, or with the carrier, as the case may be, without his co-operation or encouragement, is a gratuitous assumption. As Mr. Justice Field said, in Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 6 Sup. Ct. 391, 29 L. Ed. 652: "There is no such identity. The parties are not in the same position. The owner of a public conveyance is a carrier, and the driver or the person managing it is his servant. Neither of them is the servant of the passenger, and his asserted identity with them is contradicted by the daily experience of the world." The rationale of the rule of Thorogood v. Bryan is expressly disavowed in our own case of Lockhart v. Litchenthaler, and it is now rejected as untenable and wholly indefensible. Nor is there any rule or principle of public policy which will support such a doctrine. If a person is injured by the concurrent and contributory negligence of two persons, one of them being at the time the common carrier of his person, there is no reason, founded in public policy or otherwise, which should release one of them and hold the other. It is true, the carrier may be subjected to a higher degree of care than his co-tortfeasor, but this affords no reason why either or both of them should not be held to that degree of care, respectively, which the law imposes upon them, and to be answerable in damages accordingly. The general rule undoubtedly is, if a person suffers injury from the joint negligence of two parties, and both are negligent in a manner which contributes to the injury, they are liable jointly and severally, and it would seem, in principle, to be a matter of no consequence that one of them is a common carrier. Neither the comparative degrees of care required, nor the comparative degrees of culpability established, can affect the liability of either."

It is unnecessary, as well as impracticable, to cite all the other cases we have examined on this subject, and so we will confine ourselves to a few in which the precise question under consideration is directly presented. That one who is injured by the joint or con-curring negligence of a private person, with whom he is riding by invitation as a guest or companion, and a third person, is not chargeable with the negligence of the driver, is held in the following cases: Masterson v. N. Y. C. R. Co., 84 N. Y. 247, 38 Am. Rep. 510; Strauss v. Railroad (Sup.) 39 N. Y. Supp. 998; Kessler v. R. Co. (Sup.) 38 N. Y. Supp. 799; Street Ry. Co. v. Powell, 89 Ga. 601, 16 S. E. 118; Leavenworth v. Hatch, 57 Kan. 57, 45 Pac. 65, 57 Am. St. Rep. 309; Cahill v. Railroad, 92 Ky. 345, 18 S. W. 2; Noyes v. Boscawen, 64 N. H. 631, 10 Atl. 690, 10 Am. St. Rep. 410; Ouverson v. Grafton, 5 N. D. 281, 65 N. W. 676; St. Clair R. Co. v. Eadie, 43 Ohio, 91, 1 N. E. 519; Carlisle v. Brisbane, 113 Pa. 544, 6 Atl. 372, 57 Am. Rep. 483; P. W. & B. R. Co. v. Hogeland, 66 Md. 149, 7 Atl. 105, 59 Am. Rep. 159; B. & O. R. Co. v. State, 79 Md. 335, 29 Atl. 518, 47 Am. St. Rep. 415; R. Co. v. Davis, 69 Miss. 444, 13 South. 693; Follman v. Mankato, 35 Minn. 522, 29 N. W. 817, 59 Am. Rep. 340; Com'rs v. Mutchler, 137 Ind. 140, 36 N. E. 534; 2 Jaggard, Torts, § 276, p. 982; Bishop Noncont. Law, § 1070.

The rule is thus stated in 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. 447: "Occupants of Private Conveyances. In the second class of cases there has been, and still is, much conflict among the authorities, but the true principle seems to be that when a person is injured by the negligence of the defendant and the contributory negligence of one with whom the injured person is riding as a guest or companion, such negligence is not imputable to the injured person; while, on the other hand, it may be imputable when the injured person is in a position to exercise authority or control over the driver." Judge Thompson, in his Commentary on the Law of Negligence, vol. 1, § 502, thus lays down the rule: "Negligence of the driver is not imputed to the passenger on a private conveyance riding by invitation. While there are a few untenable decisions to the contrary, nearly all American courts are agreed that the rule under consideration extends so far as to hold that where a person, while riding on a private vehicle by the invitation of the driver or the owner or the custodian of the vehicle, and having no authority or control over the driver, and being under no duty to control his conduct, and having no reason to suspect any want of care, skill, or sobriety on his part, is injured by the concurring negligence of the driver and a third person or corporation, the negligence of the driver is not imputed to him, so as to prevent him from recovering damages from the other tortfeasor."

We cannot better close this discussion than by the following quotation from 1 Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 66, and in doing so we deem it proper to say that, while we fully approve of the legal conclusions arrived at by the distinguished authors, we do not wish to be held entirely responsible for the vigor of their language: "Doctrine of Identification. As already stated, the fact that the injury was caused by the joint negligence of the defendant and a mere stranger is universally admitted to be no defense. But, in the famous case of Thorogood v. Bryan, an English court invented a new application of the old Roman doctrine of identification, and held that a passenger in a public vehicle, though having no control over the driver, must be held to be so identified with the vehicle as to be chargeable with any negligence on the part of its managers which contributed to an injury inflicted upon such passenger by the negligence of a stranger. In former editions, we devoted much space to the refutation of this doctrine of 'identification.' But it is needless to do so any longer, since the entire doctrine has, since our first edition been exploded in every court, beginning with New York and ending with Pennsylvania. It was finally overruled in England a few years ago. The only remnant of this doctrine which remains in sight anywhere is the theory that one who rides in a private conveyance thereby makes the driver his agent, and is thus responsible for the driver's negligence, even though he has absolutely no power or right to control the driver. This extraordinary theory, which did not even occur to the hairsplitting judges in Thorogood v. Bryan, was invented in Wisconsin, and sustained by a process of elaborate reasoning; and this Wisconsin decision, in evident ignorance of all decisions to the contrary, was recently followed, with some similar reasoning, in Montana, and in Nebraska without any reasoning whatever; which last is certainly the best method of reaching a conclusion, directly opposed to common sense and to the decisions of twenty other courts. The notion that one is the 'agent' of another, who has not the smallest right to control or even advise him, is difficult to support by any sensible argument. This theory is universally rejected, except in the three states mentioned, and it must soon be abandoned even there."

The doctrine of imputable negligence, as far as it relates to a child, has been fully discussed and expressly repudiated by this court in Bottoms v. Railroad, 114 N. C. 696, 19 S. E. 730, 25 L. R. A. 784, 41 Am. St. Rep. 799. Even if this phase of the question were now before us, we could add but little to what was there so fully and so ably said.

There must be a new trial.

(124 N. C. 319)

HAUSER et al. v. CRAFT et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 8, 1904.)

WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—LIFE ESTATE—CONTINGENT REMAINDER—RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE—WARRANTIES OF LIFE TENANT—STATUTE.

1. A will provided: "I give unto my granddaughter K. a tract of land called the Elder tract." Then followed bequests of personal property to the same granddaughter. In the same item of the will, after several complete sentences and periods intervening, the item continued: "Also two acres of meadow land out of the River tract, . . . which is to be hers during her natural life only, and should the said K. die without leaving any child or children, then the property which I have given to her to be divided among the rest of my heirs." Held, that K. took a life estate in the Elder tract.

2. A will devising a life estate, which provides that should the devisee thereof "die without leaving any child or children, then the property which I have given to her to be divided among the rest of my heirs," creates a contingent remainder in the children of the life tenant surviving her at her death.

3. Where a devise of property is to the devisee for life, and should the devisee "die without leaving any child or children, then the property which I have given to her to be divided among the rest of my heirs," the rule in Shelley's Case does not apply.

4. Under Code, § 1834, providing that all collateral warranties are abolished, and all warranties made by any tenant for life of real estate descending to any person in remainder shall be void, and declaring that all such warranties shall be deemed covenants only, and bind the covenantor in like manner as other obligations, a warranty of title in fee simple in a deed from a life tenant, whose children were entitled to take the estate on her death under the will creating it, has the effect only of a personal covenant.

5. Adverse possession cannot be predicated of possession of real property by grantees of the life tenant as against the remaindermen during the life of the life tenant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Neal, Judge.

Action by W. H. Hauser and others against N. W. Craft and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is an action for the recovery of real property, which was tried in the court below upon the following case agreed:

(1) Isaiah Coe died some time in 1836, leaving a last will and testament, dated February 5, 1836, in which are these words and figures: "Item 3. I give unto my granddaughter Katherine Scott, a tract of land called the Elder tract, being 166 acres, which adjoins Janus Fletcher. Also one negro woman named Bett and one boy named Lawson, one girl named Alley, and their increase from this time forward. Also one horse, bridle and saddle to be of the value of $100; two cows and calves, five head of sheep, two beds and furniture, a walnut chest or bureau; also two acres of meadow land out of the River Tract, adjoining her grandmother Pierce, with the privilege of a cartway to and from the same, which is to be hers during her natural life only, and should the said Katherine Scott die without leaving any child or children, then the property which I have given to her to be divided among the rest of my heirs."

(2) Katherine Scott was a granddaughter of Isaiah Coe (her mother, a daughter of Isaiah Coe, having died prior to February 5, 1836), and living with her grandfather, and on May 22, 1840, the said Katherine Scott, for and in consideration of $275, deeded to George Newman, in fee simple, the Elder tract, containing 166 acres, more or less, which is the land in dispute, with the following clause of warranty: "The said party of the first part for the consideration aforesaid does hereby covenant and agree to warrant and defend the premises aforesaid to the said party of the second part, his executors, administrators and assigns against the claims and entries of all persons whatsoever, and she further covenants that she is seised of the premises in fee simple and has power to make and convey such an estate by this indenture, and has done the same by these presents."

(3) That Katherine Scott intermarried with Adam Hauser in 1842, and by him had the following children: W. H. Hauser, C. S. Hauser, M. E. Fleming, wife of J. C. Fleming, Louisa Scott, wife of S. W. Scott, and Sarah Chaplin, wife of J. M. Chaplin, who are the plaintiffs in this action.

(4) That subsequent to May 22, 1840, George Newman sold the above described land to W. F. Shore, who in 1874 conveyed said land to the defendants, and the defendants in said action have since their purchase put upon said land valuable improvements.

(5) That the defendants are now in possession of said land, and deny the right of the plaintiffs to recover; that the defendants, and those under whom they claim, have been in possession of said land, under known and visible lines and boundaries, since 1840, as shown in their deeds.

(6) That Katherine Hauser, née Scott, died during the year 1899, and this action was commenced on the 10th April, 1900.

(7) That said Isaiah Coe has descendants now living other than the plaintiffs in this action.

The plaintiffs claim the land as the children of Katherine Hauser, formerly Katherine Scott, under the third item of the will of Isaiah Coe; and their contention is that by a proper construction of that item their mother acquired only a life estate in the land, and at her death, by implication or construction of law, they took a remainder in fee. Their counsel also contended at the bar that, if they did not take under the will as the children of Katherine Hauser, then they took as heirs of Isaiah Coe under the ulterior limitation; and, while they are not all of his heirs, they can recover as tenants in common of their co-heirs the entire estate in the land as against the defendants, who have no share or interest therein. The defendants, on the contrary, insist that by the proper construction of the third item of the will Katherine Scott took a fee contingent upon her dying without leaving children, and, as children born of her marriage with Adam Hauser have survived her, the contingent estate became absolute and indefeasible, and this estate they have acquired by mesne conveyances from her. They also contend that the claim of the plaintiffs, who are heirs of Katherine Hauser, is rebutted by the warranty in their ancestor's deed, which is relied on as a defense in bar of their recovery, and, if not, that it is barred by long-continued adverse possession under the statute of limitations. There was judgment for the plaintiffs, and the defendants excepted and appealed.

J. E. Alexander, A. E. Holton, and Benbow & Hall, for appellants. Glenn, Manly & Hendren, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). We decided at the last term in Whitfield v. Garis, 45 S. E. 904, that when property is given to a person absolutely, and, if he should die without leaving children or heirs of his body, then over, the primary devisee takes a fee, defeasible on his dying without leaving children, and that the children, if he leave any, take no estate as purchasers under the will by implication. If the first taker dies leaving children, and without having disposed of his defeasible estate, the children take from him by descent, and they cannot take it by implication as purchasers, unless that was the intention of the testator expressed in the will or to be clearly inferred therefrom. 1 Underhill on Wills, § 468. We could discover no such intention of the testator in that case. The rule thus stated also applies where the devise is in the first instance to the parent for life, and then over to ulterior devisees, if the parent dies without leaving children. But in the latter case it is said that the law will raise an estate in remainder by implication in favor of surviving children upon slight indication of an intention to that effect, and one reason for the rule is that it would be absurd to assume the testator intended that the death of the first taker, leaving no children, should entitle the devisee, who is to take in remainder or by way of executory devise, while the converse—that is, his death leaving a child—will defeat the limitation over without benefiting either parent or child. 1 Underhill on Wills, § 468, p. 623; Kinsella v. Caffery, 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 154; Ex parte Rogers, 2 Maddox, Ch. (1 Am. Ed.) 576. Whether this be the correct principle or not, it is certainly true that, if it sufficiently appears from the will the testator so intended, the law will raise an estate by implication in favor of the children in such a case, notwithstanding the estate is not expressly limited to them in the will. We must therefore determine in our case whether Katherine Hauser took only a life estate in the Elder tract of land, which is the property in dispute, or an estate in fee, and, if she took only a life estate, whether the plaintiffs took an estate in remainder by implication, or, if not, whether, lastly, they took as heirs of the testator under the ulterior limitation. It is admitted that Katherine Hauser took only a life estate, if the words in the third item, namely, "which is to be hers during her natural life only," should not be confined to the gift of the "meadow land and cartway," but should be extended to the limitation of the Elder tract. The defendants contend that, if the third item of the will is construed as it is punctuated, the qualifying words apply only to the meadow tract and cartway, and not to the Elder tract. That a will is couched in ungrammatical language, and is incorrectly punctuated, are facts of little importance in construing it. The punctuation may, in certain cases, have some effect in ascertaining the true meaning, and it is said to be a guide, though not a very reliable one, to aid us in seeking for the testator's intention; but the latter must always be determined exclusively from the words employed by the testator, viewed in the light afforded by the context. The punctuation, or the lack of it, is not material, and may be omitted or supplied by the court. Commas may be inserted for periods, or vice versa, in order to accomplish the paramount object, which is the ascertainment of the testator's will or meaning. 1 Underhill, supra, § 369. But, while this may be done when necessary to effectuate the intention of the testator, we do not think that the punctuation of the third item of the will evinces a purpose to separate the qualifying clause from that part of the devise which precedes the reference to the meadow land and cartway, and to restrict its operation entirely to the latter. It is evident, from the entire structure of that item of the will, that the testator intended to limit the interest of Katherine Hauser in all the property described in it to a life estate. If he had intended differently, he would in some way have indicated his purpose to give a fee in the property, other than the meadow land and cartway, in more explicit language. There is just as much reason for holding that the restrictive words apply to the Elder tract of land as there is for construing the will so that they may be confined in their operation to the meadow land and cartway.

The relative pronoun "which" must be understood to refer to all that precedes in that item of the will, and especially is this so when the clause which it introduces is placed in immediate connection with the last provision of the item, namely, "and should the said Katherine Scott die without leaving any child or children, then the property which I have given to her to be divided among the rest of my heirs." (Italics ours.) This provision follows the clause, "which is to be hers during her natural life only," and is joined to it by the conjunction "and," which shows that the testator intended that the two should be taken and construed together, and, if this is done, it is perfectly clear that the testator intended to give his granddaughter Katherine Scott a life estate in the Elder tract. The interpretation we have thus placed upon the item seems to us to be the only natural and reasonable one, and, besides, we are utterly unable to see any good reason why the testator should have given his grandchild an estate for life in the two acres of meadow land and the cartway and a fee in the other property. A careful reading of the item shows that his purpose was to make ample provision for this grandchild, who lived with him, and who was dependent upon him, by giving her a farm, with slaves to cultivate it, and other necessary personal property for its better and more convenient enjoyment, and the meadow land, "with the privilege of the cartway to and from it," as a means of ingress and egress, was given as an appurtenance to the larger tract, and as being necessary also for its advantageous enjoyment. It is all one devise and bequest, and the use of periods and capitals was not intended to disassociate the different clauses so as to constitute each one of them as the expression of a separate and distinct gift of the property therein described.

The defendants' counsel contended that, because of the peculiar punctuation and the use of capitals, the restrictive clause applied only to the meadow land and cartway; but, if we consider the method of punctuation as indicating the intention, there is no reason why that clause should not be as well applied to the horse, bridle, and other species of personal property mentioned and described immediately before the meadow land and cartway. They are separated only by semicolons, and the grammatical construction would require the restriction to be extended to them.

In construing wills, as exactly the same language or form of expression is rarely used, each case must, generally speaking, be decided upon its own facts, and the intention of the testator is to be diligently sought for, and when found is to be carried out if not contrary to the law; but the intention must be gathered from the whole will. We can derive little aid from merely technical rules. In this case it appears that at the time the will was executed Katherine Scott was living with her grandfather and was unmarried. It is manifest he intended that in the distribution of his estate she should represent her mother, who was his daughter (which is admitted in the defendants' brief), and doubtless he would have given the property to Katherine in fee, as he did to all his daughters, but for the fact that the latter were married, or had been, and were of sufficient age and experience to manage what he should give them with judgment and discretion. They were practically settled in life. With his grandchild, who must have been the object of his most anxious care and solicitude, it was quite different. He knew full well that she might not, as she did not, attain her majority until long after his demise, and that, inexperienced as she was, she perhaps would not have any one to advise her in the management of her estate. It was for the purpose of providing against ultimate loss by reason of her own improvidence, or that of her husband, if she should marry, that he did what seemed to him best to safeguard what may be called her patrimony, so that she could enjoy the use and income of it during her life, and so that the remainder would be preserved for her children, if she had any. No other reason can be assigned for his making the distinction which he did between her and his daughters. We could not for a moment yield to the suggestion that his affection for her was not as strong as it was for them, and that he wished to discriminate against her. Her peculiar and dependent situation was calculated to arouse in him a very tender and anxious regard for her future condition in life, and, though not abating any of his affectionate interest in her, nor desiring less to see her as well placed as the others, he no doubt felt that, as her future course in life was uncertain, and her ability to prudently manage what she would receive from him was unknown, it was best she should not have the absolute ownership of the property; but, whatever may have been his motive, we are unable to look at this will from any standpoint which does not reveal the clear intention of the testator to give the property, and all of it, to Katherine Scott for life. This conclusion takes the title out of the defendants, but it does not alone entitle the plaintiffs to succeed in this action, because they are suing for the recovery of real property, and, according to the invariable rule, they must recover upon the strength of their own title, and not upon the weakness of the title of their adversaries. The defendants are not required to show that they have any title in the land, but the plaintiffs must show affirmatively that they have a title which is good against the world, or good against the defendants, by estoppel. So that we must go further, and decide whether the children of Katherine, who are the plaintiffs in this action, took an estate in remainder at her death, by implication. There is no express gift to them, and if they took at all it must have been by construction of law. We are clearly of the opinion that they did so take. The limitation is, "should the said Katherine Scott die without leaving any child or children, then the property which I have given to her to be divided among the rest of my heirs." It will be observed that Katherine had only a life estate, and therefore at her death all of her interest ceased and determined. The heirs of the testator could not take unless she died without children, because it is expressly provided by the will that they should take only upon the contingency of her dying without leaving children, and the fact that she died leaving children completely divested the testator's heirs of all right or title in the land. The presumption is that he did not intend to die intestate as to any of his property, and this presumption is strengthened by the very language of the will, which on its face shows that he intended to dispose of all of it. If the estate of Katherine expired at her death, and the heirs cannot take because she left children, who then can take, unless it be the children? White v. Holton, 23 N. J. Law, 330; Theobald on Wills, p. 569. The implication is not only necessary, but irresistible, that in the situation of the parties as now presented to us, and giving to the will of the testator a natural and reasonable construction, it was intended by him that the plaintiffs should be the objects of his bounty, and should take the property in remainder after the death of their mother. In this respect the case is not at all like that of Whitfield v. Garria. There was nothing in the will under construction in that case to raise any such an implication, as the estate was limited to Franklin Whitfield in fee, and besides the presumption was that the testator did not intend to disinherit his own heirs. There were others than the children who could take, and the children could take only by descent from their parent. In the case at bar we must hold either that it was intended the children should take a remainder at the expiration of their mother's life-estate, or that the fee should be in abeyance, or we must disregard the plainly expressed intention and direction of the testator, and hold that he intended that at the death of the tenant for life the estate should go to his heirs. The adoption of either of the last two alternatives would be opposed to every known principle of the law applicable to such cases. We must abide by the rule as established by the authorities we have cited, and give our decision upon this point in favor of the plaintiffs.

It was suggested by counsel at the bar that Katherine Scott, under the rule in Shelley's Case, took an estate tail, which by the statute of 1784 (Code, § 1325) was converted into a fee simple. The rule does not apply to this devise. The words of limitation are not such as bring our case within the principle of that rule, and we do not think it can be shown by any of the authorities to have the slightest bearing upon the question involved. There are no words used which indicate any intention on the part of the testator that Katherine Scott should take an estate of inheritance, either in fee simple or in fee tail, as the only word used is "children," and that word, by all of the authorities, is not sufficient for the purpose of creating such an estate. Moore v. Parker, 34 N. C. 123; Ward v. Jones, 40 N. C. 400; Howell v. Knight, 100 N. C. 254, 6 S. E. 721; Mills v. Thorne, 95 N. C. 362; Starnes v. Hill, 112 N. C. 1, 16 S. E. 1011, 22 L. R. A. 598; Leathers v. Gray, 101 N. C. 162, 7 S. E. 657, 9 Am. St. Rep. 30. The estate of the children could not become absolute and indefeasible until the determination of the life estate, as the remainder was contingent, and this prevented the operation of the rule. Starnes v. Hill, supra. Besides, the application of the rule would defeat the well-defined intention of the testator, and there are not sufficient technical words in the will to override this intention. In such a case the rule can have no place.

Counsel further contended that the plaintiffs, as the children of Katherine Hauser, formerly Katherine Scott, are rebutted by the warranty in her deed under and through which the defendants claim the land. This position is equally untenable. All collateral warranties are abolished; and all warranties made by any tenant for life of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, the same descending or coming to any person in reversion or remainder, shall be void; and all such warranties as aforesaid shall be deemed covenants only, and bind the covenantor in like manner as other obligations. This is the language of the statute (Code, § 1334), and is too clear and explicit to admit of any doubt as to its true meaning. It covers the case completely, and is a full and conclusive answer to the contention, and, besides, the authorities are all against the defendants upon this point. The warranty of Katherine Scott, who had only a life estate, does not bar or rebut the plaintiffs, who are her children, because the latter claim as remaindermen, and therefore not by descent, but by purchase. This is the construction of our statute, it being a re-enactment of 4 Anne, Ch. 10, § 21, which has received the same interpretation. Moore v. Parker and Starnes v. Hill, supra. The matter is fully and ably discussed by Pearson, C. J., in Southerland v. Stout, 68 N. C. 446. The warranty in our case has the force and effect only of a personal covenant, the difference between which and a warranty, which operates as a bar by way of rebutter, is explained in Wiggins v. Pender, 132 N. C. 628, 44 S. E. 362, 61 L. R. A. 772.

The last defense is that the defendants have had adverse possession for a sufficient length of time to bar the right of the plaintiffs; but this position is clearly untenable, as it is agreed in the case that Katherine Hauser did not die until the year 1899, and this action was commenced in 1900. The statute was not set in motion until her death, as the plaintiffs had no right to the possession before she died or during the continuance of her life estate.

It was agreed in the court below that certain questions as to rents, profits, improvements, and betterments should be reserved to be considered and decided hereafter in that court.

We find no error in the judgment of the superior court, and it will be so certified, to the end that further proceedings may be had in accordance with the agreement of the parties and the law. No error.

STATE v. GREEN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 16, 1904.)

ASSAULT AND BATTERY—SELF-DEFENSE—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTION—FORM.

1. Evidence held to present a question for the jury whether one accused of assault and battery struck the prosecuting witness in self-defense.

2. Under Code, § 413, providing that the court shall state to the jury in a plain and correct manner the evidence given in the case, and explain the law arising thereon, the formula, "If you believe the evidence you should convict the defendant," is open to criticism.

Montgomery, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Moore, Judge.

Thomas Green was convicted of assault and battery, and appeals. Reversed.

The defendant was indicted for assault and battery upon Mack Hudson. There was testimony on the part of the state tending to show that the prosecuting witness was employed in a barroom as a clerk, and that about 11 o'clock at night the defendant, together with one Flowers, entered the barroom and called for the witness Hudson; that he came into the room, and immediately Flowers demanded of him to know what he had been saying about the defendant. Thereupon a dispute arose between Flowers and the witness, which was followed by Flowers striking Hudson with his fists and knocking him down. The defendant testified as follows: "Flowers hit Hudson. He, Hudson, went behind the counter and got a pot and threw it at me, and I struck him with a bottle. I had to strike him to keep him from striking me. Hudson was drinking." On cross-examination he said: "After Hudson threw the pot at me, he was advancing on me. He was as far from me as the post at the corner of the bar, 15 or 20 feet, behind the counter. I threw the bottle, partly filled with benzine, at him. He had thrown the pot at me. I threw the bottle at him because he threw the pot at me. I think he would have thrown something else at me. He was advancing on me when I struck him, but had nothing in his hand. Flowers had knocked Hudson down. I think Hudson intended to strike Flowers with the measuring pot which he threw." This was all the evidence offered by the defendant. The court instructed the jury that if they believed the evidence they should convict the defendant. The defendant excepted, and appealed from the judgment pronounced upon a verdict of guilty.

D. L. Ward, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

CONNOR, J. The sole question presented upon the appeal is whether the court was correct in instructing the jury that in any phase of the defendant's testimony he was guilty. This excludes from our consideration the testimony in behalf of the state. We are of the opinion that the case should have been submitted to the jury with proper instructions, to the end that the jury should say what portion of the defendant's testimony was true and what portion of it was untrue. His testimony, taken in one aspect, certainly establishes his guilt; it is equally true that, taken in another aspect, he was not guilty. It is the province of the jury to say what portion of the testimony they will believe and what portion they will reject. Taking his testimony alone, there is nothing to show that he went there for the purpose of provoking or engaging in a difficulty with the state's witness. As he states the transaction, Flowers hit Hudson, Hudson threw a missile at him, and he was advancing on him when he struck Hudson with the bottle. He says: "I had to strike him to keep him from striking me. He was advancing on me when I struck him, but had nothing in his hands." It is true that he says that he threw the bottle because Hudson threw the pot at him. It was the province of the jury to reconcile these statements, or reject that which they find untrue. If the jury shall find this to be a correct statement of the transaction, and shall further find that he had reasonable ground to apprehend that he would be stricken, that the witness was advancing upon him, and that he used no more force than was necessary, or reasonably appeared to be necessary under the circumstances, to prevent the assault, he would not be guilty. State v. Davis, 23 N. C. 125, 35 Am. Dec. 735. If, on the other hand, the jury should find that he threw the bottle at the witness because he threw the pot at him, he would undoubtedly be guilty; or, if they should find that he did not have reasonable ground to apprehend that he would be stricken, or, having such reasonable ground, he used excessive force, that is, more force than was necessary or reasonably appeared to be necessary, he would be guilty. These are questions for the jury, and not for the court, to decide.

If the jury find the transaction to be as testified by the state's witness, he would undoubtedly be guilty; but, for the purpose of passing upon the defendant's exception, we must take his testimony as being true, and exclude the consideration of the state's evidence. We would suggest that this court has held that the formula used by his honor to the jury, that "if they believed the evidence they should convict the defendant," is open to criticism. State v. Barrett, 123 N. C. 753, 31 S. E. 731; Sossamon v. Cruse, 133 N. C. 470, 45 S. E. 757. Section 413 of the Code prescribes the duty of the judge in charging the jury: "He shall state in a plain and correct manner the evidence given in the case, and declare and explain the law arising thereon." We feel sure that the error of the learned and careful judge who tried this case was an inadvertence. The testimony strongly tended to show the defendant's guilt, and doubtless so impressed his honor. In the administration of the criminal law, it is wise to observe the "landmarks" and preserve the well-defined rights and duties of the court and jury.

The defendant's exception to his honor's charge must be sustained, and for the errors complained of he is entitled to a new trial.

MONTGOMERY, J. (dissenting). I regret to have to enter my dissent to the opinion of the court, but, after a careful examination of the evidence, I am so clearly of the opinion that his honor correctly instructed the jury as to their duty that I am constrained to do so. The state introduced evidence to the effect that the prosecuting witness, Mack Hudson, a negro, was employed in a barroom conducted by a negro, in the city of New Berne, as a clerk, and that about 11 o'clock one Saturday night, in July, 1903, the defendant, Thomas Green, together with a man by the name of Flowers, both white men, entered the barroom and called for Hudson; that Hudson came into the room, whereupon Flowers demanded of him to know what he had been saying about the defendant, Green, and that instantly a dispute arose between Flowers and Hudson, which resulted in Hudson being knocked down by Flowers. There was evidence, too, that the defendant, Green, threw a bottle, partly filled with benzine, which struck Hudson on the forehead. The injury from the blow was a severe one. Prior to the throwing of the bottle by Green, there had been no words between Green and Hudson, and no demonstration by Hudson against Green, and Green cursed Hudson before he struck him with the bottle. Green was examined as a witness in his own behalf, and said that Hudson went behind the counter, and got the pot and threw it at him, and that he struck Hudson with the bottle. He said, further, that he had to strike Hudson to keep Hudson from striking him, and that Hudson was drinking and advancing on him. On his cross-examination, however, he said that Hudson was 15 or 20 feet off and behind the counter when he (the witness) threw the bottle at him, and that he threw the bottle at him because Hudson had thrown the pot at him. In the conclusion of his cross-examination he admitted, too, that he thought Hudson had intended to strike Flowers with the measuring pot when he threw it. The court instructed the jury that if they believed the evidence they should convict the defendant.

From a careful examination of the evidence in the case, and from the testimony, especially of the defendant, it appears that, even if Hudson had ever intended to or actually did have trouble with Green, the defendant, he (Green) provoked it, and was therefore himself guilty. But his own cross-examination shows that Hudson was behind his counter, 15 or 20 steps from the defendant, at the time when the defendant threw the bottle of benzine. The defendant, as we have seen, admitted, too, that he thought Hudson, when he threw the measuring pot, intended to strike Flowers, who had knocked Hudson down. The testimony of the defendant in respect to the reason which he gave for his assault on Hudson, viz., that he threw the bottle of benzine at Hudson because Hudson had thrown the measuring pot at him, cannot be a justification or excuse for his act. The law does not justify an assault by way of retaliation or revenge for a blow previously received. State v. Gibson, 32 N. C. 214. It appears, further, that Green did not deny that he cursed Hudson before any demonstration or word had been made or spoken by Hudson, and, as we have seen, the defendant admitted, at the end of his cross-examination, that he thought Hudson threw the measuring pot at Flowers.

Upon the whole matter, as I see it, there were no variant aspects of the evidence to be submitted to the jury. If it was true, the defendant was guilty in law; otherwise he was not. His honor expressed no opinion as to whether the jury ought or ought not to believe the evidence. He simply said, "If you believe the evidence, the defendant is guilty."

WILSON v. BROWN et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 16, 1904.)

ADMINISTRATORS—SALE OF REAL PROPERTY—DEFENSES—REPLY—ADVERSE POSSESSION—COLOR OF TITLE—TRUST—QUESTION FOR JURY—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

1. Evidence examined in proceeding by administrator for license to sell real property alleged to belong to estate of his intestate, in which the defense was interposed that defendants had obtained a judgment against the intestate in G. county, which had been docketed in the county where the proceedings were pending, and the homestead of the intestate allotted on execution thereon issued from G. county, thereby constituting the judgment a lien on the land sought to be sold, and held sufficient to show that the execution issued as alleged.

2. In a proceeding by an administrator for license to sell real property alleged to belong to the estate of his intestate, in which the defense was interposed that defendants had obtained a judgment against the intestate in G. county, which had been docketed in the county where the proceedings were pending, and the homestead of the intestate allotted on the execution issued thereon, a reply "that it is denied on information and belief that execution on said judgment was properly and lawfully issued from G. county, and the homestead legally and regularly allotted under the same, and it is specifically averred that said execution was irregular and void," is insufficient as a denial of the allegations of the answer.

3. Possession of land under perfect legal title prior to sale thereof on execution and passing of sheriff's deed to the purchaser, cannot be tacked to possession continuing after the passing of the sheriff's deed, to establish title by adverse possession as against the holder of the sheriff's deed.

4. The deed under which a judgment debtor became the owner of land does not constitute color of title after sale of the land on execution and passing of the sheriff's deed, though the judgment debtor continued in possession.

5. The proof to establish that the purchase of property at sheriff's sale upon execution was for the use and benefit of the judgment debtor continuing in possession must be strong, clear, and convincing.

6. Whether the proof that the purchase of property at sheriff's sale upon execution was for the use and benefit of the judgment debtor continuing in possession was sufficient to establish the trust is a question for the jury.

Walker and Douglas, JJ., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pitt County; Moore, Judge.

Action by H. H. Wilson, administrator of the estate of B. J. Wilson, deceased, against J. W. Brown and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Skinner & Whedbee and Fleming & Moore, for appellant. Y. T. Ormond, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. The plaintiff, administrator of B. J. Wilson, filed his petition against the defendants, heirs at law, etc., for the purpose of procuring license to sell certain real estate of which he alleged his intestate was the owner at the time of his death, to make assets, etc. The petition includes two tracts of land, one "known as the homestead of B. J. Wilson," etc., the other "known as a part of the John S. Brown land, lying on the east side of the Greenville and Washington road," etc. The petition contained the necessary averments to entitle the plaintiff to relief. The defendant G. C. Edwards filed an answer admitting the material averments, and further alleged that he and his wife had recovered in the superior court of Greene county, on the 1st day of October, 1889, a judgment against the plaintiff's intestate, which was duly docketed in Pitt county; that an execution thereon had issued from the superior court of Greene county, and the homestead of the defendant therein duly allotted; that said judgment remained unsatisfied, and constituted a lien upon that portion of the land described in the complaint known as the "homestead." To this answer the plaintiff filed a reply admitting the recovery of the judgment. The second paragraph of the reply is as follows: "That it is denied on information and belief that execution on said judgment was properly and lawfully issued from the superior court of Greene county, and the homestead legally and regularly allotted under the same, and it is specifically averred that said execution was irregular and void." The plaintiff pleaded the bar of the statute. The defendants B. W. Brown and others, by their guardian, filed an answer denying that the plaintiff's intestate was at the time of his death the owner of the tract of land on the east side of the road, etc. They further alleged that they were the owners in fee of said land. To this answer the plaintiff filed a reply denying the affirmative allegations, and pleading the 20 and 7 years' statutes of limitation in bar of their claim, etc. The plaintiff further alleged that at a sale of said land made by the sheriff, F. W. Brown, the father of the defendants, purchased the same upon a parol trust to hold the title to the use of plaintiff's intestate; that he remained in possession, paying taxes and receiving the rents of said land, for more than 20 years, and until his death. The cause was, upon issues made by the pleadings, transferred to the civil issue docket for trial. In regard to the defendant Edwards the court submitted the issue upon the statute of limitations. The defendant introduced the clerk of the superior court of Pitt, who produced the record showing transcript of judgment from Greene, docketed in Pitt October 5, 1889. The docket showed the entry: "Fl. fa. issued October, 1889. Homestead appraised and set off and return made October 14, 1889." He next introduced the record of the return of the sheriff showing allotment of homestead and personal property exemption, under execution on judgment of G. C. Edwards and wife against B. J. Wilson, dated October 14, 1889. (It did not appear from said return from what county the execution was issued.) The defendants introduced a deed from the sheriff of Pitt county to F. W. Brown, in which a sale under two executions issued from the superior court of Greene county upon judgments in favor of G. C. Edwards and wife against B. F. Wilson and "Julia C. Dixon, Ex'x, v. B. F. Wilson," is recited. The levy is recited as made on October 14, 1889. This was all the evidence in regard to the controversy upon the lien of the Edwards' judgment. His honor instructed the jury that if they believed the evidence they should answer the issue "No." Plaintiff excepted.

We concur with the opinion of his honor. There was uncontradicted evidence amply sufficient to show that the execution issued on the Edwards judgment from the superior court of Greene county. It is very doubtful whether the reply sufficiently denied the averment. We think that upon a proper construction of the paragraph in the reply it may well be said that it was not denied. From any point of view his honor correctly instructed the jury.

The court submitted the following issue to the jury: "Did Dr. Frank W. Brown take the legal title to the tract of land described in the sheriff's deed introduced for the use and benefit of B. J. Wilson?" The plaintiff tendered, in addition, an issue directed to the inquiry whether plaintiff's intestate had been in the open and adverse possession of the land in controversy for more than 20 years; also in regard to adverse possession under color of title for more than 7 years. His honor declined to submit either of these issues, and the plaintiff excepted. His honor's ruling was correct. The possession of plaintiff's intestate could not possibly have been adverse to Dr. Brown for 20 years, for the manifest reason that the sheriff's deed was executed March 7, 1890, before which time Dr. Brown had no right of action or right of entry. The plaintiff's intestate prior to that time had a perfect title to the land. In regard to the second issue tendered, there was no evidence that the plaintiff's intestate had possession of the land after March 17, 1890, the date of the sheriff's deed under color of title. We have no difficulty in holding, upon the authorities, that, in the absence of any explanation, the possession of plaintiff's intestate after the right of action accrued to Dr. Brown was adverse to him, and, if continued for 20 years, would have ripened into perfect title. Scarboro v. Scarboro, 122 N. C. 234, 29 S. E. 352. The deed under which plaintiff's intestate became the owner of the land could not constitute color of title after the execution of the sheriff's deed. In Johnson v. Farlow, 35 N. C. 84, Pearson, J., says: "McCracken, after his deed to the lessor, had no color of title, and the adverse possession which he held was naked. It is absurd to suppose that the deed under which he had originally acquired the land could serve his purpose as color of title after he had passed all of his estate, interest, and claim under it to the lessor. Color of title is something which purports to give title, but he had nothing of the kind. The deed to him was functus officio except as one of the mesne conveyances of the lessor. If McCracken had taken a deed from a third person, that would have been color of title, and seven years' adverse possession under it would, in the language of the cases, 'have ripened it into a perfect title,' thus originating, which did not exist at the date of his deed, for the averment of this new title would not be inconsistent with the admission which he was bound to make that his deed had passed the title to the lessor." Brown's legal title was but a continuance of the title of the plaintiff's intestate, the defendant in the execution. After the sale and execution of the sheriff's deed, the character of the possession retained by plaintiff's intestate was open to explanation. Ruffin v. Overby, 88 N. C. 369; Bryan v. Spivey, 109 N. C. 57, 13 S. E. 766; Boomer v. Gibbs, 114 N. C. 76, 19 S. E. 226.

His honor properly refused to submit either of the plaintiff's issues tendered. His honor instructed the jury in regard to the issues tendered: "That if the plaintiff had satisfied them by strong, clear, and convincing evidence that Dr. F. W. Brown took the legal title to the tract of land described in the sheriff's deed introduced for the use and benefit of B. J. Wilson, they should answer the third issue, 'Yes,' and that unless the plaintiff had satisfied them by strong, clear, and convincing evidence that Dr. F. W. Brown took the legal title to said tract of land for the use and benefit of B. J. Wilson, they should answer the third issue, 'No.'" The instruction was in accordance with the decisions of this court. Smith, C. J., in McNair v. Pope, 100 N. C. 404, 6 S. E. 234, says: "But, to ingraft such a trust upon a legal estate, the proof of its formation should be strong and convincing." In Summerlin v. Cowles, 101 N. C. 473, 7 S. E. 881, it is said: "To attach a trust to a legal estate by parol, or to convert a deed absolute in form into a security merely, and perhaps in other cases invoking the exercise of equitable judicial functions for relief, more proof is required than that which preponderates and governs in the trial of ordinary questions of fact." In Cobb v. Edwards, 117 N. C. 244, 23 S. E. 241, Avery, J., says: "Where the judge is not at liberty to say that there is no evidence of the kind required by the rule of law prescribed in such cases, it is his duty to tell the jury that the law requires clear, strong, and convincing proof to show the agreement as well as the subsequent acts or admissions, and that it is their province to say whether that offered does so convince them of its truth." This, and other decided cases in our Reports, sustain his honor's charge to the jury. While the testimony in regard to the inadequate price paid for the land, the continued possession of the judgment debtor, payment of taxes, the reduction of the mortgage indebtedness upon the land, the relation between himself and the purchaser, might well have justified the jury in finding that Dr. Brown held the title upon some trust or understanding between himself and the judgment debtor, these questions are peculiarly within their province, and, in the absence of any error in the instructions by which they were guided, we are not permitted to question their verdict.

Upon careful examination of the entire record, we find no error.

WALKER, J. (dissenting as to homestead tract). The case shows that the defendant G. C. Edwards and his wife recovered a judgment in the superior court of Greene county on the 1st day of October, 1889, against B. J. Wilson, the intestate of the plaintiff, and the said judgment was docketed in the superior court of Pitt county on the same day. The plaintiff brought this proceeding for the purpose of selling the land of his intestate to pay debts, and in his petition he asks for the sale of the land known as the "homestead tract," which is on the west side of the road, and contains about 100 acres, and also of the land known as the "Brown tract," lying on the east side of the road, it being the excess of the homestead, and containing about 220 acres. An execution was issued to the sheriff of Pitt county, and levied on the said 320 acres of land. The homestead was set apart on the 14th day of October, 1889, and the excess, described in the pleadings as containing 220 acres, and in the sheriff's deed as containing about 100 acres, was sold, and bought by F. W. Brown, father of the defendant B. W. Brown and others. The plaintiff alleges that this particular purchase was made by Brown at the nominal sum of $5, for the use and benefit of his uncle, B. J. Wilson, defendant in the execution, and upon the parol promise or trust that he would hold the same for his use and benefit, and, upon the repayment of the sum disbursed by him, that he would convey the land to his said uncle, the plaintiff's intestate. I fully concur in the opinion of the court, so far as it relates to this part of the case, but I do not concur in its decision as to the disposition of the fund arising out of the sale of the homestead tract. The defendant G. C. Edwards, who answers for himself and as administrator of his deceased wife, alleges that execution issued on his judgment from the superior court of Greene county to the sheriff of Pitt county, and that the homestead was regularly allotted; and the plaintiff, in his reply, avers that no execution was ever lawfully and properly issued from the superior court of Greene county, nor was the homestead ever regularly or legally allotted under the same, and he therefore further avers that the Edwards judgment is barred by the statute of limitations, as the attempted allotment of the homestead was void, and of no effect, and did not, therefore, suspend the operation of the statute and prevent the bar. I think, though my Brethren do not, that the allegation of the answer that execution had issued from Greene county is sufficiently met and denied by the reply. In the construction of a pleading for the purpose of determining its legal effect its allegations shall be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice between the parties. Code, § 260. We should remember that the subtle science of pleading heretofore in use is not merely relaxed, but in a large measure abolished, by the Code, and the rule of the common law that every pleading must be construed against the pleader has been reversed by the present system, and we must try to ascertain the intention of the pleader, however it may be expressed, and without putting a too strained and technical construction upon his words. Moore v. Edmiston, 70 N. C. 510; Stokes v. Taylor, 104 N. C. 394, 10 S. E. 566. As said by Clark, J., in the last-cited case, when the defect is in the form, rather than in the substance, the proper method of correction is not by demurrer, nor yet by excluding evidence at the trial, but by motion before the trial to make the averment more definite. Bule v. Brown, 104 N. C. 335, 10 S. E. 465; Purcell v. Railroad, 108 N. C. 414, 12 S. E. 954, 956, 12 L. R. A. 113. The denial in this case was quite as sufficient to raise an issue as were the allegations and averments in Moore v. Edmiston and the other cases cited. But it was not necessary that the plaintiff should reply to this allegation, as the new matter in the answer, not being a counterclaim, "is to be deemed controverted by the plaintiff as upon a direct denial or evidence, as the case may require" (Code, §

268), the court not having ordered the plaintiff to reply thereto (section 248). An issue having been raised, how stood the proof? It may be conceded that the recitals in the sheriff's deed are prima facie evidence not merely of the sale, but also of the judgment and execution, and of all facts necessary to be recited, in order to show his power and the correct execution of it with reference to the sale, and that this is so even when the party claiming under the deed is the plaintiff in the judgment. Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. C. 342; Curlee v. Smith, 91 N. C. 172. And yet the fact in this case is that as to the homestead tract there was no sale by the sheriff, and therefore the recital could not be evidence of an allotment, nor even of the issuing of the execution under which it is alleged the allotment was made. The authorities do not fit the case. The recitals are prima facie evidence for the purpose of supporting the sale only, and there was no sale of this tract. To permit the execution to be evidence of the issuing of the execution in this case would violate the well-settled rule that a party upon whom rests the burden of proving a fact must offer the best attainable evidence of it. In Rollins v. Henry, supra, the court, by Rodman, J., says: "The return to an execution is ordinarily the best evidence of a levy and sale under it. But when the execution has not been returned to the clerk's office, and it, with any return on it, has been lost or destroyed, and it is proved otherwise than from the recitals that there was a judgment and execution [italics mine], the recital in a sheriff's deed is prima facie evidence of the levy and sale, they being official acts of the sheriff, even although the sale was not a recent one." But assuming, for the sake of the argument, that the recitals were evidence of the issuing of the execution, they were only prima facie evidence, and open to rebuttal. I think there was sufficient testimony to be submitted to the jury for that purpose. There is this entry on the execution docket of the superior court of Pitt county: "Fl. fa. issued Oct. 1889. Homestead appraised and set off and return made October 14, 1889." It is not the duty of the clerk of the court of the county, whose sheriff has received an execution issued from another county, to note on his docket the fact that the execution has issued. He is required to make an entry in regard to the homestead allotment when it is returned to him. Code, § 504. If there are any payments on the judgment, they are certified to him by the clerk of the court where the judgment was taken, and must be entered on his docket. The execution goes directly from the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered to the sheriff of the county where the defendant's land is situated, and where the judgment has been docketed, and the clerk of the latter county has nothing to do with it. His judgment roll and docket are not required to show anything in connection with it except the credits on the judgment and the return of the homestead allotment, and the latter is required also to be returned by the officer having the execution to the clerk of the court where the judgment was rendered. Acts 1887, p. 515, c. 272. The entry, therefore, of the clerk of Pitt superior court, was some evidence that the execution had been issued from that court, for, if it had been, his duty would have been to make just such an entry as he did make. Whether this was sufficient to rebut any evidence introduced by the defendant was a question for the jury to decide, and not for the judge. All such matters should be left to the triers of the facts appointed for the purpose of deciding such issues between the parties, and should not be decided as matters of law. The entry on the docket in Pitt county was certainly as reliable as the recitals in the sheriff's deed, and those recitals constituted all of the defendant's evidence. I do not understand why the defendant did not introduce the original execution, if one ever issued from the superior court of Greene county. If it had been lost, he could have proved that it had been issued by the entries on the clerk's docket in Greene county, or by the sheriff who acted under it. The fact that no such evidence was offered tended greatly to weaken the defendant's case and to strengthen that of the plaintiff.

STATE v. EDWARDS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 8, 1904.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—SALE ON ELECTION DAY—STATUTE—CONSTRUCTION.

1. Acts 1901, p. 266, c. 89, providing a complete scheme for the conduct of regular elections in the state, supersedes all preceding acts to the same general effect.

2. Under Acts 1901, p. 266, c. 89, § 76, providing that any person who shall give away any intoxicating liquors on election day shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, it is no offense for one who has a license to retail spirituous liquors to sell intoxicating liquors on an election day.

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Moore, Judge.

A. M. Edwards was prosecuted for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor on election day. From an order sustaining a motion to quash the indictment, the state appeals. Affirmed.

The Attorney General, for the State. W. D. McIver, for defendant.

MONTGOMERY, J. The question raised by the appeal of the state in this case is whether or not the sale of intoxicating liquors on an election day by one who had a license to retail spirituous liquors is unlawful. For nearly a third of a century—from the year 1868 down to 1900—it was the settled policy of our law that the giving away and the sale of intoxicating liquors within five miles of any polling place on an election day should be prohibited. We first meet with the legislative purpose in section 2740 of the Code, in the chapter entitled "Elections Regulated." That section is in these words: "Any person who shall give away or sell any intoxicating liquors, except for medical purposes and upon the prescription of a practicing physician, at any place within five miles of the polling place, at any time within twelve hours next preceding or succeeding any public election, whether general, local or municipal, or during the holding thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars." Then the General Assembly, at its session of 1895, enacted a new election law, the act being entitled "An act to revise, amend and consolidate the election laws of North Carolina" (Laws 1895, p. 211, c. 159). The first section of the last-mentioned act repeals the chapter of the Code entitled "Elections Regulated," embracing section 2740, and all laws and clauses of laws relating to elections enacted subsequent to the Code; but section 2740 of the Code was re-enacted in the act of 1895 (page 231, c. 159, § 61), and in the election laws of 1899 and 1900 (page 682, c. 507, § 78) the exact words of section 2740 were incorporated. Under the general election law enacted by the General Assembly at its session of 1901, section 2740 of the Code was again, word for word, with the exception of the words "or sell," incorporated. Laws 1901, p. 266, c. 89, § 76. From the reading of these various statutes it appears from both the language and the captions that each one of them was a separate and complete election law of itself. Each one was a revising and consolidating statute, covering the whole subject-matter of the antecedent ones, and was therefore a repeal of the others; the last one (that of 1901) being the whole law in North Carolina on the subject of "Regulation of Elections." Winslow v. Morton, 118 N. C. 486, 24 S. E. 417. It will be remembered that section 76 of the act of 1901 is section 2740 of the Code, with the words "or sell" left out, and it is therefore perfectly clear that the matter of selling or giving away liquor, the use of liquor, at or near polling places on election days, was considered by the General Assembly when the act of 1901 was passed; and, that being so, it necessarily follows that its last expression on the subject is a repeal by implication of the words "or sell" as they had appeared in the former statutes. But, if there could be any error in that construction of the law, the matter is clinched by section 86, p. 270, c. 89, of the Laws of 1901, which is as follows: "That chapter 507 Public Laws of 1899 and chapter 1 Public Laws of 1900, and all other laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed, and the law regulating elections as contained in this act shall be construed as above, and not in connection with any existing provisions of law for the regulation of elections. (Italics ours.) Those last words confine the courts to the law on the subject of this indictment to section 76 of the act of 1901 as it is written there. His honor properly quashed the bill of indictment, for the defendant, under his license to retail spirituous liquors, was not prohibited from selling intoxicating liquors on an election day. It would have been unlawful for him to have given away liquor on that day, but it was not unlawful to sell it.

No error.

WALKER, J. (concurring). I concur in the conclusion of the court in this case, but not for the reasons given in its opinion. The general or common-law rule seems to be that the simple repeal, suspension, or expiration of a repealing statute revives the repealed statute, whether such repeal was express or implied. Brinkley v. Swicegood, 65 N. C. 626; Sutherland, Stat. Const. § 168. But this rule is subject to a well-recognized exception, which is that; when the repeal of a repealing statute is for the purpose of substituting another provision in its place, the implication of an intention to revive the repealed statute cannot arise, and especially if the substituted provision is repugnant to the original provision, or is not properly cumulative to it. So the repeal of a statute which was a revision of and a substitute for a former act to the same general effect, and which was therefore repealed, cannot be deemed to revive the previous act, for this would be plainly contrary to the intention of the Legislature. Endlich, Interp. of Statutes, § 475; Dwarris on Statutes, p. 159; Sutherland, Stat. Const. p. 228. Our case, I think, falls within the exception. By a succession of acts, commencing with chapter 16 of the Code, which was followed by Acts 1895, p. 211, c. 159, Acts 1899, p. 682, c. 507, Acts 1900, p. 1, c. 1, and finally by Acts 1901, p. 266, c. 89, the Legislature has, from time to time, provided a complete scheme for the conduct and regulation of elections in the state, and it was manifestly the purpose that each of said acts should be a substitute for the one that preceded it, and that the last act, which entirely covered the ground of each of the others, should supersede them, and become itself the final and full expression of the legislative will on the subject. I can discover nothing on the face of the last act to rebut the intent which the law infers from the very nature of the several acts, but, in my opinion, there is everything to indicate that the real intention of the Legislature was in strict accordance with that which is presumed by the law. Again, the provision, by which the sale of liquor within five miles of a polling place and within the twelve hours next preceding or succeeding the day on which any public election is held was inserted in Acts 1899, p. 682, c. 507, and Acts 1900, c. 1, it being section 78 of each of said chapters; and it would be strange, indeed, if the Legislature intended to revive section 61, p. 231, of chapter 159 of the Acts of 1895, containing the same provision, or section 2740 of the Code, as argued in this court, that it should have expressly repealed two acts with that provision in them without making the slightest reservation in respect to it. As far as the act of 1895, § 61, is concerned, we find, upon examination of the statutes, that it was expressly repealed by Acts 1899, p. 682, c. 16, and as the latter act simply contained a repeal of the act of 1895, and nothing more, the general rule applied, and the Code chapter 16, including section 2740, and any intervening general election law repealed by the act of 1895, were thereby revived; but, as the Acts of 1899 and 1900 revised all prior general election laws, and substituted for them a scheme complete in itself, the Code chapter 16 was repealed by them (Winslow v. Morton, 118 N. C. 486, 23 S. E. 417), and the subsequent repeal of those two acts by Act 1901, p. 266, c. 91, did not revive the provisions of the Code, under the rule to which I have referred. It all, therefore, results in this: that Act 1901, p. 266, c. 91, was, at the time the offense is alleged to have been committed, the only law in force which regulated elections. I do not attach any special importance, in this discussion, to the words in section 86 of the act of 1901, namely, "The law regulating elections, as contained in this act, shall be construed as above and not in connection with any existing provisions of law for the regulation of elections." These words could not have referred to the Code, the act of 1895, or any other intervening act in regard to general elections, for they had been repealed by the act of 1899 and the act of 1900, successively, and therefore were not "existing provisions of law"; and they could not have had reference to the Acts of 1899 and 1900, as they were expressly repealed by the act of 1901, and could not, therefore, be construed in connection with the latter. While the omission of the words "or sell" from the act of 1901 may have been the result of inadvertence, the general law, when considered in the light of well-settled rules of interpretation, does not now forbid the sale of liquor in the manner in which it is charged in the indictment to have been made, and the court was right in granting the motion to quash.

OLARK, C. J., and DOUGLAS, J., concur in the concurring opinion.

BAILEY & SON v. WELLS.

RES JUDICATA.

1. An assignee of a note and mortgage sent it to the attorney of the assignor, at his request, for foreclosure, and had notice that such attorney had commenced the suit in the name of the assignor. Held, that he was estopped, after judgment against the assignor, to sue thereon in his own name.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Newberry County; Aldrich, Judge.

Action by Bailey & Son against Mary F. Wells. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Schumpert & Holloway, for appellant. Johnstone & Welch, for respondents.

WOODS, J. As her first defense to this action for foreclosure, the defendant alleges that a judgment in her favor in the suit instituted by one George T. Reid to foreclose the same mortgage is binding on the plaintiffs by reason of their conduct respecting that suit. These are the material facts of the Reid suit, so far as they affect this issue: The defendant gave to Reid a note and mortgage for $1,060.35 on January 22, 1887, which he subsequently assigned to the plaintiffs, along with other collateral, to secure a large indebtedness. The papers were never re-assigned to Reid, but he wrote to the plaintiffs, requesting that they be sent to Messrs. Johnstone & Welch, attorneys at law, for suit. About the same time he retained these attorneys to foreclose a mortgage, without stating the name of the debtor or any other particulars. In pursuance of Reid's request, Bailey & Son sent the note and mortgage to Messrs. Johnstone & Welch, with a letter in these words: "At the request of Mr. Reid, we send you enclosed note and mortgage for suit." The note and mortgage bore no evidence of assignment, and the letter gave no intimation that Bailey & Son claimed any interest in them. Suit for foreclosure was commenced in Reid's name, and after protracted litigation the defendant prevailed on the plea of payment. Some time before the Reid suit was brought, Bailey & Son told the defendant's husband, who was her agent, that they held the papers as collateral for a debt due by Reid. About "three or six months," as Mr. Bailey states it, after its commencement, Bailey & Son ascertained that the suit had been instituted and was still pending in Reid's name; but the evidence does not disclose that they made any objection, or gave any notice to the defendant that they repudiated the course that had been taken.

Sending the papers to Reid's attorneys at his request, the terms of the letter written to them, their neglect to inquire about the suit or concern themselves with it, and their failure to repudiate Reid's suit when it was brought to their attention, indicate with perfect clearness that Bailey & Son intended to place the papers and suit entirely under Reid's control, and to abide by the result. They cannot now take an inconsistent position. Hand v. S. & C. R. Co., 12 S. C. 314; St. Paul National Bank v. Cannon, 46 Minn. 95, 48 N. W. 526, 24 Am. St. Rep. 189.

We are unable to perceive how Bailey & Son's mere expectation that Reid would have the suit properly brought, could avail them. They gave him no instructions, but, if they had, this could not protect them from defendant's charge that they put Reid in control, and must abide the result of his action. If, in fact, they intended to retain control of the papers and to sue in their own name, by their negligence in clothing Reid with the apparent ownership of the papers and control of their collection they misled the defendant into prosecuting an expensive litigation, and are now estopped from alleging against the judgment in that cause.

The fact that Bailey & Son had, some time before the Reid suit was commenced, told Mrs. Wells' husband, who was her agent, that they held the papers by assignment as collateral for a debt due by Reid to them, does not help the respondents. We cannot hold that the pledgee of collateral can avail himself of a notice of his right once given, when he afterwards deliberately turns over to the pledgor such collateral, and places it in his complete control, to be pressed by him. Such action indicates that the debt has been satisfied and the collateral released, or at least that the pledgor is authorized to collect it.

Take the view of the facts most favorable to the plaintiffs. Assume for a moment that Mr. Bailey is correct in saying that he directed the suit brought in the name of Bailey & Son, that Mr. Welch is mistaken in his statement of the contents of the letter inclosing the papers for suit, that Reid was not placed in control of the papers and the suit, and that it was due to the misunderstanding of their attorneys, Messrs. Johnstone & Welch, that the action was not brought in the name of Bailey & Son; they admit that the alleged error of the attorneys to whom they had intrusted the suit was discovered some time before the close of the litigation, and yet they deliberately elected to keep silence and let the suit in Reid's name proceed to its conclusion. It was clearly their duty then to speak, to the end that the defendant might not incur further expense in defending a suit which, in their view, would decide nothing.

In any view that can be taken, plaintiffs are concluded by the result of the suit of Reid against this defendant, and it is unnecessary to consider the other defenses.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the complaint dismissed.

STATE v. SANDERS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 1, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—REFUSAL OF CONTINUANCE.

1. Where the solicitor told defendant's attorney that no bills would be given out during the term of the court, but a bill was handed out the next day on the request of the grand jury and the trial of defendant ordered on the following day, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse a motion for continuance, in the absence of a showing that the defendant's witnesses were without the county.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Sumter County; Townsend, Judge.

Judy Sanders was convicted of a violation of the dispensary laws, and appeals. Affirmed.

L. D. Jennings, for appellant. John S. Wilson, for the State.

POPE, C. J. The appellant pleaded guilty to an indictment which charged her with the crime of a violation of the dispensary laws of this state, and was duly sentenced by Judge Townsend, at the November term, 1902, of the court of general sessions of Sumter county, of this state. She thereupon appealed from such judgment on two grounds, to wit: "First Exception. It is respectfully submitted that the presiding judge abused his discretion in forcing the defendant to trial under the circumstances in this case, in that his honor would not allow the defendant time in which to get her testimony, and in forcing her to trial when the solicitor, John S. Wilson, had informed her attorney, on Wednesday night, November 6th, that he would not give out a bill that term of court, and forcing her to trial Friday morning, November 8th, when the true bill had not been found until November 7th, and she had not had time in which to get ready, not expecting to be tried after the state's attorney had said he would not give out a bill at said term of court; that she entered the plea of guilty for the reason that she was not prepared to make her defense; that, if she had been prepared to make her defense, she would not have entered the plea of guilty. Second Exception. It is respectfully submitted that his honor abused his discretion in passing sentence on defendant, in that said sentence was oppressive, unreasonable, and disproportionate to the offense for which the defendant had been found guilty."

1. It seems from the statement of facts set out in the "case" that there had been some conversation between the solicitor of the Third Circuit and the attorney for the defendant; that the former stated to the latter on the 6th day of November, 1902, that he would not give out a bill of indictment in this case "during the present term of court." It seems that after that day, to wit, on the 7th day of November, 1902, the grand jury insisted that the bill of indictment should be preferred at once, and that the solicitor yielded to that demand of the grand jury, and handed out a bill of indictment on said 7th day of November, 1902, upon which the grand jury found a true bill on that day. The cause being placed on the docket by the clerk of court of general sessions, which it was his duty to do, the circuit judge on the 8th day of November, 1902, called the case for trial. Thereupon the defendant's attorney moved for a continuance, basing this motion upon the foregoing facts, together with the fact that the defendant had made no arrangements to go to trial, not having any witnesses. The circuit judge overruled the motion for a continuance, and ordered the cause to be set down for trial. Then the defendant entered a plea of guilty, and was duly sentenced. We are obliged to overrule this ground of appeal. The solicitor was controlled by the grand jury. There was only a delay of a few hours—from the night of 6th of November, 1902, to the day of 7th November, 1902. The defendant knew the charge was pending in the court. She resided in the city of Sumter. She did not, in her showing for a continuance, make it appear that any of her witnesses lived beyond the limits of the city of Sumter, or that any of them were beyond the limits of Sumter county. She had the power of the court to summon witnesses. Besides all these matters, continuances are governed by the discretion of the circuit judge. There are many decisions of this court which so hold. It is only when the circuit judge abuses his discretion in refusing this motion that this court will interfere. This exception is overruled.

2. It is nowhere made to appear that the circuit judge exceeded his power under the law in fixing the terms of his sentence. These are matters within his discretion. This court will not interfere with the exercise of this discretion by the circuit judge. So long as the limits of the law as to punishment are observed by the circuit judge, we will not interfere. This exception is overruled.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be, and the same is, affirmed.

(68 S. C. 119)

STATE v. WIDEMAN.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Feb. 23, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS—MALICIOUS MISCHIEF—NEW TRIAL.

1. On a criminal trial, evidence of statements by defendant that another had committed the crime, but that he would pay the prosecutor to settle it, are admissible.

2. Where, on motion to strike out an entire declaration, a part only is stricken, and that left is objectionable because of its disconnection, the remedy of the party moving to strike is to move that the whole be restored subject to objection.

3. Where defendant pleads an alibi, refusal to permit a merchant to refresh his memory as to what hour defendant delivered a bundle to him by looking at his order for the bundle is not error.

4. Where the evidence as to commission of the crime was circumstantial, the presiding judge properly confined witnesses who testified as to horse tracks to a description of the peculiarities of the track and the corresponding peculiarities of the feet of defendant's horse.

5. On trial for malicious mischief, evidence of ill will on the part of accused towards prosecuting witnesses was admissible.

6. Where there was circumstantial evidence supporting a conviction, refusal of a new trial will not be reversed.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Greenwood County; Buchanan, Judge.

Lige Wideman was convicted of malicious mischief, and appeals. Affirmed.

Sheppards & Grier and Caldwell & Park, for appellant. T. S. Sease and Ellis G. Graydon, for the State.

WOODS, J. The defendant was convicted of malicious mischief in burning a lot of cord wood belonging to one J. W. Tolbert. The witness Boney Williams testified, in substance, that in conversation with him the defendant said he did not burn the wood, but, in order to end the lawsuit, he would pay Mr. Tolbert for it; that the burning was done by Hutchinson, a white man, with whom he had had a difference, in consequence of which Hutchinson had laid it at his door, and that it would not do for him to tell all he knew about it. The defendant objected to this statement on the grounds that it was not a confession, and did not tend in any way to connect the defendant with the burning; that an offer to compromise is not admissible against the party who makes it; and that the statement was made under duress. We think all this evidence was clearly competent in support of the circumstantial evidence offered by the state as tending to show defendant's knowledge of the commission of the crime. There was no evidence whatever that the statement was made under duress. Evidence of an offer to compromise is not inadmissible in a criminal case as opposed to public policy, because the public is not concerned in the private compensation for losses resulting from crime, but rather in the public punishment of crime as an offense against society. Conversations indicating a willingness to compromise, as in this case, or a direct offer to compromise a criminal charge, may indicate either a consciousness of guilt or merely fear or anxiety to avoid the risk of a miscarriage of justice. Whether it comes from the one or the other of these mental conditions, it is generally for the jury to determine, under all the circumstances attending it. In general, not only are all declarations of a defendant tending directly to show that he committed the crime charged competent evidence against him, but all declarations indicating his knowledge of the crime, especially if such knowledge is kept secret, and the crime be so clandestine that the perpetrator may be discovered only by circumstantial evidence. This view is not inconsistent with the rule laid down in State v. Mitchell, 49 S. C. 413, 27 S. E. 424. There nothing more was decided touching this point than that the mere statement of one defendant exculpating himself and laying the crime on his codefendant is incompetent against the codefendant as being hearsay, and of no value against the defendant making the statement, because it was a denial of all guilt and guilty knowledge. See State v. Smith (Conn.) 5 Am. Dec. 134; Commonwealth v. Crowe (Mass.) 42 N. E. 563.

Upon defendant's motion to strike out this entire conversation the court struck out all except the words, "He said it would not do for him to tell what he knew about it." As we have endeavored to show, the whole conversation was competent, including the words above quoted. If the defendant regarded himself prejudiced by the isolation of this sentence from the remainder of the statement attributed to him, he had a right to restore it to its connection by asking for all that was said qualifying this remark, subject to his objection to the competency of the entire conversation. This disposes of the first, second, and third exceptions.

We do not think there was reversible error in refusing to allow the defendant's witness Craig to refresh his memory by referring to an order sent to him by McCaslan on the day of the fire. The purpose of this evidence was to support the statement of the defendant that he carried from Craig, a merchant at Greenwood, merchandise ordered by McCaslan, and, after delivering the bundle, he stayed at McCaslan's until after the hour the fire occurred. The uncontradicted testimony of McCaslan's father was that a bundle was delivered to his son at his home that night by the defendant. We do not perceive how the fact that the bundle was brought from Craig's store could strengthen this evidence of alibi. The fourth and fifth exceptions are therefore overruled.

The presiding judge confined the witnesses who testified as to the horse tracks to a description of the peculiarities of the track and the corresponding peculiarities of the feet of the horse of the defendant. State v. Green, 40 S. C. 330, 18 S. E. 933, 42 Am. St. Rep. 872. The inquiry made by the witness Pickens Brooks of the defendant as to his puppies, was an inconsequential part of the narrative, and could not have had any effect on the issue. Evidence of ill will between the owner of the property destroyed and the defendant was competent to show the motive for the crime. The seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, and eleventh exceptions cannot be sustained.

As we understand, the defendant insists in his sixth exception that it was an abuse of discretion for the presiding judge to refuse the motion for a new trial, made on the ground that there was no evidence to support the verdict. There was evidence of horse tracks corresponding to those of defendant's horse leading by the place on the road where the wood was burned, of indications that the horse had been hitched there, that defendant was in the vicinity on the night of the fire, and that he confessed to knowledge of the malicious burning of the wood. Whether this testimony was credible and strong enough for conviction, was a question primarily for the jury. It is manifest this court should not say that it was incredible, or, if credible, so weak that there was an abuse of discretion in refusing to set the verdict aside.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

STATE v. FIELDS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 4, 1904.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—TITLE OF ACT.

1. Acts Gen. Assem. 1883, p. 547, entitled "An act to amend the criminal law by providing for the punishment of abortion," is unconstitutional so far as it provides a punishment for persons who shall advise the commission of such crime.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Darlington County; Aldrich, Judge.

Boyd Fields was convicted of crime, and appeals. Reversed.

Coggeshall & Edwards, for appellant. J. M. Johnstone and J. Monroe Spears, for the State.

POPE, C. J. When the above-stated action was called for trial, the defendant interposed a motion to quash the indictment upon the ground that section 2 of the act of 1883 whose title is "An act to amend the criminal law by providing for the punishment of abortion" (see Acts Gen. Assem. 1883, pp. 547, 548, vol. 18) was unconstitutional, because in violation of section 17, article 3, of the Constitution adopted in the year 1895, that "every act or resolution having the force of law shall relate to but one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title." The circuit judge overruled the motion, whereupon the cause proceeded to trial, and resulted in conviction and sentence. The defendant has appealed. So that now the only question presented by the appellant is, was the refusal of the motion to quash the indictment under the circumstances above quoted error? We think there was error, for the following reasons: The act of 1883 plainly announced in its title and the specific provisions of the said act that the purpose of the General Assembly was to so amend the criminal law of this state on the subject of abortion as to provide a punishment therefor. Abortion, as a crime, was already denounced by our law. The subject of the act was the punishment for abortion. This subject might include the means of its accomplishment. The cases of City of Charleston v. Oliver, 16 S. C. 56, and State v. Crosby, 51 S. C. 249, 28 S. E. 529, are authority in the matter of a divergence in the body of an act from the language of the title of the act. The case of Barksdale v. City of Laurens, 58 S. C. 413, 36 S. E. 661, shows very plainly in what class of cases the subject of an act may be referred to in upholding the provisions of the act germane to the subject. It may be conceded that our authorities should not be searched to show that the title of an act does not cover the body of the same. Still great care should be observed in seeing to it that the title does cover the provisions of the act. Thus it seems to us that, where an act in its title states that the criminal law of the state is to be amended by providing for the punishment of a crime already existing, to wit, the crime of abortion, and the body of the act provides a punishment for persons who shall advise the commission of the crime of abortion, such legislation, so far as the second clause of this act is concerned, is unconstitutional.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF CHARLOTTE v. LEE et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Feb. 19, 1904.)

REFERENCE—JURISDICTION.

1. After adjournment of court, but before decree rendered, a judge at chambers in another county than that in which the cause was heard can refer the case to the referee, take evidence on the issues, and permit other attorneys to appear on behalf of the person whose interest may be affected, though the result of the order is, in effect, to grant a new trial.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Fairfield County; Dantzler, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Charlotte against T. B. Lee, Jr., and William H. Lyles. From an order referring the case, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. W. Robinson, for appellant. Wm. Elliott, Jr., for respondents.

GREEN, Acting Associate Justice, in place of POPE, C. J., disqualified. This is an appeal from an order of Judge Dantzler in terms granting a new trial, permitting the intervention of counsel on behalf of certain taxpayers of Fairfield county, and referring the cause to J. E. McDonald, Esq., to take the testimony upon the issue in the case, including the question raised on the motion for intervention, and the affidavit in support thereof, and "report the same, with his findings of fact and his conclusions of law upon all issues in the case." The cause is an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage of certain real estate in Fairfield county, brought by the mortgagee against the mort-gator and a subsequent purchaser from him. The breach alleged is a covenant in the mortgage to pay or tender the taxes assessed against the mortgaged premises for the year 1900. The answer denies the breach, and with particularity sets out the history and legislation of the revenue bond scrip of the state, and a tender of the amount of the taxes due—a portion in money and a portion in revenue bond scrip. The cause was by consent referred by the clerk to Hunter A. Gibbes, Esq., as special referee, to take the testimony and report the facts, and was heard upon the report of the referee and testimony at February term, 1903, of the court of common pleas for Fairfield county by his honor Judge Dantzler, then presiding in the Sixth Circuit, who took the case under advisement, with a view of rendering and filing his decree subsequent thereto. After the final adjournment of the court of common pleas for Fairfield county, which occurred on February 28, 1903, and before any decree had been rendered, a motion, upon notice supported by affidavit, was made before Judge Dantzler at Yorkville, upon the hearing of which he granted the order from which the plaintiff appeals to this court upon the exceptions set out in the record.

The third exception was abandoned at the hearing. The other exceptions practically raise three questions: (1) Want of jurisdiction to grant the order at the time and place it was granted; (2) error in granting new trial, and want of jurisdiction in granting the same at the time and place it was granted; and (3) error in reopening the whole case and referring it to McDonald, referee. These questions will be considered in their order.

It appears that while the order appealed from was granted at chambers, without the county of Fairfield, and after the adjournment of the February term of the court of common pleas for that county, it was nevertheless granted by the judge who had the cause under advisement after a hearing in court in the proper county, and before any decree had been filed in the cause. Under such circumstances, the judge who heard the cause had jurisdiction to make any order he deemed proper in the cause. Hellams v. Prior, 64 S. C. 543, 43 S. E. 25; State v. Fullmore, 47 S. C. 84, 24 S. E. 1028.

The fact that the order, in terms, grants a new trial, cannot affect the question, for the reason that a new trial presupposes the rendition of a judgment, which, as we have seen, had not been done in this case. Hellams v. Prior, supra. For this reason, the cases cited by appellants are not in point.

Under the authority of Lowndes v. Miller, 25 S. C. 122, Hellams v. Prior, supra, Bank v. Fennell, 55 S. C. 379, 33 S. E. 485, and Muckenfuss v. Fishburne, 65 S. E. 573, 44 S. E. 77, after hearing, and before filing decree in an equity cause, the judge has power at chambers, in a county other than the one in which the action is pending, to grant an order bringing in new parties defendant, and recommitting or referring the cause. Whether the judge would refer the whole case, or only refer or recommit for further testimony, is matter addressed to the discretion of the court, as matter of administration, for the purpose of preparing and speeding a hearing of the cause upon its merits. It determines no rights or issues. It does not involve the merits, and does not affect any substantial right, which in effect determines the action and prevents a judgment. An appeal from such an order will not be entertained unless it operates to deny to a litigant a mode of trial to which he is entitled by law, or unless the order is assailed for want of jurisdiction. Muckenfuss v. Fishburne, 65 S. C. 574, 44 S. E. 77. This is an equity cause. It is not excepted by appellants that the order operates to deny plaintiff the mode of trial to which it is entitled by law. As we have seen, the judge had jurisdiction to grant the order.

It follows that the exceptions must be overruled, and the order appealed from affirmed. It is the judgment of the court that the exceptions are overruled, and the order appealed from is affirmed.

RICHMOND PASSENGER & POWER CO. v. GORDON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 10, 1904.)

STREET RAILROADS—CROSSING ACCIDENT—NEGLIGENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—ERROR.

1. In an action against a street railroad for personal injuries by being struck by an electric car while driving across defendant's tracks, the plaintiff is entitled to recover where the motorman could have avoided the accident by the use of ordinary care after he saw, or by the use of ordinary care might have seen, that the plaintiff was on, or very near, the track, and driving towards it, and was in danger of being struck by the car, though the plaintiff was guilty of want of ordinary care in attempting to cross the tracks.

2. In an action against a street railroad for personal injuries by being struck by an electric car while driving across defendant's tracks, where there is evidence that the case comes within the general rule as to contributory negligence, and also that the case comes within the exception to the rule, it is error to refuse a charge requested by defendant that there can be no recovery where the accident was caused by the concurrent negligence of the motorman and the plaintiff, due to each failing to keep a proper lookout.

3. A charge that it is not negligence, as a matter of law, to omit to look and listen for cars when one is about to cross the tracks of a street railway, but the question is "whether a man of ordinary prudence exercising ordinary care and prudence would have thought it unnecessary to do so," contains a proper definition of ordinary care.

4. Where the evidence in an action against a street railroad for personal injuries by being struck by a car while driving across defendant's track raised the questions of negligence and contributory negligence, a charge correctly stating the law as to the burden of proof on those questions cannot be regarded as abstract, or as tending to mislead the jury.

Error to Law and Equity Court of City of Richmond.

Henry Taylor, Jr., for appellant. Meredith & Cocke, for appellee.

BUCHANAN, J. This action was instituted by John W. Gordon to recover damages for injuries done him at a street crossing in the city of Richmond by the alleged negligent running of an electric street railway car operated by the Richmond Passenger & Power Company.

Upon the trial of the cause the plaintiff asked for eight instructions, and the defendant for three. All the instructions asked for were given as asked, or with such modifications as the court saw proper to make. No objections are made here to instructions numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, and 8 given for the plaintiff, nor to instruction "a" given for the defendant. The assignments of error chiefly relied on are the giving of the plaintiff's instruction No. 7, and the refusal of the court to give the defendant's instructions "b" and "c" as asked, and in giving them as modified by the court.

The following is a copy of instruction No. 7:

"If the jury find that the plaintiff was guilty of want of reasonable and ordinary care in attempting to cross the tracks of the defendant under the circumstances referred to, then he is not entitled to recover, unless they believe from the evidence that the motorman could have avoided the accident by the use of ordinary care after he saw, or by the use of ordinary care might have seen, that the plaintiff was on the track, or very near thereto, and driving towards the same, and was in danger of being struck by the car; and, if they shall so believe, then they must find for the plaintiff."

The objection made to that instruction is, first, that there was no evidence to show that the motorman could have avoided the accident by the exercise of ordinary care after he saw the plaintiff's peril; and, second, that the proposition that they must find for the plaintiff if the jury believed that the motorman might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have seen the plaintiff's peril, and avoided the accident, is not law.

There is no evidence that after the motorman saw the plaintiff's danger he could have avoided the accident; but there is evidence tending to prove that, if the motorman had been exercising ordinary care as his car approached the crossing, he could have seen the plaintiff's peril in time to have prevented the injury. There is evidence tending to show that the plaintiff, as he drove along Floyd avenue towards the crossing where that avenue intersects Harrison or Beech street, stopped or checked the one-horse vehicle in which he, his wife, and son were riding about 40 feet from the crossing at the time a north-bound street car crossed Floyd avenue, and that he then proceeded towards the crossing; that the north-bound car passed the car going south, which did the injury, from 60 to 75 feet north of Floyd avenue; that from that point there was nothing to prevent the motorman on the south-bound car from seeing the plaintiff's vehicle as it approached the street car track; that from the point where the cars passed each other to the point where the plaintiff's vehicle was struck was 100 feet or more; that a car running at the rate of 6 or 7 miles an hour, as the motorman said his car was running, could, under favorable circumstances, be stopped in about a car length, which was shown to be about 35 feet, and that the car was actually stopped in about 45 feet after the motorman saw the plaintiff's vehicle. This evidence was sufficient to justify the court in giving the instruction in question, under a long line of decisions of this court.

In the case of R. & D. R. R. Co. v. Anderson, 31 Grat. 812, 31 Am. Rep. 750, decided a quarter of a century ago, it was held, Judge Burks delivering the opinion of the court, that, though the plaintiff may have been guilty of negligence, and although that negligence may in fact have contributed to the accident, yet if the defendant could in the result, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, have avoided the mischief which happened, the plaintiff's negligence will not excuse the defendant. To sustain the conclusion reached in that case the learned judge approved and followed the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Radley v. London, etc., Ry. Co., 1 App. Cases (Law Rep. 1875-76), 754, 759, which cites and affirms Davies v. Mann, 10 M. & W. 545, and Tuff v. Warman, 5 C. B. N. S. 578.

In the case of Marks, etc., v. Petersburg R. R. Co., 88 Va. 1, 10, 13 S. E. 299, which was an action for damages for causing the death of a traveler at a street crossing by the defendant railroad company's cars, it was said by Judge Lewis, in discussing the subject of contributory negligence: "If a person attempts to cross a railroad at a highway crossing without using his senses of sight and hearing, even though the company be negligent, the law, as well as common prudence, condemns his act as careless. But this is a mere presumption, which may be repelled by evidence showing that the case is within one or more of the exceptions to the general rule before mentioned. In the absence of such evidence, however, the contributory negligence of such person, when injured, will preclude a recovery, unless the company might, by the exercise of ordinary care on its part, have avoided the consequences of the plaintiff's negligence." "This qualification of the doctrine of contributory negligence," he continues, "is laid down in the leading case of Tuff v. Warman, 2 C. B.

(N. S.) 740, and so often recognized by this court." After citing a number of the decisions of this court, he adds: "Applying this test to the present case, we are of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, for it is manifest that ordinary care on the part of the defendant could not have discovered the negligence of the deceased in time to avoid the accident."

In the case of the Seaboard, etc., R. R. Co. v. Joyner, 92 Va. 354, 23 S. E. 773, this court, in considering the question of the duty of a railroad company to avoid injuring a trespasser, said: "The law upon this subject is, we think, properly stated in the ninety-ninth section of Shearman & Redfield on the law of Negligence (4th Ed.), where it is said that: 'The plaintiff should recover, notwithstanding his own negligence exposed him to the risk of injury, if the injury of which he complains was proximately caused by the omission of the defendant, after having such notice of the plaintiff's danger as would put a prudent man on his guard, to use ordinary care for the purpose of avoiding such injury. It is not necessary that the defendant should actually know of the danger to which the plaintiff is exposed. It is enough if he have sufficient notice or belief to put a prudent man on the alert, and he does not take such precautions as a prudent man would take under similar notice or belief.'" To the same effect is Tucker's Case, in 92 Va. 549, 24 S. E. 229, and Dunnaway's, in 93 Va. 29, 36, 37, 24 S. E. 698.

In the case of B. & O. R. R. Co. v. Few's Ex'r, 94 Va. 82, 89, 26 S. E. 406, it was held that a railroad company is liable for a personal injury inflicted on a traveler at a public crossing if its agents or servants in charge of a moving train saw him in a position of danger, or by the use of diligence might have seen him, and failed to stop the train, and prevent it from injuring him.

In Blankenship's Case, 94 Va. 449, 457, 27 S. E. 20, 22, it was said in discussing this question and explaining what was meant by certain language used in Dunnaway's Case, supra, that: "By the use of the language 'when the trespasser is discovered, or by ordinary care and caution might have been discovered,' it was not intended to say that under ordinary conditions it was the duty of the railroad company to keep a lookout for trespassers (for the question was not involved in that case), but to declare, where it had such notice or belief that some one might be in danger as ought to put a prudent man on the alert, it became the company's duty to be on the lookout, and it might be held responsible for injuries done a trespasser under such circumstances, not only after his danger was discovered, but where, by ordinary care and caution, it might have been discovered, unless it did all that could be done to avoid injuring him consistently with its higher duties to others."

In Washington, etc., R. Co. v. Lacy, 94

Va. 460, 476, 26 S. E. 834, 839, which was also a street crossing case, it was said, after declaring what the duty of a traveler was in approaching a street crossing over which a steam railroad was operated, that: "If he fails to use these necessary precautions, and injury ensues, he cannot recover, unless the defendant company, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, might have prevented the injury after it discovered, or ought to have discovered, his peril."

In C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Rodgers, 100 Va. 324, 325, 41 S. E. 732, where the party injured was walking on the defendant company's track at a point where persons were accustomed to walk, it was held that in such a case a defendant was liable for the injury inflicted upon the plaintiff, notwithstanding the latter's negligence, if, by the exercise of reasonable care, the plaintiff's danger could have been discovered in time to save him.

Richmond, P. & P. Co. v. Steger, 101 Va. —, 43 S. E. 612, and Richmond Traction Co. v. Martin's Adm'r, 102 Va. —, 45 S. E. 886, are to the same effect. In the last-named case, decided at the December term, 1903, it was said by Judge Whittle, speaking for the court, that: "The well-known rule in this class of cases is that a plaintiff seeking to recover damages for an injury caused by the negligence of the defendant must himself be free from negligence, and, if it appears that his negligence has contributed as an efficient cause to the injury of which he complains, the court will not undertake to balance the negligence of the respective parties for the purpose of determining which was most at fault. The law recognizes no gradations of fault in such case, and, where both parties have been guilty of negligence, as a general rule, there can be no recovery. There is really no distinction between negligence in the plaintiff and negligence in the defendant, except that the negligence of the former is called 'contributory negligence.'

"The general rule adverted to is subject, however, to the qualification that, where the negligence of the defendant is the proximate cause of the injury, and that of the plaintiff only the remote cause, the plaintiff may recover, notwithstanding his negligence; the doctrine in that respect being that the law regards the immediate or proximate cause which directly produces the injury, and not the remote cause which may have antecedently contributed to it. From that principle arises the well-established exception to the general rule that if, after the defendant knew, or, in the exercise of ordinary care, ought to have known, of the negligence of the plaintiff, it could have avoided the accident, but failed to do so, the plaintiff can recover. In such case the subsequent negligence of the defendant in failing to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring the plaintiff becomes the immediate or proximate and efficient cause of the accident, which intervenes between the accident and the more remote negligence of the plaintiff."

These cases establish the doctrine that, where a railroad company or a street railway company knows or has reason to believe that persons are likely to be on their tracks at a particular point, such company owes two duties to such persons: First, to keep a lookout in approaching such point; and, second, to avoid injury when it sees such persons in peril, if it can be done by the exercise of ordinary care. And if it fails to keep such lookout, and thereby fails to see such persons' peril, and inflicts injury, it cannot escape liability on that ground, but its liability will depend not upon what it actually knew, but upon what it would have known if it had performed its duty in keeping a proper lookout. And this seems to be the rule generally.

Shearman & Redfield, in their work on Negligence (section 484, 5th Ed.), say that: "The rule that a plaintiff is as a matter of law negligent if he fails to see what he was bound to look for and ought to have seen, is rigidly enforced; and the same rule must, in common justice, be applied to the defendant. And in fact it actually is in almost every court where the question is squarely presented." And in section 485c they say that: "The operator of a street car, especially if it is impelled by cable or electric power, is bound to keep a constant watch for persons and vehicles on the street; and although he is not bound to anticipate that foot passengers will attempt to cross otherwise than at regular crossings, and therefore need not maintain quite the same degree of vigilance elsewhere, he is always responsible for failing to see even persons crossing at other places, if he would have seen them, had he been in the exercise of ordinary care. The rule exempting railroads from responsibility where trainmen do not in fact see a person on the track * * * certainly applies only against trespassers, and therefore does not apply to city streets or street cars."

The court did not err in giving the instruction in question.

Instruction "b," as offered, is as follows:

"The court further instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that John W. Gordon slowed down his horse when about forty feet from the track to allow the north-bound car to pass, and shall further believe from the evidence that after the north-bound car had passed he quickened the pace of his horse, and shall further believe that in the exercise of reasonable care, by looking or listening, he could have seen or heard the car approaching before getting into a position of danger, and failed to so ascertain the approach of the car, and that he thereby contributed to the accident, they must find for the defendant."

Instruction "b," as offered, stated the general rule on the subject of contributory negligence, but failed to state the exception to it. In that respect it was amended by the court. As offered, it was in conflict with instruction No. 7, which, as we have seen, was properly given. There was no error either in refusing to give instruction "b" as offered or in giving it as modified by the court.

Instruction "c," as asked for by the defendant, was in the following words:

"The court further instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that this accident was caused by the concurrent negligence of the motorman and of John W. Gordon, due to each failing to keep a proper lookout, they must find for the defendant."

If the proximate cause of the injury was the negligence of both plaintiff and defendant concurring and co-operating together, then the general rule as to contributory negligence, and not the exception to the rule, applied, and the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Beach on Contributory Negligence, § 56.

The defendant therefore had the right to have that theory or view of the case submitted to the jury. Where there is evidence tending to prove that the case comes within the general rule as to contributory negligence, and also evidence tending to prove that the case comes within the exception to that rule, each party has the right to have his theory or view of the case presented to the jury by proper instructions. If any authority were needed for this statement, it will be found in the case of Richmond Traction Co. v. Martin's Adm'x, supra.

The court therefore erred in refusing to give instruction "c" as offered, which presented the defendant's theory of the case, and which, if sustained by the evidence, would have entitled it to a verdict.

In the modified form in which the court gave it it was clearly erroneous. If the proximate and efficient cause of the accident was the concurrent negligence of both parties, the plaintiff could not bring himself within the exception to the general rule, and he was not entitled to recover.

Instruction No. 1, as given by the court, is as follows:

"The jury are instructed that travelers may walk, ride, or drive either across or along a street railway track just as freely as upon any other part of the street, so long as they do not obstruct the cars, or carelessly expose themselves to danger. And while, generally speaking, one who is about to cross a street railway should both look and listen for cars, this is not an inflexible rule, nor is it to be enforced with any such strictness as in cases of an ordinary steam railway. It is not negligence as a matter of law to omit to do so. The question is whether men of ordinary prudence, exercising ordinary care and prudence, would have thought it unnecessary to do so."

The last sentence of this instruction is criticised as not correctly stating the rule by which the jury might determine whether or not the plaintiff exercised ordinary care in approaching the street car crossing. The language used varies somewhat from the usual statement of the rule as to what constitutes ordinary care. It is difficult, if not impossible, to frame a definition of "ordinary care" which will be perfectly clear and accurate. But the definition given in the instruction does not differ in substance from that usually given in such cases, and the jury could not have been misled by it.

Objection is also made to instruction No. 6, which is as follows:

"The jury are instructed that the burden is on the plaintiff to prove the negligence of the defendant company as charged in the declaration; and that, if the defendant relies on the contributory negligence of the plaintiff as a defense, the burden is on the defendant to prove such contributory negligence, unless it is disclosed by the plaintiff's evidence, or may be fairly inferred from all the circumstances of the case; and in the absence of such proof and inferences from the circumstances the plaintiff is presumed to have been without fault."

It is conceded that this instruction (No. 6) correctly states the law as an abstract proposition, but it is insisted that the court erred in giving it because it had no application to the facts of this case.

The case before the jury was one involving the questions of negligence and contributory negligence. An instruction which correctly stated to the jury upon whom the burden of proof was in such a case cannot be regarded as erroneous, or as tending to mislead the jury.

It is unnecessary to consider the remaining assignment of error that the verdict is against the evidence, as the judgment will have to be reversed, the verdict set aside, and a new trial awarded for the error committed by the court in refusing to give instruction "c," as offered, and in giving it as amended by the court.

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. GLENN'S ADM'R.
GLENN'S ADM'R v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 10, 1904.)

TRUSTEE—COMPENSATION—ILLEGAL ALLOWANCE—INTEREST—APPEAL—PARTIES—STATUTE—MANDATE—MISNOMER.

1. Where a mandate of the Supreme Court of Appeals provides that the directions to the lower court contained therein shall be so carried out as not to conflict with the written opinion of the court, and, through inadvertence, names the person affected thereby as W. W. Glenn, as appears from a reading of the written opinion, in which the correct name of the person affected is shown to be John Glenn, the action of the lower court in making the mandate operative against John Glenn is not an amendment, but a construction, of the mandate.

2. Where a recital in a mandate of the Supreme Court of Appeals of the name of a person affected thereby was unnecessary, an inadvertent misnomer therein of such person will not vitiate the mandate as to the person intended to be named—the correct name appearing in the written opinion in the cause—but the name will be treated as surplusage.

3. Under Code 1887, § 8454, declaring that any person who is a party to any case in chancery wherein there is a decree or order adjudicating the principles of the cause, who thinks himself aggrieved thereby, may present a petition for an appeal from such decree or order, an appellant can only be one who is a party to the suit in the court below, and presents a petition for an appeal from such decree.

4. Where parties stand on distinct and unconnected grounds, their rights being separate and not equally affected by the same decree, the appeal of one on behalf of others will not bring up for adjudication the rights or claims of any but the one appellant.

5. Where a trustee, under a reasonable belief that his right to extra compensation which he retained out of the receipts would never be an after-subject of controversy, continued in the faithful discharge of his duties for many years, and until his death, when appeals from the decrees of the court allowing the extra compensation resulted in requiring the amount to be returned to the trust on the admission of another party into the case as assignee of claims represented by counsel, who had, along with the court and the commissioner, assured the trustee that the extra compensation was justly his, interest will not be required to be paid thereon from the estate of the deceased trustee.

Buchanan and Cardwell, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Henrico County.

Proceedings between the Southern Railway Company and John Glenn's administrator. From a decree permitting other creditors than one successfully appealing to participate in the benefit of the decision, the administrator appeals. Reversed. From a decree denying interest on extra compensation illegally retained by the administrator's decedent, the railway company appeals. Affirmed.

Munford, Hunton, Williams & Anderson, for railway company. McGuire & Riely, Chas. U. Williams, Chas. Biddle, and B. E. L. Marshall, for administrator.

HARRISON, J. These two appeals are from decrees in the same cause, and have been heard together here. They are the sequel to the cause of Southern Railway Company v. Glenn's Administrator, etc., decided by this court in June, 1900, 96 Va. 309, 36 S. E. 395.

For present purposes the facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of this court on the former appeal, and therefore need not be repeated. It was there decided that certain commissions allowed John Glenn, trustee, were in excess of his legal right, and for that error the decree complained of was reversed, and the cause remanded to the circuit court, with directions to disallow such additional compensation in settling the accounts of the trustee, as to the appellants in that cause.

In the mandate of this court on the former appeal, the name of the trustee was inadvertently and erroneously recited as W. W.

Glenn, instead of John Glenn. It is contended that this error renders the mandate void as against the estate of John Glenn, trustee; that for the circuit court to make the mandate operative against the estate of the trustee, John Glenn, would be for that court to amend the mandate of this court, which it has no power to do.

It is not competent for the circuit court to amend or correct the mandate of this court. We are ourselves powerless to amend or correct our own mandate after the term at which it was rendered has passed, and the time for a rehearing has expired. The question involved, however, is not the right of the court to amend, but its power to construe the mandate and declare its meaning. From a casual reading of the mandate, it is manifest that the recital of the name of the trustee was wholly unnecessary. The presence of the name of W. W. Glenn in the mandate takes nothing from its force. The order would have been complete and effective without it. The name W. W. Glenn may therefore be regarded as surplusage which does not vitiate that which is otherwise good. Broom's Legal Maxims (7th Ed.) p. 626; Lavery v. Moore, 33 N. Y. 663; Campbell v. Ayres, 6 Iowa, 339. The mandate provides that the directions to the lower court contained therein shall be so carried out as not to conflict with the written opinion of this court. This practically makes the opinion a part of the mandate, and, when the opinion is looked to, the meaning of the mandate is free from all doubt and difficulty. It there clearly appears that John Glenn was the trustee who had claimed and received the extra compensation, and the only trustee before the court when the additional compensation was allowed. The mandate and opinion, read together, further clearly show that it was the extra commissions allowed John Glenn, trustee, that were disallowed as to the claim of the appellants. Under these circumstances, it was not error in the circuit court to treat the misnomer as a mere clerical error, not affecting the substance of the mandate, which was clear and specific in its directions with respect to the disallowance of the extra commissions as to the appellants.

The administrator of John Glenn, late trustee, further assigns as error the action of the circuit court in holding that the term "appellants," as used in the opinion and mandate of this court on the former appeal, embraced not only the Southern Railway Company, but all those creditors in whose behalf it claimed to sue. It is contended by counsel for the creditors that the expression "appellants in this cause" was intended to embrace, and did embrace, all of the creditors of the National Express & Transportation Company enumerated in the decree dated April 8, 1895, except the personal representative of W. W. Glenn, deceased, the Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore Railroad Company, and the First National Bank of Charleston; it being insisted that all of said creditors were appellants on the former appeal, and entitled to participate in the benefits of the decision then made.

If this court had intended to order a general accounting for the benefit of all the creditors mentioned, its decree should have directed that the estate of the late trustee be required to account for all the extra compensation he had received, and return the same to the trust fund for the benefit of the creditors generally. This was not done. On the contrary, the opinion and mandate on the former appeal expressly limit the benefits of the decree then made to the appellants in that cause. Therefore the question presented for our present consideration is, who were the appellants before this court on the former appeal?

The petition presented on the former appeal, which alone determines who were appellants, is in the name of the Southern Railway Company, suing for itself and in behalf of all other creditors of the defendant company. At the conclusion of the petition, immediately following the usual prayer for an appeal, is this statement: "The petitioners as above mentioned (except John M. Glenn, personal representative of W. W. Glenn, deceased, the Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore Railroad Company, and the First National Bank of Charleston), being all the creditors enumerated in the last decree of dividends, to wit, that of April, 1885, by the Southern Railway Company, suing for itself and in their behalf."

The doctrine of parties by representation, and other rules of equity practice with respect to parties, are relied on and have been much discussed by counsel. These rules have, however, no application in determining who are appellants in a cause pending before this court. The benefit of appeal is a purely statutory right. When parties come to this court to have reviewed the action of a lower court, their only warrant for doing so is the statute, and its terms must be strictly complied with. Section 3454 of the Code of 1887 declares that any person who is a party to any case in chancery wherein there is a decree or order adjudicating the principles of the cause, who thinks himself aggrieved thereby, may present a petition for an appeal from such decree or order. The person referred to in this statute has been decided to be such person as was a party to the suit in the court below, and who was aggrieved by the decree therein rendered; and, to make him a proper party to an appeal, these two circumstances must concur. Barton's Chancery Practice, p. 167, § 42; Supervisors of Culpeper v. Gorrell, etc., 20 Grat. 484-520.

A person desiring an appeal must present his petition therefor, accompanied by a copy of the record, to this court in session, or to one of the judges thereof. Whether or not an appeal be taken, rests entirely with the party affected by the decree of the lower court. No person can be forced by another party to the same suit to appeal against his will; hence the petition must show, by name, the parties who claim to be aggrieved by the decree complained of, and who desire to have such decree reviewed. Where there are a number of parties affected by the same decree, and they all desire to appeal, it is not necessary for each to present a separate petition. They can all unite by their respective names in one petition, and show thereby wherein each is aggrieved. A party can only show that he is aggrieved by joining in the petition. An appellant, therefore, is one who has presented his petition to this court for an appeal, showing that he is aggrieved, or has united with others in an appeal setting forth his grievance, by pointing out the error of the lower court. The rights of persons who have not appealed, and, indeed, who are not technically parties to the proceedings in the court below, may sometimes be finally determined by the judgment of this court; but that arises where the parties appealing and those not appealing stand upon the same ground, and their rights are involved in the same question, the decision of which must of necessity affect all alike. Where, however, the parties, as in the case at bar, stand upon distinct and unconnected grounds—where their rights are separate, and not equally affected by the same decree or judgment—then the appeal of one will not bring up for adjudication the rights or claims of the others. Barton's Ch. Pr. p. 167, § 42; Walker's Ex'r v. Paige, 21 Grat. 636.

Parties not named cannot become appellants by virtue of a petition in the name of one person on behalf of himself and a number of others whose names are not mentioned. The only appellant in such a case is the person whose name appears in the petition. Those not named, on whose behalf the petition professes to be presented, are not recognized as appellants. This plainly appears from the writ issued by the experienced clerk of this court, wherein the appellee is summoned to answer the Southern Railway Company, "as to whom manifest error is said to have intervened to its damage, as shown by its petition. And whereas the Southern Railway Company upon its petition has obtained an appeal upon condition of its giving bond," etc. It is essential, as already seen, that the party appealing should be aggrieved, and the petition must set forth that grievance. This court must know at the time it makes its decree the names of the parties aggrieved, and the appellee is entitled to know against whom he is to defend, and to whom he is to look for the payment of costs in the event the appeal is decided against the appellant.

On the former appeal the name of the Southern Railway Company alone appears as petitioner, and it alone claims to be aggrieved by the decree of the lower court. If the decree complained of on the former appeal had been affirmed, there could have been no judgment for costs against any other party than the Southern Railway Company, and yet it is insisted that there were a large number of other persons who were appellants. This cannot be. If they would not have been responsible for the burdens, they cannot claim the benefits. There must be no uncertainty as to who are appellants, and hence those persons only who appear by name in the petition to this court can be recognized as such. Otherwise, upon a successful appeal, all would then wish to be treated as appellants, whereas, in case of failure, all would seek to avoid the consequences of defeat.

We are of opinion that the Southern Railway Company was the only appellant before this court on the former appeal, and therefore it was the only creditor entitled to the benefits flowing from that decision. This court had no jurisdiction, upon the petition and record formerly before it, to reverse the decree of the lower court in favor of creditors who did not appear as appellants, and its decree was not intended for their benefit.

The Southern Railway Company assigns as error the action of the circuit court in holding that the estate of John Glenn, the late trustee, was not chargeable with interest on the several amounts received by him as extra or additional commissions from the time such sums came into his hands until repaid into court in this cause.

The general rule undoubtedly is that he who has the use of another's money must pay interest upon it from the time he receives it until he repays it, unless there be an agreement, express or implied, to the contrary. Craufurd's Adm'r v. Smith's Ex'r, 93 Va. 623, 23 S. E. 235, 25 S. E. 657. This rule is not, however, in equity, enforced without discrimination in every case. On the former appeal one of the claims of creditors was that the trustee should be charged interest on balances retained in his hands, upon the semiannual settlement of his accounts, because the decree under which he was acting required him to pay any balances in his hands into the Planters' National Bank, to the credit of the court in the cause. This court held that the settlements of the trustee, reported to the court from time to time, showed that these balances had not been paid over as required; that no objection appeared to have been made to the action of the trustee in retaining in his hands such balances, but that during the many years the trustee was executing the trust, and until his death, the parties, as well as the commissioners who settled the accounts, and the court which approved and confirmed them, seem to have concurred in the trustee's construction of the decree; and that he was not chargeable with interest on said balances. The extra or additional commissions were retained by the trustee under the express authority of decrees which declared that they were lawfully his. It is true that in the beginning the allowance of the extra commissions was objected to by one of the counsel for the creditors. This same counsel, however, in his deposition in the cause, says that he did not appeal from the decree allowing the commissions, because he wished the trustee to be fully compensated. For a number of years after the decree allowing the commissions was entered, the trustee made regular semi-annual settlements of his accounts, retaining the extra commissions without further question from any quarter. No one can read the record without being impressed with the general acquiescence by all parties in that allowance, nor fail to see that the trustee was thereby lulled into the belief that the extra commission was his, and that no further question would be raised on that subject. We concur in the views so well expressed by the learned judge of the circuit court in disposing of this question. He says: "The Court of Appeals (98 Va. 320, 36 S. E. 395) has, una voce, approved the action of this court in rejecting a claim against the trustee for interest which had far higher merits than the claim for interest on these retained commissions. That claim was for interest on amounts reported by the trustee as in his hands, and not deposited, as he was authorized and required to do, to the credit of the court, in bank. This is a claim for interest upon moneys retained by the trustee under the authority of the court. That authority the Court of Appeals, after the lapse of many years, has said was not properly exercised, but nevertheless, until superseded or reversed, the trustee was authorized to regard his retention of these commissions as lawful and right. Not only this, but, while he was admonished that the right of the court to allow this extra compensation was made matter of question by a slumbering exception upon the record, he was assured all the time that, in the opinion of the court and counsel and commissioner, these extra commissions were, ex sequo et bono, his well-earned due. One of the counsel for all the creditors, Colonel Marshall, was pronouncedly of opinion that this extra allowance was not only equitably, but legally, his property. The only other counsel for creditors, the late Mr. Howard, who filed the exception to its allowance, in his deposition filed in this cause, states that he did not appeal from the court's action in allowing such compensation, because he wished the trustee to be fully compensated. Under a reasonable belief that his right to this extra compensation would never be an after-subject of controversy, the trustee continued in the faithful and efficient discharge of the duties of his trust until his death. And not until after his death, and the admission into the case of another party, the Southern Railway Company, as assignee of claims which had been heretofore, all through the progress of this litigation, represented by Col. Marshall and Mr. Howard, was there any suggestion of purpose to appeal from the decrees of this court."

The administration of this trust has involved a magnitude of labor and responsibility that rarely falls to the lot of a fiduciary. The collection and disbursement of its widely scattered assets has made necessary hundreds of suits all over the country. This cause, in which the trust has been administered under the guidance of a court of equity, has extended over many years. The counsel who, from the beginning until a comparatively recent date, represented all of the creditors, have passed away. The learned and venerable judge who has throughout all these years presided over this litigation has, since the decrees now under review, sought retirement from a lifetime of judicial labor. This court has, by its former decision, awarded the Southern Railway Company its legal right, in requiring the estate of the late trustee to account for its proportionate share of the extra commissions retained. To allow the appellant now, under the facts and circumstances to which we have alluded, interest upon these several sums, would be a measure of relief not demanded by the law, and which would, in our opinion, result in great injustice to the trustee's estate.

In the view we have thus far taken of the case, it becomes unnecessary to consider other questions raised and elaborately discussed before this court.

For these reasons, the decrees complained of must be reversed in so far as they hold that any other creditor of the defendant express company than the Southern Railway Company is entitled to participate in the results of the former decision of this court, and in all other respects such decrees will be affirmed, with costs to the administrator of John Glenn, deceased, as the party substantially prevailing.

BUCHANAN, J. (dissenting). I concur in the opinion of the court, except in so far as it holds that the Southern Railway Company is not entitled to interest on its pro rata share of the moneys improperly retained by Glenn, trustee, on account of commissions for his services. Upon that question I dissent.

It was determined by this court upon the former appeal (Southern Ry. Co. v. Glenn's Adm'r, 98 Va. 309, 36 S. E. 395) that the action of the lower court in allowing commissions to the trustee for his services beyond those provided by the deed of trust was unauthorized and illegal, except as to the creditors who assented to or acquiesced in such allowance. The railway company, or its predecessors in interest, having objected to such allowances when made, and having succeeded in having the decrees making them reversed and annulled, and its right established to its pro rata share thereof, I know of no rule of law by which that company can be denied interest on the principal sum thus declared to be due it. Upon the former appeal it was held that it had not lost its rights by acquiescence, or by not appealing earlier than it did. If the objections made to such allowance in the year 1886 or 1887, and continued from time to time, in one form or another, until the decrees making them were reversed and annulled, were sufficient to preserve its right to the principal sum to which it was entitled, I am unable to see why they were not sufficient to preserve its right to interest thereon.

The courts of this state, with some aid from the Legislature, have established the doctrine that it is natural justice that he who has the use of another's money should pay interest on it. 4 Minor's Inst. 819, and cases cited; Templeton v. Fauntleroy, 3 Rand. 436, 446, 447; Ross' Ex'r v. McLaughlin's Adm'r, 7 Grat. 86.

The fact that the trustee held the money under orders of court, made over the railway company's objection and in violation of its rights, which were afterwards reversed so far as they affected the railway company, cannot, in my judgment, affect the question of the right of the railway company to interest, any more than it can affect its right to the principal. Having succeeded, after long protracted and hotly contested litigation, in establishing its right to its pro rata share of the overpaid commissions, it seems to me that it is entitled to have interest on that sum during the many years the trustee has deprived it of the use thereof by improperly withholding the money and resisting its payment.

COLIN v. WELLFORD.

BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS—WITHDRAWING MEMBER—INSOLVENCY—COMPROMISE OF CLAIM.

1. A withdrawing member of a building association which was insolvent at the time notice of withdrawal was given, though no legal steps had been taken to wind up its affairs, and whose insolvency, though in fact existing, was not then notorious, does not by the act of withdrawal become a creditor entitled to satisfaction before other members, nor does an agreement entered into between himself and the association, compromising his claim, change his status.

Appeal from Chancery Court of Richmond.

Petition of one Colin against one Wellford, receiver of the United Banking & Trust Company, for allowance of claim. From a decree denying the prayer of petitioner, he appeals. Affirmed.

Legh R. Page, for appellant. B. Rand. Wellford, for appellee.

KEITH, P. The record in this case discloses the following state of facts: The appellant was the owner of certain certificates of installment and prepaid stock in the United Banking & Trust Company, and, in the exercise of his right under the charter and by-laws of the company, on the 25th of January, 1901, he gave written notice of the withdrawal of his certificates of stock, which notice was duly served on the company, and accepted by it as sufficient and regular in every respect. On the 28th of March, 1891, 60 days (the period required under the by-laws) having expired, he made demand upon the company for the sum due him, and was promised payment at an early day. The promise was not kept. He was put off from time to time, and on or about the 22d of May, 1901, was informed that the board of directors rejected his demand for the payment of his claim in full, and offered $4,006.75 in compromise and settlement, to be paid in 13 monthly installments, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum. This proposition was accepted by appellant, and, upon the receipt of the obligations of the company, as provided by the settlement, he surrendered his certificates of stock, which were marked "cancelled and withdrawn," and appellant's name was stricken from the books of the company as a shareholder. The first of the 13 monthly installments was paid at maturity, but before the second became due a bill was filed to wind up the affairs of the company, and on the same day receivers were appointed, who refused further payment to appellant.

In July, 1902, appellant filed his petition, asking to be placed upon the footing of a creditor of the company for the amount of the 12 matured and unpaid obligations above referred to, and the matter was referred to a commissioner, who reported adversely to appellant's claim. The exceptions to that report were overruled by the court, a decree was entered denying the prayer of petitioner, and the case is before us for review.

The report of the commissioner proceeds upon the theory that the company was insolvent at the date of the notice of withdrawal, and the opinion of the learned chancellor is to the same effect. There is a strong presumption in favor of the correctness of this finding of fact on the part of the commissioner, thus approved by the court, and there is nothing in the record to lead us to a contrary conclusion. We shall therefore proceed with the consideration of the case, taking the insolvency of the company, at least as early as January, 1901, as a fact established. The term "insolvency," as here used, has no reference to outside creditors, for there are none, but to the inability of the company to satisfy the demands of its own members.

We have had no adjudication in this state upon the precise question here involved.

In Andrews v. Building Association, 96

Va. 445, 36 S. E. 531, 49 L. R. A. 659, we held that a withdrawing member of a building association does not lose all of his rights and interests as such in the association. Though he is not, strictly speaking, a creditor of the association, he can maintain no suit to recover the withdrawal value of his stock until a fund for its payment has been provided, and until then the act of limitation does not begin to run against his demand. On the other hand, it is the duty of the association to provide such a fund, in accordance with its charter and by-laws, and in default thereof the member may ask the appointment of a receiver, and, it may be, a winding up of the affairs of the association.

In Eastern Building & Loan Ass'n v. Snyder, 98 Va. 710, 37 S. E. 298, it was held that a solvent building association, in the absence of bad faith on its part, is not in default, and cannot be sued by a withdrawing member, until there are funds in the treasury of the association out of which he is entitled to be paid.

We are in this case called upon to define the rights of a withdrawing member of a building association which was insolvent at the time notice of withdrawal was given, though no legal steps had been taken to wind up its affairs, and whose insolvency, though in fact existing, was not then notorious.

As shown in Andrews v. Building Association, supra, the tendency of the English courts, while recognizing that withdrawing members are not creditors of the association in the ordinary sense of the word, has been to allow them a preference over those who have given no withdrawal notice. Sibun v. Pearce, L. R. 44 Ch. Div. 354.

It was held, however, in Re Sunderland, Queen's Bench Div. 24 L. R. 894, that the rule of the company provided only for withdrawal from the societies while they were or were believed to be solvent, and that, therefore, notices of withdrawal which were given or which matured at a time when the societies were known to be insolvent, though before the actual date of the winding-up order in each case, did not entitle the shareholders who had given them to be paid the amount of their subscriptions in priority to other shareholders in the winding-up.

The strong preponderance of the authorities in this country, where insolvency exists, seems to be in accord with the decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Christian's Appeal, 102 Pa. 184. The court said: "While, in a qualified sense, withdrawing stockholders may be considered creditors of the association, their rights, as against those with whom they have been associated, are very different from those of general creditors, whose claims are based wholly on outside transactions. If the association has been prosperous, they have a right, under certain limitations and restrictions, to demand and receive their proportionate share of the accumulated fund; but if bad investments have been made, or losses have been sustained, before actual withdrawal, they must bear their just proportion thereof. * * * But the right of withdrawal, and the extent to which it may be exercised, presupposes that at least a relative proportion of the assets will remain for the benefit of those who continue to be active members of the association.

"When a building association has failed to fulfill the object of its creation, and has become hopelessly insolvent, it cannot be justly or equitably wound up on any other principle than that above suggested. After expenses incident to the administration of its assets are deducted, the general creditors, if any, should be first paid in full, and the residue of the fund should be distributed pro rata among those whose claims are based upon stock of the association, whether they have withdrawn, and hold orders for the withdrawal value thereof, or not. Both classes are equally meritorious, and in marshaling the assets neither is entitled to priority over the other. The claims of each are alike based upon their relation to the association as members thereof; * * * and while it may be true that a stockholder may recover judgment against the corporation, and thus become, in a certain sense, a creditor thereof, he is nevertheless not a creditor within the meaning of our assignment laws."

The doctrine of Christian's Appeal has been quite generally accepted by courts and text-writers. Chapman v. Young, 85 Ill. App. 131; Gibson v. Safety Homestead Ass'n, 170 Ill. 46, 48 N. E. 580, 39 L. R. A. 202; Heimbokel v. National Savings Ass'n, 58 Minn. 340, 59 N. W. 1050, 25 L. R. A. 215, 49 Am. St. Rep. 519; Hohenshell v. Loan Ass'n, 140 Mo. 566, 41 S. W. 948; Rabbitt v. Wilcoxen, 108 Iowa, 35, 72 N. W. 306, 38 L. R. A. 183, 64 Am. St. Rep. 152.

Endlich on Building Associations (2d Ed.) § 108, says:

"The right of withdrawal, however, exists and may be exercised only while the association is a going concern, or the series to which the stock belongs running. It cannot be exercised when the stock has reached par, and the association or series exists only for the purpose of liquidation. Nor, as has been settled in England, can it be exercised where the association is, at the time, known to be insolvent. The provisions for withdrawal are not intended to apply to the latter, any more than to the former case. 'It would be altogether unreasonable to suppose that it was intended, in the event of insolvency, to permit one set of members to escape from liability at the expense of the others. * * * The rule (as to withdrawals) seems * * * not to contemplate any such contingency as a suspension of its business, and therefore only to provide for a withdrawal from the society while it was, or was believed to be, still solvent.' That this doctrine is correct, as far as it goes, is self-evident. But there is no reason why it should not go a step further by omitting the qualification introduced by reference to the notoriety of the fact of insolvency. Apart from the consideration that one who knows the association to be insolvent is guilty of bad faith towards his fellow members when he attempts to get himself paid at their cost, there is every bit as much reason why an actual state of insolvency, though unknown at the date of the giving of a withdrawal notice, should prevent it from becoming effectual. The payment of the claims in the one case, as in the other, would give an unfair advantage to the withdrawing, and entail an undue injury upon the remaining members. Accordingly, it has been decided in Pennsylvania that the fact of insolvency of an association negatives the right of any one to obtain a priority over his fellows by giving notice of withdrawal. "The right of withdrawal presupposes that at least a relative proportion of the assets will remain for the benefit of those who continue to be active members of the association." Whilst, therefore, it has been held that members who had given notice to withdraw, and whose notices had matured before the society's insolvency was manifest or declared, were entitled to stand upon their rights as withdrawing members, even to the detriment of those who had not withdrawn or whose notices had not matured, the better and more logical doctrine would seem to be that the existence of a state of insolvency at the time of the giving of the withdrawal notice, ascertained at any time before actual payment of the claim, renders the notice abortive, and destroys the right to withdraw, or to claim any benefit under the notice already given. This principle does not, of course, invalidate settlements already made in good faith with withdrawing members who have been paid out, nor subject the right of withdrawing members to claim payment, in accordance with the provisions relating to withdrawals, to jeopardy by reason of causes of insolvency arising after notice of withdrawal." Thompson on Building Associations (2d Ed.) p. 289.

It seems, indeed, to be the accepted American doctrine that, when an association is in fact insolvent, a withdrawing member has only the right to a pro rata share in the distribution of its assets. Nor is the situation affected by any assurance given by the officers of the association to the withdrawing member as to the solvency of the society at the date of the notice. The authorities cited establish the principle that, when insolvency exists as a fact, the right of the shareholders to equality in the distribution of the assets attaches, and constitutes a paramount equity in their favor. The fact of insolvency being established, and the right to equality of distribution having attached, it cannot be defeated by a notice of withdrawal upon the part of a member, nor by any dealing between him and the officers of the association which falls short of actual payment.

In Rickert v. Suddard, 80 Ill. App. 204, it was held that "where a member gives notice of his withdrawal, and is paid by a check upon the funds of the association in bank, but before such check is presented for payment the funds of the association are withdrawn and the association itself becomes insolvent, the rights of the holder of the check are to be determined by the solvency of the association at the time that the check was given," and that the insolvency of the association was a question of fact to be determined in the same way as similar questions of fact arising in other causes.

In the Columbus Building Association v. Kriete, 192 Ill. 128, 61 N. E. 510, the withdrawing stockholder has reduced his claim to a judgment, but the court held that this gave him no priority over other stockholders.

Appellant had perfected his notice to withdraw, and, if the association could be treated as a going concern, he should have been paid the full withdrawal value of his certificates. The association declining to pay him in full, he suffered an abatement, and now claims to be entitled to relief by virtue of a compromise entered into between him and his debtor. The principle of equality, as established by the authorities cited, would in any event be fatal to this contention. The principle of equality which defeats the appellant, were he standing alone upon his notice of withdrawal, is sufficient to repel the equity which he asserts, and sufficient to defeat his right to recover by virtue of his so-called compromise, for it strikes at the root of the power of the officers of an insolvent association to create any preference among stockholders in the distribution of its assets. A view of the case may well be taken in which the willingness to compromise may be construed as tending to impair rather than strengthen the position of appellant. The knowledge that there were many other stockholders in like case with himself who had, in advance of action upon his part, given notice of withdrawal, and whose demands had not been satisfied; the fact that there was no money in the treasury of the association which could properly be appropriated in payment of withdrawal claims, and that he was ready to accept in satisfaction of his demand a material abatement of its amount, not to be paid in cash, but in promises to pay in installments distributed over a period of 18 months is persuasive that appellant was aware of the financial condition of the association. As was well said by the learned chancellor in his opinion: "It must have been manifest to Colin, in taking the notes, that there were no funds on hand properly applicable to the discharge of his claim, for the by-laws [of the association], with which Colin must be presumed to have been acquainted, plainly contemplated that these withdrawals should be settled by cash payments made out of funds already in hand, derived from fixed sources, and would not be settled by notes. The very manner in which the notes were made out called attention to the irregularity of the settlement. Colin has obtained an apparent advantage which the principle of mutuality applicable to the distribution of the assets of an insolvent company of this kind do not permit him to hold. These associations partake of the nature of partnerships, and no member can take any advantage over his fellows not clearly legal. The settlement made is not so far executed as to be beyond recall, and Colin can be remitted to his position as stockholder without any injustice to him."

We are of opinion that the decree appealed from should be affirmed.

OLD DOMINION S. S. CO. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 17, 1904.)

TAXATION—STEAMSHIPS—INTERSTATE TRAFFIC—ENROLLMENT OUTSIDE OF STATE.

1. Steamships owned by a foreign corporation, and enrolled outside of the state, and which are used mainly in transporting passengers and freight upon foreign tickets and bills of lading between points in the state to and from the ocean-going vessels of the corporation, have their legal situs for purposes of taxation within the state.

Appeal from Finding of State Corporation Commission.

The state corporation commission entered a finding on the — day of November, 1903, declaring the steamers Mobjack, Accomack, Hampton Roads, Luray, Virginia Dare, Brandon, and Berkeley, the steam tug Germania, and seven barges, property of the Old Dominion Steamship Company, taxable under the laws of the state of Virginia, and imposing a property tax thereon for the year 1903. Said steamship company appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. H. White, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the Commonwealth.

PER CURIAM. The facts presented by the transcript of the record of the finding aforesaid are as follows:

That the Old Dominion Steamship Company was a nonresident corporation, having been incorporated by the Senate and House of Representatives of the state of Delaware. That it was then, and had been for many years theretofore, engaged in the transportation of passengers and freight on the Atlantic Ocean and communicating navigable waters, between the city of New York, in the state of New York, and Norfolk and certain other ports within the state of Virginia. That said steamship company in the prosecution of its said transportation business owned and operated the vessel property above named. That these vessels, with the exception of the tug Germania, whose movements and use will be hereinafter stated, visited various ports or points within the state of Virginia for the purpose of receiving freight and passengers, for which they issued bills of lading and tickets to points outside the state of Virginia. That, owing to the shallow waters where these vessels plied, it was impossible in most instances for the larger ocean-going steamers of the company to be used. That in consequence the vessels above enumerated were used to receive the freight and passengers as aforesaid, giving the shipper of freight a bill of lading for the same destined to New York and other points outside of Virginia, and the passenger a ticket to his destination, and thus transported such freight and passengers to deeper water at Norfolk and Old Point Comfort, where, upon such bills of lading and tickets, the passengers and freight were transferred to one of the larger ocean-going vessels of the steamship company, and so the ultimate destination, namely, New York, and elsewhere outside of Virginia, was reached. That any other business transacted by the above-named vessels was incidental in character, and comparatively insignificant in amount. That the said vessels were built and designed for interstate traffic especially, and were adjuncts to or branches of the main line of the Old Dominion Steamship Company between New York and Norfolk. That each and all of the said vessels were regularly enrolled under the United States laws, outside of the state of Virginia, with the name and port of such enrollment painted on the stern of each of them. That the said vessels, though regularly enrolled and licensed for coastwise trade, were then used on old established routes upon navigable waters within Virginia as follows, to wit:

First. The steamer Hampton Roads between Ft. Monroe and Hampton and Norfolk.

Second. The steamer Mobjack between points in Mathews and Gloucester counties and Norfolk.

Third. The steamers Luray and Accomack between Smithfield and Norfolk.

Fourth. The steamer Virginia Dare between Suffolk and Norfolk.

Fifth. The steamers Berkeley and Brandon between Richmond and Norfolk.

The steamers Berkeley and Brandon ply between Richmond and Norfolk. These two steamers were completed in the year 1901, or early in 1902, one of them having been constructed at the William R. Trigg shipyard in the city of Richmond, and the other outside of the state of Virginia. Early in the year 1902 they were placed upon the line between Norfolk and Richmond, one steamer leaving Richmond each evening and arriving in Norfolk each morning, thus giving a night trip every night each way between Richmond and Norfolk. At the time these steamers were placed upon this route and since that time the Old Dominion Steamship Company has by public advertisement called attention to the fact that these two steamers were especially fitted in the matter of state-room accommodations for carrying passengers between Richmond and Norfolk, and the said two steamers have since that time been advertising for the carriage of passengers and freight on their route between Richmond and Norfolk, and have been regularly carrying freight and passengers between the said two points in Virginia, as well as taking on freight and passengers for further transportation on their ocean steamers at Norfolk. The Old Dominion Steamship Company applied under the revenue laws of the state of Virginia for a license to sell liquor at retail on each of these steamers, and on July 1, 1902, there was granted through the commissioner of the revenue of the city of Richmond a license to the Old Dominion Steamship Company for the sale of liquor at retail on each of these steamers, said licenses to expire on April 30, 1903. On or about the same time the said steamship company complied with the revenue laws of the United States, and paid the necessary revenue tax through the custom house at the city of Richmond for the purpose of selling liquor at retail on each of these steamers. In the spring of 1903 the said steamship company, in order to obtain licenses to sell liquor at retail on each of these steamers, applied for the same in the city of Richmond, and complied with the requirements of section 143 of the new revenue law approved April 16, 1903, and so obtained licenses for the year 1903-04 to sell liquor at retail on each of these steamers on their route between the city of Richmond and Norfolk, and likewise on or about the same time complied with the revenue laws of the United States in the matter of selling liquor at retail on each of the said steamers on said route.

Sixth. The steam tug Germania, which was used in the harbor of Norfolk and Hampton Roads for the purpose of docking the large ocean-going steamers of the Old Dominion Steamship Company and the transferring from different points in those waters freight from connecting lines destined to points outside of Virginia.

And the court, having maturely considered said transcript of the record of the finding aforesaid and the arguments of counsel, is of opinion that the legal situs of the vessels and barges assessed for taxation by the finding of the state corporation commission is, for that purpose, within the jurisdiction of the state of Virginia, and that said property is amenable to the tax imposed thereon, notwithstanding the fact that said vessels and barges are owned by a nonresident corporation, that they may have been enrolled under the act of Congress at some port outside the state of Virginia, and that they are engaged in part in interstate commerce; and doth so decide and declare. Therefore it seems to the court here that the finding of the state corporation commission appealed from is without error, and said finding is approved and affirmed. It is further considered by the court that the appellee recover against the appellant $30 damages and its costs by it about its defense expended upon this appeal. All of which is ordered to be entered upon the order book here, and certified to the state corporation commission, to be entered of record in its order book there, as required by law.

Affirmed.

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. WASHINGTON, A. & MT. V. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 10, 1904.)

RAILROADS—COMPULSORY CROSSINGS—BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS—DETERMINATIONS—RES
JUDICATA—INJUNCTION—GROUNDS.

1. An affidavit to a bill for injunction, signed in the name of complainant corporation by its president, and stating that the signer is such president, that he has read the bill, that the allegations therein contained of which he has knowledge are true, and that the other matters he believes to be true, is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of Code 1887, § 3440, providing that an injunction shall not be awarded unless the judge be satisfied of plaintiff's equity, and section 3282, providing that an affidavit in support of a pleading is sufficient if affiant swears that he believes it to be true.

2. An adjudication of the board of public works, made pursuant to Code 1887, § 1064, as amended (Acts 1896-04, p. 186, c. 191), and authorizing defendant railroad to cross plaintiff's tracks, was not conclusive of defendant's right to reduce the grade of the outer rail of plaintiff's track, so as to preclude plaintiff from suing to restrain defendant from so changing the grade in a manner dangerous to travel.

3. Where the board of public works had merely authorized defendant railroad, in general terms, to cross plaintiff's tracks, and defendant thereupon threatened to change the grade of one rail, which, according to the testimony of plaintiff's engineers, would render travel on plaintiff's road less safe, and impede the speed of its through trains, whereas defendant's crossing was merely to accommodate a private shipper, the court properly awarded an injunction to restrain defendant from so interfering with plaintiff's grade, and remanded the parties to the board of public works to have the question at issue between them there determined.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fairfax County.

Bill for injunction by the Washington, Alexandria & Mt. Vernon Railway Company against the Southern Railway Company. From decrees refusing to dissolve the injunction, etc., defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Munford, Hunton, Williams & Anderson, for appellant. R. Walton Moore, for appellee.

CARDWELL, J. This appeal is from two decrees of the circuit court of Fairfax county, entered in the chancery suit therein pending in which the appellee, the Washington,

Alexandria & Mt. Vernon Railway Company is the complainant, and the appellant, the Southern Railway Company, is the defendant. The facts and circumstances out of which the controversy arises are as follows: Appellee owns and operates a line of electric railway from the city of Washington, through Alexandria City, to Mt. Vernon, in Fairfax county, Va., over which a large number of passengers are daily transported. Appellant owns and operates an extensive line of steam railroad, with certain terminal facilities, yards, etc., in the city of Alexandria; and deeming it necessary, in the conduct of its business, to build a branch line or spur track from the termination of its line on Union street, in the city of Alexandria, to the plant of the Alexandria Brick Company, lying a short distance away from the main line of appellant, which branch line or spur track had necessarily to cross the track of appellee, the appellant sought an amicable agreement with the appellee by which this crossing could be made, but, failing in this, resort was had to the provisions of section 1094 of the Code of 1887, amended by an act of February 9, 1894 (Acts 1893-94, p. 186, c. 191; Pollard's Supp. p. 111). Pursuant to the provisions of the act, appellant, on the 20th of May, 1901, by its third vice president and general manager, submitted to the president of the appellee company plans, etc., of the proposed crossing; and thereupon appellee petitioned the board of public works to "inquire into the necessity of such crossing, and the propriety of the proposed location, and of all matters pertaining to its construction and operation." On June 19, 1901, the board of public works entered its order, in which is the following: "And the board, having heard the evidence, and inquired into the necessity of such crossing, the propriety of the proposed location, and all matters pertaining to its construction and operation, doth order that the Southern Railway Company shall have the right to construct its works across the railroad of the Washington, Alexandria & Mt. Vernon Railway Company."

The order then specifies the locality at which the crossing was to be made, in accordance with the plans, specifications, etc., submitted for the consideration of the board, and then directs how the business of the two roads was to be conducted over the said crossing, etc. Upon the making of this order by the board of public works, appellant procured and tendered to the appellee a crossing frog, which it is claimed by the appellant was in exact accordance with the plans approved by the board, and requested appellee to install the same at the expense of appellant, but, appellee having failed to do so, appellant served notice upon it that, unless the crossing was installed by a given day, appellant would place the crossing in position; and appellee still having failed to install the crossing at the end of the day named, and after its trains had stopped running that night, appellant, in accordance with the notice, and in exact accordance, it claims, with the plans and specifications approved by the board of public works, installed the crossing, reducing the outer rail of appellee's track from an elevation of $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches to $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches, and subsequently reduced, or proposed to reduce, the elevation of the rail to 1 inch. Thereupon appellee presented its bill to the judge of the circuit court of Fairfax county, setting out the above facts, and alleging, inter alia, that, at the point where appellant crossed its tracks, its line is built upon a curve having a radius of 453 feet, and an elevation of the outer rail of $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches; that appellant well knew that at the point of the proposed crossing the outer rail of appellee's track had theretofore been placed, and was then, at an elevation of $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches, with a view to the safe running of appellee's trains upon and around said curve; that appellee could not safely run its trains with the outer rail of its track at the crossing at 1 inch elevation, or even at an elevation of $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches, without a guard rail, which had not been furnished by appellant, as it should have been—and prayed for an injunction to restrain appellant, its officers, agents, etc., from interfering with the restoration of the elevation of the outer rail of appellee's track at the crossing back to $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches, or from changing or attempting to change that elevation so as to reduce it to less than $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches, which injunction was awarded.

Appellant demurred to and answered the bill; its answer denying that appellee could not safely operate its trains over the crossing in question with the outer rail of its track at an elevation of $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches, and alleging that it could safely operate them with an elevation of the outer rail of its track at 1 inch, especially with the use of a proper guard rail, and insisting upon its right to reduce the outer rail to 1 inch by virtue of the adjudication by the board of public works, conferring upon it the right and authority to construct a branch line or spur track across appellee's track.

Upon the hearing of the motion of appellant to dissolve the injunction, heard before the judge of the circuit court, on the bill and exhibits therewith, the demurrer and answer thereto, and affidavits filed on behalf of both parties, the first decree appealed from was entered August 31, 1901, which denied the motion to strike out certain affidavits, overruled the demurrer, and refused to dissolve the injunction—the learned judge of the circuit court being of opinion that while section 1094 of the Code of 1887, as amended, gave to the board of public works complete jurisdiction of all questions relating to railway crossings, including the question of the elevation of the appellee's track, and of any change to be made therein, raised by the pleadings in the cause, and that the court would be without jurisdiction to consider that question, when it had been properly brought to the attention of the board and had been passed upon by it, but that the pleadings and evidence in the cause showed that the question of the elevation to be given the outer rail of appellee's track at the crossing in question had not been brought to the attention of the board, and had not, therefore, been passed on by it, as required by the statute—and continued the injunction, that appellant might have an opportunity to proceed in the matter of changing the elevation of the outer rail of appellee's track at the crossing in question, as required by the statute; the decree then providing that when the board of public works, should its jurisdiction be invoked, had passed on the question, and the action of the board brought to the attention of the court, or the judge thereof in vacation, the injunction would be continued, dissolved, or modified in accordance with the finding of the board, etc.

Acquiescing in this decree, appellant on the 30th of September, 1901, served upon appellee a notice of the necessity for the proposed change of the elevation of the outer rail of its track from $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches to 1 inch, attaching to the notice copies of the plans and specifications for the change, etc., whereupon appellee filed with the board of public works on October 8, 1901, a petition praying that the board would inquire into the necessity of the proposed change in the elevation of its track, and all matters pertaining thereto, and that the board would suspend the work in making the proposed change until it could inquire into the necessity therefor, etc. The board took jurisdiction of the matters set forth in the petition, ordered all work on the proposed change of appellee's track suspended, and summoned the parties before it for a hearing, which was had on the 7th of November, 1901. At that hearing, notwithstanding the appellant had invoked the jurisdiction of the board of public works by its notice to appellee of September 30, 1901, under section 1094 of the Code of 1887, as amended, upon its motion the board dismissed the petition of appellee on the ground that the board was without jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters arising on the notice and the petition; in other words, the contention of appellant that by reason of the adjudication by the board on June 19, 1901, the matters arising on the notice and petition were res judicata, whereby the power and authority in the board to hear and determine these matters had terminated, was sustained. Whereupon appellant filed a supplemental answer to the bill in this cause, setting out the proceedings last mentioned, and other facts, and renewed its motion before the judge of the circuit court to dissolve the injunction theretofore awarded in the cause.

This motion was heard by the judge of the circuit court upon the pleadings and affidavits formerly considered, the supplemental answer of the appellant to the bill, and additional affidavits filed by both litigants, and the second decree appealed from entered in vacation November 7, 1901, which, so far as pertinent to the issues presented, is as follows:

"(2) The said motion to dissolve the injunction heretofore awarded is overruled, the judge being of the opinion, as stated in decree entered August 31, 1901, that the board of public works has complete and exclusive jurisdiction to determine the questions at issue as to elevation to be given outer rail of the complainant's track at the crossing mentioned in the proceedings, and that the said injunction should be continued until said board has determined that question. And when said board of public works has passed upon that question, under notice of defendant mentioned and described in the said supplemental answer of defendant, and the petition thereafter filed by complainant before said board, or under a new notice to be given by defendant under section 1094, in the event that, if such new notice shall invoke the jurisdiction of said board under section 1094 as amended, then the decree of this court will be made to conform to the finding of said board on such question, when it is made to appear to this court. In the event a new notice is given by defendant in pursuance of this decree, and under said section 1094, as amended, and the complainant does not invoke the jurisdiction of said board of public works under said section 1094, as amended, the injunction heretofore awarded will be dissolved, when this fact is made to appear to this court, or to the judge thereof."

The first assignment of error is the refusal of the judge below to dismiss the bill of appellee for the want of a proper affidavit thereto.

We are of opinion that there is no merit in this contention. The bill is signed in the name of the appellee, by its president, and is verified by his affidavit, in the following words: "That he is the president of the Washington, Alexandria & Mt. Vernon Railway Company; that he has read the foregoing bill of complaint, and that the allegations therein contained, of which he has knowledge, are true; and that all other matters therein stated he believes to be true."

Corporations, as was said by this court in Fayette L. Co. v. L. & N. R. Co., 93 Va. 274, 24 S. E. 1016, "necessarily act by and through their agents," and it is difficult to perceive how the requirement that a bill for an injunction shall be verified by affidavit could have been more fully complied with than is done in this case. The provision of section 3282 of the Code of 1887 is that, "where an affidavit is required in support of any pleading, it shall be sufficient if the affiant swears that he believed it to be true," and the requirement of section 3440 of the Code of 1887 is merely that the court or judge applied to for an injunction shall not award it unless satisfied by affidavit or otherwise of the plaintiff's equity.

"If made in good faith and reasonably sufficient, an affidavit should be upheld." 1 Enc. Pl. & Prac. 320, and authorities cited.

The affiant in this case meets every requirement of the statute, if, in fact, he does not go beyond, for, in addition to his oath that he had read the allegations of the bill, and, so far as not known to him personally, he believed them to be true, as to such as were known to him he swears positively that he knows them to be true. The affiant was an officer of the company and his position was such as necessarily gave him personal knowledge of some of the material allegations of the bill, and was clearly in a position to know whether or not other allegations therein, not within his personal knowledge, were worthy of belief. This was all sufficient to satisfy the judge below of the appellee's equity, and to authorize him to consider the case presented, and to award the injunction prayed for, if of opinion that it should be awarded.

The next contention of appellant is that the demurrer to the bill should have been sustained and the bill dismissed. This raises the question whether or not the matters set up in the bill are res judicata.

It is true that the bill shows on its face that the ground on which the injunction is asked arose out of the crossing of one railroad by another, pursuant to the adjudication of its right to do so by the board of public works, to which tribunal section 1094 of the Code of 1887, as amended, delegates the power to determine whether one railroad in this state shall be permitted to cross another; and it is also true that the adjudication of such a question by the board is final and conclusive as to any question adjudicated by it, or which it was the duty of either party interested in the proceedings before the board to have brought forward for adjudication. It is also true that res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points upon which the court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time. Diamond State Iron Co. v. Rarig Co., 93 Va. 603, 25 S. E. 894, and authorities cited. But it cannot be applied to a matter not adjudicated in a former action, and which could not have been brought forward for adjudication upon the pleadings in the cause; nor to a matter arising after the former adjudication, even in a second suit between the parties to the former, or their privies if the causes of action are not the same. C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Risson, Trustee, 99 Va. 18, 37 S. E. 320; Tate v. Bank, 96 Va. 765, 32 S. E. 476; 7 Rob. Pr. (new) 172.

Therefore, when it is said that res judicata applies "to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time," it is not meant that a judgment concludes parties as to a matter not covered by it and the facts necessary to uphold it. If the real merits of the second action have not been decided in the first, the prior judgment is no bar. Kelly v. Board of Pub. Wks., 25 Grat. 760, and authorities cited, and authorities supra.

The object of the statute was to provide a tribunal and the necessary appliances for the prompt and final determination of questions and controversies which might grow out of one railroad's seeking to cross another, and consequently provided for the placing of plans and specifications, for such a proposed crossing, in the hands of the board of public works, in order to place it in a position to determine the propriety, or the impropriety, of the proposed crossing. It clothes the board with power to employ experts, hear evidence, and enter orders changing or modifying specifications; but the determination by the board that one railroad should have the right to cross another, and directing how the crossing was to be established, at whose costs, and the conduct of the business of the respective roads at the crossing, cannot be considered as taking away from the parties the right to litigate a question growing out of an entirely different state of facts, and giving rise to an entirely different controversy. Where the board of public works has taken jurisdiction of a controversy touching the right of one railroad to cross another, and adjudicated that question, there is no power in the courts to interfere with its order, by injunction or otherwise, to stay the proceedings or prosecution of the work in accordance with the plans and specifications considered by the board; and this would be so without statutory provision, upon the well-established general principle that where a board or individual is vested with judicial discretion to consider and decide any question, and such board or individual exercises the discretion, its act is final and conclusive; but neither this general principle, nor the statute, can be made to apply to a matter not brought before the tribunal for its adjudication, or in any manner passed on by it.

The bill in this cause, after setting out all of the proceedings before the board of public works when the right of appellant to cross appellee's line was adjudicated, and what was done by appellant in pursuance of that adjudication, then alleges that appellant, not contented with its version of what it had the right to do under the order of the board, had changed, or proposed to change, the track of appellee, so as not only to obstruct the conduct of its business, but to put in peril passengers transported upon its trains over its line—a matter that the public became at once vitally interested in. It is made to appear from the facts stated in the bill that the appellant, having received a judgment of the board, upon one condition of the pleadings and proofs before the board, and finding the judgment thus obtained, which was general in its terms, broad and comprehensive enough to cover a different state of facts, is now seeking to use it in a manner and for a purpose to which it was not in the beginning fitted.

We are of opinion that the bill sets out a case for equity jurisdiction, and that the court did not err in overruling the demurrer thereto.

The third and last contention of appellant is that, upon the merits of the case, the injunction should have been dissolved and the bill dismissed. It is claimed that the record establishes (1) that the board of public works has passed upon the elevation of appellee's track at the crossing in question, as one of the matters pertaining to the construction of the said crossing, and (2) that, if that was not so, it is a matter which the appellee could have raised before the board, and as to which it is concluded by the order of the board.

It is admitted, however, that there was no direct adjudication by the board as to the right of appellant to change the elevation of appellee's track at the crossing, the contention being that the adjudication of the right of appellant to cross the track of appellee at the point designated carries with it the right and authority to change the elevation of appellee's track at that point.

After reviewing the allegations of the bill, and the statements and admissions of the answers thereto, the learned judge below, in his written opinion, made a part of the record, well says:

"From these allegations of the bill and answers, and an examination of the plans and specifications filed therewith, and the affidavits, no doubt is left that the changing of complainant's track by defendant was not passed on by the board of public works, and no adjudication was invited thereon by either party, and that the necessity or desirability of changing the elevation of the track was only suggested when the defendant installed the crossing frog. If any doubt existed in this respect, it would be removed by an inspection of the notice given by the defendant to complainant on September 30, 1901, in which specific and accurate notice is given complainant of a desire to change complainant's track from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 inch elevation. No such intimation as to the desire of defendant to change the elevation of complainant's track is given under the notice dated the 20th of May, 1901, and under which the proceedings were had before the board of public works, and the order entered by it authorizing the crossing."

It should be added, to what was said by the learned judge below, that there was nothing, either in the notice given by appellant (defendant below) to appellee of its desire to cross the latter's track, or in the plans and specifications accompanying that notice, or in any of the proceedings before the board of public works, that indicated to appellee that it was the purpose of appellant to change the elevation of appellee's track at the crossing. Appellee had no reason to apprehend that such a change would be made, but had every reason to believe that the status quo as to the elevation of its track at the crossing would be maintained. Appellant admits in its answer that it knew that appellee's track at that point had some elevation, though it did not know it had an elevation of $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches. However, in installing the crossing, appellant did change appellee's track by reducing the elevation of its outer rail from $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches, and appellee acquiesced in this reduction; but when it became known to it that it was the purpose of appellant to still further reduce that elevation to 1 inch, it applied to a court of equity, not to stay the prosecution of the work of appellant in establishing the crossing pursuant to the adjudication by the board of public works, but to stay the hand of appellant in so changing the track of appellee as not only to obstruct the operation of its trains, but to put its passengers in peril, until the question whether or not appellant had the right to make the change was properly adjudicated. When this matter was brought before the board for adjudication, although it had been invited by appellant, by its notice to appellee of September 30, 1901, appellant interposed its objection to that adjudication, and secured the dismissal of the proceedings.

If the doctrine of estoppel is to be invoked under these circumstances, as appellant seeks to do, it may be well to inquire as to which party it should be applied. It would seem clear that as the record, including the plans and specifications, made up for and considered by the board of public works, is silent as to any change in the elevation of appellee's track, there is far more reason to contend that the judgment of the board, even if there was an implied adjudication upon this question, was in favor of the appellee and preserves the status quo, with respect to the elevation of its track, than that it was in favor of the appellant and is a warrant for all the changes it might wish to make in appellee's track. All of the facts appearing in the record, or from the plans, specifications, and blue prints, negative the idea that there was any judgment by the board of public works conferring upon appellant the right to change the elevation of appellee's track at all, and certainly none clothing it with authority to continue to change that elevation at will, when, acting under what it conceived to be its authority, the elevation was only changed from $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches, thus recognizing the necessity for an elevation of appellee's track at the crossing. It is therefore, as has already been said, not to interfere with the prosecution of any work by appellant, authorized by the board of public works, that appellee invokes the protection of its rights in a court of equity, but to prevent an unauthorized interference with its line of railway and a safe operation of its trains thereon. Appellee, as abundantly appears from the record, occupying its own right of way, where it had been for years before appellant attempted to cross its track, was running a large number of fast trains each day to and from Mt. Vernon, carrying a great number of passengers, and doing this in competition with other agencies; and it was far more interested in the proper construction and operation of the crossing than the appellant, which built its branch track mainly for the purpose of accommodating the Alexandria Brick Company. The engineer who supervised the construction of appellee's line believed and swore, as did several other experts, equal in capacity to the affiants on the other side, and more numerous, to the danger incident to running trains over appellee's line at the curve, should the change of the elevation of the outer rail, as threatened by appellant, be reduced to one inch. Such being the record, we are of opinion that the judge below did not err in refusing to dissolve the injunction, and in requiring that proper proceedings be instituted to have the board of public works adjudicate the question at issue between the parties.

It will be observed that the decree of November 27, 1901, supra, merely continues the injunction until the question at issue has been adjudicated by the board of public works, and provides that, when the board shall pass upon that question, the order that the court will then make will conform to its adjudication; that is to say, if proper steps are not taken by the appellant to have the question adjudicated by the board of public works, as provided by the statute, the injunction will be perpetuated; and if such proceedings are taken and an adjudication of the question at issue made by the board, and that fact brought to the attention of the court, the injunction will be dissolved.

The power and authority theretofore conferred by section 1094, as amended, upon the board of public works to hear and determine all questions pertaining to the crossing of one railroad by another, is, by constitutional provision and legislative enactment, in pursuance of the Constitution, transferred to and conferred upon the State Corporation Commission, whereby an adjudication of the question at issue between the parties to this cause by that tribunal may be speedily obtained upon a proper proceeding under the statute invoking its jurisdiction; therefore the decree appealed from will be affirmed.

JOHNSON v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 17, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—VERDICT—FORGERY—UTTERING FORGED INSTRUMENT—INDICTMENT—SEPARATE OFFENSES.

1. When the verdict is silent as to any of the counts in the indictment, it operates an acquittal on those counts.

2. Forgery and uttering a forged instrument are, by section 3737, Code 1887, separate offenses.

3. Where separate offenses are charged by the different counts of an indictment, the jury may find the accused guilty upon each count, and ascertain the punishment separately, but the better practice is to find a general verdict for the two cognate offenses.

4. Other writings of the accused and of the party whose writing is claimed to have been forged, which are shown to be genuine, and enlarged photographs thereof, are admissible for the purpose of comparing, by expert testimony, the genuine handwritings with the handwriting of the alleged forged instrument.

5. Under section 3388, Code 1887, the jury may carry from the bar papers used in evidence.

6. An instruction should not be given where there is no evidence to support it.

7. Section 4025, Code 1887, as amended by Acts 1893-94, p. 223, c. 211, permitting the jury not to be kept together during a trial where the punishment cannot be confinement in the penitentiary for more than 10 years, does not apply where an accused is tried upon an indictment charging two separate offenses, the aggregate punishment of which can be confinement for more than 10 years, and in such case the jury must be kept together.

Error to Hustings Court of Portsmouth.

O. C. Johnson was convicted of forging and uttering a writing purporting to be the last will of his wife, and brings error. Reversed.

Bland & Hope and John W. Happer, for plaintiff in error. The Attorney General and John S. Eggleston, for the Commonwealth.

HARRISON, J. The accused was convicted of two offenses: (1) For forging and (2) for uttering a writing purporting to be the last will and testament of his deceased wife. In their verdict, the jury fixed the punishment at two years in the penitentiary for each offense.

The court is of opinion that there was no error in overruling the demurrer to the second and third counts of the indictment. If the first count was insufficient, as claimed—as to which we express no opinion—the failure to sustain the demurrer thereto resulted in no prejudice to the accused, as the jury only found him guilty upon the second and third counts. Nor was it necessary, when the jury found a verdict of guilty on the second and third counts, for the court to enter a judgment of acquittal upon the first count, for, when the verdict is silent as to any of the counts in the indictment, it operates an acquittal on those counts. Hawley v. Commonwealth, 75 Va. 850.

The court is further of opinion that it was not error to overrule the prisoner's motion in arrest of judgment. The ground of this motion was that the two counts—one for forging and the other for uttering the will—constituted one and the same offense, and that the verdict of guilty under each, fixing a punishment for the offense charged in each count, was convicting the prisoner twice for the same offense. This position is not tenable. The second count charged the prisoner with forging the will. The third count charged him with uttering the same. The statute (section 3737, Code 1887) prescribes as the penalty for forgery not less than two nor more than ten years in the penitentiary. The same section prescribes the same punishment for uttering a forged paper, knowing it to be forged. The verdict of the jury was as follows: "We, the jury, find the prisoner, C. C. Johnson, guilty as charged in the second count of this indictment, and fix his punishment thereon at two years in the penitentiary; and we, the jury, further find the prisoner, C. C. Johnson, guilty as charged in the third count of this indictment, and fix his punishment thereon at two years in the penitentiary." The judgment of the court was in accordance with the verdict, fixing the term of imprisonment at two years for the offense charged in the second count, and at two years for the offense charged in the third count: the latter punishment to commence at the termination of the term of confinement ascertained for the offense charged in the second count.

It is well settled that forging and uttering are separate and distinct offenses. Indeed, the statute makes them separate and distinct. It is equally well settled that each of these offenses may be charged in separate counts of the same indictment. It is also true that the jury may find the prisoner guilty upon each count, and ascertain the punishment for each offense separately. Wharton's Criminal Law (8th Ed.) § 910; Speers v. Commonwealth, 17 Grat. 570.

While, in view of these authorities, we feel constrained to hold that in a case like this the jury may find the prisoner guilty upon each count, and ascertain the punishment separately, we are of opinion that the usual and better practice in such cases is to find a general verdict for the two cognate offenses charged.

The court is further of opinion that it was not error to admit as evidence other writings of the prisoner, proved to be genuine, and writings of his deceased wife, shown to be genuine, for the purpose of comparing by expert testimony the genuine handwritings with the handwriting of the alleged forged will. Nor was it error to admit enlarged photographs of these genuine writings for the purpose of facilitating such comparison.

Hanriot v. Sherwood, 82 Va. 1; United States v. Ortiz, 176 U. S. 422, 20 Sup. Ct. 466, 44 L. Ed. 529. Nor was it error for the jury to take the genuine papers, thus introduced, to their room. After the papers had become part of the evidence in the case, no reason is perceived why they should be excluded from the inspection of the jury. The Code of 1887 (section 3388) provides that "papers used in evidence, though not under seal, may be carried from the bar by the jury." See, also, Hansbrough v. Stinnett, 25 Grat. 495, 505.

The court is further of opinion that it was not error to reject the instruction offered by the prisoner, and set forth in his bill of exceptions No. 6. Without expressing any opinion as to the accuracy of this instruction, as an abstract proposition of law, it is sufficient to say that there is not a word of testimony in the record tending to sustain the theory propounded by it.

The remaining assignment of error to be disposed of calls in question the action of the court in failing to have the jury kept together during the progress of the trial. Section 4025 of the Code of 1887, as amended by Acts 1893-94, p. 223, c. 211, provides that, "In any case of felony, when the punishment cannot be death or confinement in the penitentiary for more than ten years, the jury shall not be kept together, unless the court shall otherwise direct." I am inclined to the view that the statute contemplated the prosecution of a single felony in one indictment, but, where there are two separate and distinct felonies charged in separate counts of the same indictment, neither of which is punishable by imprisonment exceeding 10 years, it was not intended that the jury should be kept together unless the court should so direct. In other words, the situation of the prisoner is the same that it would be if two indictments had been found, one for the forgery and the other for uttering, in neither of which cases could the punishment have exceeded 10 years of imprisonment, and in neither of which would it have been necessary to keep the jury together. I am unable to perceive why the rule should be otherwise where the two felonies are charged in separate counts of the same indictment, and the jury finds a verdict upon each count, and ascertains the punishment for each offense separately. The majority of the court are, however, of opinion that, although each felony is charged in a separate count of the same indictment, and the jury finds a verdict upon each count, and fixes the punishment for each offense separately, still the one indictment makes but one case, in which it is possible for the jury to find upon the two counts, taken together, a greater punishment than 10 years' imprisonment, and that the jury must therefore be kept together, the language of the statute being, "In any case of felony," etc.; that, otherwise, in a single case, the prisoner would be subjected to the same mischief that the statute was intended to protect him against.

For the error, therefore, of not keeping the jury together during the progress of the trial, the judgment complained of must be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PYLE et al. v. HENDERSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 23, 1904.)

BILL IN EQUITY—PARTIES—CO-TENANTS—LANDLORD.

1. Where a trustee brings a suit in equity for the benefit of those he represents, the latter, ordinarily, are necessary parties to such suit.

2. In a controversy between two sets of lessees under two several leases, co-tenants interested under either one or both such leases should be made parties to a bill in equity filed to settle such controversy.

3. The lessor or landlord is a necessary party to a bill in chancery filed by subsequent lessees to enforce the forfeiture of, set aside, and annul a prior lease covering the same subject-matter. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Tyler County;
R. H. Freer, Judge.

Bill by C. E. Pyle and others against J. W. Henderson and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

V. B. Archer, Wm. Beard, and F. D. Young, for appellants. T. P. Jacobs, W. N. Miller, and O. W. O. Hardman, for appellees.

DENT, J. C. E. Pyle and others filed their bill and their supplemental and amended bill in chancery, in the circuit court of Tyler county, against J. W. Henderson and others for the purpose of having declared forfeited and canceled, as a cloud on their title, a certain lease made by Thomas Bunfill and wife on the 3d day of February, 1897, to A. B. Campbell and J. W. Swann, and for the purpose of enjoining the defendants from interfering with plaintiffs in the enjoyment of the property included in the lease. On a hearing of the cause on bills, demurrer thereto for want of equity and proper parties, answers, general and special replications, depositions, and exhibits, the plaintiffs were decreed the full relief prayed for by them, and the defendants' lease was declared forfeited and canceled. From this decree defendants appeal.

The first question presented by the demurrer is the want of proper parties. The first objection under this head is that one of the plaintiffs sues as "W. S. Miller, Trustee," without naming the beneficiaries of the trust for which he is acting. If such Miller is acting in the capacity of trustee for others, and not in his individual capacity, such others are necessary parties, that they may be bound by the decree entered, and that the defendants, if successful, may not again be compelled to relitigate the same matters with the beneficiaries in such trust, who, not being parties to the suit, would not be bound by such decree.

The second objection is that the Single-decker heirs, who are entitled to the one-eighth of the one-ninth interest in the gas and oil under the plaintiffs' lease, but have no arrangement with the defendants, have such interest in the result of this litigation that they should be made parties. They certainly should be parties to this controversy, for their rights may be materially affected by the success of the defendants.

It is next objected that Thomas Bunfill, the lessor who executed the two leases in controversy, was not made either party plaintiff or defendant. He is certainly an indispensable party to this litigation, for his rights may be greatly affected thereby. He is interested in the rents and royalties under both leases if nothing more, while the facts disclosed by the pleadings and depositions bring forward prominently several questions of law for consideration, in the proper decision of which his interests are greatly involved. These facts show that his lease to the defendants covered the whole of the tract of land, but afterwards it was discovered that he only owned the seven-ninths undivided interest; that the lessees insisted that he should obtain for them, under the implied covenants of his lease, the other two-ninths undivided interests, and set about to help him to do so. After some time one-ninth was acquired of John Bunfill, which left the other one-ninth outstanding in the Single-decker minor children. Claiming that he had not sufficient, the lessor refused to secure this, and the lessees set about to do so to make their lease good, as they could not enjoy it under the decision of Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, 27 S. E. 411, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891, until they could do so. While they were engaged in this laudable undertaking for the benefit of the lessor, as well as for themselves, as it was to make good the implied covenants of his lease (Knotts v. McGregor, 47 W. Va. 566, 35 S. E. 899), the three months expired in which they were to put down the first well, and, according to the terms of the lease, $15 in advance for each three months' delay thereafter became due, whereupon said Bunfill, without notifying the lessees, executed forthwith a new lease to the plaintiffs. As soon as the lessees found it out, they wanted to compromise the matter or pay the rent, but Bunfill and the plaintiffs would not listen to them. They then set up the claim that their lease was not forfeited, and that their lessor was not in condition to forfeit it. The plaintiffs file their bills to declare and enforce such forfeiture. The defendants file their answer, claiming that their lease is not forfeited, for the reason that their lessor, not having given them the enjoyment of their term, had no right to enforce forfeiture for nonpayment of rent until he did do so; that they had paid $55 for the term of three months, which they had been prevented from enjoying by reason of the failure of their lessor to comply with his covenants; and that it would be unconscionable to allow him to take advantage of his own default. This gives rise to two very important legal propositions: First, as to whether the lessor was in position to equitably enforce a forfeiture of his lease; and, second, whether a court of equity will declare and enforce the forfeiture of a lease in any case in which it would be proper to relieve against forfeiture.

In 1 McAdam on Landlord and Tenant, 852, it is said: "A court of equity may relieve a tenant from a forfeiture of the lease, if the forfeiture was through inadvertence, accident, or mistake, on such terms as may be just; but not where there is willful, voluntary, gross, or inexcusable neglect." And it will also relieve from forfeiture when caused by the neglect of the landlord. 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 389. Equity will relieve from forfeiture under an oil lease for failure to pay rentals, when compensation for such rentals can be fully made. South Penn Oil Co. v. Edgell, 48 W. Va. 348, 37 S. E. 596, 86 Am. St. Rep. 43. In the case of Hukill v. Guffey et al., 37 W. Va. 425, 16 S. E. 544, it was decided that: "The tract of land of thirty acres in controversy is situated in an oil field, at the time of the senior lease partially developed. The senior lessee, and those claiming under him, had for more than nine months failed to commence to bore for oil, and had failed to pay or deposit for the lessor the one dollar and thirty-three and one-third cents per month. Held, under the circumstances of the case, the senior lessee and those claiming under him are not entitled to be relieved against the forfeiture by paying such sum. The damages to be looked to are the damages resulting from the breach of the covenant to bore for oil, and not the failure to pay one dollar and thirty-three and one-third cents per month in lieu thereof; and the damages resulting from the failure to do the specific thing, viz., to bore for oil, not being susceptible of pecuniary measurement, and therefore compensable, the relief from such forfeiture is denied." From this decision Judge English dissented and filed a lengthy opinion. The lessees not having the right to bore for oil in the present case by reason of the failure of the landlord or lessor to comply with the implied covenants of his grant, damages for failure to bore for oil or gas is not in question. They could not bore, and hence they would not be liable for damages in not doing so.

One of the questions, then, for the court to decide, is whether the mere accidental oversight to pay, or misunderstanding about paying, a pecuniary rental at the very moment it was due, without willful neglect on the part of the lessees, should be relieved against in equity. In this question Thomas N. Bunfill is more deeply interested than any other person, and about which he is entitled to be heard either as a party plaintiff or defendant. As to which, he must decide for himself.

For these reasons, the decree is reversed and annulled, and this cause is remanded, with leave to the plaintiffs to amend their bills and bring all parties in interest before the court.

STATE v. HERTZOG.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 23, 1904.)

MURDER—INSTRUCTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF—EVIDENCE.

1. Upon the trial of H. for murder, the court gave to the jury the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that a man is presumed to intend that which he does, or which is the immediate or necessary consequence of his act; and if the jury believe from the evidence that H., with a deadly weapon in his possession, without any or upon very slight provocation, gave to H. a mortal wound, the said H. is prima facie guilty of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing; and the necessity rests upon H. of showing extenuating circumstances. As they appear from the case made by the state, H. is guilty of murder in the first degree." Held, that the giving of said instruction was error.

2. Where a statute establishes degrees of the crime of murder, and provides that all willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing shall be murder in the first degree, evidence that the accused was intoxicated at the time of the killing is competent for the consideration of the jury upon the question whether the accused was in such condition of mind as to be capable of deliberation and premeditation.

3. It is not error to refuse an instruction, not specially adapted to, nor based upon, the facts of the case which the evidence fairly tends to prove.

Error to Circuit Court, Taylor County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Grant G. Hertzog was convicted of murder, and brings error. Reversed.

J. G. St. Clair and C. P. Guard, for plaintiff in error. B. F. Bailey, Atty. Gen., for the State.

MILLER, J. The plaintiff in error, Grant G. Hertzog, was indicted by the grand jury of the circuit court of Taylor county, at a term of said court held on the 13th day of April, 1903, for the murder of John Russell. The indictment is in the form prescribed by section 2 of chapter 144 of the Code of 1899, and is sufficient on demurrer. State v. Douglass, 41 W. Va. 537, 23 S. E. 724; State v. Dodds (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 228. At the same term the defendant demurred to the indictment, and the demurrer was overruled. A jury was then impaneled, a trial of the defendant was had, and a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree was found against the defendant, who was thereupon sentenced to be hanged by the neck until dead; and the time of his execution was fixed for the 3d day of July, 1903. A judge of this court granted Hertzog a writ of error to said judgment.

During his trial the defendant excepted to various rulings of the court, and here assigns for error that he was prejudiced by certain instructions given to the jury by the court at the instance of the state, by the refusal of the court to give certain other instructions asked for by him, and because the court refused to set aside the verdict on the ground that the same was contrary to the law and the evidence. All the matters aforesaid complained of by the defendant are made parts of the record by proper bills of exception.

Both the defendant and the deceased at the time of the homicide resided at or near Simpson, a small mining town in Taylor county, and were employed at that place by the Grafton Coal & Coke Company—Russell as a coal miner, and Hertzog as the driver of a horse or mule in the same mines. Defendant and deceased had known each other for about three years, and had been friendly and associated much together during that time. Both of them were addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors. It is proved by several witnesses that Hertzog had been accustomed to drinking for a time long prior to the homicide, and that at times, when drinking, he did not seem to know his wife from any other person, or to understand what he was then doing. The homicide occurred on Sunday, February 1, 1903, about 4 or 5 o'clock p. m. It appears that Hertzog and Russell had been drinking together prior to that date, and that defendant had been drinking for two or three weeks next before that time. It is also shown that Hertzog and others had an eight-gallon keg of beer the night before the killing; that next morning there was about a half gallon of the beer left, which defendant drank. It is shown that he also drank whisky that morning; that about 10 o'clock on that morning Hertzog came into the small store or shop of V. L. Davis, at Simpson; that he saw Russell there, and hit him on the head with his hand; that they then scuffled a little. But this does not appear, from the circumstances, to have been anything more than the result of too much drink. Hertzog then took the train for Grafton, saying to Russell to meet him there on his return. It appears that Hertzog and others who went with him got whisky in Grafton; that he was under the influence of liquor at Grafton; that he and those with him came back to Simpson on the train about 3 p. m., bringing whisky with them; that he went to the home of his mother-in-law while at Grafton, and ate dinner, and took away with him, from there, a small breech-loading rifle belonging to him, for the purpose, as he said, of having Mr. Lilly, a gunsmith, to bore it out; that he afterwards saw Mr. Lilly, who said that he could not then do the work, but would fix the gun some other day; that it was then about train time; that defendant did not then have sufficient time to take the gun back to the house of his mother-in-law before the train would leave Grafton for Simpson; and that he took the gun with him to Simpson. William Lilly, referred to, testified that he saw defendant in Grafton; that defendant had a target gun with him, the barrel thereof being from 10 to 12 inches long, with a little wire handle; that defendant wanted him to make it shoot "a 22 long, instead of a 22 short"; that he did not then fix the gun, but told Hertzog that he would fix it some day if Hertzog would bring it to him. Mrs. Weekley, the mother-in-law of defendant, testified that Hertzog had the gun at her house; that he, on the Sunday referred to, came there; was drinking at the time; took some dinner; that the gun was hanging up in the rack in the house; that defendant said, "I believe I will take my gun home with me, and get it fixed;" and that he took it away with him. On the return of said defendant to Simpson, he was met at the railroad platform by Russell and others. Defendant, Russell, and others then went down the railroad track together. Defendant had some whisky, and a Mr. Seamon had a quart. Defendant says that they drank it. After they drank this whisky, defendant and Russell started along the railroad track in the direction of their homes, accompanied by some other persons. They stopped some distance from the platform, and engaged at target shooting with the gun. Afterwards a witness saw them coming up along and near the track in a meadow, acting "just like us boys used to play leapfrog." This was in the meadow of C. C. Curry, who swears that he first heard Hertzog asking Russell to go home with him, but Russell did not want to go; "that they were down off the track in my meadow; that they had hold of each other like two boys, playing. * * * I heard Hertzog say, 'I'll shoot you.' * * * He released Russell, and went on the track, took up the gun, and cut away at Russell. Russell was down in the meadow, and Hertzog was on the track. He shot just as he took aim." Witness further says: "Russell never fell or hollowed. He just kept walking around and around, and Hertzog stood on the track. Then Hertzog laid the gun down, went down, and got hold of Russell." Witness says that, after some time, Hertzog said to Russell again, "I will shoot you;" that he got the gun the second time, and took up the track, and Mr. Russell walked up the meadow; and he (Hertzog) shot at him (Russell), and he never fell or hollowed again. When this shot was fired, the parties were about 50 feet apart. It was 15 or 20 minutes after the first shot. It is further shown that Hertzog reloaded his gun, and that Russell got upon the railroad track, and sat down there, where he sat for 15 or 20 minutes; that Hertzog in the meantime had come up to within 7 or 10 feet of Russell, and then said, "Damn you! I am going to kill you;" that Russell begged him not to do so, drew his hand above his head, and attempted to get up, when Hertzog shot him again; and that Russell fell, and never moved. Witness says that Hertzog then put a load in his gun, laid it down on the track, walked up and took Russell by the collar, and pulled it open to see where he had shot him. It is shown that Hertzog, as soon as he realized the fact of the killing, and at other times soon thereafter, said that he had killed his best friend. There were several other persons near the place when the shooting occurred, who testified on the trial, and whose evidence differs in some respects from that of Curry, but not as to the main fact. The gun used by Hertzog appears to have been the one brought by him from Grafton on that day. Some of the witnesses say that, after the shooting, Hertzog impressed them as being drunk. Mrs. Hertzog says that he came home drunk that evening; and he swears that he remembered nothing after drinking with Russell and others near Simpson until the next morning, when he was in jail at Grafton. Dr. Ellis, who performed the autopsy on the remains of Russell, says that he found a furrowed wound on Russell's right leg, just above the knee, another in the groin on the left side, and another in the region of the chest, on the left side, where the collar bone couples onto the breast bone, and that the death of Russell was caused by the said gunshot wound. He found the bullet. It was about $20/100$ of an inch bullet. It is not necessary to give more of the evidence. No opinion is expressed as to what it proves. The above facts are stated in order that a fair understanding of the instructions given and refused by the court may be had.

The court, at the instance of the state, gave to the jury the following instructions:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that a man is presumed to intend that which he does, or which is the immediate or necessary consequence of his act; and if the jury believe from the evidence that Grant G. Hertzog, with a deadly weapon in his possession, without any or upon very slight provocation, gave to John Russell a mortal wound, the said Grant G. Hertzog is prima facie guilty of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing; and the necessity rests upon Grant G. Hertzog of showing extenuating circumstances. As they appear from the case made by the state, Grant G. Hertzog is guilty of murder in the first degree.

"(2) The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the prisoner, Grant G. Hertzog, willfully, maliciously, deliberately, and premeditatedly killed John Russell, the deceased, they should find the said Grant G. Hertzog guilty of murder in the first degree, although he was intoxicated at the time of the killing.

"(3) The court instructs the jury that Grant G. Hertzog, the prisoner at the bar, whether he be a habitual drinker or not, cannot voluntarily make himself so drunk as to become on that account irresponsible for his conduct during such drunkenness. He may be perfectly unconscious of the killing of John Russell, and yet he is responsible. He may be incapable of express malice, but the court instructs the jury that the law implies malice in such a case from the weapon used, the absence of provocation, and other circumstances under which the act is done."

To the giving of said instructions, and each of them, the defendant excepted.

Instruction No. 1 is taken from point 11 of the syllabus in the case of State v. Cain, 20 W. Va. 681, but it omits a very material and essential part of the instruction in that case. The law is, as stated in that case, that "a man is presumed to intend that which he does, or which is the immediate or necessary consequence of his act; and if the prisoner, with a deadly weapon in his possession, without any or upon very slight provocation, gives to another a mortal wound, the prisoner is prima facie guilty of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, and the necessity rests upon him of showing extenuating circumstances, and, unless he proves such extenuating circumstances, or the circumstances appear from the case made by the state, he is guilty of murder in the first degree." It will be observed that the said instruction No. 1, after saying to the jury that the necessity rests on Grant G. Hertzog of showing extenuating circumstances, omits the words, "and unless he proves such extenuating circumstances, or the circumstances appear from the case made by the state," he is guilty of murder in the first degree. Murder by poison, lying in wait, imprisonment, starving, or any willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or in the commission of, or attempt to commit, arson, rape, robbery, or burglary, is murder of the first degree. All other murder is murder of the second degree. Code 1899, c. 144, § 1. In State v. Cain, supra, and in other cases herein cited, it is held that, where a homicide is proved, the presumption is that it is murder in the second degree. It is prima facie attended with malice, which enters into murder as one of its ingredients. If the state would elevate it to murder in the first degree, she must establish the characteristics of that crime; and, if the prisoner would reduce it to manslaughter, the burden of proof rests upon him. State v. Welch, 36 W. Va. 690, 15 S. E. 419; State v. Dodds (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 228, 231; Hill's Case, 2 Grat. 595. The distinctive element in willful, deliberate, and premeditated murder, not in murder of the second degree, is the specific intention to take life. Wherever, therefore, in a case of deliberate homicide, there is a specific intention to take life, the offense, if consummated, is murder in the first degree; but, if there be no specific intention to take life, it is murder in the second degree. The question whether a particular homicide is murder in the first or second degree is one of fact for the jury. Welch's Case, supra. Instruction No. 1 is not only faulty by reason of the omission pointed out therein, but the court thereby instructs the jury that Grant G. Hertzog is guilty of murder in the first degree. We think the jury could not and did not understand the language of the instruction in any other sense. Fairly construed, the instruction has no other meaning. If it be proved that the defendant, with a deadly weapon in his possession, without any or upon slight provocation, gave to the deceased a mortal wound, the defendant is prima facie guilty of willful, deliberate, and premeditated murder, because a person is presumed to intend that which is the immediate or necessary consequence of his act. The killing by the defendant with a deadly weapon in his possession, without any or upon very slight provocation, being proved, the jury may presume or accept it as prima facie true that the act of the defendant was willful, deliberate, and premeditated, and therefore that the defendant had at the time the specific intention to take life; but this presumption is always rebuttable. As stated above, the degree of murder is always a question of fact to be found by the jury upon facts proved, and presumed from the other facts established in the case. The court therefore erred in giving instruction No. 1.

What has been said concerning the specific intent of the accused at the time of the homicide to take life is applicable to the said instructions Nos. 2 and 3. It is shown by the evidence that the defendant was at the time, and for some time previous to the homicide had been, under the influence of intoxicating liquors. McClain on Crim. L. vol. 1, § 161, says: "As has already been explained, some crimes consist not merely in the committing of a criminal act, and the criminal intent inferred therefrom, but, in whole or in part, in the specific intent with which the act is done; and in such cases it is a well-established doctrine that intoxication may be shown for the purpose of negating the existence of such specific intent, by showing that the accused was, at the time of committing the act charged, incapable of entertaining the intent which is relied on as constituting or increasing the criminality of such act." Bishop's Crim. Law, vol. 1, § 409, states: "We have seen that intoxication does not incapacitate one to commit the common-law murder or manslaughter, because, to constitute either, the specific intent to take life need not exist; general malevolence sufficing. But where murder is divided by statute into two degrees, and, to constitute it in the first degree, there must be the specific intent to take life, if, by reason of being too deeply intoxicated, the accused person could not have had, so did not have, this specific intent, the murder is not in the first degree." In State v. Robinson, 20 W. Va. 740, 43 Am. Rep. 799, Judge Johnson, who delivered the opinion of the court, says: "After having carefully reviewed the authorities cited by the learned counsel for both the state and the prisoner, it seems to us that there is very little conflict to be found. The court, under such circumstances, must have steadily in view two objects—the safety of society and justice to the accused. We think we are fully authorized, under the authorities, to say that drunkenness is no excuse for crime. At common law the implied malice from his act would doom him to the scaffold, although he was too drunk when he committed the deed to harbor express malice. Now the only change made in the stringent rule of the common law is that where, under a statute, in order to constitute murder in the first degree, deliberation and premeditation are required, upon the question of whether there was on the part of the prisoner deliberation and premeditation, the jury may consider the fact that he was intoxicated at the time of the killing. The change goes no further. Upon the question of whether the prisoner is guilty of murder in the second degree or manslaughter, the jury are not permitted to consider the drunkenness of the prisoner at all. * * * A person who is intoxicated may yet be capable of deliberation and premeditation; and if the jury believe from all the evidence in the case that the prisoner willfully, maliciously, deliberately, and premeditatedly killed the deceased, they should find him guilty of murder in the first degree, although he was intoxicated at the time of the killing. * * * A person, whether he be an habitual drinker or not, cannot voluntarily make himself so drunk as to become on that account irresponsible for his conduct during such drunkenness. He may be perfectly unconscious of what he does, and yet he is responsible. He may be incapable of express malice, but the law implies malice in such a case from the nature of the instrument, and the absence of provocation, and other circumstances under which the act is done. * * * Where a statute establishes degrees of the crime of murder, and provides that 'all willful, deliberate and premeditated killing shall be murder in the first degree,' evidence that the accused was intoxicated at the time of the killing is competent for the consideration of the jury upon the question whether the accused was in such a condition of mind as to be capable of deliberation and premeditation."

Instructions Nos. 2 and 3 are good as abstract principles of law, and were applicable to the facts proved in Robinson's Case, supra; but, standing alone in this case, they, in effect, take from the consideration of the jury the evidence given in the case tending to prove the intoxication of the defendant at the time of, and shortly before, the homicide. It is the object and office of instructions to define for the jury, and to direct their attention to, the legal principles which apply to and govern the facts proved or presumed in the case. The instructions should simply develop the rules of law governing the particular facts (all the facts, not a part only) which the evidence tends to establish; and they (the instructions) are to be interpreted and judged of, not in any abstract way, but with reference to those facts. State v. Dodds, supra.

The court should have also given to the jury, in connection with Nos. 2 and 3, an instruction saying that "where a statute establishes degrees of the crime of murder, and provides that all willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing shall be murder in the first degree, the evidence given on the trial tending to prove that the accused was intoxicated at the time of the killing is competent for the consideration of the jury upon the question whether the accused was in such a condition of mind as to be capable of deliberation and premeditation." Failing to do this, it was error in the court to give instructions Nos. 2 and 3.

The defendant asked the court to give to the jury the following instructions:

"(5) The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the killing of John Russell by the defendant, Grant G. Hertzog, was the result of a sudden provocation or sudden quarrel, without malice prepense, then the killing is manslaughter."

"(10) The court instructs the jury that before they can find the defendant, Grant G. Hertzog, guilty of the murder of John Russell, they must believe from the evidence, beyond all reasonable doubt, that the said Hertzog was a man of sound sense at the time, and that he unlawfully killed the said Russell with malice aforethought."

But the court refused to give the said last-mentioned instructions, and each of them, to which action of the court the defendant excepted. There is no evidence in the record upon which said rejected instructions, or either of them, could be based. It is not error to refuse an instruction not specially adapted to, nor based upon, the facts of the case which the evidence fairly tends to prove. State v. Belknap, 39 W. Va. 427, 19 S. E. 507; Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 8 S. E. 493, 2 L. R. A. 668; Hutchinson v. Parkersburg, 25 W. Va. 226. The court did not err in refusing the proposed instructions.

After the verdict was rendered as aforesaid, the defendant moved the court to set aside the same, and to grant him a new trial, on the ground that said verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence, but the court overruled the motion, and the defendant again excepted. For the errors committed by the court, as hereinbefore pointed out, the last-mentioned motion should have been sustained; and, for the several reasons stated, the verdict of the jury is set aside and held for naught, the judgment of the court thereon is reversed and annulled, and a new trial upon the indictment aforesaid is awarded to the defendant.

LORENTZ v. PINNELL.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 23, 1904.)

USURY—APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS—RECOVERY—MEASURE.

1. All contracts and assurances made directly or indirectly for the loan or forbearance of money or other thing at a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent., except where such greater rate is allowed by law, are void as to any excess of interest agreed to be paid above that rate.

2. When usurious payments of interest are made upon a debt, the excess of interest so paid above the legal rate shall be applied as partial payments on the principal at the date of such payments, respectively.

3. After usurious interest has been paid, the same may be recovered back, either by action at law for money had and received, or by suit in equity.

4. In such action or suit the measure of recovery is the residue after crediting all payments of usury as partial payments upon the principal.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Upshur County; W. G. Bennett, Judge.

Bill by L. L. Lorentz against Celia A. Pinnell. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. M. Poundstone and A. Edmiston, for appellant. Young & McWhorter, for appellee.

McWHORTER, J. On the 20th day of December, 1884, Perry S. Lorentz executed his note under seal to A. M. Lorentz for $743, payable on or before the 1st day of February, 1885. On the 1st day of February, 1885, the payee in said note assigned the same for value to P. F. Pinnell. Indorsements of annual payments of interest were made upon said note without giving the amounts of the payments, showing that interest was paid thereon to February 1st of each year from 1886 to 1894, both inclusive; and on the 9th day of March, 1895, the said Lorentz made his note, payable one day after date, with interest from February 1, 1894, to Celia A. Pinnell, executrix of Philip F. Pinnell, for the same amount ($743); specifying further: "This note is given in lieu of a bond made by me to A. M. Lorentz, dated the 20th day of December, 1884, calling for the payment of Seven Hundred and Forty-Three dollars on or before the 1st day of February, 1885, for value received in land, which bond was on the 1st day of February, 1885, for value received assigned and transferred by the said A. M. Lorentz to said Philip F. Pinnell the interest on which bond has been paid up to the 1st day of February, 1894." Indorsements were made on the last-named note without specifying the amount paid, showing payments of interest thereon from February 1, 1894, to the 1st of February of each year up to February 1, 1900, all paid by said Perry S. Lorentz. And on the 30th day of January, 1901, Lafayette L. Lorentz paid the sum of $799.47 to the agent and attorney for said Celia A. Pinnell, executrix, "it being the face of this note, and $56.47 interest thereon from the 1st day of February, 1900, to the 12th day of January, 1901, the day to which interest was calculated." Lafayette L. Lorentz, administrator of Perry S. Lorentz, deceased, filed his bill in the circuit court of Upshur county in the fall of 1901 to recover back the usurious interest paid upon said notes, alleging that excessive and usurious interest had been charged and collected for each of the said years from 1885 until the final payment on January 30, 1901; that usurious interest was charged in said payments at the rate of 8 per cent. or 10 per cent.; and praying that the said Celia A. Pinnell, executrix, be required to answer the bill, disclosing under oath the rate of interest and amount of usury paid to the said P. F. Pinnell in his lifetime, and said executrix after the death of said Pinnell, upon said two notes, at each payment of interest as indorsed thereon, and as set forth in the bill, and that plaintiff have a decree against the defendant for the amount of the usurious interest so paid upon said notes, and the renewal thereof, from the date of the first payment of interest, together with legal interest upon the respective payments of usurious interest from the time they were so made, and for general relief, which bill was verified. The defendant filed her demurrer to the bill on the ground that a court of equity has no jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters alleged in the bill, because, if he had any demand, he had an adequate remedy at law to recover any usurious interest paid within five years prior to action brought therefor, and filed her answer, admitting that the several payments of interest on said note were at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, making the sum of $14.86 above the legal interest of 6 per cent. for each payment, and denied the right of plaintiff, in any event, to recover back any of such usurious interest paid to her by P. S. Lorentz prior to the 1st day of October, 1896, the same having been paid more than five years prior to the institution of this suit, and being barred by the statute of limitations, which defendant relied upon as if more formally pleaded, and denied that P. S. Lorentz was compelled to pay such usurious interest, and alleged that it was paid freely, and without any protest or objection. To which answer plaintiff replied generally. The court overruled the demurrer, and referred the cause to a commissioner of the court, with directions to ascertain and report the amount due plaintiff from the defendant as usury paid upon the debt described in the bill, and held that no part of the usurious interest admitted by the answer was barred by the statute of limitations, and directed the commissioner, in making said settlement, and ascertaining the amount due the plaintiff, to treat the usurious interest paid from year to year as partial payments upon the debt described in the bill and answer, allowing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. upon the amount found to have been overpaid by the plaintiff, from the time of such payment. The commissioner made his report, ascertaining the amount due the plaintiff to be $395.06, with interest thereon from the 18th day of October, 1902, as corrected by the court on exception to the report made by the defendant; the commissioner having erroneously based his calculations on the payments for the several years as having been made on the 1st day of February, when in fact they were made on other dates in the succeeding fall of the year. Defendant made other exceptions to the report, raising the question of the statute of limitations as raised by the pleadings, which exceptions were overruled, and the court entered decree for the said sum and the costs of suit, and awarded execution to be levied upon the assets of the estate of P. F. Pinnell in the hands of said executrix.

The questions here for consideration are as to the right of the plaintiff, as the personal representative of P. S. Lorentz, to bring this suit in equity, and whether the court erred in applying the several payments of usurious interest to the principal from the date of said several payments, dating back to the first payments of interest made on the original note.

It seems to be well settled that a debtor paying usurious interest has a right to recover it back in equity, as well as in law, after the same has been paid. See 2 Pom. Eq. Jur.; Clarkson's Adm'r v. Garland, 1 Leigh, 147; Grindler v. Nelson, 9 Gill, 299, 52 Am. Dec. 604; also Davis v. Demming, 12 W. Va. 246. Hogg's Eq. Prin. § 426, referring to section 7, c. 9, Code 1899, says: "Aside from this statute, a bill in equity may be filed for relief on account of money already paid on a usurious contract under the general principles of a court of equity; the measure of relief in such case being the excess paid above the principal and legal interest, with interest on such excess from the time of its payment"—and cites Davis v. Demming, supra; Moseley v. Brown, 76 Va. 419; Munford v. McVeigh's Adm'r, 92 Va. 446, 23 S. E. 857; and Norvell v. Hedrick, 21 W. Va. 529. In Spengler v. Snapp, 5 Leigh, 478, it is held: "Where the debtor seeks in equity an account of and decree for money already paid on usurious contract, the measure of relief is the excess paid above the principal and legal interest; and, if his payments exceed principal and legal interest, the surplus, with interest, shall be decreed to him."

It is insisted by counsel for appellant that, if a court of equity have concurrent jurisdiction with a court of law for the recovery back of usury which has been paid, the court of equity is equally bound by the statute of limitations; citing Wood on Lim. § 58, and Webb on Usury, p. 532. True, a court of equity is bound by the statute of limitations, but, when the law applies usurious payments of interest as partial payments on the principal, no cause of action accrues for the recovery of usurious interest paid until the payments together exceed the principal and legal interest. Campbell v. Sloan, 62 Pa. 481, was a case where Campbell had borrowed money from Sloan on usurious interest, and gave a note with surety. He paid the usurious interest for some years, when the original note was taken up, and another given for the same amount, with a new surety; and it was held that the original taint of usury attached to all consecutive securities growing out of the original transaction, and none of them, however remote, could be free from it, if the descent could be traced; and it was there held that, "when the new security was taken, all that could have been recovered on the old was the sum actually loaned and lawful interest, less the usurious payments which had been made. These payments, as payments of interest, were avoided by the statute, and became payments on account of the principal." Under our statute (section 5, c. 96), usurious contracts are absolutely void as to any excess of interest agreed to be paid above the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. Hence any payment made and accepted in excess of the legal interest due, under our rule applying partial payments, must apply to the principal debt as of the time the payment is made. For the rule governing partial payments, see Hurst's Adm'r v. Hite, 20 W. Va. 183 (Syl., point 1); Ward v. Ward, 21 W. Va. 262 (Syl., point 3). The only contract existing between the parties is the note, with legal interest thereon; and, after satisfying the interest which has accrued upon the note to the time of payment, there is nothing left to which any further payment can possibly apply, except the principal of the debt which is past due. As said in Turner v. Turner, 80 Va. 379: "The creditor has no right to apply the money paid to him to the satisfaction of what does not, nor ever did, constitute any legal or equitable demand against the party making the payment." Citing Chitty on Cont. 1114 et seq. In Musselman v. McElhenny, 23 Ind. 4, 85 Am. Dec. 445, it is held: "If usurious interest is taken out in advance, it makes a case of want of consideration in a note covering the amount, to the extent of such interest." And: "When usurious interest is paid on a note after its execution, it amounts to a payment of so much principal, and, if the amount thus paid exceeds the principal, it may be recovered back." Webb on Usury, § 461; 2 Tuck. Com. Paper, 130. In Zeigler v. Scott, 10 Ga. 389, 54 Am. Dec. 395, it is held that, where a borrower pays the amount of a usurious debt to a lender, he can afterwards sue and recover back the usurious excess in an action for money had and received; and in Farwell v. Meyer, 35 Ill. 40, it is said that, "although usurious interest voluntarily paid since the passage of the act of 1857 cannot be recovered back, still, so long as any part of the debt remains unpaid, the debtor may insist upon a deduction of the usury therefrom. The usury received is considered as having been extorted by means of the debt, and is to be applied in payment of the same." In Threadgill v. Timberlake, 2 Head, 395, the court laid down as a rule of equity to apply all usurious payments to the principal until it is paid, when the remainder can be recovered as so much money had and received.

Counsel for appellant rely upon the more recent Virginia cases (Munford v. McVeigh's Adm'r, 23 S. E. 857, and Crabtree v. Building Association, 95 Va. 676, 29 S. E. 741, 64 Am. St. Rep. 818), where it is held in the former case that "where usurious interest has been voluntarily paid, as interest, on a debt secured by deed of trust, equity, in a suit to enjoin sale under the debt, will not, after the year within which usurious interest may be recovered by law, apply any payments of usurious interest in reduction of the principal." And in the latter case it is held: "Where payments have been made upon a usurious contract, and the borrower himself applies the payment to the interest, or the lender so applies it with the assent of the borrower, the appropriation so made will not be disturbed, unless within one year thereafter a suit be instituted by the borrower for its recovery, or a suit be brought by the lender within that period, in which case the borrower may set it off against the demand for which he is sued." These decisions are based upon the statute of Virginia, which is essentially different from ours. The Virginia statute makes all contracts and assurances made directly or indirectly for the loan or forbearance of money or other thing at a greater rate of interest than the legal rate to be deemed for an illegal consideration as to the excess, while our statute makes such contracts or assurances absolutely void as to such excess. Section 2823, Code Va. 1887, provides how the excess of illegal interest may be recovered back by the person paying the same, by suit brought for that purpose within one year from its payment; and such suit may be brought even though the borrower has voluntarily paid the same, or so especially applied it. They also cite Lynch v. Bank, 22 W. Va. 564, 46 Am. Rep. 520. This was an action by Lynch against the national bank to recover the penalty for usurious interest alleged to have been paid by him, and received by the bank. It is there held (syllabus): "(2) When a statute creates a new offense and denounces the penalty, or gives a new right and declares the remedy, the punishment or the remedy can be only that which the statute prescribes. (3) An action for the recovery of the penalty prescribed by said section 5198 must be commenced within two years from the time the usurious transaction occurred. Each payment of such interest is a transaction, within the meaning of said section, and the prescribed limitation commences to run from that time, although the debt on which such interest was paid remains unpaid." I am unable to see where these authorities can help the case of the appellant. In Lynch v. Bank it is distinctly held that each payment of such interest is an independent transaction, within the meaning of the section 5198, Rev. St. U. S. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3493], and the statute of limitations begins to run from the date of each transaction. And the same is in no wise affected by our statute. Counsel for appellant contend that each payment of usurious interest of $14.88 paid by P. S. Lorentz was a separate transaction, and the statute began to run from the date of each of such payments; but, as we have seen, such surplus of interest paid, under our statute and the rulings of this court, must be applied to the principal of the debt as of the date of the respective payments. As was said by Judge Brannon, with reference to payments of usurious interest, in Reger v. O'Neal, 33 W. Va., at page 166, 10 S. E. 377, 6 L. R. A. 427: "I think, with O'Neal's counsel, that the payments should be applied when paid, and operate to stop interest on the principal from that date."

Applying these principles to the payments made by appellee and his decedent, there is but one way to arrive at the amount to be recovered, and that is by the usual method of applying partial payments under our law as laid down by this court, and which seems to have been so done by the circuit court, whose decree must be affirmed.

BRANNON, J. (concurring). The court being divided in Moore v. Johnson, 34 W. Va. 672, 12 S. E. 918, I simply asserted that one voluntarily paying usury could recover it back, without giving authority. Examination now, I regret to say, brings me to the same conclusion. Norvell v. Hedrick, 21 W. Va. 523; Davis v. Demming, 12 W. Va. 246; Zelgler v. Scott, 54 Am. Dec. 395, note 400; Spengler v. Snapp, 5 Leigh, 478; Munford v. McVeigh's Adm'r, 92 Va. 446, 23 S. E. 857; Bexar v. Robinson, 22 Am. St. Rep. 36, and note; Wheaton v. Hibbard, 11 Am. Dec. 284. It is unjust that a voluntary payment should be recovered back. A statute should deny recovery, or section 8, c. 141, Code 1860, denying recovery after a year, should be reenacted. Our Code declares a contract void, beyond legal interest, and a payment of such interest is without consideration and against law. The contract being void, not merely voidable, there is nothing to warrant the payment. Webb on Usury, § 461. Section 8, c. 141, Code 1860, gave action to recover within one year usury paid. It was left out of the Code of 1863, and probably the Legislature thought that its repeal would deny any recovery; but, if so, it forgot that, in so far as that section gave action to recover, it was only declaratory of common law, and, on its repeal, the common law remained, and gave it right of recovery. Common law allowed any rate of interest. It would not originate action for usury, but, the statute making the contract void and illegal, the common law steps in afterwards and gives recovery because the money is paid under a void contract. It occurred to me that as section 8, Code 1860, did not change, but only reaffirmed, the common law giving action, from its repeal we might infer that the Legislature intended to repeal the common law; but I fear we cannot thus hold a repeal of the common law by implication. The Legislature has not denied such a recovery. Booth v. Com., 16 Grat. 529 (by Judge Moncure); Moseley v. Brown, 76 Va. 419; State v. Mines, 38 W. Va. 125, 18 S. E. 470. We can as well say that the thought was that the common law is sufficient, without the statute, as that it was the intent that the common-law rule should not continue. It is only inference in either case.

(55 W. Va. 108)

COHEN v. KING KNOB CLUB.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 23, 1904.)

SALE OF LIQUOR—BILL TO ENJOIN—SUFFICIENT—ABATEMENT OF NUISANCE.

1. Under section 18, c. 82, Code 1899, an allegation in a bill in equity charging that intoxicating liquors are sold and vended by the defendant at a certain described house, building, or place "contrary to law," is insufficient for uncertainty. It should further allege in what manner such liquors are sold and vended contrary to law—as, without having a state license therefor.

2. A corporation claiming to be a social and literary club, which requires no qualification for membership except the payment of an initiation fee of $1, for which fee there is issued to the applicant a membership card and a coupon with 20 tickets attached, each "good for five cents for games and supplies," which tickets are received by the general manager of the club in exchange for drinks, one ticket for a glass of beer and two tickets for a drink of whisky, and the members are permitted to buy such coupons with 5, 10, or 20 tickets attached at 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1 each, respectively, to be so exchanged for such drinks at such club, held to be a fraudulent device to evade the revenue laws of the state, and the house, building, or place where such sales are made will be held, taken, and deemed to be a common and public nuisance, and will be abated as such.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barbour County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Bill by H. Cohen against the King Knob Club. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Fred O. Blue and John Bassell, for appellant. H. E. Tyson, for appellee.

McWHORTER, J. A. N. Humphreys and four others obtained a charter from the Secretary of State, and organized a corporation by the name of "The King Knob Club," to be located in the town of Berryburg, in Barbour county. Its objects, as set forth in its charter, are as follows: "For the promotion of sociability, the diffusion of useful knowledge and improvement of the relation of the members of the club and its visitors, as well as for benevolent purposes, and for entertainment and amusement for the members and invited guests, and for the maintaining of billiard and pool tables and games of the like; also card playing and other games for social amusement, and the establishment of a buffet, from which refreshments and drinks may be served for the express use of the club and its members and guests, and for other like amusements and entertainments; and for these purposes desire authority to purchase or lease, sell or convey, real estate or real property of the value of at least five thousand dollars, all of which property to be acquired for the sole use of the corporation and for the purposes aforesaid. The principal features of said club to be entertainments and amusements by card playing and the other games above mentioned, and the serving of refreshments and drinks to the members of said club, its guests and visitors. No such powers and privileges shall be exercised in violation of any law of the state of West Virginia." The corporation adopted by-laws providing that the membership should be limited to 750 persons. A person, to become a member, was required to pay $1, which had to accompany his application for membership. For this $1 he received a book or coupons with tickets attached. These coupons were 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1, with tickets attached stamped or printed: "Club Room King Knob Club. Good for 5 cents for games and supplies. Not good if detached. No. ———." These tickets were to be used for buying drinks or other supplies—one ticket, five cents, for a glass of beer; two tickets for a drink of whisky. The corporation employed a general manager at $75 per month to keep the club in order and to issue drinks to the club members. It rented a house of five rooms, including a cold-storage room, for which it paid, or was to pay, $3,000 per annum; subrenting one of the rooms for a barber shop at $2 per month. The general manager paid $1.50 per month for another room. The house used by the club for its headquarters is by the evidence variously estimated to be worth from $250 to $1,000, and is located within some 25 feet of the business house of H. Cohen, who is engaged in the mercantile business. The club commenced business in the summer of 1902. On the 27th day of September of that year H. Cohen presented his bill in equity to the judge of the circuit court of Barbour county, alleging that the defendant corporation had been guilty, and was then guilty, of selling and vending in said building so occupied by it intoxicating liquors contrary to law, and that by reason of the sale of such intoxicating liquors in said building it had become and was a common nuisance, under section 18, c. 32, Code 1899, and praying that the same might be abated or closed up as a place for the sale of such liquors contrary to law, and for an injunction against said defendant corporation to restrain and abate such nuisance, and for general relief; upon which the judge granted an injunction as prayed for. Defendant filed its demurrer and answer denying that it was selling intoxicating liquors contrary to law. Depositions were taken and filed for plaintiff and defendant. On the 10th day of October, 1902, the cause was submitted to the court upon the bill and the answer and general replication and upon the depositions taken in the cause, and the court perpetuated the injunction, and gave judgment for costs against the defendant, from which decree the defendant appealed, and says that it was error for the court below to enter the decree of October 10, 1902, in the cause for plaintiff and making perpetual the injunction awarded the plaintiff. Appellant does not argue in its brief the question of demurrer, but says: "We see no reason why such club should have such right to sell or offer to sell, etc., without a license; but the question is, in this case, has the defendant sold or offered to sell to its members? We submit, not"—thus relying upon its defense upon the merits of the case.

State v. Boggess, 36 W. Va. 713, 15 S. E. 423, Syl., point 3: "It is generally sufficient in an indictment to allege a statutory offense in the language of the statute." Section 18, c. 32, Code 1899, provides: "All houses, buildings and places of every description where intoxicating liquors are sold or vended contrary to law shall be held, taken and deemed to be common and public nuisances, and courts of equity shall have jurisdiction by injunction to restrain and abate any such nuisance upon bill filed by any citizen or by the prosecuting attorney of any county in the name of the state of West Virginia, and they may also be abated as such upon conviction of the owner or keeper thereof as hereinafter provided." Under said section 18 an allegation that a person is selling or vending intoxicating liquors contrary to law is equivalent to saying that he is so doing without having a state license therefor. Under section 16 of the same chapter, providing for the sale of spirituous liquors under a state license, it is not made an offense for the vender to sell such drinks "to any person who is intoxicated at the time, or who is in the habit of drinking to intoxication, when he knows or has reason to believe such person is a minor, or of unsound mind, or is intoxicated, or is in the habit of drinking to intoxication, or if he permit any person to drink to intoxication on any premises under his control, or shall sell or give any intoxicating drink to any one on Sunday," except as to persons who have obtained license to sell. Any other person, not having a state license, simply sells contrary to law, whether he sells to a minor, or person of unsound mind, or intoxicated person, or on Sunday. An allegation in a bill to abate a nuisance, charging that the defendant is guilty of selling and vending, at the house, building, or place in the bill described, intoxicating liquors contrary to law, in the language of the statute, is, in my view of the case, sufficient on demurrer; and in this opinion Judge DENT concurs. If the allegation of the bill be true that the defendant was vending and selling intoxicating liquors contrary to law, its defense would be the possession of a license, and it is incumbent upon it to prove that defense. State v. Horner, 52 W. Va. 373, 43 S. E. 89. However, a majority of the court are of the opinion that the allegation should be more specific, and allege in what manner or in what respect such selling and vending was contrary to law—as, doing so without a state license therefor. Hence the demurrer should have been sustained, and the court are unanimously of the opinion that, the plaintiff having made a good case on the proofs, the injunction should not be dissolved, but the plaintiff should be permitted to amend his bill in the particular indicated, and the injunction be perpetuated.

It is insisted by the defendant that technically there was no sale, giving Bishop's definition of sale, "to transfer the ownership for a valuable consideration," and Benjamin on Sales, "the transfer of the absolute or general property in a thing for a price in money." In order to evade the law, the defendant sold the coupons with the tickets attached, and received the price thereof in money. Then the purchaser of the coupon would go to the general manager, the vendor of the drinks, and deliver to him two tickets from a coupon for a drink of whisky, or one ticket for a glass of beer; the price of the coupons and tickets being in the till of the defendant in advance of the sale of the whisky. Is this not as much an evasion of the law as to arrange with a keeper of a "speak-easy" to place the bottle of whisky behind a certain stump, then the purchaser go and take up the bottle, and leave the price of it in money in its place? There are many schemes and devices for evading the law, and the defendant has adopted one which is clearly a mere fraudulent device to evade the revenue laws. This charter was taken out by five persons, among other things, "for the promotion of sociability," and "the diffusion of useful knowledge," and "for benevolent purposes," and "the serving of refreshments and drinks to the members of said club, its guests and visitors"; and, as appears from the testimony in the case, the object of "serving drinks" was the "principal feature" of the "principal features of said club." It made very extensive provisions in the way of numbers of membership, sufficient to include all men in the vicinity of its location who would probably be induced by its very liberal terms to become members of the club. Ordinarily, clubs organized for social purposes and mental improvement are somewhat exclusive, and the initiation fee and dues go into the common treasury, to meet the social expenses of the club, and members do not in any way receive back the fees and dues paid, except in social enjoyment; but here we have a club which has an initiation fee of $1, but in return the applicant for membership receives a coupon with tickets which will insure him 10 drinks of whisky or 20 glasses of beer. There is another striking difference between the ordinary social club and the "King Knob Club." In the former, persons applying for membership are required to have a certain standard of social standing and moral character, and are voted in by the unanimous or fixed majority of all the members voting on the application of the candidate; but in the case of the "King Knob Club" the only qualification required of the applicant is to pay the $1, and receive his tickets for the drinks; and these coupons and tickets can be purchased from the general manager or bar-keeper by the members in unlimited quantities. There is no restriction even as to location or residence of proposed members. A traveler passing, or any other person, can call upon the secretary and president at the headquarters of the club, pay his dollar, get his card of membership, and with his coupon and tickets furnished him in return for the $1 "initiation fee" repair to the bar of the club and receive his drinks in exchange for the tickets. In State v. Shumate, 44 W. Va. 490, 29 S. E. 1001, syllabus, it is held: "Under section 1, c. 82, Code 1899, it is unlawful for a literary and social club, without first obtaining a state license therefor, to sell, offer, or expose for sale, to its members, spirituous liquor, wine, porter, ale, or beer, or any drink of a like nature."

For the reasons herein stated the decree is reversed, and the demurrer to the bill sustained. The cause is remanded to the circuit court of Barbour county, with directions to take further proceedings therein as herein indicated.

BRANNON, J. (concurring). In State v. Parkersburg Brewing Co., 45 S. E. 924, 53 W. Va. 591, this court held that an indictment under the same statute involved in this case was bad in merely saying that the defendant sold liquor contrary to law. The opinion by Judge Miller in that case gives very satisfactory reasons for our decision in it, and, as we think, furnishes a vindication of the position of the majority of the court in this case, though the present is a bill in chancery and that was an indictment. The very same act, under the same statute, constitutes the same offense—public nuisance. And for it the statute gives two remedies: the one by indictment, under which three penalties may be imposed—fine and imprisonment and abatement of the nuisance; the other, abatement of the nuisance. And the penalty under the chancery jurisdiction is very severe, as it closes a man's business, deprives him of the use of his house for a certain purpose, and deprives him of a livelihood. We do not condemn the statute. We use these remarks about it only to show that the severity of the penalty calls for full, fair notice of the particular acts wherein the unlawful sale consists, because unlawful sale may be in many ways—sales without license, sales on Sunday, to infants, to habitual drunkards, and other ways. Fair notice of the act making the offense is required by principles of criminal pleading. Besides, when the very same act is made the ground of penalty both on indictment and bill, why require the specification in the one case and not in the other?

POFFENBARGER, P., and MILLER, J., concur in this opinion.

WILLIAMS v. BELMONT COAL & COKE CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 23, 1904.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYEES—NEGLIGENCE—DANGEROUS PREMISES—ENTRY BY INVITATION—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—MINORS—ORDINARY CARE.

1. One who enters upon the premises of another as a servant of the proprietor, for the purpose of performing labor thereon for the proprietor, whether in pursuance of a contract with the owner of the property, or as the servant of an independent contractor engaged in the performance of work thereon, is not a trespasser or a mere licensee. He is deemed to be upon the premises by invitation of the owner, who owes him the duty of keeping the premises in a reasonably safe condition.

2. A person so entering upon the premises of another, however, does so subject to the doctrine, "Volenti non fit injuria," and takes upon himself the risk of all dangers attendant thereon of which he has knowledge.

3. The principle of the assumption of known risks and dangers is applicable to minors, when there is specific and positive evidence showing that the risk in question was comprehended.

4. A dark tunnel, leading through a hill to a coal mine in another hill back of it, used by the owner of the mine for hauling coal from it, by means of an electric motor, and also by the miners in going to and returning from their work in the mine, with the knowledge and consent of the owner, and as the usual and customary way of ingress and egress, is a place in respect to which the owner of the mine owes to his employees the duty of ordinary care for their safety when so using it.

5. A boy 15½ years old, and of at least ordinary intelligence, who had worked with his father in such mine, and had passed through such tunnel in going to and returning from his work on several successive days, and started alone through such tunnel after having been warned by the father to be careful, and, while passing through it, was run over and killed by the motor, must be deemed to have assumed the risk attendant upon such palpably dangerous undertaking.

6. A minor who enters the employ of another assumes the risks of all such apparent dangers as he is capable of comprehending and avoiding, and, in a suit against his employer because of his death by reason of the alleged negligence of his employer, it must be shown that his death was occasioned by negligence on the part of the employer, other than such apparent danger.

7. Points 3, 4, and 5 of syllabus in Ketterman v. Railroad Co., 37 S. E. 683, 48 W. Va. 606, approved and applied.

8. If an exception for allowing or refusing to allow a question to be answered by a witness fails to give the answer of the witness, or what is expected to be proved by him, the appellate court cannot determine the relevancy, admissibility, or value of the answer, and for that reason the exception will not be considered by it. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County: F. A. Guthrie, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Williams, administratrix, against the Belmont Coal & Coke Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Payne & Payne, A. B. Littlepage, and L. D. Vickers, for plaintiff in error. Brown, Jackson & Knight, for defendant in error.

MILLER, J. Eugene Williams was killed in a tunnel adjacent to and connected with the defendant's coal mines. Elizabeth Williams, his executrix, brought her action in the circuit court of Kanawha county to recover $10,000 damages for the alleged negligence of the defendant, which, as she claims, resulted in the death of decedent, her son. Upon the trial of the case in the circuit court, the defendant, without introducing any testimony, demurred to the plaintiff's evidence. The court sustained the demurrer, and rendered judgment for the defendant. To that judgment a writ of error was awarded. The plaintiff insists, as the principal ground of error, that the trial court should have submitted the evidence to the jury impaneled in the case.

The declaration contains two counts. The first, among other things, states that on the 22d day of January, 1900, the day on which the deceased was killed, the said Eugene Williams was engaged to work for his father, Augustus Williams, who was then and there employed by said defendant as a coal miner at its coal mines. This count then alleges as follows: "The plaintiff avers that on the day and year last aforesaid, while the said Eugene Williams was rightfully and lawfully in the said entry to the mines of the said defendant, and on the defendant's said railroad which passes through said entry, the said defendant, by its servants, so carelessly, negligently, and improperly conducted themselves in and about the management, control, and direction of the motor, cars, and carriages so used on said railroad that the same, by and through the fault, carelessness, negligence, and improper conduct of the servants of said defendant, then and there about three hundred feet from the drift mouth of said entry, with great force and violence, were driven and struck against the said Eugene Williams, whereby he, the said Eugene Williams, was cut into pieces and killed." The second count, without averring any employment of the father by the company, charges that the defendant "was the owner of a certain railroad, to wit, a railroad extending from its tippie at its mines in the said county of Kanawha on, to, and through its main entry to its mines, and of certain motors, engines, railroad cars, and carriages operated under the care and management of certain servants of said defendant; nevertheless, the said defendant, by its said servants, so carelessly, negligently, and improperly behaved and conducted itself in and about the management, control, and direction of said railroad, motors, engines, cars, and carriages, that the same, by and through the default, carelessness, negligence, and improper conduct of the said servants of the said defendant, then and there, at the county of Kanawha aforesaid, with great force and violence, were driven and struck against the said Eugene Williams, by means whereof he, the said Eugene Williams, was then and there, at the county of Kanawha aforesaid, knocked down and killed."

The evidence discloses that the mines and other works of the defendant were separated by what is called "Dry Branch"; that the company's coal tippie is on the Kanawha river; that between the river and Dry Branch there is a mountain, which in the record is designated as the "front mountain"; that beyond Dry Branch is another mountain, in which are the company's coal mines; that from the mouth of the mines there is a trestle across Dry Branch; thence a tunnel through the front mountain to the coal tippie, and also to the river; and that about 600 feet from the Dry Branch entrance of the tunnel, toward the river, the tunnel forks, the left-hand branch turning into another chamber, and going to the coal tippie, and the other branch, continuing to the river entrance, a distance from the Dry Branch entrance of about 2,800 feet. From the mouth of the mines, across the trestle, through the tunnel, to the tippie, the company had its haulage track, over which it carried its coal in cars, as it was taken from its mines. The coal cars were drawn by an electric motor, which would take out a number of loaded cars from the trestle, through the tunnel to the tippie, and return with another train of empties. The latter would then be left on the trestle, and a train of loaded cars made up for the motor, the trestle being used for that purpose. It required about a half an hour to make up a load on the trestle, and about the same length of time for the motor to then make a round trip to the tippie. At the Dry Branch entrance to the tunnel there was a trapdoor, which at the time of the death of Williams was in charge of a boy. What his duties were, are not stated in the evidence. It is also shown that the miners would go through this tunnel from the river to the mines in the morning, and return through it in the evening, on their way home after the close of their day's work; but it is also proved that their passage through the tunnel was not necessary to enable them to reach the mines, as there was a passway across the mountain from the river to Dry Branch. It appears that at certain places in the tunnel it was dangerous for footmen to meet the motor, but that a person could go through with safety, either by waiting on the Dry Branch side until the motor started into the tunnel with loaded cars, or by learning from the trapdoor boy how long the motor had been gone, so as to determine whether there was sufficient time for the person to travel the 600 feet to the point where the motor track turned off to the tippie; that, if the miner or other person found himself in the tunnel where there was not sufficient room for the motor to pass, he could have the motor stop by a signal with the hand to the motorman; and that the miners, in passing through the tunnel, always carried their mine lamps with them, on their caps. It is further proved that the deceased worked for and with his father in the mines in the rear mountain, beyond Dry Branch, six days before he was killed; that, in going to and from his work, he passed with his father through the tunnel each morning and evening; that, about 3 o'clock in the afternoon of the day on which he was killed, he quit work, and started out of the mines to go to the place where he and his father stayed, his father at the time telling him to be careful; that, after leaving the mines and crossing the trestle, he went in at the trapdoor, and started along the entry through the front mountain, over the motor track; that he was struck by the motor and killed about 300 feet from the trapdoor, and about halfway between the trapdoor and the point where the motor track turns to the left into the other entry, going to the tippie; that, if the boy had not been struck, the motor would have reached the trapdoor, and passed through it, in about 1½ minutes thereafter. It would seem, therefore, that the boy passed through the trapdoor into the tunnel within a few minutes before the time when the motor was due. It is also proved that the motor was about 3½ feet in height; that ordinarily it carried a headlight, which had before that time been broken; that the company had procured another, which did not burn well, and for that reason it had been taken off by the motorman, and the company had sent for another; that the headlight, when on the motor, did not light the track more than 30 feet in front; that at the time of the killing of the boy the motor was not carrying a headlight, for the reason stated, but the motorman, who, in his seat on the motor, could see over the top of it, carried a large torchlight on his head, which could be seen a distance of 200 yards; that the motor did not carry a bell or other instrument for alarm, but, by the singing of the trolley wire, the motor could be heard coming for a distance of 1,000 feet; that the wheels of the motor and of the cars, and the noise caused by the bumping of the cars against each other, could be heard a distance of from 400 to 500 feet; that no miner's light was seen ahead of the motor by the persons in charge thereof, to indicate that any one was passing along the tunnel; that the motor was going on a down grade at a speed of from 10 to 12 miles per hour, with a train of 10 empty coal cars attached thereto, and could not have been stopped under 100 feet; that the boy was not seen on the track, and was not discovered until after he was killed. No person testifies how or in what position he was when struck. The motor was thrown from the track, and the boy, when found, was under it. It is further shown that the tunnel at the time was not lighted by lamps or otherwise, and that there were two electric wires running through the same. It is proved by the father of the boy that he and the boy were doing a "double turn" (the work of two miners); that in the afternoon of the day of his death, about 3 o'clock, the boy said to his father that he would go out of the mines to provide something for them to eat, and that the father said, "All right; be careful;" that the boy was 15 years and 6 months old, obedient, and industrious; and that father and son were doing about as much as the work of two men. The father also testified that the boy was not stupid; that "he was about as understanding a boy as I had ever seen or had. I have got two more, and he was about the most intelligent boy I ever had." The uncle of the deceased also swore that the boy was considered bright, and fully up to the average. It is also shown that, had the boy waited outside of the trapdoor until the motor returned, made up its load, and started back to the tippie, and had then followed it, he could have passed through the tunnel with perfect safety.

The sole question in the case, as presented by the record, is whether the defendant is guilty of negligence, as alleged. Its plea is, "Not guilty." The evidence proves that Eugene Williams was killed on defendant's premises, used by it as a part of its works for the mining and removal of its coal; that when killed he had left the mines where he had been that day engaged with his father in digging coal, and was then passing through the tunnel on his way to his lodging place, having finished his day's work for the company; that he was working for his father, and under his care and direction; was performing a miner's work; and that he was intelligent, and fully up to the average in mental capacity. There is no suggestion that he was not in the full possession and enjoyment of all of his senses. He had worked six days in the mines with his father, going and returning through the tunnel each morning and evening, to and from his work. Deceased was not obliged to pass through the tunnel to reach his work, or to return therefrom. He used the tunnel for his own convenience. He was in no way connected with the work of hauling the coal from the trestle to the tippie. His presence in the tunnel at the time of his death was voluntary on his part. He was under no obligation or duty to the company to be there. No officer or employé of the company had invited or requested him to go there. Neither does it appear that the company ever objected to deceased or any other person going through the tunnel, although it must have known that its employés were making such use of the tunnel. It is stated by the father that on one occasion he saw the motor in the tunnel. It could have been seen, and, no doubt, was observed by the deceased, that the tunnel was not lighted, and that the motor carried neither headlight nor bell. If not so observed in the tunnel, ample opportunity was afforded to see this while the motor remained each trip on the trestle, where it made up its trains. The deceased could have learned, approximately, the location of the motor, when he entered the tunnel through the trapdoor, had he made inquiry of the boy who was in charge of the trapdoor or entrance. It is shown that at the time of the death of the boy he was unseen, and his presence unknown, by the motorman. No claim is made that either father or son was ignorant as to the character of the tunnel, the existence of the trolley track, the trolley wires, the motor, or the method of operating the same. Neither is it claimed that the death of young Williams was the result of wanton, willful, or gross negligence of the company or its employés. The caution of the father to his son indicates that he knew of and appreciated the danger. What, then, were the legal responsibilities and liabilities, if any, of the defendant to the deceased, under the circumstances of this case? As a matter of course, there can be no negligence when there is no breach of duty. It must appear, therefore, not only that the defendant owed a duty, but also that he did not perform it. Sher. & Redf. Neg. vol. 1, § 15. Negligence is the doing of something which, under the circumstances, a reasonable person would not do, or the omission to do something, in the discharge of a legal duty, which, under the circumstances, a reasonable person would do, and which act of commission or omission, as a natural consequence directly following, produces damages to another. Washington v. B. & O. R. Co., 17 W. Va. 190.

There would seem to be some question as to whether the deceased was, in the strict sense, in the service of the defendant company, after he had quit his work in the mine for the day, and had started on his journey to his lodging place, beyond the front mountain. It is certain that he was not then engaged in any part of the work for which he was employed by the company while he was in the tunnel where he was killed; but it may be said that he was yet in the service of the defendant as a coal miner or digger, not having severed his relation with the company. In the case of McGuirk v. Shattuck, 160 Mass. 47, 35 N. E. 110, 39 Am. St. Rep. 454, in which plaintiff sued the defendants for injuries received by her on her way from her home to her work, she being in the employ of defendants as a laundress, and at the time riding in defendants' wagon, the court there said: "The plaintiff must be regarded as having been in the service of the defendants at the time of the accident. Whether the transportation of the plaintiff was actually gratuitous, as it seems to have been, or whether it was in pursuance of such an understanding between the parties that it may be deemed to have been a part of the contract, in either case it was incident to the service which the plaintiff was to perform, and closely connected with it." However this may be, in the view taken by us of the case that question is not very material.

As hereinbefore stated, the passage of the boy through the tunnel was not a part of his labor for defendant, nor necessarily connected therewith, as he had other means of reaching the mine. Not being directed by his employer to go there, his use of that route was of his own choice, and for his own convenience.

If, however, it can be said that at the time of his death the boy was engaged in the work of his employer, it would not, under the facts and circumstances, materially change the result of the case. A minor, like an adult, assumes the obvious risks of injury from the condition of the business in which he engages; and those are obvious risks which a person of the plaintiff's apparent age, intelligence, and capacity would discover and appreciate by the exercise of ordinary care. Dresser on Employer's Liability, § 96. As to the knowledge which a minor in fact possesses, and as to the presumption that he will use reasonable care to inform himself, he stands in no better condition than an adult. Id. See cases there cited. Ray on Neg. of Imp. Duties, 18, says that where the owner or occupier of land, in the prosecution of his own purposes or business, or of a purpose or business in which there is a common interest, invites another, either expressly or impliedly, to come upon the premises, he cannot with impunity expose him to unreasonable or concealed dangers—as, for example, from an open trap in a passageway. The duty in this case is founded upon the plainest principles of justice. The keeper of a public place of business is bound to keep his premises, and the passageways to and from them, in safe condition, and use ordinary care to avoid accidents or injury to those properly entering upon his premises on business. But this rule only applies to such parts of the building as are a part of, or used to gain access to, or constitute a passageway to and from, the business portion of the building, and not to such parts of the building as are used for the private purposes of the owner, unless the party injured has been induced by invitation or allurement of the owner, express or implied, to enter therein. In Sweeny v. Old Colony & Newport Ry. Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 368, 372, 87 Am. Dec. 644, it is said: "In order to maintain an action for an injury to person or property by reason of negligence or want of due care, there must be shown to exist some obligation or duty towards the plaintiff, which the defendant has left undischarged or unfulfilled. This is the basis on which the cause of action rests. There can be no fault or negligence or breach of duty where there is no act or service or contract which a party is bound to perform or fulfill. All the cases in the books in which a party is sought to be charged on the ground that he has caused a way or other place to be incumbered, or suffered it to be in a dangerous condition, whereby accident and injury have been occasioned to another, turn on the principle that negligence consists in doing or omitting to do an act, by which a legal duty or obligation has been violated. Thus a trespasser who comes on the land of another without right cannot maintain an action if he runs against a barrier or falls into an excavation there situated. The owner of the land is not bound to protect or provide safeguards for wrongdoers. So a licensee, who enters on premises by permission only, without any enticement, allurement, or inducement being held out to him by the owner or occupant, cannot recover damages for injuries caused by obstructions or pitfalls. He goes there at his own risk, and enjoys the license subject to its concomitant perils. No duty is imposed by law on the owner or occupant to keep his premises in a suitable condition for those who come there solely for their own convenience or pleasure, and who are not either expressly invited to enter or induced to come upon them by the purpose for which the premises are appropriated and occupied, or by some preparation or adaptation of the place for use by customers or passengers, which might naturally and reasonably lead them to suppose that they might properly and safely enter thereon."

The duty of keeping premises in a safe condition, even as against a mere licensee, may prove determinative of liability, where affirmative negligence in the management of the property or business of the owner would be likely to subject persons exercising the privilege theretofore permitted and enjoyed to great danger. But to charge a defendant with negligence on the ground that he has caused a place to be or remain in an unsafe and dangerous condition, whereby accident and injury have resulted to another, he must have done or omitted to do an act by which a legal duty or imposed obligation has been violated. Ray, Neg. of Imp. Duties, 20, 21;

Beck v. Carter, 68 N. Y. 283, 23 Am. Rep. 175; Barry v. N. Y. C. & H. R. Co., 92 N. Y. 290, 44 Am. Rep. 377; Trask v. Shotwell, 41 Minn. 68, 42 N. W. 699; Pierce v. Whitcomb, 48 Vt. 127, 21 Am. Rep. 120. Where there is no nuisance, but a person comes upon the land without invitation, and simply as a bare licensee, and the occupier or owner of the property passively acquiesces in this, if an injury is sustained by reason of a mere defect in the premises the occupier is not liable, for he has not been guilty of any neglect of any duty imposed upon him as such licensor, as the licensee has taken all the risk upon himself, except as against the affirmative neglect of the occupier of the premises. A mere passive acquiescence on the part of the owner or occupant in the use of real property by others does not involve him in any liability to them for its unfitness for use. 10 Allen, supra, 368, 385; Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 317. A mere naked license or permission to enter or pass over an estate will not create a duty or impose an obligation on the part of the owner or person in possession to provide against the danger of accident. 10 Allen, supra, 373; Orogon v. Schiele, 53 Conn. 186, 1 Atl. 899, 5 Atl. 673, 55 Am. Rep. 88. Where a person has license to go upon the grounds or the inclosure of another, he takes the premises as he finds them, and accepts whatever peril he incurs in the use of such license. Ray, supra, 25; Ind., B. & W. R. Co. v. Barnhart, 115 Ind. 399, 16 N. E. 121. The extent of the liability of the occupier of the land to the person whom he has licensed to come upon that land depends on whether the licensee comes on the land for a purpose in which he and the licensor have a joint interest, or from which the licensor derives a profit, and upon his invitation, express or implied, or whether he comes for his own purposes only, in which last case he is called a "licensee." And where the person coming on the land does so for his own purposes, he is a bare licensee, and he must take the premises in the condition in which they are. Addison on Torts, vol. 1, 320, 322; Cooley on Torts, 358. It must be remembered that the deceased went into the tunnel for his own purpose and convenience, without invitation from defendant. The company had no interest whatever in the route selected or mode of travel adopted by the decedent in going to and returning from his work in the mines. The company derived no profit whatever from the travel of the boy through the tunnel.

Plaintiff in error cites many decisions to convince us that the trial court erred in refusing to submit the evidence to the jury. The rule in such case is so well established in this state that it is not open to further controversy. In Butcher v. W. Va. & P. R. Co., 37 W. Va. 180, 16 S. E. 457, 18 L. R. A. 519, it is held: "Where negligence is the ground of the action, it rests upon the plaintiff to trace the fault for his injury to the defendant, and for this purpose he must show the circumstances under which the injury occurred, and if, from these circumstances so proven by the plaintiff, it appears that the fault was mutual, or, in other words, that contributory negligence is fairly imputable to him, he has, by proving the circumstances, disproved his right to recover, and on the plaintiff's evidence alone the jury should find for the defendant." Gerity's Adm'x v. Haley, 29 W. Va. 98, 11 S. E. 901. In Ketterman v. Dry Fork Railroad Co., 48 W. Va. 606, 37 S. E. 683, it is held: "Though questions of negligence and contributory negligence are ordinarily questions of fact to be passed upon by the jury, yet, when the undisputed evidence is so conclusive that the court would be compelled to set aside a verdict in opposition to it, it may withdraw the case from the consideration of the jury and direct a verdict. When, in actions for negligence, the facts are undisputed, and such that all reasonable minds must draw the same conclusion from them, it is the duty of the judge to say, if asked, as a matter of law, whether or not they make a case of actionable negligence. In such cases, however, when the facts are in dispute, it is the duty of the judge to submit them to the jury. In actions for negligence, the courts have abrogated the doctrine that a mere scintilla of evidence from which there might be a surmise of negligence is sufficient to carry a case to the jury, and have adopted the more reasonable rule that there is a preliminary question which the judge must decide, if asked—whether, granting to the testimony all the probative force to which it is entitled, a jury can properly and justifiably infer negligence from the facts proved, for, while negligence is usually an inference from facts, it must be proved, and competent and sufficient evidence is as much required to prove it as to prove any other fact." We therefore conclude, as a matter of law, that the facts proved do not make out a case of actionable negligence against the defendant.

But plaintiff in error further complains that the court also erred in refusing to permit the plaintiff to prove the declarations of the motorman and brakeman as to the cause of the injury, made within a few minutes after the accident occurred. Augustus Williams, the father of the boy, was asked by plaintiff's counsel: "Did you have any conversation, when you were there to see about your dead boy, with the motorman, or any one connected with the running of that train; and, if so, tell the jury what it was?" This question was objected to by the defendant, and was not answered. But at the close of the evidence of this witness, "plaintiff offered to prove by the witness the declarations of the motorman and brakeman as to the cause of the accident, within a few minutes after the accident occurred, to which the defendant objected, which objection being sustained, the plaintiff excepted." It does not appear what specific declarations the plaintiff could have proved or expected to prove by the witness. In Sesler v. Coal Co., 51 W. Va. 318, 41 S. E. 216, it is held: "When a question is put to a witness, and the court refuses to allow it to be answered, if the question does not plainly itself import that the answer will prove a fact material, it must appear by a bill of exceptions what was proposed and expected to be proven; else there is no error apparent. If a question objected to is answered, the answer must be shown; else there is no error apparent." Jackson v. Hough, 38 W. Va. 236, 18 S. E. 575; Union Central Co. v. Pollard, 94 Va. 148, 26 S. E. 421, 36 L. R. A. 271, 64 Am. St. Rep. 715. If the exception for allowing or refusing to allow a question to be answered by a witness falls to give the answer of the witness, or what is expected to be proved by him, the appellate court cannot determine the relevancy, admissibility, or value of the answer, and the exception will not be considered. Kay v. Glade Creek Ry. Co., 47 W. Va. 467, 478, 35 S. E. 973; Williams, after stating what occurred when his boy left him in the mines, says: "And then, in about twenty minutes, or probably longer, twenty-five or half an hour (I couldn't tell you exactly, the length of time), * * * a boy came in the room [mine] and said: 'Mr. Williams, your boy got run over;' and I just dropped everything and went out, * * * and I had to go from one mountain to the other mountain; * * * and, when I got to the place, I seen the motor was off the track, but I didn't know anything about the boy being under there." If statements or declarations were made to the witness by the motorman and brakeman, or by either of them, as to the cause of the accident, such statements could be admitted as evidence only because they were parts of the res gestæ. 2 Jones on Ev. § 348, says: "Whether a statement or act is or is not a part of the res gestæ depends wholly upon the facts of each case, and it is therefore difficult, if not impossible, to frame any satisfactory definition of the term 'res gestæ.' But there are certain well-recognized tests or rules which may be applied in determining whether a given statement or act is to be rejected as hearsay, or admitted as part of the res gestæ. One of these is that declarations are not admissible if they amount to no more than a mere narrative of a past occurrence. Thus, when the holder of a check went into a bank, and, when he came out, said he had demanded payment, the declaration was held inadmissible. So, where one was fatally injured by a railway train made statements half an hour after the occurrence, the statements were held no part of the res gestæ; and, in an action against a township for injuries caused by a defective bridge, statements made by the plaintiff as to the cause and circumstances of the injury were held inadmissible. The rule has often been declared that the declarations must be contemporaneous with the facts which they illustrate, and many cases might be cited as examples of such rulings. Thus, in a case which has excited much discussion, and which has been regarded as an extreme case, it was held that a statement made by a person immediately after the act, while running out of the room in which her throat had been cut, was incompetent; and in many other cases it has been held that declarations, immediately or a few minutes after the event sought to be explained, could not be received. In these and many similar cases which might be cited the declarations were not so clearly contemporaneous with the transaction in issue as to characterize or explain it. They were mere narratives of transactions wholly completed. These declarations depended for their truth wholly upon the accuracy and reliability of the declarant and the witness, and were not corroborated by any event or fact then transpiring by means of which their truth could be tested." Wharton's Crim. Ev. § 262, says: "Res gestæ are events speaking for themselves through instinctive words and acts of participants, not the words and acts of participants when narrating the events. What is done or said by participants under immediate spur of a transaction becomes, thus, part of the transaction, because it is then the transaction that speaks." To be part of the res gestæ, the declaration must have been made at the time of the act done, so that the act and the declaration obviously constitute but one transaction. Western Boatmen's Ass'n v. Kribben, 48 Mo. 37; 1 Green. Ev. 138; 1 Phill. Ev. 150, 436; Story Ag. 150, 152. Therefore any declarations of the motorman or brakeman which might have been given by the witness in response to said question would have been improper, because clearly not constituting a part of the res gestæ. The court did not err in sustaining the objection and refusing to allow the witness to answer.

We find no error in the judgment of the circuit court. It must be affirmed.

NOTE BY POFFENBARGER, P. (concurring). The opinion prepared by Judge MILLER proceeds upon the theory that the boy was either a trespasser or a mere licensee, to whom the defendant company owed no duty other than that of refraining from willful injury to him. In that view I do not concur. It does not appear that there was a contract between the company and the boy, but the evidence tends to show that the contractual relation between the father and the company extended to the boy, whose service was to be rendered to the company on behalf of the father. If this did not make him an employé of the company, his relation corresponded to that of a servant of an independent contractor, to whom the owner of the premises owes the duty of providing safe premises, but not safe appliances, unless he is bound by the contract to furnish them. As the boy was permitted to work in the mine under the father's contract of employment, he was clearly not a trespasser or a mere licensee. He was there by the invitation of the company. It owed him at least as high a duty as is due from a proprietor to the servants of an independent contractor. "In almost every such case there is the further implication that if the contractor brings third persons, his own employés, his partners or assistants, to assist him in executing the contract, such persons are presumably upon the premises by the invitation of the owners, and he owes to them the same measure of care, to the end of promoting their safety, that he owes to the contractor himself; and this, although no contractual relation exists between the proprietor and them. Therefore; where the owner of a building caused a stage to be erected for use by one who had contracted with him to supply the building with fire extinguishing apparatus, and the staging was constructed in a negligent manner, in consequence of which an employé of the contractor was killed, the owner was liable for the death of the employé, although no contractual relation existed between them." 1 Thomp. Com. Neg. § 979.

The tunnel in which the boy was killed, whether part of the mine or not, was so connected with the employment as to impose upon the company a duty to its employés in respect thereto. It was the only convenient way provided for going to and returning from the work. It was used for that purpose, whether built for it or not. It does not appear that any of the miners used the path over the hill, and it does appear that the miners generally went to and from work through the tunnel. It was the usual and ordinary way of ingress and egress. "It is one of the fundamental duties incumbent upon the mine owner to furnish suitable and safe means of ingress and egress for those whom he has employed to labor in his mine." White on Mines & Mining Remedies, § 395. A manufacturing company is liable to an employé for injuries sustained by reason of a defective stairway or approach to the building in which he works. Fitzgerald v. Paper Co., 155 Mass. 155, 29 N. E. 464, 31 Am. St. Rep. 537. In that case, Knowlton, J., speaking of the defendant corporation, said: "It was its duty to provide on its premises a reasonably safe passageway for the use of its employés in going to and from their work." Persons who go upon the premises of another as invited guests, or upon business with, or to perform a service for, him, as in the cases of patrons of a store or custom mill, passengers of a railroad company, and laborers and servants of an independent contractor, may hold the owner to the duty of such reasonable care; but persons who go upon the premises of another for their own pleasure, without invitation, or upon business of their own, in which the owner is not concerned or has no interest whatever, are mere licensees, if the owner knows of and acquiesces in such use. Otherwise they are trespassers.

I concur in the decision, however. The facts bring the case within the doctrine, "Volenti non fit injuria." The deceased knew the dangerous character of the place. He was of sufficient age and intelligence to comprehend the danger, for it was so apparent as to leave no room for doubt. He assumed not only the risk incident to the employment, but also the risk attendant upon the particular journey through that dark tunnel, in which he knew the motor ran. The doctrine applies to a minor as well as to adults, if it be shown that he knew the danger. "This principle has been applied in favor of the master in cases where the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant; by permanent, visible conditions of the plant; by the common operations incident to the performance of his duties; by a defect in an appliance, where the existence of that defect does not imply negligence on the master's part." Labatt on Master & Servant, § 291. This author says the rule above stated differs from the corresponding rule applicable to an adult in one important respect, but does not state any other, although he discusses the question at considerable length, referring to many authorities. The point of difference is thus stated: "In the case of an adult, the servant's liability to recover for injuries resulting from ordinary risks is declared in terms which are indicative of the fact that his comprehension of those risks is presumed, in the absence of evidence which justifies the opposite conclusion. In the case of a minor, on the other hand, the defense of an assumption of ordinary risks is viewed as one which is merely conditional upon the production of specific and positive evidence going to show that the risk in question was, as a matter of fact, comprehended. In short, where a minor is concerned, ordinary risks are, for evidential purposes, always treated at the outset of the inquiry as extraordinary, and the burden of establishing the servant's comprehension of the particular risk is cast upon the employer." The plaintiff shows by her own case that the deceased had for six days been passing through this dark tunnel, and that he was a boy of more than ordinary intelligence. He must have known that it was dark and dangerous, and on leaving his father he was instructed to be careful. In the absence of proof by the plaintiff of the facts precluding recovery, the defendant would be compelled to show them, if it would defeat recovery, but they appear here as a part of the plaintiff's own case.

DENT and McWHORTER, JJ., concur in the views herein expressed.

ARBOGAST v. MYLIUS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 23, 1904.)

ASSUMPSIT—MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED—CONTRACT—RESCISSION.

1. M., on behalf of himself and P., joint owners of a tract of land, by contract under seal, but which contract was not authorized by P., sold the same to A., receiving from A. on account of the cash payment $250 and $50, and A. also paid out for surveying the land for M. $255. Afterwards, at the suggestion and request of M., the contract was mutually orally rescinded; M. agreeing to repay to A. the said three sums so paid by A., with interest. M., acting upon such oral rescission, resold the land to other parties. Held, that A. could recover in assumpsit from M. the money so paid by him.

2. While the general rule is that a contract must be discharged in the same form as that in which it was made, yet the rule does not apply where a parol contract rescinding or modifying a contract under seal has been acted upon, so that it would be inequitable to hold the parties to their original contract.

Error from Circuit Court, Randolph County; John Homer Holt, Judge.

Action by John C. Arbogast against Charles E. Mylius. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

W. B. Maxwell and Strader & Strader, for plaintiff in error. J. L. Wamsley, for defendant in error.

McWHORTER, J. This is an action of assumpsit brought by John C. Arbogast against Charles E. Mylius in the circuit court of Randolph county, averring that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $1,000 for money before that time paid and expended by the plaintiff for the use of defendant at his request, and in the like sum for money found to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff on account then and there stated between them. With his declaration, plaintiff filed an account against the defendant, consisting of three items:

Cash	$250
Amount advanced by B. B. Butcher.....	50
Amount paid for surveying.....	265
Total	$565

The defendant entered a plea of nonassumpsit, and filed a special plea in writing, to which the plaintiff replied generally; the special plea being to the effect that plaintiff ought not to recover in the action, because he says that the several supposed promises and undertakings in the declaration mentioned, if any such were made, were each of them made by the defendant jointly with one James Pickens, who was still living, and not by plaintiff alone; that James Pickens was not named in the writ and declaration. By agreement and consent of the parties, both issues presented by the pleadings were tried at the same time by the same jury, and any proper evidence offered upon either issue was to be heard by the jury. A jury was impaneled and the case tried on the 27th of January, 1903. After the plaintiff had introduced all his evidence, the defendant demurred to the plaintiff's evidence, in which the plaintiff joined. The jury found for the plaintiff a conditional judgment for $844.60, which is conceded to be the amount of the three items, with interest, and the correct amount of judgment in case the court did not err in overruling the demurrer. The court overruled the demurrer, and entered up judgment for said amount, with costs. The defendant obtained from one of the judges of this court a writ of error and supersedeas, and, for error, says the evidence shows that James Pickens was a joint and equal owner with defendant in the contract of June 19, 1903, whereby a tract of land was sold by defendant and Pickens to plaintiff, and, if plaintiff had any right to recover, it was against both, and, Pickens not having been a party defendant, the case should have been abated upon the issue taken upon the plea of nonjoinder; that the evidence shows that plaintiff still holds the contract of June 19, 1903; that he produced it on the trial, and had never surrendered it, and it was such a contract as could be specifically enforced by complying with the terms thereof; that none of the evidence offered by the plaintiff was germane under either of the counts in the declaration, and that in no event should defendant be charged with the expense of B. M. Yeager in making the survey, because, under the contract, plaintiff was to pay that; and that certainly defendant should not be charged with Pickens' one-half of the expense of the surveyor, Mollohon, because they are jointly liable to pay their said part of the expense. The contract under which defendant claims Pickens is jointly liable with himself is a written contract made June 19, 1903, between James Pickens and C. E. Mylius, of the one part, and John C. Arbogast, of the other part, which is a contract of sale of a tract of about 2,000 acres of land, at $6 per acre, by Pickens and Mylius, in consideration of $250 paid to, and the receipt acknowledged by, Mylius; one-third of the purchase money, less said $250 cash payment, to be paid when the deed provided for in the contract was made and delivered, and one-third in one and the other one-third in two years from the delivery of the deed. Then follows a general description of the land. "Said land to be surveyed, surface measure, by B. M. Yeager and Bernard L. Mollohon, the former to be paid by said Arbogast and the latter by said parties of the first part. Surveying to be done as soon as practicable and deed of general warranty made in accordance therewith." The deferred payments to draw interest, and notes to be executed when deed was delivered, and vendor's lien to be retained for the payment thereof. The contract was signed by Charles E. Mylius and "James Pickens, per C. E. Mylius," and J. C. Arbogast, by E. Hutton. The defendant took the deposition of Pickens, in which he repudiates this contract. He says in his testimony, "As far as the contract is concerned, I never saw the contract, and knowed nothing about there being a contract in writing." States that some time in the latter part of the summer or fall of 1893 Elihu Hutton came to witness' house, and Hutton proposed to buy his one-half interest in the lands which he supposed were the same mentioned in the contract. Hutton wanted him to go into a written contract that his partner had accepted witness' terms, but witness refused to go into a contract of any kind in writing, "but told him if they would pay the money, and sign the notes for the unpaid purchase money or deferred payments, payable in gold or its equivalent, that he would deed them the land." B. L. Butcher, a witness for plaintiff, says that he and Arbogast were at the court in the fall of 1897, waiting for this case to be reached on the docket; that they were impatient to get away, and went to Mylius, in the old courthouse, with a view of settling the case, and, after talking the matter over, he agreed to all the statements witness made to him. He agreed that he was to return the money that Mr. Arbogast had advanced him. Witness said to him, "What is the use to law about a case we have agreed upon?" "He said John had sued him, and he didn't know whether he would ever pay him or not." Butcher was asked: "What money was mentioned that was to be refunded to Mr. Arbogast at the May term of this court, in May, 1894, under the agreement in which the contract was to be rescinded?" A. I don't know. There was only three items. The $250 cash at the time, and the $50. I was present when the two payments had been made, and we both knew of the surveying expenses. I am sure Mr. Mylius knew, and perhaps told me." That Mylius agreed to refund the three items—the $250, the $50, and the surveying amount. "Mr. Mylius intended to have the land surveyed before that, whether we took it or not." That he wanted to pay the money back, to avoid litigation and get back the title to his property. "I think at the time we had the conversation with him the contract was misplaced. No one seemed to know where it was. We thought Major Harding had it. It was mislaid for some time." When asked: "Did Mr. Pickens ever approve this contract?" A. I think he refused this contract, and refused to sign it." That Mr. Pickens disapproved the contract. Col. Elihu Hutton, a witness for plaintiff, says he signed the contract for Mr. Arbogast, and Mr. Mylius signed it for himself and Mr. Pickens; that in 1894 Mr. Mylius, Mr. Butcher, and witness went over this business, and Mr. Mylius said he was willing to refund their money if they would give him back his property. "Q. Do you know whether they arrived at an agreement at that time? A. They did, as between Mr. Butcher, myself, and Mr. My-lius. Q. State whether you had any communication from Mr. Pickens, or any conversation in relation to this contract to which Mr. Mylius had signed Mr. Pickens' name? A. I did. I saw Mr. Mylius and Mr. Pickens; and Mr. Pickens said he wouldn't sign the contract, but he would comply with the conditions of it—if he was paid up in gold he would make a deed for it." He said Pickens didn't repudiate the contract, but he would not sign it. On cross-examination, witness stated that he and Mylius had gone to see Pickens immediately after the preparation of the contract; that they wanted his sanction in the matter. They showed him the contract, and he said if it was complied with it would be satisfactory with him, except the gold part. He wanted it to be paid in gold. Maj. Harding testified that he wrote the contract; that, after it was written, some of the parties took it away. Later some of them claimed that he had it, but he had made a search of his papers, and it was not there, and he did not recollect when he next saw it. It could not be found when this suit was brought. Was not present when the rescinding of the contract was had in May, 1894. B. M. Yeager testified that he aided Mr. B. Mollohon in the surveying under the contract in the fall of 1893; that they received payment for their work from Mr. Arbogast—he thought, about $250; that his receipt was in the papers. The receipt filed in the case, signed by B. Mollohon and B. M. Yeager, is for $255.66. He said on one or two occasions Mr. Mylius had asked him if he could not go and survey the land. "He said Mr. Pickens had been making a great many sales, and he did not know what land he had left." That was before they did the work—he thought, in the spring of 1893. On cross-examination witness says he never promised to go until he got a letter from Mr. Arbogast, that he had bought the land, and that it was at his request that he did the work. Plaintiff, Arbogast, testified that in May, 1894, Mr. Mylius met him in Weston. They went to Buckhannon together, and had a conversation. Mylius "said he had been over to Beverly, and had arranged with Butcher to pay back all the money paid out on this contract, if we would release him; and I told him if it was satisfactory with Butcher it would be all right with me." Witness says in October, 1897, at the old courthouse at Beverly, Mr. Butcher and he had a conversation with Mylius, and made an attempt to get the matter settled without going any further with the suit. They talked the matter over, and they asked Mylius if he didn't agree to pay back the money they had advanced, "and he said he had agreed to do these things, and he said I had brought the suit, and, if he could get out of paying it, he would." That "he admitted he was to pay back all the money we had paid out on the land—the $250, the $50, and the $255.66. These items were all named by me on the train at Buckhannon, and he agreed to pay all back." Witness stated that, as to delivering the contract to Mr. Mylius, he never saw the contract, but no one seemed to know where it was. At the time the arrangement was made, it was thought that Col. Hutton had it, and then they thought Maj. Harding had it, and finally they came to the conclusion that Mr. Mylius had it. That he didn't know where the contract was found. That Mr. Mylius told him on the train that he had a chance to sell the land for more money, and, if they held him to the contract, he would have to bring suit, and that, if they would release him from the contract, he would pay back all the money. Witness stated that he had complied with the contract as far as he knew how, in releasing Mylius; that no writing of release had ever been asked for, but that he had always been ready and willing, and was yet, to make such writing. There was never anything said about a writing of any kind to release him. Plaintiff testifies that in the conversation on the train, going to Buckhannon, he had surrendered all his rights, and never considered that he had any rights there afterwards, and that Mylius should take the land and do as he pleased with it, under the consideration that he pay back this money, and that Mylius had told him afterwards, in 1897 or 1898, that he had made sale of the land for $10 per acre.

The dealings seem to have been between Arbogast and Mylius, and from the evidence introduced by Mylius himself, James Pickens, the only witness introduced by the defendant, says he never executed the contract, and it is not shown that he authorized defendant to sign his name to it, and the defendant does not go upon the witness stand to testify that he was authorized to make the contract. It is clearly shown that the defendant agreed to pay back all the money that had been paid—the three items mentioned in the account—in consideration of his release from said contract. He was so released orally by Arbogast, and the defendant acted upon such release, and resold the land at a very much higher price, as stated by himself to Arbogast, than it was sold under the contract so released. While "the general rule is that a contract must be discharged in the same form as that in which it was made," yet there are exceptions to said rule. "By the weight of authority, in this country, at least, the rule does not apply where a parol contract rescinding or modifying a contract under seal has been acted upon, so that it would be inequitable to hold the parties to their original contract." Clark on Contracts, 617. It is claimed by plaintiff in error that the contract in the case at bar, not being surrendered, could be by Arbogast specifically enforced. The contract having been rescinded by mutual consent, and Mylius having in good faith acted under that rescission by a resale of the property, Arbogast would be estopped from the specific enforcement of it. The oral rescission of the contract was made at the suggestion and request of defendant, Mylius, and he did not ask for a writing releasing him, but accepted the oral release and acted upon it; and, the plaintiff having in good faith released the defendant, the defendant, by reason of his promise and agreement, became personally liable for the repayment of the money advanced to Mylius, and paid out on account of the surveying. Plaintiff in error says he should not, in any event, be required to pay Pickens' part of the cost of surveying, yet, in securing the release, he was acting for himself, and the release by Arbogast was a good consideration for his promise and agreement to pay back all the money paid by Arbogast, who had no further interest in the land, and derived no benefit from the survey made of the same.

The plaintiff, having done everything that was required of him by the defendant to release him from his contract, and expressed himself ready and willing to do anything further that might be necessary, showed himself entitled to recover in this case on the common counts in assumpsit; and the court did not err in overruling the demurrer to the evidence, and the judgment is affirmed.

PARKER v. NATIONAL MUT. BLDG. & LOAN ASS'N.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 23, 1904.)

TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES
—REAL ESTATE AGENT—COMMISSIONS.

1. An instruction embodying an abstract proposition of law, without in any way connecting it with the evidence or indicating what facts the jury must find from the evidence, in order to make it applicable to the case, ought not to be given; and, if the court can see that such an instruction has confused or misled the jury, the judgment resulting from the verdict will be reversed.

2. An instruction, though correct in law, should be refused unless there is a basis for it in the evidence, and it is the province of the court to determine whether there is a foundation in the evidence for any particular instruction.

3. Where the plaintiff, in an action at law, fails to introduce any evidence at all to prove a fact essential to his recovery, it is error for the court to give an instruction which submits to the jury the question of the existence of such fact.

4. Under a special contract between an owner of real estate and an agent for the sale thereof, on commission, at a price agreed upon, the agent cannot recover his commission without proving that he has actually made a sale at the price stipulated, unless it appear that his principal has wrongfully prevented the making of a sale at such price, which would have been made but for his interference, or has waived the strict performance of the contract.

Error to Circuit Court, Summers County;
J. M. McWhorter, Judge.

Action by C. L. Parker against the National Mutual Building & Loan Association. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

R. F. Dunlap, for plaintiff in error. Miller & Read, for defendant in error.

POFFENBARGER, P. The National Mutual Building & Loan Association of New York complains of a judgment of the circuit court of Summers county in a civil action instituted against it by C. L. Parker before a justice of the peace, from whose judgment an appeal was taken.

The first question presented is whether the court erred in refusing to dismiss the action because of defective process in the justice's court. The defendant being a nonresident having property in the county in the form of money due to it, accruing from rents on property and other sources, an attachment was sued out at the commencement of the action, and served on a number of persons as garnishees. The original summons was returned unexecuted, which made it necessary to issue and have posted a second summons, returnable in not less than one nor more than two months after its date, as provided in section 202 of chapter 50 of the Code of 1899. The transcript of the justice's docket and said second summons shows that it was made returnable on the 21st day of July, 1901, but an affidavit found in the record states that it was in fact returnable on the 20th day of July, and that afterwards, on the 29th day of July, the justice altered the return day of the summons and date thereof in his transcript, so as to read July 21st, instead of July 20th. On said 20th day of July the defendant appeared by its attorney, and was granted a continuance until the 27th day of July, when another continuance was had, by agreement of counsel, until July 29th, on which day the parties again appeared, and the transcript says the defendant appeared specially for the purpose of moving the court to quash the summons, and also the attachment and affidavit, which motion was overruled, and a trial was had, resulting in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $132.50. The ground of the objection to said summons is that the day on which it appears now to have been made returnable—July 21, 1901—was Sunday. The ground of the first motion in the circuit court to dismiss was that said second summons was void because returnable on Sunday, and that the justice had no jurisdiction to grant a continuance allowed on the 20th day of July, 1901. After it was overruled, the defendant was permitted to file said affidavit, showing that its attorneys had not discovered that the second summons was intended to have been made returnable July 21st, instead of July 20th, until after the trial commenced and all the evidence had been introduced and the case heard, and that then it offered to prove that the return day was Sunday, July 21st, instead of July 20th, and moved to dismiss the action, and that then the justice, after overruling the motion to dismiss, altered the return day of the summons as stated. Having done this, the defendant renewed its motion to dismiss the action and the proceedings had therein upon the same grounds as before, and this motion was overruled. An exception was taken to the action of the court in overruling these motions.

The obvious purpose of filing the affidavit was to weaken the effect of the general appearance made by the defendant on the 20th and 27th days of July, which is generally held to operate a waiver of irregularities in the process and invalidity of the return of service. Thorn v. Thorn, 47 W. Va. 4, 34 S. E. 759; Layne v. Railroad Co., 35 W. Va. 433, 14 S. E. 123. The latter case holds that an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace gives the circuit court jurisdiction of the person of the appellant, and works a waiver of all irregularities in the proceedings before the justice. Unless the defect in the process amounts to more than an irregularity, the court was clearly right in overruling the motion. An action may be commenced before a justice of the peace without any summons, if the parties appear and agree to try the matters in difference between them. This is a liberality in practice which does not obtain in other courts, and upon it might be founded an argument that a justice may acquire jurisdiction upon a void summons if it serves the purpose of bringing the defendant in. That, however, would not be a voluntary appearance and submission of the case by agreement. But this question need not be decided, for the summons commencing the action—the first summons—was good. The second summons, though insufficient and void, was only a step in the action after commencement, and therefore an irregularity in the proceeding. By appearing to the action generally, therefore, the defendant, under the decisions referred to, waived the defect.

Nor, if the motions can be said to have gone so far as to ask that the attachment be quashed, did the court err in overruling them. They were to dismiss, on the grounds stated, the action and all proceedings had therein. This second summons corresponds, in the justice's court, to an order of publication in the circuit court. It is posted to give notice of the pendency of the action and seizure of the property. It is process against the person of the defendant, though necessary to the regularity of the attachment proceeding. The object of the notice is to enable the defendant to appear and plead, as well to the affidavit of attachment as to the merits of the claim or demand. Wade on Notice, § 1144. It is process to bring in the defendant, but is not in every sense original process, for jurisdiction of the res is acquired on the first summons with the attachment. Failure to issue or post the second is a means by which it may be lost, but it is an irregularity as clearly cured by a general appearance as want of service or a defective return. It is not a substitute for the first summons and affidavit, giving jurisdiction, but a subsequent step made necessary by want of service of the first summons, and stands in lieu of service as to the property seized. Appearance to the action, therefore, is an appearance for the purpose of the attachment, and it is so held by the courts. Andrews v. Mundy, 36 W. Va. 22, 14 S. E. 414. Had there been a special appearance in the first instance, the case would have presented a different aspect, and would be governed by a different rule. Whether, under the principle announced in Brown v. Gorsuch, 50 W. Va. 514, 40 S. E. 376, the second summons might have been reissued, it is unnecessary to determine. This must not be taken to mean that by such general appearance the defendant waives all defects in the attachment. He is in the same situation as if service of the summons had been made upon him—no better and no worse.

Exceptions were also taken to the action of the court in admitting certain evidence, and giving certain instructions, over the objection of the defendant. To ascertain whether there is any error in these rulings, it becomes necessary to show the nature of the demand and the amount and character of the evidence. The claim is for commission on the purchase money of a house and lot in the town of Hinton, known in this case as the "Peck property," sold by the defendant to E. C. Lowe for the sum of $2,650. Parker claims to have acted as the agent of the defendant in effecting said sale, upon the agreement of the defendant to pay him a commission of 5 per cent. The evidence offered by him in support of his claim is, in substance, as follows: He testified that at the time of the sale he was, and had been for six or seven years, an agent of the association, having authority to collect dues, interest, premiums, and rents, and make repairs upon, and sell, property purchased by the defendant at foreclosure sales, receiving as compensation 2 per cent. for his collection of dues, interest, and premiums, and 5 per cent. on expenditures, repairs, collection of rents, and sales. He had sold three pieces of property, and received a commission of 5 per cent. on the purchase money. In addition to certain letters from Sutherland and Gibson, successive secretaries of the building association, purporting to confer upon him authority to sell certain pieces of real estate, including the Peck property, on a commission of 5 per cent., which were admitted in evidence, he testified to a verbal contract between him and Gibson, in which Gibson said, in response to an inquiry from the witness as to how he was to be paid for looking after the property of the association, "It is our rule that our agents get 5 per cent. on repairs and 5 per cent. in case of sale, and you will be well paid, as you will get 5 per cent. on expenditures for repairs and 5 per cent. on sale of the property when sold." Lowe had come to the witness and asked him if he had the property in charge, and, upon being informed that he did, submitted a proposition to purchase at $2,200 or $2,250, which the witness had sent to the association without disclosing the name of the person proposing to buy, and which was rejected. Later, he submitted the proposition of James H. Miller to purchase at $2,500, which was also rejected. Being asked on cross-examination whether the association had not given him only leave to submit propositions, he said: "They always, when speaking of the sale of the property, would come at me with that 'cock and bull story' about so much net to the association, and so much commissions, in case I made the sale at a stated price." Some of the letters introduced are evidently intended to show the general employment of the plaintiff by the association as agent to collect dues, interest, premiums, and rents, and look after the property and make repairs as ordered. Portions of others of them relate to sales of property. One bearing date March 18, 1898, contains the following: "In case we can arrange it would you like to have these properties under your control for rental and sale? If so, what commission would you charge for looking after properties against trespasses, duly protect it, rental and collection? Also your commission in case of sale. Upon full information concerning the above we will further advise." Another, dated May 18, 1898, evidently referring to a piece of property other than the Peck property, says: "We hope you will make such efforts for a sale of this and other properties as to which we have written you today. How soon do you think we ought to be able to sell this property and at about what price." Another, dated November 22, 1898, says: "You wrote us a short time ago that you thought you had a customer for the Peck property. What progress are you making and is there any prospect of the sale of this and other properties during the present winter. We will entertain any reasonable offer made for the Hughes and Gores properties, and you can submit such offers as you may receive, or for the Peck property, but you might just as well inform any prospective purchaser of the latter property that we will not sacrifice it." Another, dated October 23, 1899, contains this: "We also note that you are trying to dispose of the Peck property; that you think you have a man that will make a proposition sometime during the present week and will submit his proposition as soon as he makes it. Try and collect the rent before the property is sold, for we will have a poor chance of doing so after it is sold. You must remember that we have paid out through you a very large amount of money to put this property in good condition, and you also know that we ought to have the rents to pay at least on the amounts disbursed. We hope you will push for it without delay." One, bearing date May 7, 1900, says: "We are very anxious indeed to dispose of the Peck property and are at a loss to understand why this fine property does not sell when it is so admirably located on your court house square." One, dated June 8, 1900, says: "We are in no hurry to dispose of the Peck property and we are determined to get our price before we let it go. We enclose an addressed stamped envelope and will thank you to give this letter prompt attention." Another, dated September 18, 1900, says: "We remember the location of the property very well, and it seems very singular to us that you are unable to get a customer for it that would let us out whole. You have our figures and they certainly are not unreasonable and if any of the real estate speculators in Hinton think we are going to sacrifice this property, they are very much mistaken. We wish you would make an effort to find a customer." One, dated November 18, 1900, says: "In view of the prosperous condition in West Virginia, don't you think the time has come when this property ought to be sold. We have laid out upon it since it came into our possession $635 in repairs, a very large sum of money, and we are willing to sell the property as you know for $4,000 cash, and allow a commission of 5 per cent for the sale and if we are getting the full rentals out of this property it would amount to considerable more than 10 per cent gross on the price we ask for it. * * * And we have laid out for permanent improvements $634, bringing the total cost of the property to almost $4,000. It is unnecessary for the writer to remind you that this property is first-class in all respects and we are astonished at the prospects of a 5 per cent commission that you cannot interest some capitalist in its purchase. We would prefer, of course, to get all cash for the property, but we would be willing to sell it on the same basis, $2,000 cash, and the balance in two annual payments of $1,000, with interest at 6 per cent, the purchaser to assume the State taxes for 1900, we having already paid the city taxes. Please take this matter up and endeavor to do something with it and report, and oblige." The last, dated December 28, 1902, says: "In view of the prosperous condition of the State of West Virginia, the great demand for coal and the good prices being paid therefor, isn't it possible for you to interest some capitalist in Hinton in the Peck property? Certainly there is no better property in your town than that facing the Court House square. The very fact of the new Court house being erected, the ground laid out and walled in should of itself very largely enhance the value of all the lots along that street, and it does seem as if the Peck property should fall into the hands of some man of means, if not for immediate improvement to be held as an investment. Hinton is so peculiarly situated geographically that you have only a few streets, the future value of the land on which is assured, and we certainly think that the Peck property is most desirably located in that respect. There is a good commission in the sale for you and it would pay you to give the matter some attention. We are much obliged to you for your letter."

The evidence for the defendant consists of the deposition of William Gibson, its secretary, together with certain letters filed with it as exhibits, and the evidence of E. C. Lowe, the purchaser of the property. Gibson says Parker had charge of the Peck property for the purpose of collecting rents and making disbursements for the repairs, under instructions from the association, and "general authority that if he should make a sale, at figures which were approved by the association, that he would receive a commission for his services." He denies that Parker ever induced or recommended Lowe as a purchaser, and that he, as secretary of the association, had any knowledge that there had been any negotiations between Parker and Lowe. Some of the letters filed with Gibson's deposition relate to the property in question, but form no part of the correspondence between Parker and the association. Gibson had other parties attempting to sell the property. He files a copy of a letter from Parker, dated April 17, 1898, in which he says he is willing to take charge of the Peck property and do the best he can for 5 per cent. on collection and sales, should there be any. Another is dated February 8, 1901, in which he says he has a proposition of $2,000 cash for the property, but does not advise its acceptance. Then follows a copy of a letter from Gibson to Parker, dated February 18, 1901, which, after referring to the Miller offer of $2,500, the appraised value of the property and the amount loaned on it, says: "We will sell the property for $3000 spot cash net to the Association you to add your commission to that figure, the amount $3000 to be remitted to this office by draft on New York and on receipt of such sum we will forward a deed for the property. Or we will sell for $3500, $2000 of which is to be cash and the balance $1500 payable in one year from date of sale, with interest at 6 percent and will pay you from this price your commission of 5 per cent for selling, will give the deed and take a trust deed to secure the balance of the purchase price. The buyer under either proposition to pay the taxes for 1901." On February 28, 1901, Gibson wrote again, declining the $2,500 cash proposition, and repeating the price and terms given in the letter of February 18th. Lowe testifies that Parker did not induce him to buy the property. On the contrary, he went to Parker and made an offer of $2,000, which Parker promised to submit to the association, and, after waiting five or six weeks for a reply, and calling upon Parker several times for it, without avail, he submitted his proposition direct to the association and began negotiations for the property, which resulted in its purchase.

The defendant objected to the introduction of the letters filed by Parker, on the ground that they are irrelevant. This position is untenable, for the reason that some of the letters bear directly on the question of the employment of the plaintiff to sell the property, and the others show his general employment by the association, under which he had duties to perform respecting the very property sold. It is not improper to show their relation to one another and to the subject-matter of the contract. Some of the letters bear more directly upon the issue than the others, but none of them can be said to be wholly irrelevant.

On the other side, it is urged that the letters filed with Gibson's deposition are inadmissible, because they are not identified nor expressly made parts of the deposition. And the deposition itself is said not to be in the record, because not identified and made part of the bill of exceptions. This objection falls also, for the deposition is described in the bill of exceptions by its date, the notary before whom taken, the place where taken, and the name of the witness. Turning to the deposition printed in another portion of the record, it is found to correspond with the description as fully as if it had been referred to as the deposition marked "B," or in any other manner. The letters annexed to it were called for by the plaintiff on cross-examination of the witness. In response to his demand, Gibson promised to produce and file with his deposition all the correspondence relating to the sale of the property, and the notary attached the letters to the deposition by brass fasteners, and wrote on a sheet of paper attached to them, "Exhibits produced by the witness William Gibson," and then signed his name to the inscription. All these letters, when examined, proved to be just such letters as were called for. It is unnecessary, however, to say whether they are sufficiently identified, for no objection to their introduction was made at the trial. There is an objection to them indorsed on the back of the deposition, under date of July 26, 1901, but the record nowhere shows that the introduction of any of them was objected to at the trial. If a party can object to the use of a paper brought into a deposition at his own instance, and in the form determined by himself, he has not done it in this instance, for his failure to object at the trial is a waiver. A bill of exceptions says the exhibits filed with the deposition were introduced on behalf of the defendant. Whether sufficiently identified or not, they were introduced along with the deposition, in the presence of the plaintiff and his attorneys, without objection, so far as the record shows, and, under principles too well known to require citation of authority for it, the objection interposed now comes too late.

Bill of exceptions No. 4 contains all the instructions in the record. The argument and references in the bill of exceptions seem to proceed upon the theory of two instructions. Whether given as one or as two is unimportant. The matter is set out in the bill of exceptions as follows: "The court instructs the jury that where an agent is employed to sell real estate for his principal, if the agent was the procuring cause of the sale of said real estate the agent is entitled to his commissions, without regard to the extent of his exertions, and although the contract commenced by said agent was consummated by the principal himself, or through the intervention of another. And the court further instructs the jury that where a broker or agent employed to negotiate a sale procures a customer for the sale of the said property on the terms proposed by the owner, and the principal takes the further proceedings out of the hands of the broker and completes the sale himself, the agent is nevertheless entitled to his commissions, and the principal cannot deprive him of his rights to compensation by a discharge before the sale is consummated; and this is true where the principal completes the contract with the customer, presented by the broker, on different terms from those stipulated to the broker." The legal propositions stated by these instructions are no doubt correct, but they are purely abstract. They make no reference whatever to the evidence, nor do they submit to the jury the finding from the evidence of the facts giving rise to the law enunciated in them. One of them says: "Where a broker or agent employed to negotiate a sale procures a customer for the sale of said property on the terms proposed by the owner, and the principal takes the further proceedings out of the hands of the broker," etc., the broker is entitled to his commission. Had the court given this instruction in the concrete instead of the abstract form, it would have said: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant employed the plaintiff to sell the property mentioned in the evidence at a certain price, and agreed to pay him, in case he made such sale, a commission, and, in pursuance thereof, the plaintiff procured a customer for the sale of the property on the terms fixed by the defendant, and the defendant prevented him from making the sale by interfering and consummating the sale himself with the customer, they should find for the plaintiff." This would have directed the minds of the jury to the facts necessary to be ascertained by them in order to reach a proper conclusion. An instruction for the defendant embodying the same proposition of law might have been given, and in it the jury would have been told, in substance, that if the plaintiff, acting under such contract of employment, failed to procure such a purchaser, they should find for the defendant. Instructions should apply the law to the facts in the case. "It is not the proper course for the judge to lay down the general principles of law applicable to a case and leave the jury to apply them, but it is his duty to inform them what the law is as applicable to the facts of the case. An instruction, however pertinent and applicable it may be, is abstract unless it be made to apply, in express terms, either to the attitude of the parties or to the very facts in issue." Blashfield on Instr. § 92. "It is not the province of the judge to impress any particular view of the facts upon the jury, but it is his province to make his charge so directly applicable to the facts as to enable the jury to render a correct verdict. To leave as little room as possible for them to make mistakes in applying the law to the facts, which they may be very liable to do when they have only general abstract propositions given to them in charge, there ought, if possible, to be no room for misunderstanding the charge or its application, and to this end it ought to be specific and direct." East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Toppins, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 64. "Courts should apply the principles to the facts in evidence, stating the facts hypothetically." Blashfield on Instr. § 92. Whether the legal proposition should have been in both forms, or only one of them, depends upon whether or not, looking at the evidence introduced, the court could say there was room or ground for either of the two conclusions presented, dependent upon an issue of fact to be determined by the jury. If there is no evidence whatever upon which one of the conclusions may stand, there is no reason for giving an instruction embodying the hypothesis upon which it is based, nor can the court do so except at the risk of confusing and misleading the jury. The statement of the principle, without any application of it to the facts, or direction to the jury as to what facts they should look for in the evidence, is even more likely to mislead, for the reason that, in the effort to apply it, they are called upon by the court to wrestle with both the law and the facts, and form for themselves the hypothesis upon which the conclusion depends, and it leaves room for the jury to form two, where there may be no evidence whatever to support one of them. That is exactly what has occurred here. No evidence of the performance of the contract proved was before the jury. The instructions raised and presented to the jury a question which had no root or foundation in the evidence. Hence it could perform no function except to mislead the jury.

The evidence plainly shows that the plaintiff's contract for commission on the sale of the property was upon condition that he should sell it, or procure a purchaser for it, at a price in excess of $3,000. He admits in his own testimony that he was always confronted with the proposition of a certain amount net to the association, or for a commission to be paid to him upon a sale at a stated price. He utterly fails to introduce any evidence tending to show any promise on the part of the association to pay him a commission under any other circumstances, and also to show any agreement to pay a commission upon the sale of the property at a price less than, or even so small as, $3,000. It appears that the association finally concluded to sell, and did sell, the property for a less sum, but there is not a word of evidence to the effect that it ever promised to pay a commission upon a sale for a smaller amount. It may have been a hard contract, and the plaintiff may have entered into it under a misapprehension of the law, but that cannot relieve him from the terms of his contract. In order to recover, he is bound to show compliance with it. This he has utterly failed to do, so far as the evidence shows, for he does not pretend to show that he procured a purchaser for the property, or made a sale of it, or could have made a sale of it, at a price which, under his contract, would have entitled him to commission. Hence the evidence in the case was such as to afford no room for two conclusions. There is but one side to the case, and, upon that side alone, an instruction should have been given; for there is but one conclusion at which a jury could arrive, without wholly disregarding the evidence. "An instruction, though correct in law, should be refused unless there is a basis for it in the facts of the case, and the evidence or the pleadings make the instruction pertinent; and it is the province of the court to determine whether there is a foundation in the evidence for any particular instruction." Blashfield on Instr. § 83. In this state of the case, the character of the instructions left it open to the jury to find either way. While not bound to give any instruction unless requested, it was the duty of the court not to give an instruction of such character as would tend to confuse and mislead the jury. Assuming that the jury understood these instructions to have been given for the plaintiff, it is clear that they were bound to do one of two things, namely, render a proper verdict for the defendant contrary to the instructions, or an improper verdict for the plaintiff in conformity with their view of what the instructions meant. They adopted the latter course, and rendered a verdict wholly inconsistent with the evidence. Upon the evidence, no instruction could properly stand, except one expressly or substantially directing a verdict for the defendant, for there was no evidence to sustain any other finding.

It is no doubt competent for an owner of property and an agent for the sale thereof to make a contract whereby the agent shall have his commission upon the sale, regardless of the price. Where there is a mere employment of a broker to make sale upon commission, without any limitation as to price, he would likely be entitled to his commission upon any sale made to a purchaser procured by him. But to sustain a recovery of the commission under such circumstances, there must be some evidence tending to show that such a contract was made. Where a special contract for commission, dependent upon a sale at a given price, is made, the agent or broker is bound to as strict a compliance with that contract as any other person who enters into a covenant or agreement to do or perform something as a condition precedent to his right of recovery. In cases of this kind, the agent must find a purchaser, who is ready and willing to buy at the price and upon the terms proposed by the owner, before he can exact his commission. If he does this, and then the owner prevents the sale by the agent by interfering and making the sale himself to the purchaser procured by the agent, at the same or even a less price, the agent may recover his commission. But he must comply with the conditions of his contract by procuring a purchaser who is willing and ready to pay the price. Having done that, he has fulfilled his contract, whether the sale is actually made or not, provided the failure is the result of the wrongful act of the principal. This is the law laid down in Reynolds v. Tompkins, 23 W. Va. 229, and it is sustained by the authorities generally. McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160, 28 N. E. 229, 40 Am. St. Rep. 234; Gellat v. Ridge, 117 Mo. 553, 23 S. W. 882, 38 Am. St. Rep. 683; Kost v. Reilly, 62 Conn. 57, 24 Atl. 519; Peet v. Sherwood, 47 Minn. 347, 50 N. W. 241 929; Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445; Charlton v. Wood, 11 Helsk. (Tenn.) 19. Allen, Judge, in Fraser v. Wyckoff, states the law applicable to this case when he says: "The right to recover in this action rests upon an allegation of performance, and not upon a waiver or prevention of performance by the defendant. The proof comes entirely short of establishing either a performance or an excuse for not performing. The agreement with the broker was very explicit as to the character and terms of the sale to be accomplished as a condition to the earning of commission. The sale was to be absolute, for a specified sum to be paid to the defendant. The compensation was to be earned when a customer should be obtained who would pay the price named. There is no pretense that such a purchaser has been found, or that such a sale has been made." It is true that the defendant did sell to a man who had previously submitted a proposition to the plaintiff, and this circumstance, no doubt, led the court to give the instructions above quoted, and overrule the motion to set aside the verdict, inadvertently assuming that the evidence brought the case within the principle announced in Reynolds v. Tompkins. But there is no evidence tending to show that the purchaser would have paid a price sufficiently large to enable the plaintiff to make his commission on the sale. The plaintiff himself does not testify to any such possibility, much less a probability, and there is no circumstance disclosed by the evidence from which the jury could have inferred that the plaintiff had found, in the person of Lowe or any one else, a man who would pay such a price for the property.

On account of the misleading character of the instructions given, and the want of sufficient evidence to support the verdict, the judgment must be reversed, the verdict set aside, a new trial granted, and the case remanded.

HARPER v. MIDDLE STATES LOAN,
BLDG. & CONST. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Feb. 23, 1904.)

USURY—WHO MAY SET UP—RECOVERY OF USURY PAID—COMMON LAW NOT REPEALED—BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—CONTRACT.

1. The defense of usury is personal to the debtor, and while he lives no other person can interpose it, except with his consent and concurrence.

2. A purchaser of real estate charged with a usurious debt cannot defend against the usury unless the debtor unites with him in the defense, or his acquiescence in and consent to such defense appears in the record.

3. The common-law right of action for the recovery of usurious interest paid in violation of a statute declaring a contract for the payment of such interest void has not been repealed in this state, and such recovery may be had after the debt and all usurious interest thereon have been fully paid.

4. When a statute that is declaratory of the common law is repealed, the common law is not thereby repealed, and it remains in force.

5. Such parts of the common law as are not displaced by existing statutes, and have not been expressly repealed, are still in effect.

6. As nothing in the statutes of this state relating to the subjects of interest and usury forbids an action by the debtor, after having fully paid his usurious debt, to recover back the unlawful interest so paid, the common-law right of action therefor still exists.

7. A building and loan association contract, requiring the payment of a fixed monthly premium on the loan for an indefinite period of time, is usurious.

8. Where, under such a contract, after applying all sums paid by the borrower as partial payments on the debt, and allowing interest on the principal sum at the legal rate, it appears that more than the full amount of the debt, with legal interest, has been paid, there may be a decree for the excess, if ground therefor has been laid in the pleadings in the cause.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Tucker County;
John Homer Holt, Judge.

Bill by Riley Harper against the Middle States Loan, Building & Construction Company. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. O. Strieby, for appellant. Wagner & Helronimus, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, P. In February, 1894, Mary A. Lawrence borrowed from the Middle States Loan, Building & Construction Company, of Hagerstown, Md., $500, on stock subscribed for by her in said company in December, 1892, and, as security for said loan, gave a deed of trust upon a certain lot in the town of Davis. In September, 1895, she conveyed this lot to Sallie E. Harper, by deed with special warranty, in which deed the consideration for the conveyance and contract of purchase are stated as follows: "One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), to be paid as follows, to wit: The party of the second part is to pay to the Middle States Loan, Building & Construction Co. of Hagerstown, Md., the sum of about Five hundred Dollars, or the balance due said Company and said party of the second part is to deliver to party of the first part her note which party of the second part now holds of Three Hundred & Forty-Eight Dollars now amounting to $389.00 and the residue $211.00 cash in hand paid the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged." In November, 1900, Sallie E. Harper and her husband conveyed the property by deed with special warranty, in consideration of the sum of $1,000, to Riley Harper. The dues, interest, and premium seem to have been paid by Mrs. Lawrence and Mrs. Harper until some time early in the year 1900; and then Riley Harper, assuming that the contract with the building association is usurious, because made in violation of the statutes of this state governing building and loan associations, and that the settlement ought to be upon the basis of an ordinary loan, treating the payments of dues, interest, and premium as partial payments on the debt, refused to make further payments, claimed that the loan had been more than repaid, brought a suit in equity to enforce a settlement and recover the amount overpaid, and sued out an attachment against the building association. Thereupon the building association advertised the property for sale under the deed of trust, and Harper brought an other suit, supplemental in its nature, to enjoin the sale. An injunction was awarded on the 27th day of April, 1901, and at the June term, following, the building association appeared and demurred to the bill, and moved to quash the attachment. The motion was sustained, the demurrer was overruled, the building association filed its answer, and the cause was referred to a commissioner to take, state, and report an account showing the amount due upon the theory of the validity of the contract, and also the amount due assuming the contract to be usurious. Upon the return of the report, showing that, treating the contract as usurious and expunging the usury, there was due the plaintiff the sum of $109.58, as having been overpaid, the court overruled the exception of the building association to the report of the commissioner in respect to this finding, and entered a decree against said association for said sum, and ordered it to execute a release of the deed of trust. From this decree an appeal has been taken.

As the bill alleged that Sallie E. Harper, to whom the lot had been conveyed by Mrs. Lawrence, "assumed the balance due said defendant loan, building, and construction company on said loan of $500, as part of the consideration therefor," and exhibited the deed by which said conveyance was made, which fully sustained this allegation, the demurrer should have been sustained, the injunction dissolved, and the bill dismissed, if nothing further appeared in the record. While there is some conflict in the authorities as to whether usury may be set up by the purchaser of property upon which a usurious debt is secured, it is everywhere held that one who, in purchasing the property charged with such debt, assumes the payment of the debt, cannot make the defense of usury; and, of course, a person claiming under him is in no better condition. Smith v. McMillan, 46 W. Va. 577, 33 S. E. 283; Shufelt v. Shufelt, 9 Paige, 137, 37 Am. Dec. 381; Post v. Dart, 8 Paige, 639; Sands v. Church, 6 N. Y. 347; Morris v. Floyd, 5 Barb. 130; Snyder v. Construction Co., 52 W. Va. 655, 44 S. E. 250; Bank v. Warehouse Co., 49 N. Y. 642. In many states, as shown by authorities cited in Lee v. Feamster, 21 W. Va. 108, 45 Am. Rep. 549, and Snyder v. Construction Co., 52 W. Va. 655, 44 S. E. 250, one who purchases property charged with a usurious debt, without assuming the payment of the debt, or acquires a lien upon the property so charged, may resist the usury therein. But the law in this state is to the contrary. Lee v. Feamster expressly so holds. Point 2 of the syllabus reads as follows: "Where a creditor is secured by a second deed of trust on the same property, he has but the equity of redemption, and cannot plead usury against a creditor secured under the first trust deed." Holding the equity of redemption, a second trust deed creditor stands in the shoes of the debtor as to the prior lien. He can pay it off in order to make his own debt good. The equity of redemption is pledged to the payment of the second debt. The subsequent creditor takes under his deed of trust all the beneficial interests of the grantor as security for his debt. But he is not allowed to plead usury in the prior debt, for the reason that the plea of usury is held by this court to be a personal privilege of the debtor, which no other person can assert while he lives. Hence, if it could be said that Mrs. Harper took the property subject to the building association debt, and did not assume the payment thereof, she could not resist payment of that debt on the ground of usury. "The great weight of authority conclusively shows that the policy of the Legislature in adopting statutes of usury was the protection of borrowers against the oppressive exactions of lenders; and it does not tend to the promotion of that policy that other persons than the victims of the usury, or persons standing in legal privity with them, should have the benefit of such statutes; and therefore it has been the general current of decisions that the plea of usury is a defense personal to the borrower, and a stranger cannot avail himself of it." Johnson, J., in Lee v. Feamster. The reference in the foregoing quotation to "persons standing in legal privity with" the victims of the usury does not relate to persons succeeding to the property by purchase. This is made clear by what is said in a preceding part of the opinion, where the plea of usury is compared with, and treated as analogous to, the plea of the statute of limitations, which cannot be set up by any person other than the debtor while he lives, but may be set up after his death by his personal representative. Persons standing in legal privity, therefore, are persons who succeed to the rights of the debtor by virtue of law, and not by contract. The definitions and classifications of privies show a distinction between succession by contract and succession by law, and the use of the word "legal" clearly indicates that the latter kind of succession is referred to in the above quotation. 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 101; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 59, 12 L. Ed. 337. Where a person takes a second deed of trust on property, there is privity by contract between him and the debtor, but not privity by virtue of law by descent. Lee v. Feamster expressly decides that such privity by contract does not give the right to plead usury. That decision is based upon the Virginia decisions. Spengler v. Snapp, 5 Leigh, 478; Crenshaw's Adm'r v. Clark, Id. 68. It is approved and followed in Smith v. McMillan, 46 W. Va. 577, 33 S. E. 283. There is an expression of opinion, but not a decision, to the contrary, in Snyder v. Construction Co., 52 W. Va. 655, 44 S. E. 250—the result of a misinterpretation of Lee v. Feamster. The point did not necessarily arise in that case, and the decision turned wholly upon other grounds. Hence the expression of opinion is obiter, but it is here disapproved, lest it might mislead.

In 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 952, what purports to be the rule supported by the weight of authority is stated as follows: "The grantee of the mortgagor's equity of redemption, merely, pays therefor only what the equity is supposed to be worth, on the basis that the mortgage is valid; and, if he were to be allowed to defeat it for usury between the mortgagor and mortgagee, he would thereby acquire a much more valuable estate than he bargained for. The rule, accordingly, is that such purchaser must abide by his contract, and submit to the enforcement of the mortgage. This rule applies with additional force in cases where the purchaser takes his deed expressly subject to the mortgage, and deducts the amount thereof from the agreed purchase price. It also applies with even greater force in cases where the deed contains an 'assumption clause,' whereby the purchaser covenants and agrees to pay the mortgage, as a part of the purchase price."

But the general rule prohibiting a stranger to the usurious contract from availing himself of the defense of usury is subject to the qualification that he may plead it for the benefit of the original debtor, or perhaps with his consent. Berdan v. Sedgwick, 44 N. Y.

626; Stayton v. Riddle, 114 Pa. 464, 7 Atl. 72. The reason generally given for holding the plea of usury to be a personal right of the debtor is that he may prefer not to set it up, because of a desire to avoid litigation, or of his pride of character, or of his conscientious sense of justice. Tyler, U.S. 403. Of course, this reason falls when the debtor gives his consent, and the rule goes down with it. Thus, in Nebraska, where the defense is held to be strictly personal to the debtor, a purchaser of an equity of redemption was allowed the benefit of it in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, in which the mortgagor was made a defendant, and set up the charge of usury in the debt. Male v. Wink, 61 Neb. 748, 86 N. W. 472. A similar case is that of Faison v. Grandy, 128 N. C. 438, 38 S. E. 897, 83 Am. St. Rep. 693. This decision also is by a court which rigidly restricts the defense to the debtor. In Building Association v. Walker, 59 Neb. 456, 81 N. W. 308, and Building Association v. Blan, 59 Neb. 458, 81 N. W. 308, and Building Association v. Sellars, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 201, 46 S. W. 370, the same proposition is substantially asserted and applied.

Here Mrs. Lawrence, the original debtor, as well as Mrs. Harper, filed a separate answer, which, to say the least, gives consent to the claim of the plaintiff. At the hearing they filed a joint and separate answer in the nature of an amended and supplemental answer, averring an assignment of the usury in the debt to the plaintiff, and praying that it be expunged from the debt and decreed to him. This, under the principles above referred to, undoubtedly gave him the right to have the usury eliminated from the debt. By this, Mrs. Lawrence, the original debtor, was benefited, for, in the event of a deficiency, she would have been liable to the building association for the balance due. Male v. Wink, 61 Neb. 748, 86 N. W. 472.

The plaintiff had a clear right to an adjudication that the debt was fully paid, and to a release of the deed of trust. In addition to this, the court gave him a decree for the excess, as usurious interest paid. In Moore v. Johnson, 34 W. Va. 672, 12 S. E. 918, this court divided equally on the question whether, after an usurious debt has been fully paid, the excess paid above the principal sum and legal interest thereon can be recovered. That is the only case in which the question has been presented to this court since the Code of 1868, which contained substantially the present statute governing interest and usury, went into effect. In Davis v. Demming, 12 W. Va. 246, it was expressly decided that usurious interest paid could be recovered in a court of equity, and that the measure of relief in such case was the excess paid above the principal and legal interest, with interest on such excess from the time of its payment. The usurious interest sued for in that case, however, was paid when the statute as found in the Code of 1860, c. 141, was in force, the eight section of which expressly provided that such interest might be recovered in a suit brought within one year from the date of the payment thereof. Radical changes were made in the statute by the revision of 1868. Prior thereto, usury in a contract forfeited both principal and interest. If the defendant sustained his plea of usury, the plaintiff recovered nothing. If a borrower exhibited a bill in equity against the lender to purge the debt of usury, the lender was permitted to recover only his principal, without interest, and was compelled to pay the cost of the suit. Under the Code of 1868, c. 96, and the present statute, the defendant in an action at law can only have relief from the excess above the principal and legal interest, and the right to credit as payments on the debt any sums paid by him as usurious interest. If a borrower exhibits his bill against the lender for the purpose of expunging the usury, the lender is permitted to recover the principal and legal interest, but no costs. Section 8 of chapter 141 of the Code of 1860, giving a right of action for the recovery of usury paid within one year, was omitted from the Code of 1868. The present statute, instead of declaring all contracts for the loan or forbearance of money or other thing at a greater rate than 6 per cent. shall be void, as did section 5 of chapter 141 of the Code of 1860, says they shall be void as to any excess of interest agreed to be paid above that rate, and no further. Whether the Legislature, in relieving the money lender from the harshness of the former law, and omitting the section giving the right to recover back usurious interest paid, after final settlement and payment of the debt, intended that thereafter there should be no such recovery, and, if so, whether, construing the statute according to the rules laid down by the courts, it expressed and recorded that intention, are the questions presented. The only plausible argument seems to be that the statutory provisions on the subjects of interest and usury in the Code of 1860 constituted all the substantive law on those subjects, and were intended to cover them fully, displacing the common law and all prior statutes, and that the cutting out of section 8, giving the right of recovery, and amending other sections, was but a revision of the statutory provisions covering the subjects, which negated any intent to revive the common-law right of action for the recovery of usury. But the Court of Appeals of Virginia, in Moseley v. Brown, 76 Va. 419, passing upon almost the exact question, held the contrary. Burkes, J., speaking for the court, said: "The same act [Acts 1874, p. 134, c. 122] repeals section 10, c. 137, Code 1873. That section [10] gave to the person paying the right to recover the excess beyond lawful interest paid in any case. It is argued from the repeal of this section, and the altered phraseology of section 5, that the intention of the Legislature was to take away all remedy for the restitution of usurious interest after payment. We do not think this is a just inference. In 1849, when the section had its origin, the borrower, as before stated, had his remedy at common law; and the object of the statute, as it seems to us, was to limit the enforcement of the remedy to one year, and also allow a recovery against the party with whom the contract was made, or to whom the assurance was given, although the payment of the usurious excess had been made to his indorsee or assignee. See note, Report of Revisers, 714. The effect, therefore, of the repeal of the section, was to completely restore the common-law remedy, as between the borrower and lender, unless the inference of the intent thus to restore is repelled by the change in the language in section 5."

The section repealed was declaratory of the common law. Where a statute repeals the common law, and is then itself repealed, the common law is revived; and the authorities say that, if a statute that is declaratory of the common law is repealed, the common law more clearly remains in force, for the reason that the statute is an affirmation of it. "That a common-law qualification may have once been prescribed by the statute, also, which has been repealed, does not destroy the common-law qualifications. Such a statute would be only in affirmation of the common law. But if it were repugnant thereto, the repeal of it would, of course, restore the common law." Moncure, J., in Booth v. Commonwealth, 16 Grat. 519. That case further decides that the Virginia statute corresponding to section 10 of chapter 13 of our Code of 1899, saying that, when a law which has repealed another is itself repealed, the former shall not be revived without express words for the purpose, applies only to the statute law, and does not affect the common law. On the subject of revival of common law, see, also, Insurance Co. v. Barley's Adm'r, 16 Grat. 363; Nickels v. Kane's Adm'r, 82 Va. 312; Rose v. Brown, 11 W. Va. 122, 142. State v. Mines, 38 W. Va. 125, 18 S. E. 470—holding that section 10 of chapter 13 of the Code of 1899 does not apply to a statute repealing the common law, but only to a statute repealing statutes. Where the common law on a given subject has not been expressly repealed or displaced or altered by any statute, it remains in force. Mathewson v. Phoenix Iron Foundry (C. C.) 20 Fed. 281, and authorities above cited. Nothing in our statute laws negatives the common-law right of action to recover back unlawful interest paid. Hence it clearly exists.

That there is a right of action by the common law for usury paid admits of no doubt. It has long been considered, in law, that in usurious transactions the borrower acts somewhat under duress; that he is not altogether a free agent in the business; in the language of some of the books, that he is the slave of the lender. We quote from the opinion of Judge Strong in Philanthropic Building As- association v. McKnight, 35 Pa. 472: "That the payment of usurious interest is not a voluntary payment in any such sense as to entitle the receiver to retain the sum paid above legal interest is too well settled to admit of doubt. The money is paid under the constraint of a formal, though illegal, contract. That contract itself was obtained by oppression, by taking advantage of the necessities of the borrower, and, of consequence, so was the usurious interest paid under it. The early disposition of the English courts was to deny the right of a party paying such interest to recover back any portion of the money paid, for the reason that both parties were deemed to be in pari delicto, so that the maxim, 'Volenti non fit injuria,' would apply. 1 Salk. 22. The authority of this decision, however, was soon questioned. Lord Mansfield denied that the case had been declared a thousand times. Cowper, 199. At a late date, distinction was taken between transactions under statutes enacted on grounds of general policy, where each party violating the law is held to be in equal fault, and transactions under the usury laws, enacted to protect weak and needy men from being defrauded and oppressed. To the latter the law does afford relief. It regards the lender on usury as an oppressor, and the borrower as the injured and oppressed. Browning v. Morris, Cowp. 790; Briggs v. Thompson, 20 Johns. 294; Thomas v. Shoemaker, 6 Watts & S. 183. And in none of the cases do we discover that any other evidence of duress or oppression has been held to be necessary, than such as is involved in the act itself of taking the money under the usurious contract. The principle of the statutes of usury seems to be that the lender is the wrongdoer, and that the borrower is his victim." Moseley v. Brown, 76 Va. 419, 425.

The present Virginia statute prescribing the rate of interest does not make the contract void in express terms, as does section 5 of chapter 96 of our Code of 1899. It says all contracts and assurances for the loan or forbearance of money or other thing at a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent. "shall be deemed to be for an illegal consideration as to the excess beyond the principal amount loaned or forborne." Code Va. 1887, § 2818. Our statute says they "shall be void as to any excess of interest agreed to be paid above that rate and no further." Under many of the decisions, the Virginia statute would be construed as giving no right of recovery, because it does not make the contract void to any extent, but only unenforceable, in consequence of which the usurer does not take that which is forbidden by law. But our statute declares the contract void as to the excess, and statutes which do that are generally construed as prohibiting the taking of the excess, and thereby laying the ground for an action to recover it back. The difference seems to be material, for the revisers of 1849, in their report, recommended that the statute be made to declare that the contract, as to the excess, should be deemed to be for an illegal consideration, and not void; giving their reason for it as follows: "It will be perceived that by the present chapter we propose, in accordance with the English statute of 5 & 6 Will. IV, c. 41, § 1, instead of making the contract void, to declare that it shall, as to the excess, be deemed to be for an illegal consideration. If an illegal contract be executed or performed, and both parties are in pari delicto, the general rule is that no action lies to recover back money paid under it. Chitty on Contracts, 499. By the section to which this note is appended, we propose to allow a recovery back." The note was appended to a different section expressly giving a right of action for the excess, without which, in the opinion of the revisers, no recovery could be had if the contract, as to the excess, was one standing on an illegal consideration.

It is urged that the contract is not usurious, but that position is untenable. The deed of trust recites that the bond to secure the payment of which it was executed is "conditioned for the payment of interest on said loan in gold at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable in equal monthly installments, in advance, on the last Saturday of each and every month hereafter; and in like manner and at like times, a certain monthly premium and certain monthly dues on certain shares of stock of said company now owned by the above bounden until said stock becomes fully paid and of the value of one hundred dollars per share as prescribed by said Articles of Association." The bond itself exhibited with the answer of the building association says the loan was made on five shares of the stock, and the dues on the other five shares represent the premium, and that "the said interest, dues and premiums, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of Eight and $\frac{50}{100}$ Dollars, per month, which said last-named sum shall be payable on the last Saturday of each and every month, until the maturity of the shares of the stock of the said Company, subscribed for by said obligor, and in accordance with the By-laws of said Company." It is shown that the premium was to be paid for an indefinite period of time, and, under the principles announced in Floyd v. Loan & Investment Co., 49 W. Va. 327, 38 S. E. 653, Gray v. Building Association, 48 W. Va. 164, 37 S. E. 533, 54 L. R. A. 217, and other recent West Virginia cases, this makes the contract usurious. It is useless to repeat the reasoning of these cases. Hence they are merely referred to here. It is insisted, however, that the by-laws of the association show that the premium is a fixed and definite premium, payable in installments. If the by-laws found in the record were those under which the contract was made, this position might possibly be sustained, but they are not. The secretary of the association, whose deposition was taken, admitted this on cross-examination. He stated that the by-laws had been changed by amendment October 24, 1893, and that the copy filed with the answer as an exhibit is a copy of the by-laws as they stood after this amendment was made. The loan was made on the 13th day of February, 1894, one year and eight months before the by-laws were changed so as to read as they now do in this record. As they are not the by-laws under which the loan was made, we are without evidence of the character of the by-laws under which it was made. On that question the record is silent, and the only evidence concerning the nature of the premium is found in the deed of trust and the contract; and the provisions respecting it found there clearly indicate that the premium was a fixed sum, to be paid monthly for an indefinite period of time, namely, until the stock should mature.

For the reasons given, the decree complained of is affirmed.

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. PARRAMORE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)
CARRIERS—FREIGHT SHIPMENT—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—PLEADING.

1. A plaintiff cannot declare upon a special contract with a carrier, and then, by amendment, claim that he is not bound by the terms of such special contract, and add a new and distinct cause of action.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County;
J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action by P. J. Parramore against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Dorsey, Brewster & Howell, Sanders McDaniel, and J. D. Bradwell, for plaintiff in error. J. Howell Green and Green & Preston, for defendant in error.

TURNER, J. P. J. Parramore brought a suit against the Southern Railway Company, alleging that on a certain day he "entered into a contract with said railway company, whereby it was to transport for petitioner five horses and four mules from Gainesville, Georgia, to Sandford, Florida, under the terms and conditions set out in said contract," a copy of which was attached to his petition as an exhibit. He further alleged that while the stock was in transit, and while in the yards of the company at Atlanta, the door of the car in which the stock was shipped came open, and one of the horses fell from the car, falling between it and a platform near which the car was standing, and receiving injuries from which it died. The plaintiff charged that these injuries to the horse were "due to the negligence of said railroad company, in that the car in which said horses were shipped was defective, the door to said car not being securely fastened, there not being sufficient fastenings upon the same." The value of the horse was averred, and the plaintiff also alleged that by mistake of the agent of the company who made out said contract of shipment the initials of plaintiff's name were transposed, but that he was "the party to whom said live stock was shipped, was the owner of the same, and the party with whom said railroad company dealt, and that said transposition of initials was a mere clerical error." He accordingly prayed that this error be corrected, and that the contract declared on should be in this respect reformed. He also prayed that he might recover of the defendant company the alleged value of the horse, $200.

The exhibit annexed to the petition purported to be a "live stock contract" between the Southern Railway Company and its connecting carriers, as parties of the first part, and "J. P. Parramore, party of the second part." It recited that the company had received the live stock to be transported in accordance with the terms of the agreement therein set out, and to be delivered to the consignee at Sandford, Fla. This paper further recited that, in consideration of a reduced rate of freight, therein named, the party of the second part covenanted and agreed that he had examined and found in good order and condition the car provided by the company for the transportation of said live stock, and had accepted the same, and agreed that it was suitable and sufficient for said purpose. There were various other stipulations and conditions set forth as constituting part of the agreement, but it is not essential, for the purposes of this opinion, that they should be set out at length. The original contract was, if the alleged copy of it be correct, signed in the presence of two witnesses by "W. A. Ramson, Agent for the Company," and by "J. H. Martin," his signature appearing in the space provided for that of the shipper, with no indication as to the capacity in which he signed.

The defendant demurred to the petition on the ground that the facts therein set forth and the exhibit attached thereto disclosed the making of a contract under the terms of which the company was not liable for the damages claimed. The court passed an order reciting that the demurrer was "sustained, with leave to plaintiff to amend in ten days." Within the time limited the plaintiff offered an amendment, the material allegations of which were, after certain portions of it had been eliminated by order of the court, substantially as follows: The "contract set out in plaintiff's original petition is nothing more than the bill of lading" issued by the company, and, "as the same was not signed by the plaintiff, or by any one authorized by him to sign it for him," none of the "statements in said bill of lading in favor of the defendant [could] be invoked by said defendant." The recital in the bill of lading to the effect that the shipper had examined the car and found it in good condition and suitable for the transportation of the stock, was "not true, but, on the contrary, the car in which said live stock was shipped was in bad condition at the time that said live stock were loaded upon it in Gainesville, and at the time it was started from Gainesville with said live stock in it the defects" set forth in plaintiff's original petition then existing; and that, "in addition to the freight named in said bill of lading, plaintiff paid said defendant company the local rate on said live stock from Gainesville to Atlanta, which was by mistake omitted from said bill of lading, though collected from plaintiff by said railroad company, wherefore plaintiff prays that said bill of lading be further reformed by inserting said local freight." To the allowance of this amendment the defendant objected on the grounds (1) that the plaintiff thereby sought to introduce a new, additional, and independent cause of action, and (2) that the effect of such amendment, if allowed, would be to convert a suit upon contract into a suit in tort. These objections, which the defendant urged by way of demurrer to the proposed amendment, were overruled by the court, and the defendant excepted. In the original petition the plaintiff declared upon a contract, a copy of which he attached as an exhibit. The original of this document appears to have been a special contract of shipment containing the provisions and stipulations hereinbefore recited. The amendment proposed by the plaintiff disclosed a plain effort on his part to repudiate the special contract and entirely change the character of the action. It is true that the contract was signed by J. H. Martin, instead of by the plaintiff, Parramore; but the latter apparently accepted the reduced rate of freight and other benefits under it, and ratified and adopted it by suing upon it. It might be presumed that Martin had authority from the plaintiff to make the contract in his behalf from the manner in which he declared upon it in his original petition; but, according to a well-considered opinion of this court, it is not necessary to assume that Martin had express authority from the plaintiff to enter into a special contract whereby the defendant company limited the liability which would otherwise rest upon it as a common carrier. Central Ry. Co. v. James, 117 Ga. 832, 836, 45 S. E. 223. In that case it did not appear that the person who signed the contract disclosed to the company the name of his principal, as was done in this case. Yet in discussing this feature of the case the chief justice said (page 834, 117 Ga., and page 224, 45 S. E.): "Of course, where the owner of goods does not attend to their shipment in person, but procures another to act in his behalf, who does so without disclosing the name of his principal, the latter is bound by the terms of the contract which his agent makes with the carrier to the same extent as though the contract was made by the principal in person, irrespective of the question whether the agent did or did not go outside of the authority with which he was vested. This is true for the all-sufficient reason that the principal cannot take advantage of the contract made in his behalf without fully ratifying the act of his agent and becoming bound thereby." We therefore think the amendment offered by the plaintiff in the present case was not allowable for the reason that he thereby sought to repudiate the contract upon which, in his original petition, he based his cause of action, and to substitute therefor an entirely new and distinct cause of action.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

BOWEN v. WYETH.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)
ORDERS—VACATING—DISCRETION OF COURT—REVIEW.

1. Courts of record retain full control over orders and judgments during the term at which they were made, and, in the exercise of a sound discretion, may revise or vacate the same.

2. Such discretion will not be controlled unless manifestly abused.

3. Where a general demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiff during the same term moved to reinstate, offering to amend so as to cure the alleged defects in the original petition, this court will not interfere with the judgment refusing to permit the reinstatement.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by C. H. Bowen against T. B. Wyeth. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Bowen sued Wyeth for $600, alleged to be due as salary and commissions for the sale of machines. The petition contained an allegation "that said defendant is the general agent of the American Arithmometer Company" for the South Atlantic states, and that "said defendant, as general agent of said company, employed petitioner to sell said machines" on the terms stated in the petition. The defendant demurred generally and specially. The bill of exceptions recites that after argument on the demurrer the judge stated he would render a decision later, and give the plaintiff 10 days in which to amend, if, in the opinion of the court, the petition was amendable, and the demurrer was sustained. On May 10th the court sustained the general demurrer. On May 11, 1903, the plaintiff moved that the defendant be required to show cause why the case should not be reinstated, and the petitioner be allowed to amend the petition by striking out the allegation that Wyeth made the contract as general agent, and such other amendments as the petitioner may offer, and the court may think proper. To the petition were attached the proposed amendments. The motion came on to be heard May 22d at chambers. The court refused to allow the case to be reinstated. From the bill of exceptions, it appears that the demurrer was argued in term. It does not appear whether court had adjourned for the term on the day the motion to reinstate was made and the rule nisi granted.

O. E. & M. O. Horton and R. Arnold, for plaintiff in error. V. A. Batchelor, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. Courts have full control over their orders and judgments during the term at which they were rendered, and, in the exercise of their legal discretion, may revise or vacate the same. But such motions are addressed to the legal discretion of the court, which will not be controlled unless abused. Aiken v. Wolfe, 76 Ga. 816; Holsenback v. Martin, 28 Ga. 73. There is nothing in this case to take it out of the ordinary rule applicable to decisions on demurrer. The plaintiff had the right to except to the judgment sustaining the general demurrer. After it was decided that he had no cause of action, he had no right to amend, nor to a reinstatement of the case in order to permit him to amend.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

GUTHRIE v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)
CONTRACT—ACTION FOR BREACH—PRIVITY—PLEADING.

1. Where suit was brought against two railroad companies for damages on account of an alleged breach of contract, and the petition failed to show any privity of contract between the plaintiff and one of the defendants, a demurrer filed by it was properly sustained.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Waycross; J. O. Reynolds, Judge.

Action by S. H. Guthrie against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

John T. Myers, for plaintiff in error. Kay, Bennet & Conyers and Simon W. Hitch, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. The plaintiff brought suit against the Savannah, Florida & Western Railway Company and the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company for alleged breach of a contract, a copy of which was attached to the petition. There was no service upon or appearance by the Savannah, Florida & Western Railway Company. The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company demurred to the petition both generally and specially, its demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiff excepted.

The contract for the alleged breach of which the plaintiff sued was made between him and the Savannah, Florida & Western Railway Company; but the petition alleged that the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, operating the line of railroad, had assumed, in writing, the liabilities of the Savannah, Florida & Western Railway Company, and was liable on the contract in question. It was not alleged that there had been any merger or consolidation of the two companies, nor is there anything in the record to show any privity of contract between the plaintiff and the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. We think, therefore, that the ruling in the case of Hawkins v. Central R. Co., 118 Ga. —, 46 S. E. 82, is controlling, and that the court below did right in sustaining the demurrer. See, also, 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 104.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

GLOVER v. DIMMOCK et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

JUDGMENT—SETTING ASIDE—GROUNDS.

1. It is not a good reason to set aside a judgment that the party against whom it was rendered was prevented from attending the trial on account of the serious illness of her mother, and that the counsel retained by her had, prior to the rendition of the judgment, and without notifying her, caused their names to be erased from the docket, and stated that they did not represent her; it not appearing that she had dismissed them as her counsel, that she made any effort to have the trial postponed, or that she notified any one connected therewith of her inability to be present at the trial.

2. The allegations of the plaintiff's petition, even if true, disclose no reason for setting aside the judgment rendered against her, and the demurrer of the defendants was properly sustained.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action by Laura Glover against W. R. Dimmock, trustee, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

R. O. Lovett and W. W. Haden, for plaintiff in error. J. H. Porter, for defendants in error.

CANDLER, J. This was a proceeding in the nature of an equitable petition to set aside a judgment. A demurrer to the petition was sustained. The plaintiff, in her bill of exceptions to this court, "for cause of error, says that she was not represented at the time of the rendition of the judgment sought to be set aside, and had a valid, legal excuse for her absence, as set out in her petition made to set aside the same." On this point the petition alleges that, at the time of the rendition of the judgment against her, the petitioner was detained at home on account of the serious illness of her mother, who shortly afterwards died; that she had employed two attorneys to represent her; and that she afterwards learned that prior to the trial of the case both of her attorneys caused their names to be erased from the docket, stating that they no longer represented her. She also alleged that she had no notice that her attorneys, or either of them, intended to abandon her cause, and did not learn of it until long after the trial at which the judgment was rendered.

1. We are clear that these allegations were not sufficient to support an order setting aside the judgment. The action of plaintiff's counsel in causing their names to be erased from the docket, and stating that they no longer represented her, did not, ipso facto, terminate the relation of attorney and client between them and her. "An attorney cannot, alone and of himself, terminate the relation, to the injury of his client, although the client may end it at any time, without notice, and without showing any cause therefor." 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 328, and cases cited in note. It is not made to appear that the plaintiff made any effort to notify any one connected with the case of her inability to be present at the trial, or that she took any steps to have the case postponed or continued. The petition sets up a good cause of action against the plaintiff's attorneys for their gross negligence and wanton abandonment of her interests, but it shows no cause for setting aside the judgment already rendered. Phillips v. Taber, 83 Ga. 565, 10 S. E. 270.

2. The case in which the judgment sought to be set aside was rendered arose on a petition for injunction filed by the plaintiff to restrain the sale of certain land under a power of sale in an instrument conveying the land to the defendants as security for a debt. It appears from the petition in the present case that the petition for injunction "alleged that petitioner was not indebted to [the defendants] the amount for which said land was being advertised; that there was usury in the contract on which said paper was founded, and the same was not a conveyance of title." It also appears that the defendants in their answer denied the allegations of usury, but averred their willingness to take a judgment for the amount which the plaintiff admitted to be due. They also prayed in their answer for a judgment for a special lien on the property in question, and the judgment sought to be set aside was framed on this answer. It does not appear from the present petition that in the original petition for injunction there was any prayer that the conveyance be set aside as void for usury. Indeed, it is presumable from the record that, if the plaintiff had been present at the trial and represented by attorneys, no different result could have been reached. She admitted an indebtedness for a part of the sum claimed by the defendants, and they, in their turn, while denying usury, agreed to take what she admitted to be due. In the absence of a prayer to set aside as usurious the instrument, be it deed or mortgage, which gave a special lien on the land, it is difficult to understand what effect upon her rights the presence or absence of herself or her counsel could have had.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

PERKINS v. CASTLEBERRY et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

EQUITY—REVIEW OF DECREE.

1. Under the uniform procedure act of 1887 (Laws 1887, p. 64), the superior court, on the equity side of it, has the same authority during the term to review its judgments as the courts of law had prior to the passage of that act.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action by John Perkins against Z. T. Castleberry and others. Decree for plaintiff. From an order granting a review of the decree, and directing a rehearing to the exceptions of the master, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

T. C. Battle and W. I. Heyward, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Anderson and Rosser & Brandon, for defendants in error.

TURNER, J. This was a suit in equity, which went to a master, and was disposed of by the judge below on the master's report and exceptions thereto. The questions involved being solely questions of law, there was no reference of the matters in dispute to a jury, and a decree was made by the trial judge. It appearing that by inadvertence he included in the decree a provision not authorized by the state of the pleadings, a motion was made by one of the defendants, during the term at which the decree was rendered, to review the decree, in order that it might be corrected. To this motion the plaintiff demurred on various grounds, the only one of which to be considered being as follows: "There is no provision in the Code and laws of Georgia that provides for a rehearing in an equity proceeding where said proceeding has been terminated by a final decree." After argument upon this demurrer, the court granted the prayer of the defendant that its decree be reviewed, and passed an order setting aside the decree, and directing a rehearing on the exceptions filed to the master's report. To this order the plaintiff duly excepted, and sued out a writ of error to this court.

It has always been held that courts of law can, during the term at which any of their orders or judgments are rendered, correct or modify or alter such orders or judgments. This practice did not obtain in courts of equity. It was even held that a motion in arrest would not lie against a final decree in equity. Hughes v. Hughes, 72 Ga. 173. But the difference in matters of practice existing between courts of law and of equity was effectually obliterated by the uniform procedure act of 1887 (Acts 1887, p. 64). The effect of this act has been stated at length in prior decisions of this court. See Manheim v. Clafin, 81 Ga. 129, 134, 7 S. E. 284; De Lacy v. Hurst, 83 Ga. 223, 9 S. E. 1052; Regenstein v. Tyler, 84 Ga. 277, 10 S. E. 719; Stapler v. Hardeman, 91 Ga. 127, 16 S. E. 657; Georgia Iron Co. v. Etowah Iron Co., 104 Ga. 395, 30 S. E. 878; Brumby v. Harris, 107 Ga. 259, 33 S. E. 49. Under this new practice, we think that any procedure whereby a court of law could formerly review its judgments is now appropriate in an equitable proceeding brought in the superior court. For instance, a motion in arrest of judgment may now be made in that court, irrespective of whether the judgment sought to be reviewed was rendered in an equitable proceeding or in one at common law.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

BROOKE v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES—TELEGRAMS—ERROR IN TRANSMISSION.

1. Following the decisions of this court in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shotter, 71 Ga. 700, and Western Union Tel. Co. v. Flint River Lumber Co., 40 S. E. 815, 114 Ga. 576, 88 Am. St. Rep. 36, it is held that in the transmission of a telegraph message the telegraph company is the agent of the sender, to whom, and not to the company, the recipient must look for damages arising out of error in the transmission.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by G. W. Brooke against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Smith, Hammond & Smith, for plaintiff in error. Dorsey, Brewster & Howell, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. This was an action for damages, brought against a telegraph company by the recipient of a message, which, it is alleged, was erroneously transmitted by the company. The plaintiff excepts to the sustaining of a general and special demurrer to his petition. The only question presented for our decision is whether or not we will grant the request of plaintiff's counsel to review and overrule the decisions of this court in the cases of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shotter, 71 Ga. 700, and Western Union Tel. Co. v. Flint River Lumber Co., 114 Ga. 576, 40 S. E. 815, 88 Am. St. Rep. 36, which hold that in the transmission of a telegraphic message the telegraph company is the agent of the sender, who is bound by the terms of the message, and from which rulings it necessarily follows that the sendee must look to the sender, and not to the telegraph company, for any damages he may sustain by reason of the error in transmission. If these cases are to be followed, they are controlling of the case at bar. The Flint River Lumber Co. Case was based upon the decision in the Shotter Case, which, Mr. Justice Cobb declared, had been silently acquiesced in by the profession since its rendition, and had been the law of this state for nearly 20 years. "For that reason," he further added, "we would not feel justified in overruling the decision, even if a review of the case had been requested." The reasons given by Mr. Justice Cobb for refusing to overturn the principle of law referred to are even more applicable to-day, for the lapse of two years has rendered still stronger the application of the doctrine of stare decisis.

The cases of Western Union Tel. Co. v. James, 90 Ga. 254, 16 S. E. 83, and Western Union Tel. Co. v. Waxelbaum, 113 Ga. 1017, 39 S. E. 443, 56 L. R. A. 741, cited by counsel for the plaintiff, while containing language which would indicate a view contrary to that announced in the Shotter and Flint River Lumber Co. Cases, are at best only physical precedents, and make no ruling binding on this court which is in conflict with the position now taken. In the James Case the question decided was one of measure of damages; in the Waxelbaum Case it was one of compliance with the contract entered into by the telegraph company and the sender. In both, it is true, the action was maintained by the sendee of the message, but in neither was his right to maintain an action against the telegraph company raised.

Nor do we think the principle is altered by the fact, alleged in an amendment to the petition, that the defendant was the only telegraph company having an office in the town where the sender was when the message was sent, and that, in complying with the sendee's request to communicate by telegraph, the sender had no choice as to what company it would select to transmit his message. The question of agency is not affected by the fact that the principal may be restricted in his choice of an agent. If a man write me for information, requesting me to send my reply by a messenger boy, and there is only one messenger boy whose services I can obtain, that fact renders him none the less my agent when I have employed him for the service in question.

We recognize the force of the argument that, independently of any question of agency, a telegraph company owes a duty to the public, for the neglect of which it should be held liable in damages. The General Assembly, however, has not seen fit to enact any legislation on the subject; and for the reasons already stated we do not feel justified in departing from a principle of law which has been recognized by this court for many years. For a full discussion of this subject, with criticisms of the Shotter Case, supra, see Joyce on Electric Law, §§ 903, 904.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

PATE v. CITY OF ATLANTA.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — DEFECTIVE STREET—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

1. The plaintiff's evidence made out his case as laid, and it should have been left for the jury to determine whether his conduct leading up to his injuries was negligent.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by Jesse Pate against the city of Atlanta. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Westmoreland Bros., for plaintiff in error. James L. Mayson and W. P. Hill, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. A careful reading of the evidence for the plaintiff in connection with his petition convinces us that the grant of a nonsuit was error. The suit was based on the alleged negligence of the defendant in leaving open a ditch across one of its streets at night without placing near it lights or other warning to prevent passers-by from falling into the excavation. The ditch had been dug for the purpose of laying a sewer pipe, and extended under and on both sides of a street car track in the middle of the street. According to the plaintiff's evidence, he was walking along the sidewalk in the vicinity, and before reaching the ditch, and without reference to it, he started to cross the street, when he was attracted by a crowd gathered around a horse which had fallen into the ditch. He stopped and went in among the crowd to see what was the matter. After gratifying his curiosity, he backed out of the crowd and crossed the street car track, where he himself fell into the ditch and was injured. He swore that the night was dark, that there were no lights to warn him of his danger, that he could not see that the ditch into which the horse had fallen extended under and across the street car track, and that there was nothing to put him on notice of that fact.

It will hardly be contended that it is negligent for a pedestrian, even on a dark night, to leave the sidewalk on which he is walking, for the purpose of crossing the street. Nor do we think it can be said, as a matter of law, that it is negligent, under such circumstances, for one to stop in the middle of the street and ascertain the cause for the gathering of a crowd, or that one who sees a ditch on one side of a street in a crowded city at night is thereby put on notice that the ditch runs under and across a street car track to the other side of the track. Under the plaintiff's evidence, he was in the exercise of due care and prudence; and whether or not his conduct, under the circumstances, really amounted to negligence, should have been left to the jury.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

BIGBY v. ATLANTA & W. P. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

CORPORATIONS—MARRIED WOMAN—TRANSFER OF STOCK.

1. Although a corporation may, at the instance of a married woman, transfer to her husband shares of its capital stock which had been issued to her, but which she had, without an order of court, sold to him, yet the corporation cannot be held accountable to her therefor unless, at the time it made the transfer of the same, or before the stock got into the hands of an innocent purchaser, it had notice of the marital relation existing between her and the person to whom she directed the transfer to be made, and the resulting incapacity on her part to make such unauthorized sale to him.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth K. Bigby against the Atlanta & West Point Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Westmoreland Bros., for plaintiff in error. Dorsey, Brewster & Howell, for defendant in error.

TURNER, J. Elizabeth K. Bigby brought a suit against the Atlanta & West Point Railroad Company, alleging that she had been the owner of 100 shares of the capital stock of that corporation; that on the 5th day of June, 1898, she had undertaken to sell these shares of stock to her husband, John S. Bigby, without an order of court; and that the defendant company, acting under a power of attorney which she had given to one H. M. Abbott, had entered a transfer of the stock to her husband on its books, and issued a new certificate to him, which he afterwards sold and transferred in his own right to a person not cognizant of the circumstances under which he had come into possession of the same. The plaintiff further alleged that she had not, since her attempted sale of her stock to her husband, received any of the dividends thereon which had been declared by the company, and she characterized such sale and transfer of the stock to him as void, and prayed that she be decreed to be a stockholder of the company to the extent of said 100 shares; that the defendant be required to issue to her a new certificate therefor, or, in default thereof, that she have judgment against the defendant for the value of said shares of stock; and that the company should also be required to account to her for all dividends declared thereon since her attempted sale to her husband, besides interest, etc. To this petition the defendant demurred (1) because the allegations therein set forth did not authorize any recovery by the petitioner; and (2) because her cause of action, if any she had, was barred by the statute of limitations. The court below sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the case, and on exceptions to its judgment the case is brought to this court.

As an excuse for not pursuing the stock and recovering it from the present owner of it, the plaintiff averred in her declaration that her husband had sold and transferred the same to an innocent purchaser. If, now, it is proposed to hold the defendant corporation accountable for this stock, or its value, it would seem to be incumbent on the plaintiff to show at least that the defendant, before the stock went into the hands of such innocent purchaser, had notice of the marital relation existing between her and John S. Bigby. There is, in her petition, no averment that the defendant was cognizant, at the time it issued to him a new certificate and entered on its books a transfer to him of this stock, that for any reason he was not to be regarded as the legal owner of the same. Nor does the plaintiff allege that at any other time prior to his sale of the stock to an innocent purchaser the corporation had notice of the fact that she was the wife of the person to whom she had caused it to transfer her stock, or knowledge of any fact sufficient to put it upon inquiry as to the invalidity of her sale to him, which was made through her attorney in fact. This being so, we are of the opinion that the plaintiff was not, under the facts stated in her petition, entitled to any of the relief for which she prayed. We are unable to see how the defendant corporation could now be required to issue to her a certificate for the 100 shares of stock which she states are already held by a bona fide purchaser from her husband. But, be this as it may, the plaintiff is certainly not entitled to call on the defendant to account for these shares of stock, unless it occupied the position of a wrongdoer relatively to the transaction of which she complains. We therefore hold that the first ground of the demurrer afforded ample cause for dismissing the action. It is unnecessary to pass on the question raised by the second ground of the demurrer, wherein the defendant pleaded the statute of limitations by way of further defense.

BRACKIN v. CITY OF RAINBRIDGE

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 2, 1904.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—DEFECTIVE BRIDGE—PLEADING—AMENDMENT.

1. A petition against a municipal corporation alleged that the defendant constructed a bridge or culvert in one of its streets in a careless and negligent way, and, after having so constructed it, negligently permitted the planks to rot, and the bridge to get out of repair; and that "petitioner's horse, while being ridden carefully over said bridge, fell through said bridge," and was injured so badly that it had to be killed. An amendment was offered, alleging that "the said horse became frightened, and that the rider upon said horse was unable to manage him," but did succeed in turning the horse upon the bridge, and would have passed over the same in safety but for the rotten plank in the bridge near the middle of the street. Held, that the amendment did not set forth a new cause of action, and should have been allowed.

BURT v. STOCKS COAL CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 8, 1904.)

EXEMPTIONS—TOOL OF TRADE.

1. A dentist's chair is not exempt from levy and sale as a "common tool of trade," nor as a chair suitable for the use of the family, under Civ. Code 1895, § 2868, para. 5, 8.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action by the Stocks Coal Company against W. P. Burt. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

An execution in favor of the Stocks Coal Company against W. P. Burt, a dentist, was levied upon a dentist's chair, which was claimed as exempt both as a chair, and as a common tool of trade of himself, under the statutory or short homestead. Civ. Code 1895, § 2868, para. 5, 8. The schedule of exempted property included "1 dental chair (tool of trade), $75.00, 1 lounge, 2 tables, 6 chairs, one carpet, and other office fixtures, wearing apparel, $50.00," besides other property not material to the questions here involved. The property was found subject to the execution. The judge of the superior court refused to sustain the certiorari, and Dr. Burt excepted.

Lavender R. Ray, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Terrell, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. It is not necessary to determine whether Civ. Code 1895, § 2866, par. 8, was intended to make a distinction between trade and profession, for the phrase "common tools of trade," therein, has uniformly been construed to refer, not to tools in common use by the debtor, regardless of their value, but to those simple and inexpensive appliances used in his trade. Lenoir v. Weeks, 20 Ga. 596; Kirksey v. Rowe, 114 Ga. 893, 40 S. E. 990, 88 Am. St. Rep. 65. Nor does the dentist chair come within Civ. Code 1895, § 2866, par. 5, exempting "one table and set of chairs sufficient for the use of the family." Indeed, it was not so scheduled when the petition was filed. The chair may be set apart as exempt from levy and sale under Civ. Code 1895, § 2827, but not under section 2866.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, O. J., absent on account of sickness.

BRYANT et al. v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)
ACTIONS BY ADMINISTRATOR—LANDS SOLD BY DECEDENT—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—ACTION FOR PRICE—LIMITATIONS.

1. The cause of action for the purchase money of land sold by a deceased owner vests in his administrator, and not in his heirs at law.

2. The petition did not allege that there were no debts and no administration, nor attempt to set up facts which would authorize a suit by the heirs.

3. When an agreement is silent as to when a future act is to be begun or completed, the law implies that it shall be within a reasonable time.

4. Where it was alleged that title to land was in dispute, and it was sold with the understanding that the purchase money should not be due until such ownership had been determined, the statute did not begin to run in favor of the purchaser until after the lapse of a reasonable time within which the vendor could commence and prosecute proceedings to settle his title.

5. Where such contract was made in 1880, and the decree settling the title was signed in 1901, and after a special demurrer the petitioner failed to amend, or to allege that the suit to quiet the title had been instituted within a reasonable time after the making of the contract of sale, the trial judge properly sustained a demurrer on the ground that the cause of action was barred.

Error from Superior Court, Charlton County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by J. W. Bryant and others against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

The petition alleges that when the Waycross & Florida Railroad Company was constructed through Charlton county, in 1880, the title to a strip $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length and 200 feet in width was in dispute, Bryant and Buck both claiming title to this tract; that it was agreed with the officers of the railroad company that the track should be built, and that, after the dispute was "settled, said railway company would then pay the successful party for the land taken and occupied for its line of road and right of way, * * * and obtain a deed thereto"; that at the April term, 1901, in a suit between said Buck and Bryant, the question was settled by a decree in favor of Bryant; and that thereupon the heirs of the said Bryant demanded of the Savannah, Florida & Western Railway Company pay for the land and right of way aforesaid, and for its use and occupation, and also for about four acres of earth outside of the right of way used by the company in building embankments, offering to make and execute a deed to the land, which was refused by the company; that the use and occupation has been worth \$1,000; and that the earth so taken was worth \$500, and the land and right of way was worth \$2,000. It was also alleged that the Waycross & Florida Railroad Company had been consolidated with the Savannah, Florida & Western Railway Company in 1884, and that the latter company had been consolidated with the Atlantic Coast Line, which became liable to pay plaintiff's claim. To meet a demurrer that the petition did not set forth that the contract was in writing, nor with whom or when it was made, the plaintiff alleged "that the contract, agreement, and understanding was had and made with said railroad companies, and with H. S. Haines, general manager, R. G. Fleming, superintendent, Chisholm & Erwin, general counsel, S. T. Kingberry, assistant general counsel, and others, officers and agents of said railroad companies, as now remembered, who, as the duly authorized representatives and agents of said railroad companies, were fully empowered so to act, which facts also should be definitely within the knowledge of defendants." The petition was demurred to generally, and specially on the grounds, among others, that there was no allegation when the suit between Buck and Bryant was filed, and that the cause of action was barred.

W. M. Olliff and J. L. Sweat, for plaintiffs in error. Kay, Bennet & Conyers and Simon W. Hitch, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. Some of the joint plaintiffs sued as heirs at law of Bryant, one of the parties to the contract by which the strip of land had been sold to the Florida & Waycross Railroad Company; the purchase price to be payable when it was settled who was entitled thereto. It was not averred that there was no administration on his estate, and there was no allegation that the estate owed no debts, and nothing to take the case out of the rule that a suit for the purchase money of land should be prosecuted by the administrator, and not by the heirs at law. Civ. Code 1895, § 3353; Juhan v. Juhan, 104 Ga. 255, 30 S. E. 779.

But not only was there want of proper parties plaintiff, but there was no right to recover for use and occupation of land alleged to have been sold the defendant in 1880. In any event, the verdict could only have been for the purchase price, with interest. But the cause of action therefor was barred. Where an agreement is silent as to the time within which an act is to be begun or completed, the law implies that a reasonable time is to be allowed therefor. The sale was made in 1880, the purchase price being payable when the dispute as to the title was adjusted so as to determine to whom the money should be paid. No time was fixed as to when the question as to the title should be settled, and the vendors were therefore allowed a reasonable time within which to take steps to accomplish that result. Within that period the statute did not run. Immediately after the expiration of a reasonable time the statute did begin to run, and the cause of action was barred within four years thereafter. The fact that the defendant specially demurred because the petition failed to allege when the suit to quiet the title had been begun, and that the plaintiff did not amend or give such date, raised a conclusive presumption that the suit was not begun within a reasonable time after the contract of sale, in 1880. The decree was rendered in 1901, and, in orderly course of legal procedure, may have been based on a petition filed in 1900.

The suit to recover this purchase money was begun nearly a quarter of a century after the making of the parol contract of sale. In the meantime Bryant had died, the company with whom the contract was made had gone out of existence, and the land had been twice transferred to other purchasers. There are here present all of the elements on which the policy underlying the statute of limitations is based. The time between the making of the contract and the bringing of the suit to enforce the demand thereunder was so great as to raise a presumption that the debt had been paid, or to make it almost certain that the transaction had passed out of the memory of the witnesses, that the evidence in relation thereto had been lost, and that death had removed some of those who were familiar with the facts. The judge below was correct in holding that the action was barred. Civ. Code 1895, § 3768.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

D. H. Pope and Perry & Tipton, for plaintiff in error. Claude Payton, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. D. Rothchild & Co. brought an action of trover in the county court of Worth county for the recovery of a box of dry goods alleged to have been delivered to the railroad company for the purpose of being delivered by it to J. H. Ford at Ty Ty, Ga. The petition alleged that the defendant "did convert said property to its own use and benefit by neglecting to deliver to said Ford said personalty; also refusing to deliver said personalty to this petitioner, who is their bailor, after this petitioner had demanded said property, and before said bailor [?] had delivered said personalty to the consignee to the said J. H. Ford." The goods were alleged to be of the value of $39.50, and upon the trial in the county court judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $37.75 and interest. The defendant carried the case by certiorari to the superior court, the petition for certiorari alleging, among other things, that the judgment was contrary to law and the evidence, and without evidence to support it. Upon the hearing in the superior court the certiorari was overruled, whereupon the plaintiff in certiorari excepted.

Irrespective of the other questions made by the petition for certiorari, the certiorari should have been sustained upon the ground that the judgment was without evidence to support it. The evidence upon the question of the delivery of the goods to the consignee was as follows: J. H. Ford, introduced by the plaintiff, testified: "I know of the shipment of the goods. I never received them from the Brunswick & Western R. R. Co. They were not my goods. I never ordered them. My son, E. M. Ford, received them. He bought them, and he received them from the railroad company. He received them for me. When the goods arrived, Eugene came to me and informed me that the box of goods was there, marked to me, and got money to pay the freight on them, and said he was going to take them out. I never told him to nor not to. I knew he was going to get them. I never notified the agent not to deliver them to him. They were not put in my store. They were put in Eugene's store. I never got the benefit of them. Eugene did. Eugene is my son. He has been around my store for many years. He has authority to and does receipt for goods consigned to me, * * * and has been doing so for many years. I have always ratified his acts in this particular. The company always delivered to him for me when he called for my goods, and I approved it. They had done so for many years. It was our custom. * * * Never have given written orders to the railroad company to deliver any of my freight to E. M. Ford, my son Eugene. Did not tell them orally to deliver this box. Do not remember that I ever gave the company verbal authority to deliver any freight consigned to me. Do not say that I have not done so. They knew to do so, as it was my custom to have them do so." E. M. Ford testified: "J. H. Ford is my father. I have worked for him in and around his store for many years—some ten or twelve years. During all this time I have paid freight on his goods consigned to him, and have received for same, to the Brunswick & Western R. R. Co. Have also attended to shipping off his freight. I had authority from him to do so. It was not written authority. He just had me to do so; and it was the custom for me to receive and receipt for this freight, and the Brunswick & Western R. R. Co. knew I had the right to do so. I received this box of freight, consigned from David Rothchild & Co. to J. H. Ford, Ty Ty, Ga., on August 3, 1900. I received for myself. It was my goods. The railroad agent did not know I was receiving it for myself. I did not tell them so. I did not tell them they were my goods. * * * I had not been dealing in dry goods at that time, and do not do so now but little. I now work for my father when he wants me to, and was doing so when I received the box of goods in question from the railroad company." This witness further testified that at the time he got the goods he signed a receipt for them as follows: "J. H. Ford—E. M. F.," and this receipt was then introduced in evidence. It needs no argument to demonstrate that this evidence clearly showed a delivery by the defendant railroad company of the goods to the consignee, J. H. Ford, through his duly authorized agent, E. M. Ford. Upon such delivery the responsibility of the railroad company for a delivery of the goods to the consignee ceased. The evidence showed not only that E. M. Ford had a general authority from his father, J. H. Ford, to receive from the railroad company any freight consigned to him, but we think it also showed an implied special authority to receive this particular box of goods. J. H. Ford himself recognized this; for while he testified that he did not receive the goods, and that his son, E. M. Ford, did, yet in the same connection he testified that the latter received the goods from the railroad company for him. Of course, it made no difference who bought the goods from the consignors, or who claimed and appropriated them after they were delivered by the railroad company to the consignee. The question was to whom did the railroad company deliver them; and, as we have seen, the delivery was to J. H. Ford, the person to whom the plaintiffs had consigned them. It is needless to cite cases to show that the long and unbroken course of dealing between the railroad company and J. H. Ford in reference to the delivery of goods consigned to the latter authorized the railroad company to regard and accept E. M. Ford as the duly authorized agent of J. H. Ford to receive the delivery of these goods, when J. H. Ford did not deny, but, on the contrary, acknowledged, this. The evidence demanded a judgment in favor of the defendant, and the judge of the superior court erred in overruling the certiorari.

SMITH v. WALKER & IZLAR.

GARNISHMENT—WAGES OF ENGINEER.

1. This case is controlled by the decision of this court in Sanner v. Shivers, 76 Ga. 335, wherein it was held that the "monthly wages of a locomotive engineer in the employment of a railroad corporation are not subject to the process of garnishment in this state." As a finding in favor of the prevailing party below was demanded by the evidence, the trial court erred in setting aside the verdict of the jury.

FUGAZZI, LOVELACE & CO. v. TOMLINSON.

ERROR—JURISDICTION—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

1. Until there has been in the trial court a judgment finally disposing of a case, this court is without jurisdiction to entertain a complaint that error was committed by the trial judge in striking, on demurrer, portions of the defendant's answer. Turner v. Camp, 36 S. E. 76, 110 Ga. 631; Harvey v. Bowles, 37 S. E. 364, 112 Ga. 421; Berryman v. Haden, 38 S. E. 53, 112 Ga. 752; Ray v. Anderson, 43 S. E. 408, 117 Ga. 136.

2. As has heretofore been repeatedly announced, the first grant of a new trial will not be disturbed by this court unless it affirmatively appears that the evidence demanded the verdict returned by the jury.

RAGSDALE, HARPER & WEATHERS v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 8, 1904.)

CARRIERS—INJURY TO STOCK—RELEASE OF CLAIMS.

1. For a sufficient consideration the shipper relieved the carrier of injuries to the live stock caused by viciousness of the animals or defects in the car, which had been examined by the shipper.

2. All the evidence tended to show that the animal had been injured in consequence of one of the risks expressly assumed by the shipper, and the court did not err in granting a nonsuit.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; A. E. Calhoun, Judge.

Action by Ragsdale, Harper & Weathers against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

J. F. Golightly, for plaintiffs in error. Dorsey, Brewster & Howell, Sanders McDaniel, and J. D. Bradwell, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. The plaintiffs' stock was shipped under a special contract like that referred to in Williams v. Central Ry. Co., 117 Ga. 830, 43 S. E. 980, and Central Ry. Co. v. James, 117 Ga. 832, 45 S. E. 223. The case is controlled by the principle announced in those decisions. The shipper, in consideration of a lower freight rate, stipulated that he would examine the car in which the stock were to be shipped; that he would have some one to accompany the stock, and take charge thereof; and that he would relieve the company of damages caused by defects in the car, or occasioned by the viciousness of the animals. The suggestion that a slat had been broken by the jamming together of the cars was not sustained by the evidence, one of the plaintiffs testifying that he did not know how it had been caused; that it "might have been by a kick." There was no proof of any "jamming," and no explanation as to how the coming together of cars would break one slat and leave no other sign. All the circumstances indicated that it was caused by the kick of one of the mules, and against the consequent injury the company was relieved. Neither was there evidence to sustain the theory that the animals had been removed from the car No. N. E. 10,118 and placed in No. N. E. 10,178. The waybills offered by the plaintiffs indicated that the number of the car inserted in the bill of lading was a clerical mistake, and that the animals were received in Atlanta in the car in which they had been shipped from Memphis. At any rate, it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to make out the case. The suit was on the theory that the mules were shipped in No. 10,178. There was no suggestion in the pleadings or evidence that they had been changed from one car to another, and no proof of negligence on the part of the company. All the evidence indicated that the injury had been occasioned by a defect in the car or viciousness in the mules, from both of which the shipper, for a sufficient consideration, had expressly released the carrier. Civ. Code 1895, § 2276.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

BROWN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 8, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—REMARKS OF JUDGE—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

1. A trial judge cannot express or intimate an opinion as to what has been proved, but Civ. Code 1895, § 4334, does not prevent him from referring to the testimony in deciding a point raised in the progress of the cause.

2. Unless in its nature manifestly prejudicial, or the assignment of error shows wherein it was harmful, the admission of irrelevant testimony will not be sufficient ground for the grant of a new trial.

3. The court having instructed the witness that she might answer the question or not, as she saw fit, it was not error to permit the state to prove by her that she was the defendant's paramour. Civ. Code 1895, § 5289.

4. Where one litigant offers in evidence an admission, in a conversation or document, of a fact disadvantageous to the other, he thereby makes admissible all such other parts of the conversation or document as may tend to explain or qualify the part first introduced in evidence.

5. But matters in such conversations or documents otherwise irrelevant, and wholly disconnected with the part first offered, are not thereby made admissible.

6. A careful examination of the record disclosing no error in the admission or exclusion of evidence, and there being no assignment upon the court's charge or refusal to charge, and the evidence being sufficient to sustain the verdict, which was approved by the trial judge, the judgment is affirmed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Jefferson County: E. D. Evans, Judge.

Pete Brown was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

James K. Hines and Cain & Hardeman, for plaintiff in error. B. T. Rawlings, Sol. Gen.; and Jno. C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. On December 24, 1902, in Jefferson county, E. L. O. Gay was first robbed, then murdered, and the storehouse in which his dead body lay was destroyed by fire. Ganus, Walker, Brown, and Timmons were jointly indicted for the murder. Walker was found guilty, and the judgment affirmed by this court. See Walker v. State, 118 Ga. 757, 45 S. E. 608, 621. In that case it was ruled that whether Timmons was an accomplice or not was a matter to be determined by the jury. The evidence in the present case is substantially the same as that on the prosecution of Walker, and the new evidence is merely contradictory of that then offered by the state. Timmons testified that he knew nothing of any criminal design on the part of the other three when they went into the store and left him at the door. Indeed, the evidence is silent as to whether any conspiracy had been formed between the three before they reached the store, or whether the sight of the money and the opportunity for robbery gave birth to the design which was immediately consummated. But, be that as it may, the testimony of Timmons was sufficient to establish that he was not an accomplice, and also to prove the commission of the offense charged. Timmons testified that Gay was hit with a hammer by Walker, and there was evidence to determine whether, after the fire, the hammer was found under the place where it was ordinarily kept, or in a part of the burned building indicating that it had been moved from its usual position. The motion for a new trial recites that the defendant moved to rule out the testimony of I. J. Gay on this subject, as his knowledge was derived from what others told him. The court ruled that he would leave that for the jury to determine, and immediately instructed them that, "if they found that Mr. Gay's recollection was dependent on hearsay, they must not consider it; that he understood Gay to say that, if he picked up the hammer, it was lying between the counters, and, if others picked it up, they told him that it was lying between the counters." Thereupon the defendant moved for a mistrial on the ground that the court had expressed an opinion on the evidence, which is forbidden by Civ. Code 1895, § 4334, which motion the court overruled, saying at the time to the jury, "It was not the intention of the court to express any opinion as to what the testimony is." From reading the motion it is evident that the court neither expressed nor intimated any opinion as to what had been proved. In ruling on the motion to exclude he merely stated what he understood the witness to state. The point is controlled by Green v. State, 43 Ga. 369 (4), where it was said that the court might "interrupt counsel misstating the evidence to the jury, and correct the statement of what was sworn to by the witnesses on the trial." "Will it be held in the progress of the case, where counsel differ as to what has been sworn, that the court may not correct error by recalling the witness, if possible, or by stating from his notes or his remembrance what a witness swore?" "The intention of the law is to prevent the court from usurping the province of the jury, and alleging the fact to be proven which is controverted, but not to inhibit him from putting before the jury the truth of what a witness swore." Again, in Reinhart v. Miller, 22 Ga. 403 (10), 68 Am. Dec. 506, it was held that a reference to the evidence given in the case made by the presiding judge, in deciding a point raised by counsel in the progress of the case, is not error.

An assignment of error must be complete in itself. It is claimed that the testimony of Gay as to hunting for money and finding a hole under the steps from which a box may have recently been taken was irrelevant. If so, it was also harmless, so far as we can infer from this motion. It does not appear that he found anything, and at best the evidence was purely negative. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Thornton, 119 Ga. —, 46 S. E.

678. If, on its face, manifestly prejudicial, or if the motion discloses in what way irrelevant testimony has been harmful, a new trial may be granted for its admission over objection. But mere irrelevancy is not sufficient to upset a verdict. Such evidence cumbers the record, sheds no light, gives no assistance, and prima facie is calculated to do no harm. If it does, the motion should disclose how it worked such a result.

The state of a witness' feelings to a party may always be proved for the consideration of the jury (Civ. Code 1895, § 5289), and it was not error for the court to permit the Solicitor General to ask one of the witnesses for the defendant if she was not his paramour; the court instructing her that she could answer the question or not as she saw fit.

The state introduced in evidence a letter written by the defendant, and, for the purpose of proving its execution, offered that portion of his testimony in the case of Walker v. State in which he admitted having written it. Thereafter Brown offered all of his testimony given on the trial of Walker, and excepts to the court's refusal to admit the same. "The admission, in a conversation or document, by the defendant, of a fact disadvantageous to himself, will not be received without receiving at the same time all such other parts of such conversation or document, whether emanating from himself or from another, as may tend to explain or qualify the part first given. The whole relevant context is in such case to be left to the jury, who are to say whether the facts asserted by the defendant in his favor are true." Wharton's Cr. Ev. (9th Ed.) § 688. "Only the relevant parts of the context are to be received." Id. The principle underlying this rule is that one cannot offer that part of an entire conversation, letter, or record which is helpful to him, and prevent his opponent from using the modifying, qualifying, and explanatory context; but it has no application to those parts of a conversation which relate to a subject entirely different from that offered in the first instance. When, therefore, the state introduced Brown's admission that he had written a letter, it was estopped from objecting to everything else therein which the defendant said on that subject. But this did not make relevant and admissible all of the self-serving declarations as to alibi, and other independent statements wholly disconnected with the letter, its contents, or the circumstances under which it was written. Civ. Code 1895, § 5196.

On a careful examination of this record we find no error in the admission or exclusion of evidence. There is no assignment upon the court's charge or refusal to charge. The evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict. It was satisfactory to the trial judge, and the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

KILLING STOCK—PRESUMPTIONS—DIRECTING VERDICT.

1. This case is not, upon its facts, distinguishable from that of Macon & B. R. Co. v. Revis, 46 S. E. 418, 119 Ga. —; and it follows that there is no merit in the plaintiff's complaint that the court below erred in directing the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant company.

HILL v. JULIAN.

ADMINISTRATOR—ACTION AGAINST—TIME OF BRINGING—CERTIORARI.

1. The statutory provision that no suit to recover a debt due by a decedent shall be commenced against his legal representative until the expiration of 12 months from his qualification is for the security of such representative, to protect him from suit until he can ascertain the condition of the estate; and, if he suffers a judgment to be rendered against him during that period, a claimant of property against which such judgment is sought to be enforced cannot bring into question the validity thereof, since its rendition within that period can in no way have operated to his prejudice. Baker v. Shephard, 30 Ga. 706.

2. A finding in favor of the claimant was not demanded by the evidence adduced on the trial of this case in the magistrate's court wherein it originated; and, this being so, the judge of the court below did not abuse his discretion in overruling the petition for certiorari, in so far as it brought under review the verdict of the jury in the magistrate's court.

WILLIAMS v. MANGUM.

CERTIORARI—DISMISSAL.

1. Where the judge of the superior court sanctions a petition for certiorari which is not properly verified, and in his answer to the writ the justice of the peace fully supports and corroborates the averments of the petition in all material particulars, it is too late to dismiss the certiorari on the ground that the averments of the petition are not sufficiently verified.

Action between one Williams and one Mangum. From the judgment, Williams brings certiorari. From an order dismissing the writ, Williams brings error. Reversed.

J. H. Leavitt, Perry Bloodworth, and Hugh M. Dorsey, for plaintiff in error. James E. Warren, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. The judge dismissed the certiorari because the petition was not verified in the manner prescribed in Civ. Code 1895, § 4638. Under the ruling in Taylor v. Gay, 20 Ga. 77 (8), which was followed in Taylor v. State, 118 Ga. 52, 44 S. E. 834, it was error to dismiss the certiorari. The failure to verify the petition is a good reason for the judge to refuse to sanction it (Paulk v. Hawkins, 106 Ga. 206, 32 S. E. 122); but, after the petition has been sanctioned, and the answer of the magistrate filed, it is too late to dismiss the certiorari for the defect in the affidavit, if the answer supports the allegations of the petition.

HOPKINS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—EVIDENCE—CONVICTION OF LESSER OFFENSE.

1. The evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of assault with intent to murder.

2. The defendant having been found guilty of the lesser offense of shooting at another, a new trial will not be granted; it appearing that the verdict was in conformity with a charge given at his request.

Error from Superior Court, Hall County; J. J. Kimsey, Judge.

John Hopkins was convicted of shooting at another, and brings error. Affirmed.

A. C. Brown, J. O. Adams, and H. H. Dean, for plaintiff in error. W. A. Charters, Sol. Gen., for the State.

FISH, P. J. While the prosecutor was engaged in an altercation with another person, he was fired on by two bystanders. The evidence strongly indicated that the shots which took effect were fired by the defendant, and there was sufficient evidence to have sustained a verdict for assault with intent to murder, for which the defendant was indicted. There was evidence, however, that another bystander also fired, and it is not absolutely certain which pistol contained the bullets which took effect. It appears from a note of the judge that, at the request of counsel for the defendant, he charged on the law of shooting at another, and the defendant was convicted of that offense. It is assigned as error that the verdict is contrary to law and the evidence; the plaintiff in error insisting here that he should have been found guilty of assault with intent to murder, or not guilty. There was evidence to warrant the charge in reference to shooting at another. But in any event the defendant cannot complain of a verdict which was rendered in conformity with a charge requested by himself. Quattlebaum v. State (Ga.) 46 S. E. 677.

MORGAN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—STABBING.

1. It has been repeatedly held by this court that it would be better, in charging on the defendant's statement, to follow the statute, and there leave the matter.

2. The charge in relation to the weight to be given the defendant's statement was like that in Hackett v. State, 33 S. E. 842, 108 Ga. 46, and, while not approved, is yet not such error as will imperatively require the grant of a new trial.

3. "Unless there be great superiority in physical strength of an assailant who strikes another a blow with his fist, or ill health in the assailed at the time, or other circumstances producing relatively great inequality between them in combat, the assailed cannot justifiably resent the blow by stabbing the assailant."

4. There was evidence to sustain the verdict, and no ruling or charge of the court requiring the grant of a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Whitfield County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

W. M. F. Morgan was convicted of stabbing, and brings error. Affirmed.

Ballinger and Morgan had a controversy in reference to a note. Ballinger claimed that in the controversy Morgan called him a liar, and that when he replied in kind, Morgan struck him over the shoulder with a knife. Morgan insisted that Ballinger called him a liar, and when answered in kind struck at Morgan, who backed, and, being feeble, as a result of three weeks' confinement in bed, and Ballinger being more powerful, Morgan put his hand in his overcoat pocket and pulled out a knife which had been used for opening cans, and which he casually picked up as he passed through the house; that he cut Ballinger very slightly, and did it almost involuntarily, and as the result of the attack by a more powerful man. There was nothing in the evidence to indicate that the meeting was premeditated. It seems to have been an accidental encounter on the streets. The exact difference in the size of the two men does not appear. There was some difference as to the length of time Morgan had been out of bed. The defendant was found guilty of stabbing, and excepts to the refusal of the court to grant a new trial. The motion for a new trial complains, among others, of the following charge: "(1) I charge you further, that if you find that the defendant was the aggressor, that he provoked Ballinger to strike him, and, having so provoked him, stabbed him with a knife, although Ballinger may have been the stronger man, though defendant may not have been in a physical condition to cope with him without a knife, he would still be guilty of the offense of stabbing. (2) On the other hand, if you find that Ballinger was the aggressor, that he brought about the difficulty and assaulted the defendant without provocation, and there was great discrepancy in the strength of the parties on account of their age and physical condition, and the defendant was unable to defend himself without the use of a knife, and, being without fault on his part, used a knife simply in self-defense, and didn't act beyond the provocation given, didn't carry the assault beyond that, then he wouldn't be guilty of anything."

W. E. Mann and R. J. & J. McCamy, for plaintiff in error. Sam P. Maddox, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. The defendant was charged with assault with intent to murder, but found guilty of the lesser offense of stabbing. On a careful examination of the evidence we are forced to the conclusion that there was evidence sufficient to sustain the verdict. Nor can a new trial be granted because the judge gave the charge, on the defendant's statement, similar to that complained of in Hackett v. State, 108 Ga. 46, 33 S. E. 842. It is true that this court has said that it would be better in all cases to give in charge the statute, and there leave the matter. Hendricks v. State, 73 Ga. 581; Ozburn v. State, 87 Ga. 185, 186, 13 S. E. 247. And in Harrison v. State, 83 Ga. 136, 9 S. E. 542, Chief Justice Bleckley said: "But why should the presiding judge be more specific than the statute itself, or go beyond its terms? There is no obscurity or ambiguity in the statute. The Legislature has made the matter as clear as can the judiciary. Why should not the Legislature be left to address the jury in its own language?" These observations would indicate that a departure from the language of the statute harmful to the defendant would be cause for the grant of a new trial, but for the decisions in Hackett v. State, 108 Ga. 46, 33 S. E. 842, and Teasley v. State, 106 Ga. 842, 32 S. E. 335, to both of which Little, J., indicated his dissent. The charge is not an improper argument for counsel, but, coming from the mouth of the judge, it is undoubtedly calculated to greatly prejudice the defendant to have the jury's attention directed to the fact that he is not under oath, under no penalty to speak the truth, and is not subject to cross-examination without his consent; and for the jury to be told also to consider his interest in the case, and determine what faith they should give the statement. Nevertheless, just such a charge was held not to be ground for a new trial in Hackett v. State, supra.

Mere inequality in size and strength will not authorize the smaller combatant to resent the blow by stabbing the assailant. The charge of the court was in accordance with the ruling in Floyd v. State, 36 Ga. 91, 91 Am. Dec. 760. Compare Malone v. State, 77 Ga. 768 (6); Hinch v. State, 25 Ga. 699 (2).

We find no error in the other charges to which exception was made.

WILLIAMS v. STATE

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

LARCENY—EVIDENCE.

1. It was not error to admit in evidence articles of clothing traced to the possession of the accused, there being sufficient additional evidence to authorize the jury to find that the articles introduced were the ones shown to have been stolen from the prosecutor.

2. The charges complained of were free from any material error. The evidence amply warranted the verdict, and it was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

REED v. STATE

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

SUNDAY LABOR—EVIDENCE—SELLING DOMESTIC WINE.

1. Where a person having several different occupations works at one on the Sabbath day, he is guilty of violating Pen. Code, § 422, even though that particular business does not occupy most of his time on the other days of the week.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Brooks County; R. G. Mitchell, Judge.

Ollie Reed was convicted of violating the Sunday law, and brings error. Affirmed.

Bennet & Bennet, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Thomas, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LAMAR, J. The defendant was indicted for violating Pen. Code, § 422, in that she sold domestic wine on the Sabbath day. There was evidence that she was engaged in several occupations, each of which may have taken more of her time than that of selling wine, of which it appears she had large quantities on hand. There was evidence that one witness bought a gallon upon each of five or six separate occasions within two months preceding the indictment; that others went to her place for the same purpose. Selling wine, therefore, was enough within the pursuit of her business or the work of her ordinary calling to have made it impossible for her to have recovered for the purchase price of any she sold on Sunday. "Those things which are repeated daily or weekly in the course of trade or business are parts of the ordinary calling of a man exercising such trade or business." Rex v. Whitnash, 7 Barn. & C. 602. This particular line of her business was possibly not so active as others; still selling wine was work of her ordinary calling. There was no conflict in the testimony, and no assignment of error on any charge or refusal to charge, from which we assume that the judge correctly instructed the jury as to what they must find beyond a reasonable doubt before they could convict the defendant.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

BRAZZELL v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

CARRIERS—FAILURE TO PAY FARE—CONCEALMENT—DEFENSES.

1. Where one without fare or ticket is ordered by the conductor to leave the train, and, after opportunity to comply, conceals himself in the car and continues the journey, he is guilty of violating the provisions of the act approved December 21, 1897 (Acts 1897, p. 116).

2. Nor would the contention that the defendant was under the influence of liquor afford relief to him from liability for his criminal act. Pen. Code, § 89.

Error from City Court of Moultrie; W. A. Covington, Judge.

Charles Brazzell was convicted of stealing a ride on a train, and brings error. Affirmed.

The defendant was an employé of the Georgia Northern Railway Company. He got upon the train at Moultrie, bound for Albany. The conductor asked him if he had a ticket or a pass, and, upon his answering in the negative, told him he would have to pay his fare, or get off at the next stop, on the outskirts of the town. The train stopped at the point indicated long enough for the defendant to alight. The conductor testified that he suspected that the defendant was trying to "beat" his way, and not only searched for him when the train started, but also instructed the baggage master to do likewise. Both went through the train several times without discovering the defendant, but subsequently the baggage master found him crouched down between the seats. In his statement the defendant claimed to have been drunk, and to have no recollection of what he had done. Having been found guilty, he moved for a new trial on the general grounds.

Alfred R. Kline, for plaintiff in error. T. W. Mattox, Sol., for the State.

LAMAR, J. When he entered the train, the defendant made no effort to conceal himself; and, although he did not pay his fare, or offer to do so, he was not then guilty of any violation of the act of 1897 (Acts 1897, p. 116) making it unlawful to steal a ride on a railroad train. When, however, the conductor directed him to get off, and the train stopped long enough to enable him to do so, but instead he remained in the car and secreted himself from the crew, he violated the statute. Nor was his claim that he was under the influence of liquor any reason to set aside the verdict. Pen. Code, § 39. He was able to form a guilty intent, if sober enough to try to hide.

INJUNCTION—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

1. Any conflict in the evidence as to notice by the plaintiffs of defendant's interest in the timber, and as to what would be a reasonable time within which the timber should be cut, was a matter to be passed on by the trial judge, and there was no abuse of discretion in refusing the injunction.

Dart & Roan, for plaintiff in error. Jno. C. McDonald and Quincey & McDonald, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. F. R. Steadman & Co., claiming to have a perfect legal title to lot No. 267 in Coffee county, brought a petition under the woodcutters' act (Civ. Code 1895, § 4927) to enjoin a trespass thereon by the Dorminey-Price Lumber Company. The defendant set up a right to the timber by virtue of a conveyance older than that under which the petitioners claimed; averring that the plaintiffs were not bona fide purchasers for value, without notice of the defendant's interest. The defendant claimed under a lease dated December 13, 1889, by which Ricketson conveyed to Bewick, of Wayne county, Mich., the timber, logs, and growing trees on lot 267; said lease to expire in three years from the time the lessee commenced to cut the timber. There was evidence that the conveyance of the timber was subject to a prior lease of the same timber for turpentine purposes, and that the defendant had been prevented from cutting the timber by reason of the opposition of those holding the turpentine privilege, which was not only prior in date, but had to be exercised before the timber was cut. There was also evidence as to the great extent of the timber owned by the defendant, as to the remoteness of that in litigation from transportation at the time of the conveyance, and much evidence as to what would have been a reasonable time in which the owner could have been expected to begin work in cutting the timber on lot 267 for sawmill purposes. It also appeared that neither the owner of the fee nor the plaintiffs had given any notice to the defendant to begin work. On the hearing the judge refused the injunction upon the defendant giving bond conditioned to pay plaintiffs any damages they might recover on the final trial, whereupon they excepted.

It was for the trial judge to pass upon the disputed questions of fact, and we find no abuse of discretion in refusing the injunction.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

JOHNSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

LARCENY—EVIDENCE—TRIAL—BURDEN OF PROOF—NEW TRIAL.

1. The accused was deprived of no substantial right by the refusal of the court to allow his counsel to prove by a witness whose name appeared on the indictment as prosecutor that he did not, in point of fact, sustain any such relation to the case. The trial judge did not, in exercising his privilege of himself examining witnesses introduced by the prosecution, intimate any opinion as to the weight to be given their testimony; and the jury were fully and fairly instructed as to the burden resting on the state of showing that at the time the accused acquired possession of the horse alleged to have been stolen he had formed a secret intent of appropriating it to his own use, and that its subsequent appropriation by him was in pursuance of such original intent.

2. There was evidence from which the jury might well have reached the conclusion that the accused, with intent to steal the animal, went to the owner, and, under the pretense of hiring the horse for a limited time, obtained possession of him with a view to driving to a distant city, and there selling him; and, this being so, the court below doubtless exercised a wise discretion in declining to grant the accused a new trial.

ERROR—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—REVIEW.

1. The bill of exceptions complains that the court below erred in sustaining a plea in abatement to the plaintiff's petition. That plea set up the pendency of another suit between the same parties on the same cause of action. The bill of exceptions does not contain any evidence, or specify a brief thereof, as necessary to an understanding of the alleged errors. It does specify the record in the first suit, and that record is incorporated in the transcript brought to this court; but there is nothing to show that it was introduced in evidence on the trial of the plea in abatement, nor is there in the transcript any approved brief of the evidence.

Held, there being nothing before this court which can be recognized as showing upon what the judgment of the court below was based, that judgment will not be held error.

FOSTER v. ATLANTA RAPID TRANSIT CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

NEW TRIAL—HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

1. The admission, over the objection of a party, of hearsay evidence, the natural tendency of which was to discredit his witnesses and prejudice his case, requires the grant of a new trial, when it is applied for upon this ground.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Atlanta; A. E. Calhoun, Judge.

Action by Frank Foster, by his next friend, Henry Foster, against the Atlanta Rapid Transit Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Rucker & Rucker, for plaintiff in error. Rosser & Brandon and W. T. Colquitt, for defendant in error.

FISH, P. J. Frank Foster, by his next friend, Henry Foster, brought suit in the city court of Atlanta against the Atlanta Rapid Transit Company, a street railroad company, for damages. The petition alleged that Frank Foster, while a passenger on a car of the defendant company, and prepared to pay his fare, was, without warrant or authority of law, pushed and kicked from the same by the conductor in charge of the car, whereby he sustained certain specified injuries. The defendant company, by its answer, denied that its conductor committed any of the acts charged in the petition. On the trial of the case there was a sharp conflict in the testimony introduced by the parties. The jury found a verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff made a motion for a new trial on the usual grounds, to which, by amendment, there was added one other. This last ground alleged error in the following ruling of the court: L. O. Simmons, a witness for the defendant, testified that the names of the persons who were on the car that night were turned over to him, and he went to see them. The court then, over the objection of plaintiff's counsel, allowed him to testify as follows: "I did not subpoena them because they did not know anything about it. They said they did not know anything about the transaction, and so I did not need them." The objection made to the admission of this testimony was that it "was incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and hearsay." The motion for a new trial alleged that this testimony was hurtful to the plaintiff, because two witnesses for the plaintiff had sworn that the conductor came into the car after he had kicked the plaintiff, Frank Foster, off, and said, "I am going to kill a lot of them little sons of bitches," and "further stated he was going to kill a lot of them damned little niggers, and laughed about it." In a note to this ground, the trial judge states: "The court stated to the jury that he let this evidence in to account for the nonproduction of the witnesses, and not for the purpose of proving facts." The record shows that one of the witnesses who swore that the conductor made the statements mentioned above testified that others on the car heard these statements. According to the testimony of the conductor, there were many people on the car at the time it was alleged he kicked and pushed the plaintiff off, especially at and near the end of the car where this was said to have occurred; and the circumstances testified to by the plaintiff and his witnesses were of such a character that, if they really occurred, other passengers on the car would very likely have had knowledge of them. Therefore, for the court—no matter what may have been his purpose in admitting this testimony—to allow Simmons, an agent of the defendant company charged with investigating the case and looking for witnesses, to testify that he had received a list of the names of the persons who were on the car when it was alleged this occurrence took place, and had seen these people, and they had told him they knew nothing about it, was to admit hearsay testimony, the natural tendency of which was to discredit the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses and to injure his case. To allow a witness, presumably of good standing and character, to testify that he had seen the persons who were on the car at the time the plaintiff was alleged to have received his injuries, and they had stated to him that they knew nothing of such an occurrence as the one in question, was, in a measure, equivalent to these persons themselves so stating to the jury. It was to allow statements not made under oath, unsifted by cross-examination, possibly made by the parties to avoid being subpoenaed as witnesses, and prejudicial to the plaintiff, to be submitted to the jury. Who can say what force and effect such hearsay statements may have had upon the minds of jurors, considering a case in which the testimony of the witnesses who really appeared before them was, upon the vital issue in the case, so painfully conflicting? That the evidence was open to the objection that it was hearsay, there can be no doubt. Its admission absolutely required the grant of a new trial. That the court told the jury that it was admitted only for the purpose of accounting for the nonproduction of witnesses does not affect the question of its admissibility. It would open a very wide door for the introduction of hearsay testimony to hold that testimony of this character was admissible for such a purpose. All that a party would have to do to get before the jury unsworn statements of persons shown to have been present when a given transaction was alleged to have occurred, tending to show that it did not occur, would be to introduce a witness who would swear that he had seen such persons, and they had told him that they knew nothing about such an occurrence. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendant was under any legal obligation to introduce as witnesses all the persons who were on the car at the time of the alleged occurrence, and so neither was required to account for the nonproduction of such persons as witnesses. Besides, if either had been under any obligation to account for the nonproduction of such persons, this was not the way in which to do it. If production were required, nonproduction could not be excused upon such a ground, and hearsay evidence would be none the less inadmissible. The way to account for the nonproduction of a witness is to show inability to produce him. To sustain the ruling of the court, the defendant in error cites Richmond & Danville R. Co. v. Garner, 91 Ga. 27, 16 S. E. 110. In reference to this citation, it is sufficient to say that there the absent witness was the plaintiff's wife, and he accounted for her nonproduction by simply showing that she was detained at home by reason of the sickness of her children. The question of the admissibility of hearsay evidence was not involved.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

SIMS v. CORDELE ICE CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

OPTION TO PURCHASE—DEATH OF PURCHASER—RIGHTS OF ADMINISTRATOR—POSSESSION OF REALTY—RECEIVER.

1. A contract right to purchase designated property within a given time at a stipulated price, upon the credit of the person owning such right, is not assignable, and, upon his dying within the time limited for the exercise of such right without having exercised it, it does not pass into the hands of his administrator as an asset of his estate.

2. There was no merit in the general ground of the demurrer. The petition stated a cause of action against the defendant alleged to be in the wrongful possession of the plaintiff's property for the recovery of such property and reasonable rent for the same, and also for the appointment of a receiver for such property pending the litigation between the parties.

3. There was a misjoinder of causes of action, and also a misjoinder of parties defendant, and, as the demurrer attacked the petition upon these special grounds, the judgment sustaining the same must be affirmed. But direction is given that, before the judgment of this court is made the judgment of the court below, the plaintiff be allowed to amend his petition so as to cure these defects therein; that, upon his doing so, the case stand for trial upon the petition as thus amended; and that, upon his failure to do this, the judgment below be unconditionally affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Dooly County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Action by S. R. Sims against the Cordele Ice Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Allen Fort & Son, James Taylor, and E. A. Hawkins, for plaintiff in error. J. T. Hill, J. H. Hall, and Whipple & McKenzie, for defendants in error.

FISH, P. J. This case was dismissed in the court below upon a demurrer to the plaintiff's petition, and the bill of exceptions alleges that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer. The demurrer was both general and special. The general ground alleged that the petition set forth no cause of action, and that the plaintiff had an adequate remedy at law. By way of special demurrer, it was alleged that there was a misjoinder of causes of action, and also that there was a misjoinder of parties. The demurrer was sustained generally, the judgment not indicating that it was sustained upon any particular ground or grounds. We are therefore to consider whether either of the grounds was sufficient to authorize the judgment of the court.

1, 2. We will first consider the main question involved in the case, and that is whether the plaintiff's petition set forth a cause of action against the Cordele Ice Company. This involves a consideration of the option or right which the petition shows the plaintiff proposed to grant to G. R. Sims in the event the proposition submitted by the plaintiff to T. B. Sims was accepted. The proposition made to T. B. Sims and the option offered to G. R. Sims were, as the petition shows, contained in the following letter written by the plaintiff to the former: "Americus, Ga., March 23rd, 1899. Mr. T. B. Sims, Cordele, Ga.—Dear Tom: In reference to disposition of the Cordele Ice Machine, make you the following proposition, namely: First, you turn back to me possession of the property, also quitclaim to same, or in other words your interest in same cease, in consideration of which shall lease to you for the term of three years the Cordele Ice Machine, you to keep in repair the machine and building. Also further agree at the expiration of your lease, grant G. R. Sims the option of purchasing the above machine for the sum of $9,000.00 divided into nine installments of one thousand dollars, payment to bear interest at the rate of 7% from date of same. The above proposition only to be considered upon the surrender of all claims that the Cordele Ice Co., T. B. & G. R. Sims or either might hold against S. R. Sims or holdings of S. R. Sims. Above proposition also to bind you to pay and keep paid all accrued expenses upon the Cordele Ice Machine in the way of taxes; also insurance taxes or other expenses that might come against that piece of property during your possession. * * * Should you see your way clear to accept above named proposition so notify me in order that I may have necessary papers drawn, embodying above in legal form. Awaiting your early reply, I remain, yours, S. R. Sims." The plaintiff alleged that the proposition contained in this letter had been withdrawn by him before its acceptance, while the defendants contended that the petition showed that this contention had been decided adversely to the plaintiff in litigation between him and T. B. Sims, and was res judicata in the present case. The plaintiff further contended that the option offered by him to G. R. Sims was void, because without consideration, and, if not void originally, it was not assignable, and, never having been accepted by G. R. Sims, expired upon his death. The defendants contended that this option or right of G. R. Sims to purchase the property in controversy upon the terms stipulated in this letter was based upon a sufficient consideration, which had been received by the plaintiff; that it was transferable, and upon the death of G. R. Sims was an asset of his estate, which passed into the hands of his administrator, and, as such, was duly sold by the administrator and purchased by Mrs. G. R. Sims, and by her transferred to the Cordele Ice Company, which thereupon became entitled to purchase the property in controversy from the plaintiff upon the terms stipulated in the option; and that all of this was shown by the plaintiff's petition.

So far as the decision of this case is concerned, it does not matter whether the proposition made by the plaintiff to T. B. Sims resulted in a binding contract between the parties or not. We take it for granted that it did, and that everything necessary in order to vest in G. R. Sims the right to purchase the property in controversy between the plaintiff and the Cordele Ice Company, upon the terms mentioned in the offer of S. R. Sims to him, had been done, so that, while he lived, without his consent the option could not have been withdrawn by S. R. Sims before the time within which it could be accepted had expired. But the right to purchase the property upon the terms stipulated was one which was purely personal to G. R. Sims, and could not have been transferred by him to any one else without the consent of S. R. Sims. As it was a right which no one else but G. R. Sims could exercise, when he died without having exercised it it became extinct. It did not pass to his administrators as an asset of his estate, and hence Mrs. Sims acquired nothing by the attempted sale and transfer to her of this right by the administrator, and therefore had nothing to transfer to the Cordele Ice Company.

It is well settled that a contract right which is coupled with liabilities, or involves a relation of personal confidence between the parties, cannot be transferred to a third party by one of the parties to the contract without the consent of the other. Tifton, Thomasville & Gulf Railway Co. v. Bedgood, 116 Ga. 945, 43 S. E. 257, and cases cited. This being true, it is very clear that a right which one person has to make a given contract with another, which is coupled with the assumption of liabilities by the former to the latter, and involves a relation of personal confidence between them, cannot be transferred to a third party without the consent of the party against whom such right is held. The right of G. R. Sims to purchase the property "for the sum of $9,000.00 divided into nine installments of one thousand dollars," bearing interest at 7 per cent., was not only coupled with the assumption of liabilities on his part to his uncle, S. R. Sims, but also involved a relation of personal confidence between them. S. R. Sims could not be compelled to sell his property upon such terms to any one else but the person to whom he had contracted to thus sell it. He had the right to decide for himself to whom he would sell his property upon a credit, and could not be forced to so sell it to any one else.

Upon the question of the assignability of the option, counsel for the defendants in error cite Simms v. Lide, 94 Ga. 553, 21 S. E. 220. There the right to purchase the property in controversy for a designated sum was neither coupled with the assumption of any future liability by the purchaser to the seller, nor did it involve any relation of personal confidence between the parties. It was simply dependent upon the payment in cash of the stipulated purchase price within the time limited for the existence of the option. The same may be said in reference to the case of Perry v. Paschal, 103 Ga. 134, 29 S. E. 703, which is also cited in support of the contention of the defendants in error. Many cases may be found which hold that a right to purchase given property for a stipulated sum, to be paid when the property is purchased, is assignable; but we know of no case in which it has been held that one who has acquired the right to purchase another's property at a designated price upon his own credit can, without the consent of the owner of the property, transfer such right to a third person, so as to entitle the transferee to purchase the property upon the same terms and upon his credit.

Unquestionably, the plaintiff's petition stated a cause of action for the recovery of his property from the Cordele Ice Company, which was in possession and control of the same without any lawful authority whatever, and refused, upon his demand therefor, to deliver it to him. This is true whether the plaintiff was entitled to the equitable relief for which he prayed or not. If he was not entitled to have a receiver appointed to take charge of and preserve the property pending the litigation, he was entitled to recover possession of the property, and reasonable rent therefor. But we think, under the allegations of his petition, he was entitled to have his prayer for a receiver granted. He alleged that the property was liable to deteriorate in value; that it had not been properly cared for; that the house in which the ice plant was located was in bad repair; that the furnace which belonged to the plant had been abandoned; that the boiler which operated the machine for the past seven or eight years was disconnected from the machinery, and was depreciating in value; that, while no improvements had been made on his property, the adjoining property of the ice company had been improved, an artesian well bored thereon, a new boiler installed, and preparation made looking to the operation of another ice factory in case he should get possession of his property; and that the property was liable to be destroyed by fire, and he had not been able to ascertain whether it had been insured. While the Cordele Ice Company was not alleged to be insolvent, the petition alleged that only 10 per cent. of the subscriptions to its capital stock had been paid in; that the corporation had incurred debts in excess of the amount paid in, and was still borrowing money, and might incumber the property by mortgage or otherwise. Under these circumstances, we think the appointment of a receiver would have been authorized, in order to fully protect the rights of the plaintiff. Civ. Code 1895, § 4900.

Counsel for defendants in error invoke the doctrine of res judicata, claiming that the plaintiff's petition showed that the questions involved in the present case were also involved in certain litigation in Sumter county between T. B. and S. R. Sims, the plaintiff here, and were there decided adversely to the latter, and that the plaintiff in this case is concluded by the judgment rendered in that. We do not think that the plaintiff's petition contains allegations or admissions upon which the doctrine of res judicata could be raised by demurrer. But, be this as it may, it is evident that there is nothing whatever therein which shows that the main question with which we have been dealing was involved in the Sumter county litigation. We do not see how the question as to the assignability of the option could have been involved in that case, and there is certainly nothing in the plaintiff's petition to show that it was. The allegations of the petition show that this question arose after the death of G. R. Sims, and in consequence of the attempt of his administrator to sell the option at administrator's sale, and the claim of the Cordele Ice Company that it had purchased this option from Mrs. Sims, who had purchased it at such sale.

3. While the general ground of the demurrer was without merit, we think that the two special grounds mentioned above were meritorious. There were two separate and distinct causes of action in the petition against different defendants. The first and main cause of action, which we have discussed above, was against the Cordele Ice Company, for the recovery of the property in controversy, and reasonable rent for the same during the time that company held it. The second and minor cause of action was against Mrs. G. R. Sims and T. L. Blackwell, administrator of G. R. Sims, for the recovery of a money judgment against them for the value of certain piping, pumps, tools, etc., which belonged to the plaintiff, and which the petition alleged they had converted. According to the petition, the property sought to be recovered of the ice company was in the possession of that company alone; neither Mrs. Sims nor Blackwell being connected with its possession, or exercising the slightest control over it. And the Cordele Ice Company was not charged with any responsibility whatever for the loss or conversion of the property for the value of which the plaintiff sued Mrs. Sims and Blackwell. Here, then, were both a misjoinder of causes of action and a misjoinder of parties defendant. A misjoinder of parties is also apparent when we take into consideration the fact that Hill, Parker, and Ryals are made parties defendant to the action, neither of whom is charged with being in possession of the property involved in the main cause of action, or with having appropriated or converted the property involved in the minor cause of action. They are simply charged, together with Mrs. Sims, "and perhaps others," with having organized a corporation, "chartered under the laws of Georgia, known as the Cordele Ice Company," which corporation, "without any right or authority of law," took possession of the plaintiff's property known as the "Cordele Ice Plant." They are not sued for the possession of this property, nor for the value of the property alleged to have been converted by Mrs. Sims and Blackwell, nor is it alleged that they have incurred any liability to the plaintiff whatever. Why they were made parties defendant at all, does not appear; no recovery being asked against them, and no prayer for relief being directed against them. While it may have been perfectly proper for their names to appear in the petition, in order to clearly present to the court the circumstances out of which the plaintiff's main cause of action arose, they were neither necessary nor proper parties defendant to either cause of action set forth in the plaintiff's petition.

For the above reasons, we think the petition was clearly demurrable for misjoinder of causes of action and for misjoinder of parties defendant, and we therefore feel constrained to affirm the judgment; but for the reasons stated in Brown v. Bowman, 119 Ga. 153, 46 S. E. 410, we direct that, before the judgment of this court is made the judgment of the court below, the plaintiff be allowed to amend his petition so as to meet the objections raised by these special grounds of the demurrer; that, upon his doing so, the case stand for trial upon the petition as thus amended; and that, upon his failure to do this, the judgment below be unconditionally affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with direction. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

MOYER v. RAMSAY-BRISBANE STONE CO.

PETITION—AMENDMENT—EVIDENCE—NONSUIT.

1. The amendment which the plaintiff proposed to make to his petition was properly disallowed by the trial court, inasmuch as he thereby sought to introduce a new and distinct cause of action.

2. It does not appear that the court, in excluding evidence or in declining to permit specific questions to be propounded to a witness introduced in behalf of the plaintiff, committed any error which was prejudicial to him.

3. As the plaintiff failed to prove his case as laid, a nonsuit was properly granted on motion of the defendant.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by James D. Moyer against the Ramsay-Brisbane Stone Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Arnold & Arnold, and Moore & Pomeroy, for plaintiff in error. Smith, Hammond & Smith, for defendant in error.

TURNER, J. The plaintiff in error, James D. Moyer, brought a suit for damages against the Ramsay-Brisbane Stone Company, a corporation, alleging in his petition that he was, on the 24th day of November, 1900, in the employ of that company, doing work as a laborer on the new Empire Building, in the city of Atlanta, Ga., the "said company having the contract for the stonework on the said building," and he being employed by the company "as a laborer to assist in the work on the said building, such as hoisting stone into place, loading and unloading stones, and doing any and all work that he might be ordered to by the foreman in charge of the work"; that on the day named, while he was at work on the building, the company's foreman ordered him "to take a certain derrick apart, and that in doing the said work under the orders of the said foreman he was thrown violently from the stand upon which he was working, and hurled into a cellar about 20 feet from the place upon which he was working; and that, as a result of the said fall, his leg was broken in two places," and he also sustained other serious and painful injuries, etc. By way of amendment to his petition the plaintiff introduced the following allegations concerning the character of the derrick which he was ordered to take apart: "The construction of the derrick above referred to is very simple, being made of wood, but braced and mortised together, the upright pieces of the derrick being about eight by three inches in dimensions, and thirty to thirty-five feet in length. At the bottom there is a sill about seven feet long, in which the side timbers are mortised. About midway between the cap and the sill is a brace mortised into the side timbers. These mortises were all fastened by bolts. Near the bottom of these side timbers is mechanically arranged a drum, with cogwheels, so that the weights can be raised and lowered by turning this drum by the crank. At the top of this derrick tackles are fastened, through which a rope passes to and around this drum." The plaintiff further alleged in his petition that he "was a green hand, and had been at work on the building but a short time, and that he had no experience at all in taking derricks apart, and that the Ramsay-Brisbane Company, knowing that it was a dangerous piece of work and that he was inexperienced, failed to give him any instructions, or to warn him of his danger, and that they were negligent in not so warning and instructing" him; that he "did not know of his risk, and that the said company failed to warn him," he being inexperienced, and not knowing of the danger, and that in failing so to do the company was negligent, as aforesaid; that plaintiff and "another were sent alone to take the derrick apart, and that it was impossible for them to have done the work in any other way than the one in which they did, because of the great weight of the derrick"; that plaintiff "did the work in the only way possible, acting under orders, even had they known of the dangers," of which he did not know. By the amendment above referred to the plaintiff was allowed to add to his allegations of fact the following: The "derrick was a dangerous piece of machinery for a green and inexperienced hand," such as he, "to work with, and that defendants did know, or should have known, of these facts"; that the "sill of the said derrick was lying flat on the ground, with the side beams resting in a slanting position on a small line-house near the platform on which" he was working; that he "was knocking off the cap" above mentioned, "after having removed bolts, and that in so doing, the force which held them together being removed, the tension caused one of the said side timbers to fly violently around, striking" and injuring him in the manner stated. The plaintiff sought to still further amend his petition by alleging that: "The cap at the top of the two beams held them together in such a way, by reason of the brace as above described being too long, that there was a tendency on the part of the two beams to fly apart when the cap was removed, thus making a defect in the construction of the derrick which was unknown to" him. On objection by defendant's counsel, this last amendment was disallowed by the court, and to this ruling the plaintiff excepts. He further makes complaint that the court erred in rejecting certain testimony offered by him, and also erred in entering up against him a judgment of nonsuit.

1. As has been seen, the theory upon which the plaintiff brought his suit was, as shown by the allegations of his original petition, that the taking apart of a derrick of the kind described was a hazardous undertaking, at least for one inexperienced in doing that kind of work; and, as he was a green hand, the company was under a duty to warn him of the hazards incident thereto, and was guilty of negligence in failing to perform this duty at the time he was ordered to take the derrick apart. In other words, his sole complaint was that the company's foreman did not tell him, an ignorant and inexperienced hand, that the particular work he was specially ordered to do was inherently dangerous for some reason unknown to him, but which was or ought to have been known by the company's foreman. The proposed amendment was not, therefore, germane to the case as originally stated. On the contrary, it is apparent that the plaintiff undertook, by means of this amendment, to introduce a new and distinct cause of action, based upon the theory that the defendant company was guilty of negligence in providing a derrick which was defectively constructed, and therefore liable to violently spring apart and injure any one undertaking, in the usual and proper way, to take it apart by removing the cap, as was done by the plaintiff. That the company was negligent, in that it did not furnish to its employees suitable and safe machinery and appliances with which to perform their duties, was not even remotely hinted at in the original petition, but was for the first time suggested by the proposed amendment which the trial judge refused to allow. We think he very properly declined to permit the plaintiff to thus amend his pleadings.

2. It appears that the court, on objection made by counsel for the defendant, declined to permit certain questions to be propounded to an expert witness who was sworn by the plaintiff. But as it is not shown what answers to these questions the plaintiff expected to elicit from the witness, we cannot undertake to deal with his complaint that the court improperly held that the questions were not such as the plaintiff had a right to ask. Bigby v. Warnock, 115 Ga. 386, 397, 41 S. E. 622, 57 L. R. A. 754. One of the answers of this witness seemed to be based upon the hypothesis that the derrick which the plaintiff was ordered to take apart was defectively constructed, and that the plaintiff's injury was attributable alone to this fact. This being so, we think the court properly excluded what the witness said in this connection, for it was wholly irrelevant to the issues presented by the pleadings, and its rejection did no harm to the plaintiff.

3. A careful reading of the evidence satisfies us that the plaintiff failed to prove his case as laid, for there was no testimony in support of his contention that the danger incident to taking apart a derrick such as that described in his declaration was one which an inexperienced workman could not anticipate and guard against, and accordingly it did not appear that it was incumbent on the defendant company to warn the plaintiff of the hazard attending the performance of the work he was called on to do by its foreman. In fact, we are impressed with the idea that the injury to the plaintiff was caused by an unusual, if not improper, adjustment of the timbers used in constructing the particular derrick he was attempting to take apart; and that, if he had any cause of action against the company, the defective construction of this derrick gave rise thereto, rather than its failure to instruct him as to the hazards incident to the kind of work in which he was engaged as its employé. We accordingly hold that the motion to nonsuit was properly sustained by the court below.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

SMITH v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW — APPEAL — BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—NEW TRIAL—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. When the bill of exceptions recites that the court passed an order overruling the motion for a new trial, it is not necessary that such order should be specified as a part of the record to be transmitted.

2. An express approval of the grounds of an amendment to a motion for a new trial affords a presumption that the amendment was allowed.

3. The law, as embodied in Pen. Code 1895, §§ 70, 71, and the law requiring that, to justify the killing, the danger must be urgent and pressing at the time, as embodied in Pen. Code 1895, § 73, may both be appropriately given in the same case, provided they are not confused, or made applicable to the same theory or state of facts. In the present case the charge complained of was of such a character as to confuse the different branches of the law of homicide, and the error thus committed required the granting of a new trial.

4. In the trial of one charged with assault with intent to murder, it was error to charge the jury that if they believed that, had the party died, it would have been murder, they would be authorized, and it would be their duty, to find the accused guilty of the offense charged.

Error from Superior Court, Berrien County; R. G. Mitchell, Judge.

Charlie Smith was convicted of assault with intent to kill, and brings error. Reversed.

Hendricks & Harrison, for plaintiff in error.
W. E. Thomas, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, J. The accused was convicted of assault with intent to murder, and he assigns error upon the refusal of the judge to grant him a new trial.

1. The bill of exceptions recites that an order was passed overruling the motion for a new trial. This order was not specified as a part of the record to be transmitted, and the Solicitor General contends that this court should not consider the motion for a new trial, because it does not appear from the record that the judge has ever passed upon the motion. We think the recital in the bill of exceptions that an order was passed overruling the motion is sufficient to authorize this court to assume that the motion has been overruled, and a proper order passed to that effect.

2. There appears in the record an amendment to the motion for a new trial, upon which there is an entry, signed by the judge, in which it is stated that the recitals of fact contained in the grounds of the amended motion are "approved as true." The record does not disclose any order which in terms allowed the amendment. It has often been held that an order which simply "allowed" an amendment to a motion for a new trial did not have the effect of verifying the grounds of such an amendment. It is now contended that under the principle of these decisions an order approving or verifying the grounds of an amendment is not, in effect, an allowance of the amendment. We cannot concur in this view. We can understand how an unverified amendment to a motion for a new trial may be allowed, but we think that, when the grounds of an amendment to a motion for a new trial appear to have been approved by the judge, a presumption arises that the amendment has been allowed, and this presumption remains until it appears that by an order duly passed the amendment was in fact disallowed.

3. The proposition stated in the first paragraph of the third headnote is so well settled that it is unnecessary to do more than cite one of the more recent cases recognizing this ruling. See Jordan v. State, 117 Ga. 405, 43 S. E. 747, and cit. We think the charge complained of in the present case was subject to the criticism that it confused the principles stated in the sections of the Code referred to in such a way as to prejudice the rights of the accused, and that the court erred in refusing to grant a new trial upon this ground.

4. In reference to the proposition stated in the fourth headnote, see Gallery v. State, 92 Ga. 463, 17 S. E. 863, and cit.

The foregoing deals with all of the assignments of error that require special notice. If there were any other errors or inaccuracies in the charge, the judge will no doubt correct the same on another trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

POWELL v. NEAL LOAN & BANKING CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE—EVIDENCE.

1. There was no error of law requiring the granting of a new trial.

2. The evidence disclosed a transaction between husband and wife which resulted in the stripping of the husband of all means to pay his debts, and, while the testimony of the husband (the wife not having been called as a witness) was such as to show that the transaction was bona fide, and based upon a valuable consideration, still there were circumstances, though slight in their nature, which were sufficient to authorize a finding that the transaction was brought about for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding creditors of the husband. The jury having found to this effect, and this finding having received the approval of the trial judge, this court will not interfere.

WOODWARD v. MILLER & KARWISCH
et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

SALE—BREACH OF WARRANTY—TORT—FRAUD—PLEADING—AMENDMENT.

1. The manufacturer of a buggy, who sells it to a municipal corporation for the use of one of its employes, representing it to be strong and in good condition, but knowing that it is in fact defective, the defect being so concealed by the use of paint and grease that the purchaser cannot detect it, is liable in damages to the person whose use of the buggy was contemplated at the time of the sale for injuries caused by such defect; and this is so notwithstanding there was no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant in the sale of the buggy.

2. The amendments which were allowed merely amplified the original petition, and were not open to the objection that they set out a new cause of action.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by Park Woodward against Miller & Karwisch and others. On the sustaining of a general demurrer to the petition, plaintiff brings error and defendants cross-error. Reversed.

Arnold & Arnold and Howell C. Erwin, for plaintiff. Black & Jackson and W. H. Terrell, for defendants.

CANDLER, J. The main bill of exceptions assigns error upon the sustaining of a general demurrer to the plaintiff's petition. The defendants filed a cross-bill complaining of the allowance of an amendment to the petition. The case made by the declaration was, in substance, as follows: The plaintiff is superintendent of the waterworks department of the city of Atlanta, and in the performance of his duties has occasion to ride between different points in the city. The defendants are manufacturers and sellers of buggies, carriages, and other vehicles. On July 30, 1901, the plaintiff, in behalf of the city of Atlanta, bought of the defendants a buggy for his use, the defendants at the time representing to him that the buggy was in good condition, extra strong, and fitted for the service for which it was intended. After purchasing the buggy, the plaintiff began to use it, and on or about November 12, 1901, while riding in it on the streets of Atlanta, "the spindle extending from the right front axle broke, the buggy was wrecked and turned over, causing the horse to run away, and plaintiff was thrown about and around and on the Belgian block pavement, and greatly and permanently injured." The defendants were lacking in ordinary care in the manufacture, inspection, sale, and handling of the buggy. An ordinary test would have led to the discovery of the defect which caused the spindle to break. "There was a large crack in said axle, but the defendants had caused and directed the same to be covered with grease, and the crack filled in. This crack extended through the larger part of the spindle, and so weakened the same that the weight of the buggy caused the same to break. The crack was visible to the defendants, in the exercise of ordinary care, before they placed the grease upon the spindle, and had the defendants exercised ordinary care in sounding and testing the buggy in any way they would have discovered the break or crack." On account of the crack being filled and covered with grease, the plaintiff could not, in the exercise of ordinary care, discover its existence, and was unaware of it. The defendants falsely represented to the plaintiff that the buggy was in good condition, knowing at the time that the representation was false. The plaintiff's injuries were described, and were alleged to be permanent. Two amendments to the petition were offered, and were allowed over the defendants' objection. The first alleged that the spindle which broke was made of "defective, cheap, imperfect, and improperly welded iron and steel, * * * and flaws and incipient cracks were present in it." The second set up that at the time of his injuries the plaintiff was in the discharge of his duties as superintendent of the water-works system of Atlanta; that the defendants, who reside in Atlanta, knew at and prior to the time the buggy was sold that it was to be used by the plaintiff in the discharge of his duties, and sold the buggy expressly for such use; and that the plaintiff was injured by being thrown out into the street by the giving way and breaking of the axle, which caused the buggy to drop to the ground. "He was not hurt by the horse running away. The horse ran away after the buggy fell, and after plaintiff was injured."

1. We do not hesitate to hold that the petition set out a cause of action. Independently of the question of liability to the plaintiff on the alleged warranty of the buggy, we are clear that under the allegations the defendants were guilty of a tort for which the plaintiff could hold them liable. The gist of the action is the alleged false representation, knowingly made, as to the quality and condition of the buggy. In this it is very similar to an action of deceit. It makes no difference that there was no privity of contract between the plaintiffs. It appears that the plaintiff's injuries were sustained while the buggy was being put to a use expressly contemplated by the parties when the sale was made. "A particular transaction may sometimes be looked upon as affording the right to bring an action either for the breach of contract or in tort. Take, for instance, the too familiar case of a railway disaster caused by the company's negligence. The company are liable to the passenger in contract because they gave him a ticket, and in tort because they were not sufficiently careful in carrying him. In such a case as this there is clearly direct privity between the plaintiff and the defendants. But, generally speaking, privity is not necessary to support an action in tort. * * * If a railway company contract with a master to carry his servant, and in doing so are guilty of negligence, which causes bodily hurt to the servant and consequent damage by loss of service to the master, the company may be sued in contract by the master and in tort by the servant." Note to Landridge v. Levy, 4 M. & W. 337; Shirley, L. C. 346. In that case, which is closely in point in the present discussion, a father bought from a gunsmith a gun, which was warranted, telling the gunsmith at the time of the purchase that he wanted the gun for the use of himself and his sons. The gun, while being used by one of the sons, exploded, injuring him, and suit was brought by him against the seller of the gun for the tort. The defendant contended that the right of action, if any, was in the father, to whom the sale had been made; but it was held that the suit in tort could be maintained by the son. In the able and exhaustive brief of counsel for the plaintiff a large number of cases of similar import are cited, but for the purposes of the present discussion we deem it necessary to refer to only a few of those most closely in point. In Lewis v. Terry (Cal.) 43 Pac. 398, 31 L. R. A. 220, 52 Am. St. Rep. 146, it was held that "one who sells a folding bed, representing it to be safe for use, when he knows it to be dangerous, is liable for injuries caused by the defects in the bed to any person who uses it, although there may be no privity of contract between them." That decision was based on the principle that the defendant was guilty of a wrong independently of his contract, viz., his false representation as to the safety of the bed, and that thereby the case was brought within the operation of the law of torts. In Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co. (Minn.) 51 N. W. 1103, 15 L. R. A. 818, 32 Am. St. Rep. 559, the plaintiff was a painter in the employment of a contractor. The contractor ordered of a retail merchant a stepladder for the use of the plaintiff. The merchant, not having such a ladder in his stock, ordered the defendant, a manufacturer, to deliver one to the place designated by the contractor. The ladder so delivered was made of defective and inferior material, and was dangerous, but its defects were hidden from view by paint, varnish, and oil. By reason of its weakness the plaintiff fell from it and was injured. The court held the defendant "liable for injuries caused by such negligence to one into whose hands the dangerous implement comes for use in the usual course of business, even though there be no contract relation between the latter and the manufacturer." We have been able to find in our own Reports only one case at all in point in the present discussion. In Blood Balm Co. v. Cooper, 83 Ga. 457, 10 S. E. 118, 5 L. R. A. 612, 20 Am. St. Rep. 324, this court held: "Where one prepares a proprietary or patent medicine, and puts it upon the market, and recommends it to the world as useful for the cure of certain diseases, the bottle containing it having therewith a prescription, made by the proprietor of the medicine, in which he states that it is to be taken in certain quantities, and the medicine with this prescription is sold by the proprietor to a druggist for the purpose of being resold to persons who might wish to use it, and the druggist sells the same to a person, who uses it in the quantity thus prescribed, and the same contains an ingredient such as iodide of potash in such quantity as proves harmful to the person thus using it, the proprietor is liable." We recognize that there is some distinction between the case cited and the case now under consideration, but it seems clear that the same principle of law is applicable in both. Many courts have laid down a different rule governing the sale of articles which are inherently dangerous, such as a deadly poison or a powerful explosive, from that which is applied to the sale of ordinary articles of commerce; holding that the negligent sale, shipment, or handling of such inherently dangerous articles will render the negligent person liable to any one who may be injured by reason of his negligence, regardless of the question of privity between them, while as to articles not inherently dangerous there must be some privity between the parties to give a right of action. This rule, however, can have no application to the present case in view of the fact that the petition distinctly alleges that the plaintiff's use of the buggy was contemplated by the defendants when the sale was made, that they knew of the defects in the spindle, and that they concealed this defect from him by the use of paint and grease, and represented to him that the buggy was in perfect condition. The case of Cobb v. Clark Co., 118 Ga. 483, 45 S. E. 305, cited in the brief of counsel for the defendants, has no bearing upon the case now under discussion. There the plaintiff entered into a written contract with a building company, which was erecting a building adjoining his premises, concerning the building of a party wall between the two buildings. The defendant, a contractor for the building company, was not a party to this contract. The suit was brought against it for alleged negligence in the erection of the wall for the building company. This court held, necessarily, that whatever duty was owed to the plaintiff in the construction of the wall was by the building company, with which he had a written contract on the subject; that the defendant owed the plaintiff no duty, and was not liable to him in damages.

2. There was no error in allowing the amendments to the petition. These amendments merely amplified the original petition, and set out more in detail the nature of the alleged defects in the buggy and the circumstances of the plaintiff's injury. By no construction can they be held to introduce a new cause of action.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

RAY v. PITMAN et al.

EQUITABLE MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—QUITTING TITLE—PETITION—AMENDMENT—DEMURRER.

1. The original petition was sufficient as against a general demurrer. The amendment thereto related to matters which were germane, and was properly allowed, and the general demurrer to the petition as amended was properly overruled.

2. A defect in a petition resulting from a non-joinder of proper parties cannot be taken advantage of by general demurrer.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action by J. H. Pitman and J. H. Widener against Annie F. Ray. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Lavender R. Ray and W. R. Hammond, for plaintiff in error. J. H. Pitman, for defendants in error.

COBB, J. J. H. Pitman and J. H. Widener brought their petition against Annie F. Ray, alleging: On March 1, 1892, L. R. Ray, the husband of defendant, borrowed from Robins $1,200, gave him a promissory note for that amount, and executed a deed to land to secure the payment of the note. After the delivery and record of the security deed, Ray conveyed to the defendant the property described in the security deed. In 1897 Robins brought a suit in ejectment in the superior court of Coweta county against the defendant and her husband; and a consent judgment was rendered, in which it was provided that the plaintiff should recover possession of the land, but should convey the same to Annie F. Ray whenever she should pay the amount due on the note of her husband, and that in the meantime the plaintiff should account to her for the rents and profits of the land, and she should have possession of the premises whenever the debt of her husband was paid. Neither the husband nor the wife having paid any part of the debt, Robins brought suit in the superior court of Douglas county against L. R. Ray on the note; and on August 23, 1901, a judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for stated amounts as principal and interest, these amounts being arrived at by what purported to be an accounting of the rents and profits from the date of the judgment in Coweta superior court to the date of the judgment last referred to. The defendant was not a party to this proceeding. Robins, after filing a deed to L. R. Ray in the office of the clerk of the superior court of Coweta county, caused the land to be levied upon under the execution from the superior court of Douglas county, and after due advertisement the same was sold by the sheriff to the plaintiff J. H. Pitman, who thereafter conveyed an interest in the same to the plaintiff J. H. Widener. It is alleged that the plaintiffs are informed that the defendant still claims that she has a right to redeem the land, but that she has never offered, and does not now offer, to pay any part of the debt. The prayer is that, if the defendant still has a right to redeem, she be required to come in and tender the amount due on the debt, and that the time within which the tender should be made, and the amount of the tender, be fixed and determined. To this petition the defendant filed a general demurrer. The plaintiffs, over the objection of the defendant, were allowed to amend the petition by alleging that the interest on the debt exceeds by $500 the amount of the rental value of the property since the same has been held by the plaintiffs and by Robins, and that the annual interest exceeds the annual rental value of the property, and by adding a prayer that an accounting be had, and the amount that the defendant ought to pay be determined—the plaintiffs offering to give full credit for all rental or income—and that a decree be molded directing a sale of the land, and the payment to plaintiffs of the balance due on the debt to Robins; the balance to be paid over to the defendant. The defendant renewed her general demurrer to the petition as amended. The court overruled the demurrers, and the defendant excepted, assigning error upon this judgment, and also upon the judgment allowing the amendment above referred to.

Mrs. Ray, not being a party to the judgment in Douglas county, is not bound in any way by that judgment. Her rights in the land, as to Robins or any one claiming under him, are to be determined solely by the judgment in Coweta superior court. It is contended that the effect of this judgment was to preclude Robins from afterwards bringing suit against L. R. Ray upon the note, and that, even if this is not true, Robins was certainly precluded from filing a deed to Ray, and selling the land under the execution founded upon the judgment on the note. For the purposes of this case only, this may be conceded. Treating the judgment in Douglas superior court as an absolute nullity, it may still operate as an estoppel against Robins in favor of any one who has been misled by his conduct in reference to this suit and the proceedings thereafter, and, being so misled, have acted to their prejudice. If the purchaser at the sale under this judgment paid the amount of his bid to the sheriff, and the amount so paid was, after proper deductions for costs and expenses, received by Robins, he would be thereafter, as against such purchaser, estopped from setting up the defect in the sale; and in equity the purchaser, not having received title on account of the sale being void, would be subrogated to the rights of the creditor who had received his money. Under the allegations of the petition, we think Pitman, the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, was subrogated to the rights of Robins under the judgment in Coweta superior court. See Civ. Code 1895, § 5471; Ashley v. Cook, 109 Ga. 653, 35 S. E. 89 (2).

The question to be determined, then, is, what are the rights of Robins under the judgment in Coweta superior court? It is contended that the effect of this judgment was to place Robins in possession for the purpose of applying the rents and profits of the land to the payment of his debt, and that he has waived all other remedies he might have had before he resorted to the one which had the effect to place him in possession of the land. It is conceded, though, that he might notify Mrs. Ray that he no longer recognized her right to redeem, and that, after notice to this effect, if she did not redeem or bring some appropriate proceeding against him for an accounting at least within 10 years from the time of this notice, her right of redemption would be barred. See, in this connection, Gunter v. Smith, 113 Ga. 18, 38 S. E. 374 (4). That is, that Robins, or any one claiming under him, must arbitrarily declare that he no longer recognizes the right to redeem, and then wait at least 10 years before any disposition can be made of the property, while in the meantime the property may be depreciating in value, and the rental value, which at no time exceeds the interest on the debt, may be annually growing less and less. If Robins had not acquired possession of the land, he could have brought about a foreclosure sale, either at law or in equity, at any time he saw proper. It has been held that the holder of a security deed may maintain at the same time an action upon his note, praying for a sale of the land to satisfy the same, and also an action to recover the possession of the land upon the title which the security deed gives him. See Dykes v. McVay, 67 Ga. 502; Hines v. Rutherford, Id. 614; Ashley v. Cook, 109 Ga. 655, 35 S. E. 89; Georgia Mills v. Clarke, 112 Ga. 253, 257, 37 S. E. 414 (2). This being true, after there has been a judgment in the ejectment case, which simply gives to the creditor possession of the land in order that he may receive the rents, issues, and profits, and apply them to his debt—Polhill v. Brown, 84 Ga. 339, 10 S. E. 921 (10); Gunter v. Smith, 113 Ga. 18, 38 S. E. 374 (3)—we see no good reason for holding that after the creditor has pursued the remedy resulting in possession to a point where he sees that he cannot, either in justice to himself or his debtor, further pursue that remedy, he should not, for the purpose of enforcing payment of the balance of the debt then due, resort to some other recognized remedy, either at law or in equity. While in the present case he might be precluded from bringing suit on the note, on account of Mrs. Ray being the owner of the equity of redemption, a court of equity, which would recognize Pitman as the owner of the debt, and Mrs. Ray as the owner of the land subject to the debt, could certainly render a decree which would do equity between these two parties; that is, compel Pitman to account for the rental value of the property from the date of the judgment in Coweta superior court, and, after the sum thus ascertained is credited upon the Robins debt, require the land to be sold, and the balance due on that debt paid from the proceeds of the sale, and the balance remaining, if any, paid over to Mrs. Ray, who would, in equity, be entitled thereto. Equity, which always favors the creditor, and abhors that which delays him in the collection of his debt, would certainly not turn away from its door a creditor who comes in praying that he may be allowed to account for that which is due his debtor, and apply the same in part satisfaction of the debt, and for a decree of sale of property expressly pledged for the payment of the debt, when neither the debtor, nor the vendee of the debtor, who claims the property pledged, offers to pay the debt, and such vendee interposes as the only objection to the rendition of the decree that the creditor, having elected to go into possession, must stay in possession until her right to redeem has become barred by lapse of time, notwithstanding the property pledged is depreciating in value, and the rental value of the property is not, and probably never will be, in the present condition of the property, as much as the annual interest on the balance due on the debt. The petition was overflowing with equity, and the amendment, which simply relieved certain defects in the petition as originally drafted, was properly allowed. It was argued that the petition was defective for want of parties. It may be that Robins should have been a party, either plaintiff or defendant, and possibly L. R. Ray should have been a party. See, in this connection, Wilkins v. Gibson, 118 Ga. 33, 58, 38 S. E. 374, 84 Am. St. Rep. 204 (10). There was no demurrer raising the question of nonjoinder, and a defect of this character cannot be taken advantage of by general demurrer. See Hightower v. Mustian, 8 Ga. 506 (3), 510; Rusk v. Hill, 117 Ga. 723 (3).

ATLANTA TRUST & BANKING CO. v. NELMS et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 8, 1904.)

INJUNCTION—REFUSAL—AFFIRMANCE ON ERROR—RES JUDICATA—AMENDMENT OF PETITION.

1. A judgment of a trial court refusing an injunction when the same depends entirely upon a question of law is, upon its affirmance by the Supreme Court, while not a final judgment in the case, a final adjudication of such question.

2. An application was made for an injunction, and the only reason shown by the defendant as cause against the granting of the injunction was a general demurrer. The judge, at the first term, passed an order refusing the injunction, and also an order sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the case. Separate bills of exceptions were sued out by the plaintiff assigning error upon each of the judgments, and the judgment refusing the injunction was affirmed by the Supreme Court. At a subsequent term the case based upon the other bill of exceptions came on for a hearing, and no other questions were involved therein than such as were involved and decided when the judgment refusing the injunction was under review. Held, that the judgment last referred to will be treated as res adjudicata, and the judgment sustaining the demurrer will be affirmed.

3. The application for a direction allowing the plaintiff to amend its petition upon the filing of the remittitur is denied, no sufficient reason appearing why this case should be taken out of the general rule preventing the filing of an amendment after a judgment sustaining a general demurrer is affirmed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action by the Atlanta Trust & Banking Company against J. W. Nelms and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Dorsey, Brewster & Howell, for plaintiff in error. W. R. Hammond, Jno. L. Hopkins & Sons, and R. O. Lovett, for defendants in error.

COBB, J. The Atlanta Trust & Banking Company filed an application for an injunction against Nelms and others. The interlocutory hearing was had during the term to which the case was returnable. The defendants filed a general demurrer, and urged this as a reason for not granting the injunction prayed for. The plaintiff offered an amendment to its petition, which the court refused to allow. No other reason was shown against the granting of the injunction than the demurrer above referred to. The court passed on the same day two orders, each embracing a separate judgment; the one refusing to grant the injunction prayed for, and the other sustaining the general demurrer and dismissing the case. The plaintiff filed two bills of exceptions—one to the judgment refusing the injunction, and the other assigning error upon the judgment sustaining the demurrer; and in each bill of exceptions error was assigned upon the ruling of the judge refusing to allow the amendment to the petition. The bill of exceptions in each case was transmitted with the appropriate record to this court. The one upon the first writ of error was returnable to the October term, 1902, and the judgment on this writ of error was affirmed. Atlanta Trust & Banking Company v. Nelms, 116 Ga. 915, 43 S. E. 380. The case now before us is the one made by the bill of exceptions assigning error upon the judgment sustaining the demurrer, the case being returnable, under the law, to the March term, 1903, and having been regularly continued to the present term on account of the death of one of the parties. The same questions, and no others, that were made and decided in the case when it was here on the first writ of error are made by the assignments of error in the present case. In each instance the questions were whether or not the court erred in disallowing the amendment to the petition, and whether, as matter of law, the allegations of the petition were sufficient to authorize the relief prayed for. Both of these questions were decided adversely to the plaintiff in error when the case was here before, and under the ruling in the case of City of Atlanta v. First Methodist Church, 83 Ga. 448, 10 S. E. 231, which was approved and followed in Ingram v. Mercer University, 102 Ga. 226, 29 S. E. 273, an affirmance of the judgment on the writ of error now before us results, because the judgment of the trial judge refusing the injunction depended upon a question of law, and when that judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court the point in question was finally adjudicated, and the parties in the case were thereafter bound by that judgment. See, also, Savannah Railway v. Savannah, 115 Ga. 187, 41 S. E. 592. This rule is, however, not applicable unless the judgment is based entirely upon a question of law. Collins v. Carr, 116 Ga. 39, 42 S. E. 373. If the hearing on the demurrer had taken place after the affirmance of the judgment refusing the injunction, the trial judge would have been bound by the former judgment, which had been affirmed, and would have been compelled to sustain the demurrer. The fact that the two judgments were rendered on the same day does not prevent the principle that would have been applicable under the facts just referred to from being controlling. The judge, in passing the order sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the case, simply anticipated a result which was inevitable in the event his judgment refusing the injunction was affirmed. Following the precedent in the cases above cited, the judgment in the present case will be affirmed.

The plaintiff in error asks that, in the event the judgment is affirmed, this court give direction that it be allowed to amend its petition upon the filing of the remittitur. The general rule is, as stated by counsel in their brief, that, where a case is dismissed on demurrer, and such judgment is affirmed by the Supreme Court, no amendment can be allowed upon the filing of the remittitur, unless direction to that effect is given by the Supreme Court. Applications for such direction are addressed to the discretion of this court, and we are unable to see any good reason why this case should form an exception to the general rule. The litigation has been of several years' duration, and was pending long enough before the judgment sustaining the demurrer for the plaintiff, if it had been in the exercise of due diligence, to have discovered all that was necessary to the maintenance of its case. The controversy first appeared in this court in 1902 (115 Ga. 53, 41 S. E. 247), and seems to have originated in the trial court either in the early part of 1901 or the latter part of 1900. The judgment on demurrer was entered on November 13, 1902. We must decline to give the direction asked.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

CAULEY v. WADLEY LUMBER CO.

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—OPENING—TIME OF MOTION—NONSUIT.

1. While, under Civ. Code 1895, § 5072, a trial judge is vested with a wide discretion as to opening a judgment of default on motion made at the trial term of a case, there is no provision of law authorizing him to entertain and grant a motion to open a default presented at any subsequent term at which the case is called for trial. Thornton v. Coleman, 30 S. E. 782, 104 Ga. 625, 627. To move to open a default at the term at which a case regularly stands for trial is purely a matter of grace, and this privilege must be exercised, if at all, within the time prescribed by the statute whereby it is conferred. Ingalls v. Lamar, 41 S. E. 573, 115 Ga. 293, 296. The present case differs from the case of Davis v. South Carolina Railroad Co., 33 S. E. 437, 107 Ga. 420.

2. The error committed by the court below in allowing the defendant to file an answer at the second term after the trial term of this case rendered all subsequent proceedings nugatory, since the plaintiff was thereby deprived of a substantial right (Lenny v. Finley, 45 S. E. 317, 113 Ga. 427); and for this reason, if for no other, the judgment of nonsuit rendered against her should be vacated.

HUXFORD v. MEINHART & SCHAUL.

GUARANTY—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONTRACT.

1. A., in person, and B., through a representative, entered into a parol agreement by which A. was to become liable to B. for the debt of a third person. Subsequently A. wrote to B. a letter which merely purported to give A.'s understanding of the terms of the agreement. B. sued A. on the agreement, and A. did not plead the statute of frauds. Held, that the letter was not the contract, but was merely a written admission as to its terms, and it was error to refuse to allow A. to testify to a version of the agreement different from that expressed in the letter.

Error from City Court of Douglas; J. W. Quincey, Judge.

Action by Meinhardt & Schaul against C. Huxford. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

Lankford & Dickerson and Dart & Roan, for plaintiff in error. Simon W. Hitch, for defendants in error.

FISH, P. J. The defendant agreed, for a valuable consideration, to be liable to plaintiffs for an account to be contracted with them by Gillis. Gillis thereafter contracted an account to the amount of $700.48. Subsequently a disagreement arose between plaintiffs and defendant as to the extent of the latter's liability, it being then contended by the defendant that he was to be responsible for only one-half of the account, and a parol agreement was entered into in reference to the matter between the defendant and a representative of plaintiffs. Thereafter the defendant wrote to plaintiffs a letter, a copy of which is as follows: "Dear Sirs: I will protect you in half of the J. W. Gillis acct., and instructed your Mr. Einstein to so inform you, but in the meantime I hope you will be as lenient with me as possible and I will help you collect the balance as far as I am able. Trusting this will meet your approval, I am, yours truly, C. Huxford." At the trial the representative of the plaintiffs with whom the parol agreement was entered into by defendant testified that the agreement was to the effect that the defendant was to be liable to pay $350.48 in the event Gillis did not pay the account. The defendant offered to testify that the agreement between him and the representative of the plaintiffs was not that he was to pay one-half of the account, but that he was to see that at least one-half of it was paid by Gillis, and that he was to be liable for only so much of one-half of the account as Gillis did not pay. The court rejected this evidence. There was evidence that Gillis had paid $250 of the account; the plaintiffs contending that the defendant was liable for $350.24, and the defendant contending that he was liable for only $100.24.

It is insisted that the ruling of the court was correct, because the evidence offered tended to contradict and vary the writing above referred to, which it is claimed was unambiguous. The writing was not the contract. It was simply a written declaration by the defendant of what he, at the time the letter was written, understood to be the terms of the agreement which had been previously entered into between him and the representative of the plaintiffs. What was the contract between the parties depended upon what took place prior to the writing of the letter. While the letter might be used as an admission of the defendant, it was not the contract, and therefore did not preclude the defendant from giving in parol his version of the transaction as he then understood it. The representative of the plaintiffs had been heard fully before the jury as to his version, the defendant was entitled to be heard in the same manner, and it was for the jury to determine what was the truth in reference to the transaction. In passing upon this question, of course, the jury should consider the written admission of the defendant. The evidence should have been admitted, and the case submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions.

While the defendant, in his plea, denied that he ever agreed in writing to pay the account, the plea does not, in terms, set up the want of a writing as a defense to the action, and we have therefore treated the case as if the statute of frauds was not pleaded.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

(119 Ga. 887)

ATLANTA, K. & N. RY. CO. v. SMITH.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)
PLEADING—PETITION—WRONGFUL DEATH—
RIGHT OF ACTION.

1. A judgment of a trial judge holding that a petition has been framed in compliance with the pleading act of 1893 (Civ. Code 1895, § 4961), requiring all petitions to "set forth the cause of action in orderly and distinct paragraphs numbered consecutively," will not be reversed unless it is apparent that there has been an utter disregard of the provisions of the act.

2. Under the Tennessee statute, upon which the present suit was based, the personal representative of a deceased has a right to recover for his homicide in the event he left surviving him a widow, and in that event it is immaterial whether there were also children. Allegations in the petition referring to the children of the deceased, when the suit is based upon the fact that there was a widow, are irrelevant, and should be stricken as surplusage. Whether, under the law of Tennessee, the recovery would be for the sole benefit of the widow, or the children would be interested therein, is not now decided; the defendant not being concerned with what shall be done with the proceeds of the recovery in the event it is paid to the personal representative, who, under the law of Tennessee, has a right to bring the suit.

3. There was no general demurrer. The special demurrers were not well taken, with the exception of the one dealt with in the preceding note.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by Maude Smith against the Atlanta, Knoxville & Northern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Smith, Hammond & Smith, for plaintiff in error. Arnold & Arnold, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. This was an action for damages on account of a homicide which occurred in the state of Tennessee. The plaintiff, who was the widow of the deceased, brings the suit as administratrix of his estate. The defendant is a railway corporation of this state. The defendant filed various special demurrers to different parts of the petition. The demurrers were overruled, and it excepted.

1. It was insisted that the petition as a whole was defective because it did not set forth the alleged cause of action in orderly and distinct paragraphs numbered consecutively, and that one of the paragraphs was especially subject to objection, containing, as alleged in the demurrer, at least 20 different acts of negligence, and consisting of nearly two pages of typewritten matter. The pleading act of 1893 provided that petitions should "set forth the cause of action in orderly and distinct paragraphs numbered consecutively." Civ. Code 1895, § 4961. The act does not prescribe any penalty for a failure to comply with its terms. A petition not subdivided into paragraphs at all would evidence such a disregard of the requirements of the law that the same should be dismissed on motion. A petition which makes a paragraph of every sentence, without reference to substance, would also evidence such a disregard of the spirit of the law that it should be dismissed on motion, for the reason that such a paragraphing would not be orderly. The true course lies between these two extremes. It is impossible to satisfactorily define what would be an orderly paragraph, and this matter must be left largely to the discretion of the trial judge. If, upon an examination of the petition, he is satisfied that there has been a substantial compliance with the requirements of the act, his judgment in holding that the petition sets forth the cause of action in distinct and orderly paragraphs will not be reversed, unless it is plainly apparent that the provisions of the act have been substantially disregarded by the pleader. See, in this connection, Orr v. Cooledge, 117 Ga. 195, 207, 43 S. E. 527 (4). While we think that some of the paragraphs in the present petition might have been well subdivided into several paragraphs, still we cannot say that there has been such a disregard of the provisions of the act that the judge erred in upholding the petition as framed. It would seem to be the best practice, in actions for damages on account of negligence, to make each distinct act of negligence the subject of a separate paragraph.

2. The present suit was based upon three sections of the Tennessee Code (Shannon's), which were set out in the petition, and which are as follows:

"Sec. 3130. The right of action which a person, who dies from injuries received from another, or whose death is caused by the wrongful act, omission or killing of another, would have had against the wrongdoer in case death had not ensued, shall not abate or be extinguished by his death, but shall pass to his widow, and in case there is no widow, to his children, or to his personal representative for the benefit of his widow or next of kin, free from the claims of creditors.

"Sec. 3131. The action may be instituted by the personal representative of the deceased, but if he declines, the widow and children of the deceased may, without the consent of the representative, use his name in bringing and prosecuting the suit, or giving bond and security for costs, or in the form prescribed by paupers. The personal representative shall not in such case be responsible for costs, unless he sign his name to the prosecution."

"Sec. 3134. Where a person's death is caused by the wrongful act, fault or omission of another, and suit is brought for damages, the party suing shall, if entitled to damages, have the right to recover for the mental and physical suffering, loss of time, and necessary expenses, resulting to the deceased from the personal injuries, and also the damages resulting to the parties, for whose use and benefit the right of action survives from the death consequent upon the injuries received."

The petition alleged that the plaintiff was the widow of Clyde Smith, as well as administratrix of his estate, and that she had by her deceased husband two minor children, whose names and ages were stated, and who were alleged to be the next of kin of the deceased. One ground of the demurrer complains that there was a misjoinder of parties, in that the children were, in effect, joined as parties plaintiff with the administratrix; and the demurrer further raised the question that the allegations which set forth the names and ages of the children and the fact that they were the next of kin were irrelevant, and should be stricken as surplusage. We do not think that under the allegations of the petition the children were joined as parties, but we are of opinion that all reference to the children was irrelevant, and should have been eliminated from the petition. Under the Tennessee statute the right of action for a homicide is in the personal representative, provided there is a widow, or children, or next of kin. If there is no one answering to any of these descriptions, there is no cause of action. It is therefore necessary that there should be an allegation that the deceased left a widow, or children, or next of kin, to make the cause of action complete. And when the petition alleges that there is a widow, the cause of action is complete, and it is immaterial whether the deceased had children or other next of kin. Consequently, any allegation in reference to such children or next of kin should be stricken as surplusage. The fact that there is a widow is all that is necessary to give a right of action to the representative. Whether, under the Tennessee law, a recovery by the representative upon the ground that there is a widow would inure to the benefit of the children when there are children, as well as to the widow, or what should be done with the proceeds of the recovery, is a question which we do not now decide, nor is this question one in which the defendant is at all interested. The personal representative has a right to recover when he shows that the deceased left surviving him a widow, and what disposition the personal representative makes of the recovery is no concern of the defendant.

3. The alleged negligent acts of the defendant are set forth in two paragraphs of the petition. It is alleged in the demurrer that there is no allegation in these paragraphs that the negligent acts were the cause of, or contributed to, the homicide of the deceased; and there are numerous grounds of special demurrer criticizing the verbiage of the different averments, and alleging that various allegations of negligence are mere conclusions of the pleader. When the petition is taken as a whole, we think it sufficiently appears that the plaintiff claims that the death of her intestate was the result of the negligent acts which are set forth in the paragraphs of the petition above referred to, and facts necessary to authorize the allegations of negligence are set forth in these paragraphs. The averments of a petition are required to be certain only to a common intent, and we think the allegations of this petition are at least up to this low degree of certainty. The criticisms upon the verbiage of the petition are not such as to require any of the allegations to be eliminated from the petition. There was no general demurrer, and none of the special demurrers were well taken except the one referring to the allegation in reference to the children of the deceased. The judgment will be affirmed, with directions that these allegations be stricken from the petition, and that the costs of this writ of error be paid by the defendant in error.

Judgment affirmed, with directions. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

TRUST CO. OF GEORGIA v. SCOTTISH UNION & NAT. INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

INSURANCE POLICY—ACTION BY MORTGAGEE—PARTIES—REFORMATION OF POLICY.

1. A mortgagee may maintain an action at law, in his own name alone, for loss under an insurance policy payable to him, as his interest may appear, when the amount of his debt exceeds or equals the value of the insurance, and the mortgage embraces all of the insured property which was destroyed.

2. The petition set out a good cause of action on the policy as written.

3. There was a want of necessary parties, and a failure to set out facts entitled the plaintiff to a reformation of the policy.

4. Under Civ. Code 1896, § 4833, the failure of the petitioner to make the necessary parties, or to set up facts authorizing a reformation of the policy, did not deprive it of the right to recover what it might be entitled to on the policy as actually written.

5. The plaintiff does not lose the benefit of a good cause of action where it fails to establish a better.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action by the Trust Company of Georgia, receiver, against the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Hawkins borrowed from the Fidelity Trust & Loan Company $1,685, and secured the same by a deed to real estate, under Civ. Code 1895, § 2771. The receiver of this company applied to the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company for a policy of insurance on the building. The petition averred that the receiver paid the premium, and that on February 2, 1901, in consideration of said premium, the insurance company did insure W. A. Hawkins for an amount not exceeding $1,000 on the property described, the policy stipulating that "any loss that may be ascertained and proved to be due the assured under this policy shall be held payable to W. K. P. Wilson, Rec. Fidelity Trust & Loan Company, as interest may appear, balance to assured." On September 17, 1901, there was indorsed on the policy the statement that "notice accepted that the Trust Co. of Georgia has been appointed Receiver for the Fidelity Trust and Loan Co., in place of W. K. P. Wilson, and loss clause is hereby changed accordingly." The Trust Company of Georgia, as receiver of the Fidelity Loan & Trust Company aforesaid, alleged in its petition that by a mistake Hawkins had been named as the assured, that the interest insured should have been that of the receiver, and that naming Hawkins as the assured was the result of a mistake of fact and law. It averred the loss of the building by fire, the making of the proper proof, compliance with all the conditions precedent and subsequent, and that the insurance company denied liability generally; that after the fire Hawkins had left the state, and his whereabouts were unknown. It prayed for a reformation of the policy by striking the name of Hawkins, and inserting in lieu thereof the name of petitioner, as receiver of the Fidelity Trust & Loan Company. It also prayed "that a judgment may be rendered in petitioner's favor against the defendant company for the amount of said policy, to wit, one thousand dollars, with interest from the date of the defendant company's denial of liability under said policy and refusal to pay the same, namely, the 26th day of February, 1902." The defendant demurred on the ground that there was nothing setting forth wherein the mistake consisted, how or by whom it was made, nor was the mistake sufficiently set forth to enable the defendant to plead thereto; that Hawkins was a necessary party, but he was not named as a party, nor was any process asked against him. Subject to its demurrer, the defendant answered. The court sustained the demurrer, but allowed 10 days in which to cure the defects pointed out by the demurrer, in default whereof the case should stand dismissed. The plaintiff did not amend, and excepts to the judgment of dismissal.

Anderson, Anderson & Thomas, for plaintiff in error. King, Spalding & Little, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. It has been held that a bill to annul a contract for fraud and illegality, with an alternative prayer that the court would specifically enforce it if the same was found to be valid, presents two inconsistent and irreconcilable causes of action, and is fatally defective. St. Louis R. Co. v. Terre Haute R. Co. (C. C.) 33 Fed. 448, citing Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 130, 15 L. Ed. 158. But here the policy as written was not void, and the plaintiff might have a cause of action thereunder, even if unable to establish its right to a reformation and the advantages incidentally flowing therefrom. In a suit to reform, the complainant may also obtain a decree for the relief to which he is entitled under the instrument as reformed. And in like manner, under our broad and practical system of pleading, there is no reason why the petitioner, on failure to establish his cause of action for the reformation, might not recover judgment for what he was entitled to under the policy as actually written. Compare Gunn v. Barrett, 69 Ga. 690. For "the superior courts * * * on the trial of any civil case, shall give effect to all the rights of the parties, legal or equitable, or both, and apply on such trial remedies or relief, legal or equitable, or both, in favor of either party, such as the nature of the case may allow or require." Civ. Code 1895, § 4833. But while the want of necessary parties, and the allegations in the petition, made it impossible to reform the policy, the petition did set out a cause of action on the policy as originally prepared. It averred the payment of the premium, the issuance of a policy to Hawkins, with the loss payable to his creditor as its interest might appear, the destruction of the premises by fire, the presentation of proofs of loss, and the company's refusal to pay; and prayed for a money judgment on said policy. There was no ground for the objection that a splitting of the cause of action on the policy would result, as there was an allegation that the mortgaged debt exceeded the amount due under the policy. The defendant in error insists that Hawkins as mortgagor was also a necessary party on this branch of the case. And while there is some conflict on the subject, yet the weight of authority is in favor of the proposition that "a mortgagee may maintain an action at law, in his own name alone, for loss on the insurance policy payable to him, as his interest may appear, when the amount of his debt exceeds the value of the insurance, and the mortgage embraced all of the property which was destroyed." Chipman v. Carroll (Kan.) 23 L. R. A. 305, and note; Lowry v. Ins. Co. of North America (Miss.) 21 South. 664, 37 L. R. A. 779, 65 Am. St. Rep. 597; Maxcy v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co. (Minn.) 55 N. W. 1130, 40 Am. St. Rep. 325. Compare Hawkins v. Central Ry. Co., 119 Ga. 159, 46 S. E. 82; Loudermilk v. Loudermilk, 93 Ga. 443, 21 S. E. 77; Liverpool Ins. Co. v. Ellington, 94 Ga. 785, 21 S. E. 1006; Bentley v.

Standard Fire Ins. Co., 40 W. Va. 729, 23 S. E. 584; Traders' Ins. Co. v. Mann, 118 Ga. 381, 45 S. E. 426; Civ. Code 1895, § 3077.

The defense of multifariousness is not favored. In this case there was no demurrer on the ground that there was a misjoinder, or that the causes of action were inconsistent, or that the petition was multifarious. The defect alleged was that the petition did not allege how or by whom the mistake was made, or in what it consisted. These grounds of demurrer were well taken and properly sustained. The petition did not set out issuable facts sufficient to warrant the reformation of an instrument, which not only explicitly named Hawkins as the assured, but in that shape was afterwards assigned to the present plaintiffs, who took the same, not as the assured, but with a clause reciting that the loss should be payable to it as its interest might appear. Even had the allegations been sufficient to warrant a reformation of the instrument, Hawkins was a necessary party. His rights under the policy as written might have been different from those under a policy in which he was not named and where the mortgagee was described as the assured. But in setting forth a defective cause of action for reformation of the policy, the plaintiff did not lose the benefit of the good cause of action on the policy as written. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 4833, the plaintiff would not lose the good because it failed to secure the better. Where a petition is sustainable for one cause of action, it should not be dismissed as a whole because defective as to another cause of action therein set out. Lowe v. Burke, 79 Ga. 166, 3 S. E. 449.

The plaintiff should be allowed to prosecute its case for the recovery of a money verdict, and the judgment is reversed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

ROBERTS v. KUERT.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)
RULES OF COURT—CONSTRUCTION—REVIEW—VACATING JUDGMENT.

1. Generally speaking, the construction placed upon its own rules by a court of original jurisdiction is conclusive; and only in cases where it is clear that the construction given is wrong, and that injustice has been done, will the discretion of the judge of such a court construing its rules be interfered with by a reviewing court. 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 81, and cases cited.

2. It appears that a meritorious defense was filed to the action brought by the plaintiff. The case, by agreement, went to the "absence docket." Under the construction given by the judge to the rule of court by virtue of which it was sought to take the case from the "absence docket" and place it upon the trial calendar, there was not a proper compliance by the plaintiff with that rule. A verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff having been taken in the absence, and without the knowledge of the defendant, this court cannot say that the court abused its discretion in vacating the judgment and reinstating the case upon a timely motion made for that purpose. Lambert v. Smith, 57 Ga. 25

WILLIS v. FELTON, Judge.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

MANDAMUS TO JUDGE.

1. The certificate of a trial judge to a bill of exceptions, complaining of a judgment which affirmatively appears to have been entered in exact compliance with a judgment of this court, will not be compelled by mandamus.

Cobb, J., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Application by John Willis for writ of mandamus to W. H. Felton, judge. Denied.

R. Douglas Feagin and Hall & Wimberly, for plaintiff in error. Bacon, Miller & Brunson and W. C. Nottingham, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. Harrell brought an action in Bibb superior court against Willis, to dispossess him as a tenant holding over. The jury found that the plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the premises sued for, and also returned a verdict in his favor for $264, double rent. The case was brought to this court, where the judgment of the court below was affirmed on condition that the plaintiff, within 10 days after the filing of the remittitur in the office of the clerk of the superior court, would "write off from the verdict all rent prior to the date of the demand for possession, to wit, October 9, 1902." See Willis v. Harrell, 118 Ga. —, 45 S. E. 794. It was also held, in effect, that the plaintiff was entitled under the evidence to a verdict for double rent for the time elapsed since the date of demand for possession to the date of the verdict. When the remittitur reached the court below, counsel for the plaintiff filed the following paper: "In compliance with the terms of the remittitur from the Supreme Court in this case, and within ten days after said remittitur is filed in this court, the plaintiff, J. W. Harrell, does hereby, through his counsel of record, write off from the verdict all rent prior to October 9, 1902, and makes no further claim for such rent accruing prior to October 9, 1902, said rent written off amounting to $227.34, and leaving the amount due said Harrell on said verdict the sum of $36.66." Thereupon, over the objection of counsel for Willis, his honor Judge Felton passed an order making the judgment of the Supreme Court the judgment of the superior court, and further reciting that, "it being shown to the court that said J. W. Harrell has complied with the requirements of the judgment of the Supreme Court, and written off and released from the verdict all rent prior to October 9, 1902, it is hereby ordered that the judgment of this court on said verdict do now proceed." Counsel for Willis then tendered to the judge a bill of exceptions to this court, complaining of this judgment on the ground that, the verdict of the jury for double rent being, all of it, necessarily for rent accruing prior to the date of demand (which was also the date on which the proceeding to dispossess was begun), under the terms of the remittitur from the Supreme Court, in order for the judgment to be affirmed, it was necessary for the plaintiff to write off the entire amount of the verdict. The bill of exceptions also recited that the amount of $36.66, not written off by the plaintiff, "represented double rent from the date of the commencement of the proceedings to the date of the verdict." The judge refused to certify this bill of exceptions, and Willis petitioned this court for the writ of mandamus to require him to do so.

In order to reach a proper determination of this case, it is necessary to construe, to a certain extent, the ruling of this court in the case of Willis v. Harrell, to which we have already referred. It is true that in that case the court instructed the jury that, if they found that the defendant was a tenant holding over, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover double rent for four years next preceding the institution of the proceedings to dispossess, and that this charge was here held to be erroneous. It is also true that the amount found by the jury, $264, is the amount of double rent proven for four years. In the light of its holding, however, to the effect that the plaintiff was entitled to a finding for double rent from the date of demand, or filing of the suit, to the date of the verdict, it can hardly be seriously contended that this court intended to treat the finding of $264 as extending to the date of the institution of the proceedings, and no further. We will not look to the charge of the court to determine the meaning of a verdict. English v. State, 105 Ga. 516, 31 S. E. 448. The finding of $264 was regarded as a sum in the abstract, without reference to dates, and it was the intention of this court to affirm the judgment of the court below, on condition that the plaintiff would write off from his verdict so much as would leave an amount representing double rent from the date of demand to the date of the verdict. It appears from the applicant's own showing that there was a literal compliance with this condition. The judge of the superior court, then, had no alternative but to enter the judgment which it is now sought to bring to this court for review. It is universally held that there is no appeal from the judgment of a trial court rendered in accordance with the mandate of a higher court. 13 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 868, and authorities cited; and see, especially, Jenkins v. Guarantee Trust Co., 55 N. J. Eq. 798, 38 Atl. 695; Vansickle v. Haines, 8 Nev. 164; Wilkins v. Earle, 46 N. Y. 358; Humphrey v. Baker, 103 U. S. 796, 26 L. Ed. 456. In the New York case cited it was held that "a judgment entered upon, and in conformity with, a remittitur from this court, is not an actual determination of the court below." And where it affirmatively appears, from the application for mandamus and the judge's response thereto, that the judgment complained of is in the bill of exceptions, which it is sought to compel him to certify, it would indeed be a vain thing for this court to require the judge below to grant a writ of error, which is expressly foredoomed to dismissal. This case is, of course, clearly distinguishable from those where this court has held that it will, without inquiring into the merits of the case, issue a mandamus absolute to require a trial judge to certify the truth of a bill of exceptions complaining of the overruling of a motion for a new trial, or of any ruling which necessarily controlled the verdict of the jury. It belongs rather to that class of cases where the merits of the question sought to be reviewed have already been determined, and a further consideration of them would be futile. To the first class of cases mentioned belongs Taylor v. Reese, 108 Ga. 379, 33 S. E. 917; to the latter, Malone v. Hopkins, 49 Ga. 221, Hanye v. Candler, 99 Ga. 214, 25 S. E. 606, Cribb v. Parker, 119 Ga. —, 46 S. E. 110, and other cases there cited.

Mandamus absolute denied. All the Justices concur, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness, and COBB, J., dissenting.

COBB, J. (dissenting). In my opinion this case is absolutely controlled by the ruling made in Taylor v. Reese, 108 Ga. 379, 33 S. E. 917, a decision by six justices, which has never been overruled, criticised, or doubted. While the judgment which is sought to be excepted to is exactly in accordance with what was said, and what was intended to be said, in the case of Willis v. Harrell, and the bill of exceptions which the judge has refused to certify is wholly without merit, still, in accordance with the ruling in the case first above referred to, the question should be allowed to come to this court in its orderly and regular way, and should not be determined on this application for mandamus. When the conclusion was reached that the answer of the judge in effect admitted that the bill of exceptions which he refused to sign was true in fact, no other course was, under the law, open to this court, than to make the mandamus absolute, requiring the bill of exceptions to be certified. The only cases in which it is within the authority of this court to inquire into the merits of the questions raised by the bill of exceptions on the application for mandamus, where the judge has refused to sign the same, are those relating to the action of the judge on extraordinary motions for new trial in criminal cases, such as Cribb v. Parker, Judge, 119 Ga. —, 46 S. E. 110, and cases which that followed. Without reference to whether it was upon sound reasoning, cases of this character have been made a class peculiar to themselves, and taken out of the general rule requiring all cases to be brought to this court in a regular and orderly way. I do not think the present case can be brought within any reason which might be suggested for this class of cases, nor do I think that the court should at this time take another class of cases out of the old and established rule. The inevitable tendency of decisions like the present is to transfer all cases to the mandamus docket for disposition.

RUSSELL v. CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO.

RAILROADS—INJURY AT CROSSING—EVIDENCE—PLEADING.

1. Though a standing railway train be an unauthorized obstruction of a public crossing, a person attempting to pass between the cars by climbing over the bumpers, if injured thereby in consequence of a sudden movement of the train, cannot recover, unless the engineer, conductor, or some other person having control of the train's movements, knew of his attempt to cross, or had notice of his exposure to danger. If the only employé who knew of the perilous position in which the person attempting to cross had placed himself was a watchman at the crossing, no recovery can be had, unless it appears that the watchman was so situated, after he knew of the dangerous position in which the person was placed, that he could signal the engineer or other employés in control of the train's movements, and thus prevent injury to the party attempting to cross, and that he failed to give such signal, or that he gave the signal and it was disregarded.

2. A count in a petition against a railway company claiming damages for negligence which alleges in general terms that the defendant was guilty of negligence should be stricken on special demurrer setting up that the petition fails to set forth the particulars in which the defendant was negligent, unless the defect in the petition is cured by amendment.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by Israel Russell against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Arnold & Arnold, for plaintiff in error.
Dorsey, Brewster & Howell, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. The petition contains two counts. The first count alleged that the defendant, a railway company, caused a pub-the crossing to be obstructed by a very long freight train, which extended several hundred feet on each side of the crossing into the darkness; that the crossing was obstructed for 15 or 20 minutes; that it was necessary for the plaintiff, in the discharge of a business duty, to go along the street which was obstructed, and that, after waiting about 15 minutes, he "undertook to go between the train, in plain view of everybody, and the defendant's watchman employed upon the crossing saw the plaintiff undertake to go between the cars, and saw his dangerous situation." It is also alleged that the "crew of the defendant, to wit, the conductor, the engineer, the fireman, and the trainmen, in the exercise of ordinary care, must have seen plaintiff undertake to go between the cars." And it is alleged that, while the plaintiff was in this perilous position between the cars, the train moved, without notice, and as a result thereof he was seriously injured. The court concludes with allegations as to the extent of the injury and the damages sustained.

The second count consisted of two paragraphs. The first was as follows:

"On or about the 27th day of February, 1903, at Peters street public crossing, and in the city of Atlanta, plaintiff was run over and injured by the running of the cars, locomotives, and other machinery of the defendant company at said crossing, and defendant failed to exercise all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence."

The second paragraph set forth the character of the injury, and the damages alleged to have been sustained.

The defendant filed a general demurrer to the entire petition, and a special demurrer to the first paragraph of the second count, on the ground that it did not set forth how the plaintiff was injured by the running of the cars, locomotives, and other machinery of the company at the crossing, and did not show wherein the defendant failed to exercise all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence. The court sustained the special demurrer to the first paragraph of the second count, and dismissed the remainder of the petition on general demurrer. Plaintiff excepted.

1. So far as the first count is concerned, we think the case is controlled, in principle, by the decision in Andrews v. Railroad Company, 86 Ga. 192, 12 S. E. 213, 10 L. R. A. 58. The allegation that the engineer, conductor, and other employes in charge of the train must have known of plaintiff's perilous position amounts to nothing. The right of the plaintiff to recover depends upon whether any employé who could have controlled the movements of the train knew of his dangerous position, and failed to take proper steps for his protection; and an averment short of actual knowledge on the part of such employes would not be sufficient to take the case out of the ruling in the Andrews Case.

It is said, though, that there is an averment that the watchman at the crossing knew of the plaintiff's dangerous position; but it appears from the petition that the transaction was at night; that the train extended a long way on each side of the crossing "into the darkness"; and it is not alleged that the watchman was in a position where he could have given a signal to any employé in charge of the movements of the train which would have had the effect to control its movements. It is not even charged that the watchman could have, by signal, controlled the conduct of other employes who had charge of the train. In the case of Faulk v. Railroad Company, 91 Ga. 360, 18 S. E. 304, the person injured was a boy 12 or 13 years of age, and was invited by the watchman at the crossing to go over the bumpers, and was injured while so doing. The age of the person injured, and the fact that he was expressly invited to cross by the employé who was stationed there to tell the public when to cross and when not to cross, distinguishes the case from the one now under consideration.

2. In an action which is based upon the negligence of the defendant, it is not sufficient to allege the negligence in general terms, when the defendant objects to such allegations by a special demurrer, calling for the particulars of the negligence complained of. See Blackstone v. Railway Company, 105 Ga. 381, 31 S. E. 90; Miller v. Transportation Company, 115 Ga. 1009, 42 S. E. 385. While, under this rule, negligence must be alleged in such a specific way as to put the defendant on notice of what it is to answer, still the rule is not to be carried to the extent of requiring minute particularity in the averments of negligence. See Sims v. Railroad Company, 111 Ga. 820, 35 S. E. 696.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

(119 Ga. 648)

HIGH v. PADROSA (two cases).

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

ATTACHMENT—SITUS OF DEBT—DECLARATION—AMENDMENT—PLEA TO JURISDICTION.

1. As a general rule, the situs of a debt is at the place where the creditor is domiciled.

2. A declaration in attachment, based upon an attachment sued out against the defendant on the ground that he is a nonresident of the state, which alleges that the attachment has been executed by serving summons of garnishment upon a resident of this state, is amendable by averring that the debt due from the resident garnishee to the nonresident defendant is payable within the limits of this state.

3. A plea to the merits in an attachment case of the character above referred to, which is filed with a distinct protestation that no jurisdiction has been acquired, by the levy of the attachment, either of the person or property of the defendant, and which distinctly reserves the right to object to the jurisdiction of the court, does not have the effect to admit jurisdiction, and will not authorize a personal judgment against the defendant.

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Actions by Benito Padrosa against John High. Judgments for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed in one case, and reversed in the other.

Ernest Dart, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Kay, for defendant in error.

COBB, J. 1. In the case of Central of Georgia Railway Company v. Brinson, 109 Ga. 354, 34 S. E. 597, 77 Am. St. Rep. 382, which was followed in Johnson v. Southern Railway Company, 110 Ga. 303, 34 S. E. 1002, each being a decision by six justices, the rule that the residence of the creditor fixes the situs of the debt was recognized and applied in garnishment cases. This rule was also applied in the cases of Henry v. Lennox-Haldeman Company, 116 Ga. 9, 42 S. E. 383, and Beasley v. Lennox-Haldeman Company, 116 Ga. 13, 42 S. E. 385, each being a decision by only five justices. Application is now made to review the two decisions first mentioned. Respectable authority may be found on either side of the questions involved in this case; but, after diligent investigation and mature reflection, the court, as constituted when the decisions referred to were rendered, adopted and followed the line indicated in the opinions in those cases. Some of the members of the bench as at present constituted, the writer being among the number, are entirely satisfied with the conclusions then reached, and the decisions will have to stand until the time arrives when there are six justices who feel disposed to take the contrary view. The case of Molyneux v. Seymour, 30 Ga. 440, 76 Am. Dec. 662, is, upon its facts, not in conflict with anything ruled in the cases above referred to. While some of the expressions of Judge Lumpkin may apparently conflict with the principle laid down in those cases, that case at last, as will be seen by the concluding paragraphs of the opinion, turned upon the validity and regularity of a South Carolina judgment which had adjudicated the question that there was, at the time that judgment was rendered, an attachable debt within the limits of South Carolina, and the court simply held that full faith and credit would be given to this judgment.

2. The attachment was issued by an officer authorized to issue attachments, and was regular upon its face. The attachment was not void, and property of the defendant could be lawfully seized thereunder. Whether any of his property had been actually seized was a question that might arise during the progress of the case. The declaration in attachment, as originally filed, showed that that which had been seized under the attachment was a debt due by a resident to a nonresident. In this condition the declaration was demurrable. Beasley v. Lennox-Haldeman Co., 116 Ga. 13, 42 S. E. 385 (2). Presumptively the debt referred to was payable in Florida. This presumption was rebuttable, and there was no reason why the plaintiff could not amend the declaration by alleging facts which would have the effect of rebutting the presumption arising from the silence in the original declaration as to the situs of the debt. See, in this connection, Henry v. Lennox-Haldeman Co., 116 Ga. 12, 42 S. E. 383.

3. The defendant entered a special appearance for the purpose of raising objections to the proceedings. He filed a defense to the merits, but with a distinct protestation that he did not thereby admit jurisdiction of the court, either as to his person or as to the property in controversy, and distinctly reserved all right to object to the jurisdiction of the court at every stage of the case. A plea to the merits filed under such a reservation did not have the effect to admit the jurisdiction of the court, either as to the person of the defendant or as to the property in controversy. Kahn v. B. & L. Ass'n, 115 Ga. 450, 41 S. E. 648 (3), and case cited. See, also, Associated Press v. United Press, 104 Ga. 51, 29 S. E. 860.

The court seems to have submitted to the jury at one time the question of jurisdiction and the questions raised by the plea to the merits. So far as the record discloses, there was no objection to this procedure. It would have been more regular to have submitted the question of jurisdiction separately and distinctly from the questions raised by the plea to the merits. But if the jury had been instructed that, if they came to the conclusion from the evidence that the debt was not payable in Georgia, they should return a verdict for the defendant on the question of jurisdiction and proceed no further with the case, no harm would have resulted from the irregular submission of the two issues at one time. It seems, though, that the judge instructed the jury in effect that, if they found in favor of the defendant on the question of jurisdiction, this would be in effect a finding that the fund in controversy was not within the jurisdiction of the court, and the plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment condemning it to the payment of his debt, but they could then proceed to find against the defendant the amount of the debt due, as a basis for a judgment in personam against him. Under the view we have taken of the case, we think these instructions were erroneous, so far as they authorized the finding of a verdict which should be the basis of a judgment in personam. The plea to the merits, having been filed under the circumstances above indicated, did not alone authorize the rendition of a judgment in personam, and nothing having been done either by the defendant or the plaintiff which would, under the law, authorize such a judgment, the judgment must be reversed.

Judgment in one case reversed; in the other affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

MERRY v. JONES et al.(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)
MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—BANKRUPTCY—INSOLVENCY PROCEEDINGS.

1. Where the main purpose of the suit is to foreclose a mortgage, and there is also an incidental prayer for relief appropriate to insolvency proceedings, a receiver's possession thereunder will not be affected by a subsequent adjudication in bankruptcy.

2. But where the main purpose of the petition is to obtain relief appropriate only in insolvency proceedings, the fact that a mortgage may be foreclosed as an incident therein will not save the case from the nullifying effect of bankruptcy on pending state insolvency proceedings.

3. In the present case the mortgage does not appear in the record, the pleadings do not describe the mortgaged property, and there is no prayer for a foreclosure. The prayers, to marshal the assets, to enjoin other creditors from proceeding except in such suit, and to appoint a receiver to take charge of all the property of the defendant, are adjusted to insolvency proceedings, and not to the foreclosure of a mortgage.

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Proceedings by H. H. Merry, trustee in bankruptcy, against A. T. Jones, receiver, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Merry, the trustee in bankruptcy of the Rogers Lumber Company, presented an intervention to the superior court of Mitchell county, averring that on December 5, 1901, the Rogers Lumber Company had been adjudicated a bankrupt in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Georgia; that he was the duly qualified trustee of its estate; that on the — day of —, 1901, A. T. Jones was appointed receiver of the property of the Rogers Company by the superior court of Mitchell county on the petition of the Lowe Company against the Rogers Company; that the receiver then had in hand $1,725, the proceeds of a sale of the Rogers Company's property; and that Merry, the trustee, was legally entitled to the possession and control of said assets, and had been authorized by the District Court to make such application. He prayed to be allowed to intervene in the case of the Lowe Company against the Rogers Lumber Company, and for an order directing the receiver to turn over the money in his hands to the trustee. This petition was served on the receiver, and of the parties to the record at the time of the hearing the receiver alone answered, substantially admitting all of the facts set up in the trustee's petition; but he claimed that he was appointed receiver in an equitable proceeding for the foreclosure of a mortgage before the Rogers Lumber Company had been adjudicated a bankrupt and before the bankruptcy proceedings had been instituted, that he had only taken possession of the property covered by the mortgage, and that the fund in hand only represented the proceeds of the sale thereof. The case was tried mainly on the pleadings in the case of the Lowe Company against the Rogers Lumber Company, from which it appears that on November 25, 1901, the Lowe Company filed in the superior court of Mitchell county a petition, which, after reciting that petitioner, the Lowe Company, was a corporation, and that the Rogers Lumber Company was a partnership, proceeds as follows: "They show that Rogers Company are indebted to them on two mortgages amounting to more than $2,000;" that the Rogers Company is insolvent, owning a sawmill with appurtenances, besides a commissary containing several hundred dollars worth of goods, besides timber owned and leased—all worth between $5,000 and $8,000; that Jones Bros. have a claim against Rogers Company for $1,500, about $1,100 of which is secured by a mortgage on practically all of the property of the Rogers Company; that the Georgia Trading Company has a claim against the Rogers Company for about $2,000, and claims some kind of a lien against said property; that the same is in the hands of the sheriff, who is taking steps to collect the same; that there are many laborers who have claims against the company for labor done at the sawmill, and there are many other claims besides, unknown to petitioner; that Jones Bros. have foreclosed their mortgage, and have sold the live stock, and $664, proceeds thereof, are in the hands of the sheriff awaiting the determination of rules to determine conflicting priorities; that Jones Bros. have obtained an order to sell the sawmill plant on November 25, 1901, and, because of the peculiar character of the property, the want of local buyers, and the fact of its being advertised under a 10-day order as expensive to keep, instead of that usual under levy and sale, the property will be sacrificed, and bought in by Jones Bros. for far less than its value; that there will be many suits for the enforcement of liens and debts against the sawmill; that with this multiplicity of suits and conflicting claims the property will be consumed in costs, and to prevent a multiplicity of suits, and have all of said property sold to the best advantage, the petition prayed for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property; that the sheriff be enjoined from selling the same, and be required to turn over to the receiver the cash in hand as proceeds of the live stock; and that all of the creditors be enjoined from enforcing their claims separately, but be required to be made parties to this petition, and to prove their claims hereunder, and receive such sum as the court may award, and that the court proceed to sell through the receiver all of said property. Process was prayed against Rogers Company, Jones Bros., and the sheriff, who acknowledged service. A receiver was appointed, who was directed to take charge of all of the property of the Rogers Company in any way connected with the sawmill or the shingle mill, the goods in the store, all timber belonging to the company or held under a lease, and the money in the hands of the sheriff; and all persons having possession of any property or money arising from the sale of the property of the company for the last 15 days were required to turn over the same to the receiver. The receiver was also authorized to continue the sawmill business until it could be sold after due advertisement. All other suits against the company or the property mentioned were enjoined, and the parties allowed to intervene in this cause. None of the defendants served answered, except Jones Bros., who asserted the necessity of the sale to preserve property mortgaged to them against loss, and denied any bad faith in connection therewith. The mortgage of Jones & Co. nowhere appears in the record. There are reports by the receiver set out, in one of which he describes the specific property sold, and the amount received for each article, but no reference is made as to what mortgage, if any, covered the same. In his answer to the present proceeding by the trustee he says that the funds in his hands are the proceeds of that portion of the Rogers Company's property connected with the sawmill mentioned in the petition under which he was appointed, and that he was appointed a receiver in a proceeding for the foreclosure of a mortgage before proceedings in bankruptcy had been instituted. He denies that the trustee is entitled to the possession of the fund. In his testimony he states that he took possession of the property mentioned in the order appointing him receiver, and sold the same. The receiver claimed that the property mentioned in the mortgage of the Lowe Company was not worth the amount of the mortgage of Lowe Company, and did not sell for near enough to pay off the claim; that the property mentioned in the mortgage of Jones Bros. was not worth and did not sell for enough to pay the debt; that the entire amount realized from the sale of the property was about $2,300; that he took possession of no property as receiver except that embraced in the mortgages and other liens foreclosed in the state court; and that the total property sold did not bring enough to pay the liens thereon. In the record there is no copy of a note or other evidence of any debt and no copy of any mortgage. The court refused the prayer of the trustee generally, and he excepted.

Akerman & Akerman, for plaintiff in error.
J. W. Walters, S. S. Bennet, J. H. Merrill, and C. L. Pettigrew, for defendants in error.

LAMAR, J. If, under foreclosure proceedings, the state court appoints a receiver to take charge of the mortgaged property, and the defendant is subsequently adjudicated a bankrupt, the trustee is not entitled to the possession of the mortgaged property, but can only claim the surplus remaining after the payment of the secured debt. And where the suit was in fact one to foreclose a mortgage, this rule would not be changed, if, as an incident to the main purpose, the mortgagee went further, and also prayed for relief usually incident to state insolvency proceedings. See Metcalf v. Barker, 187 U. S. 177, 23 Sup. Ct. 67, 47 L. Ed. 122; Carling v. Seymour Lumber Co., 113 Fed. 483, 51 C. C. A. 1, and cit. But the converse is not true. If the main purpose of the suit in the state court is to inaugurate insolvency proceedings, and a receiver thereunder takes possession of all the property of the defendants, his possession will not be saved from the nullifying effect of the subsequent bankruptcy because it also incidentally appears that the petitioner had a mortgage which was a lien on some of the property, and that it might be enforced in the progress of the administration of the insolvent's estate. The suit in the state court here was not a foreclosure proceeding. It is alleged that petitioner had a mortgage, but it is also alleged that he had a debt; and, without regard to the sufficiency of the pleading, the relief prayed for may have been asked as well because the complainant was a creditor as because it had a lien. The property on which petitioner had a lien was not described in the pleadings, the mortgage was not attached as an exhibit, it does not appear in the record, and there is no prayer for a foreclosure. On the contrary, the petition prayed for relief, which was appropriate only in an insolvency proceeding. It asked that all the assets of the defendant be taken in charge by the court; that a receiver be appointed; that all creditors be enjoined from proceeding under any other suit, and be required to set up their claims and liens in the pending equity cause; and that the court determine the rights of the parties. While it was not a case under the trader's act, it was yet seeking to do in the state court exactly what Congress declared shall be done exclusively in the court of bankruptcy, and was rendered nugatory by the adjudication in bankruptcy within four months thereafter. Jones & Co., one of the defendants in that case, was alleged "to have a mortgage on practically all of the property of the Rogers Company." This mortgage does not appear in the record; what property of the debtor was omitted does not appear; nor is it shown how much the property so mortgaged brought when sold. It is averred that their mortgage debt was only $1,100, and it appears that the receiver now has in hand $1,725, and that the amount realized by him at the sale was $2,300. Even if it be conceded that upon the nullification of Lowe & Co.'s petition the rights of Jones & Co. reattached as they existed prior to the filing of the petition, there was no data to determine how much of the money now in the hands of the receiver covered property not included in their mortgage, nor does it appear what was the amount of their debt, nor how much in the hands of the receiver was in excess of that to which they may have been entitled. The trustee in bankruptcy is prima facie entitled to the custody of the property belonging to the bankrupt, and those who dispute his rights thereto must overcome his prima facie title by affirmatively showing the existence of the exception.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

MORRISON v. DICKEY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REMARKS OF COURT—CONTRACT—PAROL EVIDENCE—PLEADING.

1. The jury must take the whole charge as the law of the case.

2. The jury cannot be expected to select one part of a charge to the exclusion of another, nor to decide between conflicts therein, nor to determine whether one part cures a previous error, without having their attention specially called thereto and being instructed accordingly.

3. The plaintiff's agent and the defendant were in conflict as to the terms of the contract. In excluding the conversation between the agent and his principal, it was error under Civ. Code 1895, § 4334, requiring the grant of a new trial, for the judge to intimate that the agent was committing a fraud on his principal in representing to her that the contract was different from that already made with the other principal.

4. One clause in a written contract providing for the payment of $750 "as hereafter agreed," parol evidence was admissible to explain the ambiguity, and to show not only the date, but the conditions, if any, on which such payment was to be made.

5. It was not error to refuse to strike a plea setting up that, under the agreement between the parties, the $750 was payable out of the profits of the business sold.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; A. E. Calhoun, Judge.

Action by H. H. Morrison against J. L. Dickey. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

It appears that Mrs. Morrison owned a business in Atlanta, known as the "EE-M Company," and on May 29, 1900, through her husband, sold to Dickey a half interest therein, in consideration of $500 cash, and "$750 to be paid as provided hereafter"; Dickey agreeing to pay into the business from time to time, as needed, other sums, alleged in the declaration to be $2,500. Mrs. Morrison having, on December 9, 1902, sued Dickey for the $750, it appears that on March 10, 1903, she sold him the balance of her interest in the business for $2,500. The defendant, among other defenses to the pending suit for $750, filed a plea of settlement, predicated on an instrument dated March 10, 1903, as follows: "Having this day sold my half interest in what is known as the EE-M Co., I agree to have settled the suit I brought versus the said J. L. Dickey. It being a suit against said Dickey for a part of the purchase-money of my first sale of a one-half interest to said J. L. Dickey. [Signed] Hattie H. Morrison." Dickey also contended that the $750 to be paid "as hereafter provided" was only to be paid out of the profits of the business; and the parties were in conflict as to whether that was the agreement. At the trial, on May 14, 1903, the plaintiff moved to strike the same, and filed a bill of exceptions pendente lite to the judgment refusing to sustain the motion, and assigns error thereon. The jury found for the defendant on the plea of settlement, which makes it unnecessary to refer to any of the exceptions, except those relating to that branch of the case. The plaintiff insisted that, while the instrument reciting the settlement was dated March 10, 1903, the same day as the instrument making the conveyance of the remaining half interest in the firm, as a matter of fact "the real date was about ten or fifteen days after the other paper was signed." Morrison testified that he agreed, for his wife, to dismiss the suit if Dickey would give his note; that Dickey said that the suit was in his way, and prevented him from getting money, and that if he could get rid of the suit he could get his affairs arranged all right; that after the contract of sale of March 10, 1903, had been signed, Dickey came back and refused to pay Morrison until "I had delivered this agreement to him to settle the case." Mrs. Morrison testified that she signed both papers bearing the same date, but the shorter paper (settlement) was not signed at the same time that the other one was. "It was several days afterwards, if I am not mistaken." Mr. Morrison was her agent, and she testified that she signed it because he asked her. The court refused to allow Mrs. Morrison to testify that her husband told her that Mr. Dickey was to give his note for $750 and interest, as consideration for the settlement. Dickey testified that both the papers dated March 10th were probably not delivered until some days afterwards, but he submitted both papers at the same time to his attorney. "As to which of the two papers was brought to me first, I think the contract for the sale was brought first. It was some days after we reached the agreement before any money was paid. The trade was based entirely upon wiping out everything the Morrisons had in connection with the EE-M Company. I never would have closed that trade if these papers had not come to me bearing the same date, and both being part of the same trade. After leaving my attorney's office I closed the trade, and paid the purchase money for the remaining interest of Mrs. Morrison. Morrison delivered the release from the suit, and promised to see his attorney and arrange about his fee, and would have the suit dismissed." On cross-examination he testified that the verbal agreement was made on March 10th, and the papers were not delivered until two or three days. They both were not brought together, but at separate times. "I supposed that the suit was settled, until I received notice from my attorney that the case was set for trial."

Error is assigned because the court, in excluding the testimony of Mrs. Morrison that her husband stated that Mr. Dickey was to give his note for $750, stated, in the presence of the jury: "It looks to me as if he was general agent; and he has committed a fraud on her; she has to bear it;" the remark being calculated to prejudice the plaintiff in the minds of the jury, and being the intimation of an opinion that Morrison had committed a fraud on the plaintiff in making such statement to her. And because the court, in stating the contentions of the defendant to be that Mrs. Morrison claims that Dickey was to give a note for $750, which he had failed to do, whereby the consideration had failed, failed also to instruct the jury that the settlement had been made after the concluded contract of sale, and that the agreement to dismiss the suit was nudum pactum. And because the court charged the jury (a) that "that settlement is a complete settlement of the case." (b) "If you believe that Dickey never agreed to give any $750 note for the settlement, but that it was made for other reasons, then you will find for Dickey against Mrs. Morrison." (c) "It is a complete contract and settlement, and will be valid unless it is shown that it was agreed that Mrs. Morrison should be given a note for $750."

W. R. Hammond, for plaintiff in error.
Felder & Rountree, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. The jury having found for Dickey on the plea of settlement, it is not necessary to consider assignments relating to other branches of the case. From an inspection of the general charge, which was included in the record, it does appear that the trial judge, in one portion thereof, did submit to the jury the question as to whether there was any consideration other than the $750 note; and also instructed them that, if there was no consideration for the settlement, it was nudum pactum. But these general observations were inconsistent with the pointed and explicit statement that "I charge you that that settlement was a complete settlement of the case." This excluded the theory of the plaintiff that the settlement had been signed after the execution and completion of the contract of sale of March 10, 1903, and was therefore made, not as a part of the second sale, but without consideration. The defendant insists, however, that this error was cured by other portions of the charge. As to this answer, see S. v. F. & W. Ry. v. Hatcher, 118 Ga. 273, 45 S. E. 239, where it was said: "The attention of the jury was not specially called to the fact that it was intended to correct what had been previously said. The jury must take the whole charge as the law, and it is not for them to select one part to the exclusion of another, nor to decide whether one part cures or qualifies another, without being instructed so to do by the judge."

Morrison testified that the consideration for the settlement of the pending suit was that Dickey was to give a note for $750 and interest. This Dickey denied. In excluding the testimony of Mrs. Morrison that when she signed the settlement her husband told her that Dickey was to give the note for $750, the court said: "It looks to me as if he was general agent; and he has committed a fraud on her; she has to bear it." There may be a clerical error, but as this statement appears in the record it was the expression of an opinion that Morrison had committed a fraud. If, as seems probable, the court stated, "If he was general agent, and if he has committed a fraud on her, she has to bear it," it was an intimation of the same opinion. The conversation between the husband and wife, or principal and agent, may not have been admissible against Dickey; but it was prejudicial to the plaintiff's case to suggest that the agent, in that conversation, was stating to the wife something different from what he had agreed with the defendant.

It is unnecessary to consider any other assignment, except that based on the refusal to strike the plea to the effect that the $750 was only to be paid out of profits. The undertaking to pay "$750 as hereafter agreed" was on its face incomplete, and parol evidence was admissible to explain the ambiguity (Civ. Code 1895, § 5202), and show not only the date when such payment was to be made, but also the source from which and the condition on which it was to be paid. The time of payment might be fixed by a date, or it might also be referred to the period when profits had been earned.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

LEVADAS v. BEACH.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 8, 1904.)
JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—ENTRY OF JUDGMENT—EXECUTION—AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY.

1. While the plaintiff, or his attorney, under Civ. Code, § 5339, may enter judgment on a verdict, the justice of the peace may likewise enter judgment thereon upon his docket, and upon such a judgment so entered an execution may lawfully issue.

2. Where an execution has been levied on the property of the principal debtor, he cannot resist the same by an affidavit of illegality, setting up that the judgment is void as against the securities named as codefendants therein.

3. Where from the affidavit of illegality it appears that the defendant in fi. fa. admits owing a part of the execution debt, he must pay the amount so admitted to be due, or the officer shall proceed to raise such amount, and accept the affidavit for the balance. Compare Civ. Code, § 5661.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by J. L. Beach against S. D. Levadas. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

See 43 S. E. 418.

The judge refused a certiorari, and the record therefore contains only what was recited in the petition therefor. It alleged that on July 19, 1902, the jury returned a verdict in the justice's court in favor of Beach against Levadas; that the justice thereupon entered up judgment on the summons in said case, to which he affixed his official signature. There is no recital that the judgment was entered on the docket, except that it is recited, in an order offered in evidence, that on March 17, 1903 (not in term), the judgment was placed on the docket of the court, but that, as it had not been signed by the attorney, "the said attorney is now allowed to amend the judgment nunc pro tunc, by authorizing the said attorney for the plaintiff to sign the judgment upon the papers in the cause and on the docket of the court." Thereafter execution issued, and was levied on property of the plaintiff, who filed an affidavit of illegality. On the trial thereof the plaintiff in fi. fa. offered in evidence the judgment nunc pro tunc, to which Levadas, the defendant in fi. fa., objected on the ground that the judgment on which the execution issued was not signed within four days after the adjournment of the court, as required by Civ. Code, § 5339; that on the day it was entered the justice's court was not in session, and the judge had no authority to make such order; and that Levadas or his counsel were not present or notified. The objection was overruled, and the order admitted, and the affidavit of illegality was dismissed, and the execution ordered to proceed.

Max Isaac, for plaintiff in error. Ernest Dart, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. Every citizen has the constitutional right to represent himself in court. Civ. Code, § 5701. This right, however, is rarely exercised in those cases where the pleadings and practice, of necessity, involve technical skill. But the law evidently contemplates that many suits will be prosecuted in a justice's court without either party being represented by counsel, and the practice therein is adjusted to this theory. Parties might be entirely ignorant as to the form in which a judgment should be entered, and therefore the law not only requires a justice to enter the judgment in those cases tried without a jury, but permits him also to enter the judgment where there has been a verdict. His power to do so is not destroyed by the fact that in a particular case the plaintiff is represented by an attorney, who, as an officer of court, might perform the same duty. Scott v. Bedell, 108 Ga. 209, 33 S. E. 903. Besides, the fact that the judgment must be entered on the docket clearly indicates that the entry thereon can lawfully be made by one whose duty it is to keep the docket and make entries therein. The judgment here having been properly entered by the justice, there was no necessity for an order nunc pro tunc, or for further action by the attorney. Gunn v. Tackett, 67 Ga. 725.

The defendant has had his day in court, and cannot go behind the judgment rendered; nor can he, as principal, seek, upon an affidavit of illegality, to attack the judgment because, as he contends, it was erroneously entered up against certain securities. If this be true, the execution may never be enforced against them. When such an attempt is made, they can be heard. The defendant cannot make their fight, or take advantage of defects as to third persons, in order to arrest the fi. fa., when it is proceeding legally against him alone.

The defendant further insists that, from the face of the record, and as a matter of pure mathematics, it appears that the judgment was entered for too much interest. We have not before us the record, and are therefore unable to say whether this calculation be correct. But the other grounds of the illegality having been disposed of, it appears that he is justly indebted to the plaintiff for the principal and legal interest, whatever that may be. Even if he can thus attack a judgment from which he had the right to appeal or certiorari, yet he must pay what he owes before he can be heard by affidavit of illegality as to that which he does not owe. White v. Mandeville, 72 Ga. 705; Stanford v. Connery, 84 Ga. 782, 11 S. E. 507 (8a); Civ. Code, § 5661. The judge properly refused the certiorari.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

ARMOUR PACKING CO. v. WYNN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

JUDGMENT—LIEN—GARNISHMENT—BANKRUPTCY—ANSWER.

1. A judgment creates no lien on choses in action belonging to the defendant.
2. The lien obtained by the service of a summons of garnishment issued on an existing judgment is created by the garnishment, and not by the judgment.
3. Where a judgment was rendered in 1897, and a garnishment thereon was served in March, 1902, and on proceedings begun thereafter the judgment debtor was adjudged a bankrupt on April 3, 1902, the lien on the fund in the hands of the garnishee was "obtained through a legal proceeding instituted within four months prior to the filing of the petition for bankruptcy," and was rendered void by section 67f of the bankrupt act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 568 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3450]).

4. A garnishee having notice that his creditor has been adjudicated a bankrupt, and that part of the fund earned after the bankruptcy was exempt as wages, was authorized in his answer to set up the invalidity of the garnishment proceeding because of the bankruptcy, and also to show that part of the fund was exempt as wages.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Garnishment proceedings between C. G. Wynn and the Armour Packing Company. Judgment for the garnishee, and Wynn brings certiorari. From a judgment in his favor, the Armour Packing Company brings error. Reversed.

Wynn obtained a judgment against Haralson in 1897. On March 18, 1902, a summons of garnishment was served on the Armour Packing Company. Its answer was filed April 28, 1902. Wynn traversed the answer, and the issue came on to be tried on June 30, 1902. The plaintiff offered its judgment showing that the principal, interest, and cost thereof amounted to $——. He also offered evidence to show that the Armour Packing Company, between March 22 and April 26, 1902, had paid Haralson $108, being his weekly salary for that period. It later appeared that $36 of this sum accrued before the bankruptcy proceeding, and $72 between the filing of the petition therefor and the time of making answer. The garnishee, over the objection of plaintiff, offered the record to show that Haralson was adjudged a voluntary bankrupt on April 3, 1902, and, on May 24, 1902, had been discharged in bankruptcy from all debts provable April 5, 1902. The justice of the peace found in favor of the garnishee. Wynn sued out a certiorari. The judge of the superior court sustained the exceptions, and directed that judgment be entered in favor of Wynn against the Armour Packing Company for $72. The Armour Packing Company excepts.

LAMAR, J. The record merely abstracts the substance of the documents proving the adjudication and discharge in bankruptcy, and consequently the time of the filing of Haralson's petition to be adjudged a bankrupt does not appear. He was adjudicated a bankrupt on April 3, 1902, and discharged from all debts provable on April 5, 1902. In view of the practice in cases of voluntary bankruptcy, there would be a presumption that the petition had been filed immediately before the adjudication. Compare Collier on Bankruptcy (4th Ed.) 222, 221, and Forms in Bankruptcy No. 15. However that may be, Wynn's petition for certiorari clearly indicates that the voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed after the service of the summons of garnishment. Liens which were created four months before the filing of the petition are not divested by the bankruptcy, and can be enforced after the adjudication. Metcalf v. Barker, 187 U. S. 165, 23 Sup. Ct. 67, 47 L. Ed. 122. But liens obtained through legal proceedings within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy against one who is subsequently adjudged a bankrupt are declared to be null and void by section 67f of the bankrupt act. The judgment here was not a lien on the chose in action. Civ. Code 1895, § 5353; Fidelity Co. v. Exchange Bank, 100 Ga. 619, 28 S. E. 393. And, without discussing the character of the lien created by a garnishment, or determining whether the lien on a suit at common law differs from the lien of a garnishment issued on a judgment, it is sufficient to say that the lien does not inhere in the judgment itself, but is acquired, created, or obtained by the legal proceedings instituted by virtue of the garnishment, affidavit, and bond. It has been several times held that, where an ordinary action is brought, and a garnishment summons is served, and a judgment is obtained by the plaintiff against the defendant within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, and a like judgment is obtained thereafter against the garnishee, the lien of the garnishment is rendered null, even though it may have provisionally attached by being served more than four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. In re Lesser (D. C.) 108 Fed. 201; In re McCartney, 109 Fed. 621, 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 367. The result is not different under our statute, which permits a garnishment of a judgment already rendered. The judgment creditor has no right in or to the fund, and no lien on the money or the chose in action. Whatever interest he acquired here was obtained by virtue of legal proceedings instituted on March 18, 1902, within the period when, by the terms of the statute, one creditor could not secure or acquire preferences or priorities over less diligent creditors of the common debtor. The garnishee, having notice of the adjudication in bankruptcy, not only had the right to set up his nonliability to the garnishing plaintiff, but, if he had failed to make such defense, and had been subsequently sued by the trustee of Haralson, the judgment awarding the bankrupt's money in the hands of Armour Packing Company to Wynn would have afforded no defense. Smith v. Johnston, 71 Ga. 748 (3); Lamar v. Chisholm, 77 Ga. 306; Rutherford v. Fullerton, 89 Ga. 353, 5 S. E. 471; In re Beals (D. C.) 116 Fed. 530. The garnishee was therefore performing a duty imposed by law when it pleaded the bankruptcy not only as to the $36 in which the trustee might have been interested, but also as to the $72 earned by Haralson after the adjudication. The lien of the judgment on tangible property was not affected by the bankruptcy. But, while Haralson's property may not have been freed from the operation of the judgment, he was no longer personally liable for the debt represented thereby. Besides, the money represented wages. The certiorari should have been dismissed.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

ATLANTIC & B. R. CO. v. DOUGLAS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

CONTINUANCE—SURPRISE—ACTION FOR PERSONAL INJURIES—EVIDENCE—GOOD HEALTH.

1. In applications for continuance on the ground of surprise resulting from an amendment to pleadings, the party claiming surprise must make oath, or his counsel state in his place, "that such surprise is not claimed for the purpose of delay."

2. "Good health" is a relative term, and does not mean absolute freedom from physical infirmity, but only such a condition of body and mind as that one may discharge the ordinary duties of life without serious strain upon the vital powers.

3. It follows from the foregoing that when, in a suit by a female against a railroad company for damages for personal injuries, it is alleged that the plaintiff was, prior to the injuries, "in good health," a recovery may be had notwithstanding it appears from the evidence that at the time of the injuries the plaintiff was laboring under an infirmity of which she was ignorant, and which did not interfere with the discharge by her of the ordinary duties of life, and that the result of the negligence of the railroad company was, not to produce an infirmity, but simply to aggravate the existing infirmity.

4. There was no error in any of the rulings complained of which required the granting of a new trial. The verdict, though large, was authorized by the evidence, and the discretion of the trial judge in refusing a new trial will not be interfered with.

Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Douglas; C. T. Roan, Judge pro hac vice.

Action by Janie Douglas against the Atlantic & Birmingham Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and both parties bring error. Judgment on the main bill of exceptions affirmed. Cross-bill dismissed.

J. L. Sweat and W. W. McDonald, for Atlantic & B. R. Co. L. A. Wilson and Toomer & Reynolds, for Janie Douglas.

COBB, J. Mrs. Douglas, a married woman, sued the railroad company for $10,000 damages, and recovered a verdict for $5,500. The railroad company assigns error upon the refusal of the judge to grant it a new trial.

1. Pending the trial the plaintiff amended her petition. Counsel for the defendant, claiming that the amendment was material, stated that he was surprised by the same, and moved to continue the case. The court refused this motion, and this is one of the errors assigned. Even if the motion for a continuance was sufficient in all other respects, it was lacking in one essential particular. Counsel did not state in his place, or have any one representing the company to make oath, that the surprise was not claimed for the purpose of delay. The Code distinctly provides that, in all applications for continuance upon the ground of surprise resulting from an amendment to the pleadings, the opposite party shall make oath, or his counsel shall state in his place, "that such surprise is not claimed for the purpose of delay." Civ. Code 1895, § 5128. Counsel for the plaintiff in error contends here that, under the facts disclosed by the record, it was necessarily to be inferred that the application was not made for delay only. The Code does not leave this matter to inference; there must be an express statement to the effect that delay is not the purpose of the application; and, in the absence of such express statement, a judgment refusing to continue the case will not be reversed.

2, 3. The judge charged the jury that "a tort to health already impaired is redressed by giving damages both for further impairment and for any obstruction occasioned by the tort to recovery from existing disease. Wrongfully to cause or aggravate or protract illness is an injury to health, but, as I have charged you, this is a matter entirely for you to consider under the evidence and charge of the court." Error is assigned upon this charge, for the reason that there were no allegations in the petition which authorized the charge, or authorized a recovery under the rule embodied in the charge, and because the same was not authorized by the evidence. The latter objection is not well taken, as there was evidence upon which this charge could have been properly based. Whether or not, under the petition, the theory of the case presented by the charge was properly involved in the case, is the question to be determined. To determine this, it is necessary to ascertain what is meant by the phrase "good health," for the petition describes the condition of the plaintiff before the injuries by averring simply that at the time of the injuries she was 41 years of age, weighed 105 pounds, and was "in good health." The plaintiff testified that up to the time of the injuries her health had been very good, and that she had been able to attend to all of her household duties. Medical experts, who had made a careful examination of the person of the plaintiff—especially of the internal organs claimed to have been affected by the jump from the train which it was alleged caused the injuries complained of—testified that plaintiff had been afflicted with an infirmity of long standing, and that the jump from the train was not the sole cause of her loss of health and the suffering she endured, but that these were the result simply of an aggravation of the existing infirmity brought about by her leaping from the train. As to the condition of the plaintiff as disclosed by the examination of the medical experts there was practically no dispute, and this reference to the evidence in dealing with a question arising under the pleadings is made simply for the purpose of showing that it is possible for a person to be in what is generally called "good health," and still be laboring under an infirmity of which he may be unconscious. The testimony of the plaintiff that she was in good health, and in such health that she could perform all of the onerous duties of the household, was undisputed. The testimony of the medical experts that she was at this time laboring under a physical infirmity which would make an accident to her more serious than if she had been free from infirmity was also uncontradicted. Is the statement that a person is in good health to be treated at all times and under all circumstances and conditions as importing that the person is absolutely sound physically? If being in good health means being absolutely free from physical infirmity, then there are few persons who can be properly considered as in good health, and fewer still if subjected to the scrutiny of the medical expert who has license to make an examination extending to matters both external and internal. "Good health" is a relative term, and means such a condition of body and mind that the ordinary affairs of life may be attended to without serious strain upon the vital powers. In life insurance cases it has been held that "good health" does not ordinarily mean freedom from infirmity, and that "good health" or "sound health" means a state of health free from disease or ailment that affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system seriously. Manhattan Life Insurance Co. v. Carder, 82 Fed. 986, 27 C. C. A. 344; Selvets v. Benefit Ass'n (Iowa) 64 N. W. 671. See, also, in this connection, Mass. Ben. Ass'n v. Robinson, 104 Ga. 257 (10), 289, 30 S. E. 918, 42 L. R. A. 261. When the plaintiff alleged, therefore, that she was in good health, her petition is not to be construed as alleging that she was perfectly sound and free from all infirmities; and, consequently, when, under the evidence, it appeared that she was laboring under an infirmity of which she was ignorant, but this infirmity did not interfere with the discharge by her of the ordinary duties of life, and probably would not have ever interfered with her, but for the injuries resulting from the negligence of the railroad company, she was not precluded from recovering simply because it developed that the injuries to her were the result, not of the negligence of the company alone, but of that negligence and a pre-existing infirmity, which up to that time had not been the occasion of any inconvenience to her.

4. The foregoing deals with all of the special grounds of the motion that require discussion at length. Even if there was any error in admitting the evidence complained of, at the time of its admission, there was an amendment to the petition, subsequently allowed, which had the effect of curing the error. The other charges complained of were not erroneous. It remains only to consider whether the evidence authorized a finding for the plaintiff, and, if so, whether the amount of the verdict was excessive. An elaborate discussion of the evidence would not be profitable. It is sufficient to say that there was evidence from which a jury could find that the defendant was negligent, and that the consequences of this negligence to the plaintiff were serious in their nature; that she had not only already suffered greatly in body and mind, but that such suffering would probably continue for years to come, even if not throughout her whole life. In other words, taking the case most favorably for the plaintiff, there was evidence from which the jury could find that the railroad company had not exercised that degree of diligence which the law required it to exercise toward a passenger when about to alight from one of its trains, and that the consequences resulting to the plaintiff from this negligence were serious in the extreme. The verdict is apparently large, but the case is one in which mental anguish and physical pain already suffered, as well as that which is to come in the future, is to be measured; and, under our system, the jurors are those upon whom the law imposes the duty of filling the measure which is to be delivered to the injured party, and this court has neither the inclination nor the desire to usurp the functions of the jury in these matters. This verdict has met with the approval of the trial judge, and we are not prepared to say that the amount is so large as to suggest the existence of bias or prejudice. The discretion of the trial judge in allowing the verdict to stand will not be interfered with.

Judgment on the main bill of exceptions affirmed. Cross-bill dismissed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

KNOX v. COOK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

TROVER—ANSWER—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The answer of the defendant set up a meritorious defense, and it was not error to overrule the demurrer filed thereto.

2. This was an action of trover for the recovery of a dog. The defendant came into possession of the dog by gift from one who had no title to it, but who had received it from the plaintiff, to be kept until called for. His defense to the action was that immediately after coming into possession he called upon the plaintiff to know if he then claimed the dog, telling him that, if he did not, he (the defendant) would keep it as his own; that the plaintiff informed him that if he decided to claim the dog, he would let him know in "two or three days," or in "a few days"; that the plaintiff did not claim title to the dog for nearly two months; and that by his express agreement title had thereby passed out of him to the defendant. This was denied by the plaintiff. Held, that the sole question for determination by the jury was whether by the alleged agreement of the plaintiff and his subsequent conduct he parted with title to the dog; and it was not error for the court to refuse to charge the jury that, "if plaintiff agreed to let defendant know in a day or two, or in a few days, whether or not he expected to claim the dog, he would still have a reasonable time in which to claim the dog and demand its return to him."

3. In view of the ruling made in the preceding headnote, it was not error requiring the grant of a new trial for the court to state in the hearing of the jury "that he did not consider the question of a reasonable time in the case; and that, besides, six weeks would not be a reasonable time in which to claim the dog"; nor for him to charge that, "if plaintiff promised to let defendant know in two or three days whether or not he expected to claim the dog, and failed to do so in two or three days, but did, after a long interval, call for the dog, during which time defendant spent money and time on the dog, then the dog would belong to the defendant, and plaintiff could not recover same."

4. The evidence was conflicting, but that for the defendant was sufficient to warrant the verdict returned in his favor. The trial judge was satisfied with the finding of the jury, and the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial will not be disturbed.

THOMAS & BLAKE et al. v. FORSYTH CHAIR CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)
JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—ACTION ON OPEN ACCOUNT—SUMMONS—PLEADING.

1. There was, in this case, not even a substantial compliance with the requirement of section 4116 of the Civil Code of 1895, to the effect that, when suit is instituted in a justice's court to enforce the collection of an open account, there must be attached to the summons, at the time the same is issued, a copy of the account sued on. On the contrary, the exhibit attached to the summons was in no sense a bill of particulars, nor did it furnish to the defendants reasonable notice as to the character of the plaintiff's demand. Since the passage of the act of September 21, 1881 (Laws 1880-81, p. 66), the provisions of which are now embodied in the section of the Code just cited, "the plaintiff in an action in a justice's court must set forth, with some degree of certainty, his cause of action." Powell v. Alford, 89 S. E. 449, 113 Ga. 979.

2. The court below should, on certiorari, have corrected the error committed by the magistrate in overruling the motion of the defendants to dismiss the plaintiff's action for noncompliance with the statutory requirement above mentioned. (Syllabus by the Court.)

WALKER et al. v. WOOD et al.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—CORRECTION—RETENDER TO JUDGE—DELAY—EXCUSE.

1. Where a bill of exceptions is returned to counsel for correction and alteration, it should be retendered to the judge in its corrected form within a reasonable time; and where, in a given case, counsel delayed retendering the bill of exceptions for 55 days after the same was returned to him, the writ of error will be dismissed, unless it appears that the delay was occasioned solely by providential cause or imperative necessity.

2. While, in the present case, it does appear that the leading counsel in the case was prevented by providential cause from attending to the matter of correcting and retendering the bill of exceptions, no reason is given why his associate, who appeared at every important stage of the case, and who was alone present at the time the final decree was rendered, could not have made the corrections and changes indicated by the judge in less than the time referred to in the preceding note; it appearing that the associate counsel tendered (and presumably prepared) the original bill of exceptions within three days after the final decree.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. H. Lumpkin, Judge.

Action between Moses Wood and others and S. G. Walker and others. From the decree, Walker and others bring error. Dismissed.

W. W. Haden and R. O. Lovett, for plaintiffs in error. J. L. Hopkins & Sons and Frazer & Hynds for defendants in error.

COBB, J. The final decree was rendered on January 28, 1903. The bill of exceptions was tendered on January 31st. The judge was about to leave the state, and did not examine the same until his return on March 1st, when, upon an examination, he found that the bill of exceptions was not true, notified counsel to this effect, and set the matter for a hearing on March 4th, under the provisions of Civ. Code, § 5545. On that day Mr. Haden, who was leading counsel for the plaintiffs in error, and Judge Lovett, who was associated with him, were present, together with counsel for the defendants in error. The judge called the attention of counsel to certain corrections, alterations, and additions that he thought should be made in the bill of exceptions in order to make it speak the truth, and returned it to counsel for the plaintiffs in error on the day last named. The corrected bill of exceptions was not tendered to the judge until April 29th. It appears that between the dates last mentioned Mr. Haden had serious and long-continued illness in his family. It also appears that, while Mr. Haden was leading counsel in the case, Judge Lovett prepared the original bill of exceptions, that he appeared with Mr. Haden at different stages of the case, and that at the time of the entering of the final decree he appeared alone. It further appears that the bill of exceptions as finally tendered and certified was the same as the one originally tendered, with the exception of the changes and corrections, and the addition of several pages of new matter which the judge had required to be embodied in the bill of exceptions. It is now contended that the delay in conforming to the judge's requirements and retendering the bill of exceptions was unreasonable, and that the writ of error should be dismissed, because the judge had no authority to certify the bill of exceptions at the time the same was retendered to him.

The law does not prescribe any time within which a bill of exceptions shall be corrected and retendered when it has been returned by the judge as untrue. See Civ. Code, § 5545. In Joseph v. Railway Company, 92 Ga. 332, 18 S. E. 294, it was held that 94 days was an unreasonable length of time to wait before making the corrections required by the judge. In Allison v. Jowers, 94 Ga. 335, 21 S. E. 570, it was held that 77 days was an unreasonable length of time; and Mr. Justice Lumpkin said: "The section is silent as to the length of time the party to whom it is returned, or his attorney, will be allowed to remove the judge's objections and tender a corrected bill of exceptions; but he certainly should not be allowed for this purpose (in the absence of some good reason for delay) longer than 30 days." In Parkman v. Dent, 109 Ga. 289, 34 S. E. 559, it was held that 120 days was an unreasonable length of time; and Mr. Justice Lewis said: "If, in any event, counsel tendering a bill of exceptions can ever be allowed any greater length of time for correcting the same than that given by statute for presenting it in the first instance, it should appear that the delay was occasioned by imperative necessity." In Sutton v. Valdosta Guano Company, 115 Ga. 794, 42 S. E. 94, it was held that seven months was an unreasonable length of time, it not appearing that the delay was occasioned "by providential cause."

When we take into consideration the fact that the original bill of exceptions was presented 3 days after the final decree was entered, and presumably must have been prepared within that time, we cannot escape the conclusion that the delay of 55 days in making the corrections in the bill of exceptions was so unreasonable as that the judge would by this delay be deprived of all authority to certify the bill of exceptions, unless it is made to appear that this delay was due either to providential cause or imperative necessity. Let it be conceded as established that there was operating, during the entire 55 days, such providential cause as would have prevented Mr. Haden from participating in any way in the matter; no reason appears why the bill of exceptions could not have been corrected by his associate, Judge Lovett. It appears that Judge Lovett prepared the original bill of exceptions, and, while Mr. Haden was the leading counsel in the case, Judge Lovett seems to have appeared at all important stages of the case and participated actively as counsel in the matter, appearing alone at the time the final decree was entered. The record discloses absolutely no reason why the matter of making the corrections and changes and adding the necessary new matter should not have been done by Judge Lovett in the absence of Mr. Haden. The act of 1896 (Acts 1896, p. 45; Van Epps' Code Supp. § 6246) has no application to the present case. That act deals only with the subject of the delay of the judge in certifying the bill of exceptions, and not with the delay of counsel in tendering the same, either in the first instance or after it has been returned for correction.

We do not think that the case presented is one where the delay was occasioned by either providential cause or imperative necessity, and the writ of error must be dismissed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

GRIFFIN v. MUTUAL LIFE INS. CO. OF NEW YORK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)

BANKRUPTCY—INTERVENTION BY TRUSTEE—PROSECUTION OF SUIT—ABATEMENT—RIGHTS OF DEBTOR.

1. A trustee in bankruptcy may, but need not, intervene as plaintiff in a suit brought by the bankrupt before the adjudication in bankruptcy.

2. If no trustee is appointed, or if the bankrupt court does not consider it to the interest of the estate to permit the trustee to prosecute the suit previously brought by the bankrupt, the action does not thereby abate, nor is the bankrupt's debtor discharged from liability in the pending action.

3. The bankrupt may have an interest in the recovery as the source from which he may receive any homestead exemption to which he is entitled, and he also has the right to enlarge the estate for the benefit of his own creditors.

4. If the bankrupt ultimately recovers in such suit, and any question arises as to the right of the trustee to the money when paid, or of the defendant to be protected in paying it to the proper party, both may be secured by appropriate action being taken for that purpose at a later stage of the cause.

5. If the failure to elect or appoint a trustee in bankruptcy in any way injured the rights of creditors, it did not discharge the bankrupt's debtor, nor destroy the bankrupt's reversion in the chose in action after his creditors had lost or exhausted their rights thereto.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by J. K. Griffin against the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

On November 23, 1901, Griffin brought suit against the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York for $244, alleged to be due as commissions on policies of insurance written by him as agent of the company. The defendant appeared and answered, and on June 19, 1903, amended its answer by alleging that on December 5, 1901, the plaintiff had been duly adjudicated a bankrupt, and moved to dismiss the suit on this ground. This issue was submitted to the judge without a jury; it being admitted that Griffin had been adjudicated a bankrupt on the day named, that no creditors were present at the creditors' meeting, that no trustee was appointed by the creditors or the referee, and that during the pendency of the suit the bankrupt was duly discharged. The court sustained the motion, and Griffin excepted.

Lowndes Calhoun, for plaintiff in error.
J. H. Gilbert, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. We infer from the briefs and argument that the defendant insisted in the court below that the title to the chose in action on which suit had been brought in the state court vested by operation of law in the trustee in bankruptcy, and that the suit should be dismissed because the company would not be protected in any payment it might make to the plaintiff, if thereafter sued for the same cause of action by the trustee. Under the bankrupt act of March 2, 1867, c. 176, 14 Stat. 517, it was held to be no defense to an action for a debt that the creditor had become a bankrupt. After title vested in the assignee, and he, with notice, permitted a pending suit to proceed in the name of the bankrupt, he was bound by any judgment that might be rendered. Under the act of 1898 (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3418]), the trustee may intervene, but is not bound to do so; but, on his failure to have himself substituted as plaintiff, the suit does not abate. It may still be prosecuted by the bankrupt. See Thatcher v. Rockwell, 105 U. S. 467, 26 L. Ed. 949; Reed v. Paul, 181 Mass. 129; Herring v. Downing, 148 Mass. 10, 15 N. E. 116; Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 11 (c) 30 Stat. 549 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3426]. The case here is much stronger, for there is no trustee. The creditors and referee alike treated the recovery as so doubtful and contingent as not to warrant the appointment of a trustee to prosecute the pending suit. Nonaction on their part did not release the insurance company from its liability. Although the plaintiff in the action had been adjudicated a bankrupt and discharged, he may have had an interest in the recovery, as being the only source out of which he could obtain any homestead exemption to which he was entitled. But, irrespective of his own pecuniary interest, and assuming that the recovery, if any, would inure to the creditors, it was his right to have them receive as large a dividend as possible. While the two bankrupt acts are not identical, there is nothing in the present statute which makes inapplicable the former rulings of this court, to the effect that the fact that a plaintiff in the state court had been adjudicated a bankrupt did not prevent him from proceeding in the pending suit for the benefit of whom it might ultimately concern, where the representative of the creditors did not intervene. Gilmore v. Bangs, 55 Ga. 403 (3). If in such cases there is a recovery, and any question arises as to the right of the trustee or creditors to the money, or as to the defendant's being protected in paying it to the proper party, this may be secured by subsequent steps being then taken for that purpose. "There need be no danger of paying the debt twice." Southern Express Co. v. Connor, 49 Ga. 415. If the failure to elect a trustee has in any way injured the rights of creditors, it has not discharged the insurance company from the liability under which it may rest, nor has it destroyed the bankrupt's reversion in the chose in action after his creditors have lost or exhausted their rights thereto.

JUDGMENT—VALIDITY—SIGNATURES—SECURITY DEED—JUDGMENT—RECONVEYANCE—EXECUTION SALE—TITLE ACQUIRED.

1. It is immaterial whether the judgment was one requiring the signature of the plaintiff's attorneys or that of the presiding judge, it appearing that as a matter of fact it was signed by both the judge and the plaintiff's attorneys.

2. The intention to sign the judgment by both the presiding judge and the attorneys for the plaintiff was manifest, and it was immaterial whether their signatures appeared on the right or the left side of the page on which the judgment was entered.

3. The security deed to "H. L. M., guardian of F. M. P.," as between the grantor and the grantee, had the effect to vest the legal title to the property described in the grantee for the purposes therein mentioned; and, default having been made in the payment of the note to secure which the deed was given, suit having been instituted, judgment obtained, and execution issued, a deed under the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 2771 et seq., reconveying the property to the debtor for the purpose of levy and sale, and executed by "H. L. M., guardian of F. M. P.," conveyed all the interest of the grantor in the land in question, and put title into the defendant as completely as it had been prior to the execution of the security deed.

4. At a sale of the property under such conditions the purchaser would obtain a good title as against H. L. M. either as an individual or in his capacity as guardian of F. M. P. The effect of the deed in the first instance being to put the title into him individually, and his deed of reconveyance putting the title back through the same channel whence it came, his ward would look to him and his bond in the event of her money being lost.

S., "Exec.," is, nothing else appearing, to be regarded as an execution against him in his individual capacity as owner of the property, inasmuch as the term "Exec.," following his name, is merely descriptive personae. State v. Sallade, 36 S. E. 922, 111 Ga. 700; Dozier v. McWhorter, 45 S. E. 61, 117 Ga. 786; Glisson v. Weil & Co., 45 S. E. 221, 117 Ga. 843, and cases cited. Accordingly, where a levy of the fi. fa. is met by an affidavit of illegality, interposed by such person as owner, he is to be presumed to act in his individual, and not in a representative, capacity, though he be referred to in such affidavit as A. W. S., "Executor" (Glisson v. Weil & Co., supra), and though he may, in subscribing to the affidavit, add that descriptive term to his name (Wade v. Roberts, 53 Ga. 26; Bennett & Co. v. Gray, 9 S. E. 469, 82 Ga. 592; State v. Sallade, 36 S. E. 922, 111 Ga. 701-702), especially when, in the body of the affidavit, he unequivocally alleges that the "property levied on and against which said execution issues is not, and never was, held by [him] as executor for any estate, but, on the other hand, belongs to" him and other named persons "as tenants in common, and so belonged to them at the time said work for which said execution issues was done." See, also, Arrowwood v. McKee, 46 S. E. 871, 119 Ga. —.

2. The court below improperly construed the fi. fa. under consideration in the present case as one issued against an executor with a view to bringing to sale property belonging to the estate he represented, to the levy of which fi. fa. no one save the duly authorized representative of the estate could be heard to object; and it follows that the court erred in dismissing the affidavit of illegality interposed by the plaintiff in error on the ground that the facts therein set forth disclosed that the property levied on did not belong to him at the time of the levy, and hence he had no right to the remedy he had undertaken to pursue.

STATE v. PAXSON & CANNON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 7, 1904.)

STATE—ESTOPPEL—PRESCRIPTION—ACTION FOR INJUNCTION—TIMBER CUTTERS.

1. "The state can only be estopped from asserting her right to her own property by legislative enactment or resolution."

2. Prescription does not in any case run against the state.

3. The state, in her sovereign capacity, may bring an application for an injunction under the timber cutters' act, embraced in Civ. Code 1895, § 4927, by attaching to the petition, as an abstract of title, a statement setting forth that the land in controversy has never been granted, and that the title thereto is still in the state in her sovereign capacity.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

4. The Attorney General may bring an equitable action in the name of the state, in the nature of the common-law proceeding by information of intrusion, for the recovery of land, title to which is in the state, and, in aid of such action, obtain an injunction to restrain a trespass upon the land, without reference to whether the alleged trespasser is insolvent, or whether the damages resulting from the trespass are irreparable.

5. The petition in the present case can be properly construed as an action of the character indicated in the preceding note.

Per Cobb, J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Coffee County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by the state against Paxson & Cannon. Judgment for defendants, and the state brings error. Reversed.

Jno. C. Hart, Atty. Gen., and J. W. Haygood, B. B. Cheney, and Eldridge Cutts, for the State. Lankford & Dickerson and Dart & Roan, for defendants in error.

COBB, J. 1, 2. The state caused a part of her public domain to be surveyed into lots, and provided for the issuance of grants to all of such lots, except those bearing given numbers, such as 10 and 100; the lots bearing these numbers being reserved for school purposes. The lot in controversy is one of the lots reserved, numbered 100. No grant has ever issued for this lot. The title to the same is still in the state, unless such title was divested at a tax sale had under an execution issued by the Comptroller General for taxes against the lot as wild land. This execution was issued under the authority of the general laws of force at the time of its issuance in reference to the collection of taxes due by owners of wild land. The state, of course, owed no taxes to itself on its own property, and the Comptroller General was without authority to seize such property on an execution so issued. There is hence little difficulty in determining the question that, as a matter of law, the sale was void.

¶ 1. See Execution, vol. 21, Cent. Dig. § 177.

¶ 2. See Limitation of Actions, vol. 23, Cent. Dig. § 38.

It is claimed, though, that as the sale was had by a public officer under authority of a process issued by another public officer, as the purchaser at the sale paid the amount of his bid, which, after deducting the expenses, was covered into the treasury of the state, and dealt with as the state's money, and as the original purchaser and those claiming under him have regularly returned the property for taxation each year, and paid the taxes due thereon, which have likewise been dealt with as the state's property, the state is estopped from asserting her title against the present occupants of the land, who claim under the purchaser at the tax sale. It is not pretended that the tax sale was had under the authority of any act or resolution of the General Assembly authorizing in express terms the sale of the lot in question, or of the class of lots to which that lot belongs. "As a question of law, the state is not bound nor estopped from asserting her rights to her own property, unless it be done in her sovereign capacity by a legislative enactment or resolution." Alexander v. State, 56 Ga. 479 (7), 486. Nothing done by the Comptroller General or the sheriff, or the tax officers of the county, or the Treasurer of the State, in reference to the fund which went into the State Treasury, derived from the sale of the land, or that derived from the taxes collected from year to year, would have the effect of estopping the state; no one of its public officers having acted within the scope of his authority when he dealt with the property or the fund. See in this connection, Pol. Code 1895, § 268; Penitentiary Co. v. Gordon, 85 Ga. 171, 11 S. E. 584. If it had been shown that the General Assembly had by resolution expressly ratified the unauthorized acts of these officers, and specially appropriated the money in the treasury, a different question would arise. The mere fact that under the usual appropriation acts the money in the Treasury has been paid out by the Treasurer would not any more estop the state than would the unauthorized acts of the other officers in reference to the sale of the property and the collection of the taxes. It necessarily follows from all this that it was not incumbent on the state to tender back to the defendants either the balance of the purchase price of the land which was covered into the Treasury, or the amount of taxes which had been collected from year to year since the sale.

The state, then, is the sole owner of the property; not having lost its right to assert its title by the sale, or by anything done since the sale, and resulting therefrom. Nor is its title lost by the long-continued possession of those claiming under the tax sale, it being settled that prescription does not in any case run against the state. Norrell v. Augusta Railway Co., 116 Ga. 813, 42 S. E. 466, 59 L. R. A. 101, and cases cited.

3. The state attached to her petition what is described as an abstract of title, which is as follows: "Title in the state of Georgia, as sovereign owner of the soil, no grant ever having been issued from the state." The majority of the court are of the opinion that the petition can be maintained under the timber cutters' act, embraced in Civ. Code 1895, § 4927. They hold that, as every abstract of title required by that act would begin with a grant from the state, the mere statement by the state that no grant has ever been issued constitutes a sufficient requirement with the terms of that act. They further hold that the principle of the former decisions of this court, ruling that a private citizen must, to bring himself within the terms of that statute, attach to his petition a perfect paper title, capable of being recorded (see Wilcox Lumber Co. v. Bullock, 109 Ga. 532, 35 S. E. 52; Wiggins v. Middleton, 117 Ga. 162, 43 S. E. 432, and cases cited), is not applicable in this case; that the state was not a party in any of those cases; and that the principle announced in them will not be extended to the state. I am unable to take this view of the matter. I think those decisions are controlling, and that the petition cannot be sustained under the timber cutters' act referred to. When the state proceeds as a sovereign to assert its rights it can bring to bear all the prerogatives incident to sovereignty. But when the state, in its corporate capacity, seeks to avail itself of a remedy common to all citizens, it stands in no better position than the citizen, and is entitled to no greater rights. It can use that remedy only upon the terms which are imposed upon the citizen. See the well-considered case of State v. Lord, 28 Or. 498 (3), 510, 43 Pac. 471, 31 L. R. A. 473. I dissent, therefore, from the proposition announced in the third headnote, and concur in the judgment of reversal only for the reason that, in my opinion, the petition is maintainable on another theory, which will be stated.

4, 5. At common law the King could not bring an action of ejectment, or trespass to try title, against an occupant of crown lands; these actions being founded upon disseisin, and it not being possible, theoretically, to oust the King. The remedy of the King was by information, called an "information of intrusion." See 8 Bacon's Abr. pp. 101, 96; 2 Bl. 261. This information was exhibited in the name of the King's Attorney General. Attorney General v. Allgood, Parker, 1; 2 Story's Eq. Jur. (13th Ed.) § 922. This rule of the common law has been followed by South Carolina (State v. Arledge, 1 Bailey, 551; State v. Stark, 3 Brev. 101), and recognized in New York and Massachusetts (see the opinion by Chancellor Kent in Jackson v. Winslow, 2 Johns. 82; Cutts v. Com., 2 Mass. 284). See, also, 3 Wash. on Real Prop. (6th Ed.) § 2021. The Supreme Court of Colorado held, however, that disseisin was not necessary to the maintenance of the code action of that state substituted for ejectment, and that the state might proceed under the statute. Brown v. State, 5 Colo. 496. It is not necessary in this case to express any definite opinion as to whether the state might maintain the statutory action for the recovery of real property. I am clearly of opinion, however (and this is, of course, said for myself alone), that the state may maintain an action similar to the common-law information of intrusion, and that it may, in aid of such an action, obtain an injunction against a trespasser on its lands. It has been held in numerous cases, both in England and in this country, that the Attorney General may apply to a court of equity to abate a public nuisance by injunction. 10 Enc. P. & P. 902; 2 Story's Eq. Jur. (13th Ed.) § 922; Attorney General v. Richards, 2 Anstr. 603; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 587, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092; Loftin v. Collins, 117 Ga. 434, 43 S. E. 708, 61 L. R. A. 150. Even if a trespass upon public lands cannot be properly considered a public nuisance, the same principles which would authorize the Attorney General or other state officer to file an application in the name of the state for the purpose of enjoining a public nuisance would authorize an application to restrain a trespass upon public land. In each case the interest of the entire public is involved, and will be subserved by the decree rendered. Under our system of pleading and practice, where we pay little attention to form, and dig deep for substance, I think the present application can be properly construed as in its nature and essence an application by the Attorney General, in the nature of an information of intrusion, with a prayer for an injunction in aid thereof; and, so construed, the judge should, in my opinion, have granted the injunction. For these reasons, I concur in the judgment of reversal.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness, and FISH, P. J., disqualified.

HUDSON et al. v. HUDSON et al.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 4, 1904.)
PLEADING—DEMURRER TO BILL—PARTITION—ACCOUNTING—ANSWER—AMENDED PETITION—SECURITY DEED—SALE BY CONSENT—DEFAULT OF PURCHASER—WITNESSES—COMPETENCY—AUDITOR'S REPORT—EXCEPTIONS.

1. A demurrer going to the whole bill should be overruled if any part thereof be sustainable.
2. The plaintiffs were, in any event, entitled to partition, and to an accounting as to the rents of the real estate; and, the grounds of the demurrer being general, it was not error to refuse to dismiss the petition.

3. The provision of the Code that the defendant must admit, deny, or explain why he does not admit or deny each paragraph, under penalty of having the allegations in the petition treated as prima facie true, relates to the answer of the original petition.

4. The failure of a defendant to answer an amendment does not authorize the court or the jury to treat the allegations in the amendment as being admitted.

5. But an amendment not setting up any fact affecting the cause of action, but relating to that which transpired in the presence of the court, or to a disposition by consent of the res in the hands of the court, or to a change in the condition of the property involved in the litigation, when such amendment is not traversed, may be treated as true by the court.

6. Where the maker and holder of a security deed mutually agree on a sale of the land, partly for cash and partly on time, to X., and for a division of the purchase money, and X. fails to complete the purchase, the creditor is not liable to the maker of the deed for the breach of such contract.

7. If the creditor allows X. to rescind, the latter is not relieved of his liability to the maker of the security deed, nor does the latter lose his interest in the land until after he has been paid the purchase price of his equity.

8. If thereafter, with the consent of all the parties to the litigation, the land was sold for more than was sufficient to pay the holder of the security deed, it was not error for the court to decree that out of the proceeds the original debtor should be paid the balance of the amount due him by X.

9. This was not a suit against an administrator, and the petitioners were competent witnesses for all purposes except as against the surviving partner as to transactions solely with the deceased partner. There was no objection to their competency on this ground. As against the objection urged, and at the time when the ruling was made, the auditor committed no error.

10. In view of the complicated character of cases generally referred to auditors, and the length of the resulting record, there are specially strong reasons for requiring the strictest compliance with the provisions of the statute that all exceptions shall clearly and distinctly specify the errors complained of.

11. The exception should contain all facts and rulings necessary to show harmful error. It should not be so incomplete as to force the court to search through the record to find error.

Error from Superior Court, Sumter County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Action by J. J. Hudson and others against W. B. Hudson and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

L. N. Hudson died, owning real estate in fee, an interest as tenant in common with his brothers and sisters in other real estate, besides which he owned an interest in the mercantile business of Hudson & Bro., the defendant W. B. Hudson being the other partner. The petition alleges that L. N. Hudson owed no debts; that W. B. Hudson was in possession of the partnership assets, as well as of the individual real estate of the deceased; that W. B. Hudson had endeavored to buy from the heirs their interests in L. N. Hudson's share of the partnership; that the terms of the sale had been agreed on, but that W. B. Hudson refused to pay the purchase price. Petitioners, two of the heirs at law of L. N. Hudson, filed an equitable petition setting up the facts aforesaid, and alleging further that W. B. Hudson was collecting the rents and appropriating them to his own use; that he threatened to enforce claims held by the partnership against the petitioners, although their interest as heirs of the deceased partner exceeded the amount due the firm. They prayed for a receiver, an accounting, a partition of the real estate, and an administration of the estate of the intestate in equity. By amendment all the heirs at law were made parties defendant. The defendants all demurred generally and on the grounds that there was a misjoinder of parties plaintiff and an adequate remedy at law. A receiver was appointed, and the case was referred to an auditor, who, under the statute, heard the demurrer and overruled the same, and made a report adjusting the equities of the parties, to most of which there is no exception. It appears that John R. Hudson, one of the plaintiffs, in order to secure the firm on his indebtedness of $5,000, made a deed conveying 700 acres of land. This indebtedness was finally reduced to $4,000, and John R. found a purchaser—Mrs. Hooks—who was willing to give $5,500 for 400 acres. It was agreed that $1,500, to be by her paid in cash, should be received by John R. Hudson, and he received the only cash actually paid by Mrs. Hooks. Later, she being unable to complete the purchase, Hudson & Bro., the holders of the security deed, paid her $700 to secure a release of her equity in the land. The auditor reported that the firm was not indebted to John R. for the balance due on the $1,500 which he was to receive out of the first purchase money; that this was an indebtedness of Mrs. Hooks to John R. John R. excepted to this ruling, and, after the report had been made, the petitioners amended the pleadings by alleging that by consent of all the parties to the litigation the 400 acres of land had been sold for $8,000. The defendant demurred to the allowance of this amendment, and insists that the court could not act thereon, as he did, in decreeing that $900 out of the $8,000 should be paid to John R. Hudson and the balance to the firm. There was no denial of the facts stated in the amendment, and no proof offered in support thereof.

J. H. Lumpkin, for plaintiffs in error. J. A. Hixon and E. A. Hawkins, for defendants in error.

LAMAR, J. 1, 2. The demurrers went to the whole bill, and should have been overruled, because certainly in some respects it was sustainable. Lowe v. Burke, 79 Ga. 166, 3 S. E. 449. The plaintiffs were entitled to partition and to an accounting for the rents. Even if the allegations that the defendant had bought their interest in the personal property of the deceased did not authorize them to maintain a suit in their own name, there was no demurrer on the ground that it could only be maintained by an administrator, and it was not erroneous to refuse to dismiss the petition as a whole. There were no special demurrers requiring that any specific allegations or relief prayed for should be stricken.

3, 4. The defendant must admit or deny each paragraph in the petition, or state a reason why he cannot do so. Allegations not answered are taken as prima facie true. Civ. Code, § 4961. But it is evident that this provision does not apply to amendments offered from time to time during the progress of the trial. Many amendments need not be answered at all. And where they are so material as to require an answer the defendant is entitled to time in which to make it. Civ. Code, § 5068. But by allowing the case to proceed without answering, or without claiming the time to answer, the defendant is not to be presumed to admit the truth of the allegations thus injected into the case. This right to the plaintiff and presumption against the defendant is limited to that answer required to be filed at a fixed time to a petition containing an orderly statement of the plaintiff's case as a whole. It does not apply to amendments intended to cure defects or supply omissions. This is frequently done by the substitution of one work for another, and the change is often of a character which could not be independently answered, even though it might be material. Nor does the statute apply to fuller and more elaborate amendments adding new facts which ought, in the first instance, to have been included in the petition. Our law is extremely liberal in the right to amend. But the privilege does not have coupled thereto the onerous presumption that everything therein stated is true unless a formal denial is filed by the defendant. The failure, therefore, of the defendant here to deny the facts stated is not to be treated as an admission under Civ. Code, § 4961. It was, however, a statement in reference to the disposition, by consent, of a portion of the res before the court. It did not set up any fact as to the cause of action, but related to that which transpired in the presence of the court, or within its knowledge. It is similar in effect to the suggestion of the death of one of the parties to the record, which, unless traversed, is universally taken to be true without proof.

5-7. The amendment alleged that by consent of all parties to the record land which was involved in the controversy had been sold for $6,000. The defendant demurred, but did not traverse this allegation. The court, instead of decreeing as to the land itself, properly decreed what should be done with the money. When the firm, as creditor holding this land as security, and John R. Hudson as debtor, agreed to sell 400 acres to

Mrs. Hooks for $5,500—$1,500 cash, and $4,000 in notes—of which John R. Hudson was to receive the $1,500, the fact that Mrs. Hooks failed to complete the purchase did not make Hudson & Bro. liable to John R. Hudson for what he was to have been paid by her. He held his claim against her and retained his equity in the land until that debt was paid. And when the land was subsequently sold by consent of all parties the court rightly allowed him out of the proceeds an amount equal to his interest therein.

8. The suit was not against the administrator of L. N. Hudson, and therefore the witnesses were not incompetent to testify as to communications and transactions with him as an individual. If the case be considered as involving matters which were against W. B. Hudson as surviving partner, they were incompetent to testify as to transactions solely with the deceased partner, affecting partnership liability. But it was far too general to assign as error that the "auditor erred in ruling that petitioners were competent witnesses to prove transactions and communications with L. N. Hudson, deceased, on the ground that he was dead at the time the testimony was offered." It was not alleged that the communications were solely with the deceased partner, nor was there any motion to rule out any of the testimony thereafter introduced which may have come within the rule. As against the objection urged, and at the time when the ruling was made, the auditor committed no error.

9, 10. Cases referred to auditors are usually more or less complicated. The evidence is voluminous, and the fact that the complaining party is not only allowed to assign error on the decree generally, but to multiply exceptions by complaining of separate and distinct findings of fact and rulings of law, necessitate the strictest enforcement of all general rules requiring a clear assignment of error. The statute (Civ. Code, § 4589) makes this emphatic, and perfectly explicit. So do many decisions. Roberts v. Summers, 47 Ga. 439 (2). The rule seems to be universal that in this class of cases the exception should be so framed as to relieve the superior court and this court of the burden of going over the entire case, or of performing duties which properly belong to the master and counsel. Stanton v. Ala. R. R., 2 Woods, 507, Fed. Cas. No. 13,296; Holcomb v. Holcomb's Ex'rs, 11 N. J. Eq. 281; Warren v. Lawson, 117 Ala. 339, 23 South. 65. "Parties excepting to a report should state with reasonable precision the grounds of their exceptions in connection with such other particulars as will enable the court to ascertain without unreasonable examination of the record what the basis of the exception is. For example, if the exception be that the commissioner received improper and immaterial evidence, the exception should show what the evidence was. If that he had no evidence to justify his report, it should set forth what evidence he did have. If that he admitted the evidence of witnesses who were not competent, it should give their names, and specify why they were incompetent, what they swore to, and why their evidence ought to have been rejected." In re Commander in Chief, 1 Wall. 43, 17 L. Ed. 609. The plaintiffs in error properly omitted from the record much of the testimony in the auditor's report, relating as it did to matters disconnected with the assignment of errors.

In the main the exceptions in this case are admirably arranged, for they can be considered without constant reference to other parts of the record. The ruling complained of is set out, the evidence bearing thereon follows in immediate connection, and the error is clearly and distinctly alleged. All of these we have considered and discussed. But the exceptions as to the bar of the statute of limitations of certain items of the account, as to the admission of the certificate of deposit, as to the rent of the Mims house, and others, cannot be considered without a re-examination of the entire record, in order to determine whether there was error; and, if so, what was the materiality of the finding, or how and in what manner and to what extent it affected the result, or why a new trial should be granted therefor. The burden upon the plaintiff is twofold. He must not only show error, but that it was harmful. And in the case of auditor's reports, where the exception is not to a verdict, but to independent and isolated facts it ought to be shown to what extent they have affected the final decree; for, suppose an auditor does admit improper evidence, or does make an improper finding of fact, it does not necessarily follow that harm has resulted. McDougald v. Dougherty, 11 Ga. 570 (3).

HERRING v. STATE.

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY—INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENCY—SODOMY—INSTRUCTION.

1. An affidavit made by one to obtain a criminal warrant may be the basis of an indictment for subornation of perjury, and such indictment is not demurrable because it appears from the indictment that the words "to the best of his knowledge and belief" were inserted in the affidavit, as in the form prescribed for procuring such a warrant, it further appearing that the indictment charged that the alleged suborner and perjurer both knew that the charge contained in the affidavit was false; nor was the indictment in this case demurrable because it contained no averment that the false affidavit was actually used in procuring a warrant, nor because the offense was not set forth with more particularity, nor for any other reason assigned.

2. Sodomy, as defined in section 382 of the Penal Code of 1895, is a crime which may be committed otherwise than per anum.

3. The trial judge committed no material error in charging the jury, or in failing to charge or in refusing to charge as requested; and the evidence warranted the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

P. Herring was convicted of subornation of perjury, and brings error. Affirmed.

R. Douglas Feagin, for plaintiff in error. Wm. Brunson, Sol. Gen., and Dessau, Harris & Harris, for the State.

TURNER, J. Herring was by the grand jury of Bibb county charged with the offense of subornation of perjury. The charging part of the indictment was as follows: "For that the said Phil Herring did, on the first day of August," 1903, "in the county aforesaid, wilfully, knowingly and feloniously solicit, counsel and procure one J. W. Jordan to commit the offense of perjury, in the manner and form and by the means as follows, to-wit: in this, that the said Phil Herring did, in said State and county, and at the time aforesaid, wilfully, knowingly and feloniously solicit, counsel and procure the said J. W. Jordan to appear on the first day of August [1903] before W. A. McClellan, a justice of the peace of the 564th district, G. M., in and for said county, in a certain judicial proceeding, for the purpose of making and swearing to and subscribing to an affidavit that a warrant might be issued thereon by the said W. A. McClellan, justice of the peace aforesaid, in the name of the State of Georgia against Sam Dunlap for the offense of sodomy, and the said W. A. McClellan being then and there a judicial officer fully competent and authorized by law to administer a lawful oath, and the said W. A. McClellan, justice of the peace as aforesaid, having then and there jurisdiction of said judicial proceeding; and thereupon, a lawful oath being then and there administered to the said J. W. Jordan by the said W. A. McClellan, justice of the peace as aforesaid in said judicial proceeding, the said Phil Herring did then and there solicit, counsel and procure the said J. W. Jordan to swear, and the said J. W. Jordan being so solicited, counseled and procured by the said Phil Herring, did wilfully, knowingly, absolutely and falsely swear, amongst other things, in substance and effect the following: that is to say, that the said Sam Dunlap, to the best of the knowledge and belief of the said J. W. Jordan, did on the 14th day of July, 1903, in the county of Bibb and State of Georgia, commit the offense of sodomy, all of which said matter was then and there wilfully, knowingly and feloniously sworn to, in substance and effect, by the said J. W. Jordan, being then and there material to the issue in the judicial proceeding aforesaid, the said J. W.

Jordan being then and there in said judicial proceeding making, swearing and subscribing to an affidavit before the said W. A. McClellan, justice of the peace as aforesaid, for the purpose of having a warrant issued against the said Sam Dunlap for the offense of sodomy; and the jurors aforesaid, on their oaths aforesaid, do say that the said Sam Dunlap did not, in truth and in fact, on the 14th day of July in the year 1903, in the county of Bibb and State of Georgia, commit the offense of sodomy; and the jurors aforesaid, on their oaths aforesaid, do say that the said J. W. Jordan then and there well knew that the said Sam Dunlap did not commit the offense of sodomy, as the said J. W. Jordan did then and there swear, as aforesaid, and the said J. W. Jordan, then and there well knew that he, the said J. W. Jordan, did not believe that the said Sam Dunlap had committed the offense of sodomy, as the said J. W. Jordan had sworn in said affidavit, as aforesaid; and the jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further say that the said Phil Herring, on said first day of August, 1903, well knew that said testimony which he, the said Phil Herring, had so procured, counseled and solicited and induced the said J. W. Jordan to deliver, make, subscribe and swear to in said affidavit and in said judicial proceeding was false, and the said Phil Herring well knew that the said J. W. Jordan well knew that said testimony was false, and that he, the said Phil Herring, and J. W. Jordan both well knew that the said Sam Dunlap did not, on the 14th day of July, 1903, commit the offense of sodomy, as the said J. W. Jordan had sworn in said affidavit and in said judicial proceeding; and the jurors aforesaid on their oaths aforesaid, do further say that the said Phil Herring well knew that at the time the said J. W. Jordan subscribed to said affidavit in said judicial proceeding, which was so solicited, counseled and procured as hereinbefore set forth, that the said J. W. Jordan knew that the same was false and that the said Phil Herring knew that the same was false; and the jurors aforesaid do further say that the said Phil Herring did wilfully, knowingly and feloniously counsel, procure, solicit and induce the said J. W. Jordan to deliver said false testimony and make, subscribe and swear to said affidavit in said judicial proceeding at the time aforesaid, then and there intending and desiring that said false testimony should be used for the purpose of procuring a warrant to be issued as hereinbefore set forth against the said Sam Dunlap for the offense of sodomy, contrary to the laws of said State," etc.

The affidavit upon which the charge of perjury rested was as follows:

"State of Georgia, Bibb County. Personally appeared J. W. Jordan who, on oath, saith that to the best of his knowledge and belief Sam Dunlap did commit the offense of sodomy in the county of Bibb on the 14th day of July, 1903, and this deponent makes this affidavit that a warrant may issue for his arrest.

"[Signed] J. W. Jordan.

"Sworn to and subscribed before me this 1st day of August, 1903.

"[Signed] W. A. McClellan, J. P."

To this indictment the plaintiff in error filed an elaborate demurrer, containing many grounds, which demurrer was overruled, and he excepted. The case was then tried by a jury, and he was found guilty. Thereupon he made a motion for a new trial on various grounds, which was refused, and to this refusal he excepted.

His counsel, in a supplemental brief, insists that grounds 1, 2, and 3 of the demurrer to the indictment are sufficient to dispose of the case, and these grounds will now be considered. They are as follows: "(1) Said indictment charges defendant with no crime under the laws of Georgia. (2) Said indictment is void on its face, because against public policy, and for the reason that an affidavit sworn to not absolutely, but to the best of affiant's knowledge and belief, and made for the purpose of procuring a warrant for the arrest of an alleged criminal, cannot be made the basis of an indictment for perjury. (3) Said indictment is contradictory upon its face, and in a material point, in that it charges that J. W. Jordan 'did willfully, knowingly, absolutely, and falsely swear, amongst other things, in substance and effect the following, that is to say: that the said Sam Dunlap, to the best of the knowledge and belief of the said J. W. Jordan, did on the 14th day of July, 1903, in the county of Bibb and state of Georgia, commit the offense of sodomy.' Defendant contends that swearing to the best of one's knowledge and belief is not swearing absolutely, and that said indictment for this reason charges no crime." The important question in this case is whether Jordan could be convicted of perjury under the form of affidavit above given. The other grounds of the demurrer will be generally treated hereinafter, so far as they appear material and necessary to the decision of this case.

1. The nice and subtle technicalities with which some of the courts in the past surrounded the crime of perjury rendered a conviction for that offense well-nigh impossible. It is probable that these niceties were devised by the common-law courts on account of the barbarous punishment which was visited upon persons convicted of this offense. The punishment has been humanely mitigated, and at the same time the class of persons competent to testify in court has been greatly enlarged. As all faith in judicial proceedings rests upon the final sanction of an oath, it is good policy, not only for this reason, but for those above indicated, to facilitate, in so far as may be consistent with law and justice, convictions for this crime. In order to simplify the practice in perjury cases, the British Parliament in 1750 (which was before our adopting act) deemed it expedient to declare by 23 Geo. 2, c. 11, that: "Whereas, by reason of difficulties attending prosecutions for perjury and subornation of perjury, those heinous crimes have frequently gone unpunished, whereby wicked and evil-disposed persons are daily more and more emboldened to commit the same, to the great dishonor of God, and manifest let and hindrance of justice; for remedy whereof be it enacted, etc. Section 1. In every information or indictment to be prosecuted against any person for wilful and corrupt perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offense charged upon the defendant, and by what court, or before whom, the oath was taken (averring such court or person or persons to have competent authority to administer the same), together with the proper averment or averments to falsify the matter or matters wherein the perjury or perjuries is or are assigned; without setting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding, either in law or equity, other than as aforesaid; and without setting forth the commission or authority of the court or person or persons before whom the perjury was committed; any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding. Sec. 2. In every information or indictment for subornation of perjury, or for corrupt bargaining or contracting with others to commit wilful and corrupt perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offense charged upon the defendant; without setting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding, either in law or equity, and without setting forth the commission or authority of the court, or person or persons, before whom the perjury was committed, or was agreed or promised to be committed; any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding." See Bish. Cr. Proced. § 907. This statute may, therefore, be treated as a part of our law governing the procedure in these cases. It was enlarged and re-enacted by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, §§ 20, 21; has been enacted into law by nearly all of those states which did not adopt it from the common law, and has been practically enacted by Congress. A very simple definition of perjury is contained in section 5302 of the Revised Statutes of the United States [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3653], which provides that: "Every person who, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed is true, willfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury." Our statute governing the form of an indictment (Pen. Code 1895, § 929) declares that: "Every indictment or accusation of the grand jury shall be deemed sufficiently technical and correct, which states the offense in the terms and language of this Code, or so plainly that the nature of the offense charged may be easily understood by the jury." Under the English statute first above cited and this provision of our Code, we think the first ground of the defendant's demurrer was properly overruled, as the indictment returned against him contained every material averment under our definition of perjury and of subornation of perjury. Pen. Code 1895, § 256.

The second and third grounds of the demurrer assail the indictment upon substantially the same point, to wit, that the defendant was not charged with having sworn absolutely, but only to the best of his knowledge and belief. It is broadly insisted that an affidavit which contains the words "to the best of affiant's knowledge and belief" cannot be made the foundation of a charge of perjury. In every case of perjury it is essential to a conviction that it should be averred and proved that the false oath was willfully and knowingly taken. That element has entered into every case from the earliest days of the common law. An honest oath, though untrue, is not perjury. Thomas v. State, 71 Ga. 252; 2 Whart. Cr. Law (10th Ed.) §§ 1243, 1249. On the other hand, swearing to what he believes to be false, or what he knows nothing about, though it turns out to be true, is perjury, in some jurisdictions. 1 Bish. New Cr. Law, § 437, par. 3. It should also be borne in mind that the affidavit on which the indictment in the present case was predicated is in the form prescribed by section 884 of our Pen. Code of 1895. The words "to the best of his knowledge and belief" therefore are a part of the affidavit which the law directs shall be made before a warrant issues.

This court, in Pennaman v. State, 58 Ga. 336, dealt with a case of perjury assigned upon an affidavit containing these words. This statement can easily be verified by an examination of the original bill of exceptions in that case. Indeed, these words were twice repeated in the affidavit under consideration in that case. Pennaman filed no demurrer, and was convicted on his plea of not guilty. A motion for a new trial was made and overruled, in one ground of which complaint was made that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence. He also made a motion in arrest of judgment, based on various grounds, which was also overruled; and he excepted to the overruling of this motion, as well as to the refusal of the court to grant him a new trial. It is true that the precise point now presented was not specifically made in the Pennaman Case, but it is difficult to believe that the careful judge who delivered the opinion of the court in that case failed to see that the conviction of Pennaman was contrary to the law and the evidence if the words "to the best of affiant's knowledge and belief" were fatal to a lawful conviction of perjury. Judge Bleckley said in that case: "Perjury may be assigned upon an affidavit charging an offense, and made for the purpose of procuring a warrant therefor. Such an affidavit, made for such a purpose, is the beginning of a judicial proceeding. It belongs to proceedings before arrest, and is treated of under that head in the Code. * * * It sets forth probable cause for a warrant, and upon it alone a warrant might issue. Enough is established to result legally in depriving the accused person for a time of his liberty. Treating probable cause as the issue or point in question, there can be no doubt that the matter of the affidavit is vitally material." From this terse statement of the elements of an affidavit to obtain a warrant it is sufficiently obvious that the question raised by such an affidavit is one simply of probability of the defendant's guilt, and the defendant in such a proceeding need only show that he is not probably guilty. It would seem, therefore, that it is peculiarly true in the present case that the perjury charged consists in swearing falsely and corruptly without probable cause or belief; "or, to give a definition drawn from the older common-law authorities" by Wharton, perjury "is the willful assertion as to a matter of fact, opinion, belief, or knowledge, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding as part of his evidence, either upon oath or in any form allowed by law to be substituted for an oath, whether such evidence is given in open court, or in an affidavit, or otherwise, such assertion being known to such witness to be false, and being intended by him to mislead the court, jury, or person holding the proceeding. * * * The offense consists in swearing falsely and corruptly without probable cause or belief; not in swearing rashly or inconsiderately, according to belief." 2 Whart. Cr. Law (10th Ed.) §§ 1244, 1245. In support of the above text the author cites 1 Hawk. c. 60, § 1; 3 Inst. 164; Bac. Ab. tit. "Perjury"; Burn's Justice (same title); Steph. Dig. Crim. Law, art. 135; Pickering's Case, 8 Grat. 628, 56 Am. Dec. 158; and a large number of decisions by the courts of this country.

The contention of the able counsel for the plaintiff in error seems justified by what is laid down in Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown (vol. 1, p. 433, § 7), where these words are used: "It is said that no oath shall amount to perjury unless it be sworn absolutely and directly, and therefore that he who swears a thing according as he thinks, remembers, or believes cannot, in respect of such an oath, be found guilty of perjury." This work was a well-known text-book at the time our first Penal Code was adopted, and it is likely that the above-quoted statement of the law was in the minds of the judges who expressed similar opinions when dealing with certain civil cases. But in Curwood's edition of that work, in a footnote to the paragraph mentioned, cases are cited which show that the author mistook the law. In one of these (Miller's Case, 8 Wils. 427, 2 Bl. Rep. 881) Lord Chief Justice De Grey said it was a mistake mankind had fallen into that a person cannot be convicted of perjury who swears that he thinks or believes a fact to be true, for that he certainly may, and it only renders the proof of it more difficult. And in the case of the King v. Pedley (B. R. Trin. Term, 1784) this opinion was confirmed by Lord Mansfield. Cases in Crown Law, 269. This question was also agitated in the Common Pleas (Mich. Term, 1780) by Mr. Serjeant Walker, when Lord Loughborough and all the other judges were unanimous that belief was to be considered as an absolute term, and that an indictment might be supported upon it. And Russell, in his work on Crimes (vol. 1 [6th Ed.] p. 294), reviews the foregoing authorities with apparent approval. The author also refers to the case of R. v. Schlesinger, 10 Q. B. 670, saying: "An indictment for perjury alleged that the defendant swore that he thought that certain words written in red ink were not his writing; whereas the defendant, when he so deposed, thought that the said words were his writing; and the Court of Queen's Bench held that the assignment was sufficient. If a witness swore that he thought a certain fact took place, it might be difficult, indeed, to show that he committed willful perjury. But it was certainly possible, and the averment was as properly a subject of perjury as any other." In the case of Patrick v. Smoke, 3 Strob. 147, which was an action of slander, Frost, J., speaking for the court of appeals of South Carolina, said (page 152): "The plaintiff testified positively that the account was just and true, and, to the best of his knowledge and belief, no part thereof was paid. But, even if it be admitted the plaintiff only swore that the account was just to the best of his belief, perjury may be assigned of such an oath"—citing 2 Russ. on Crim. 592. A man cannot swear falsely, and shield himself from the penalty of perjury by stating in his affidavit that he believes his statement to be true. Hughes, Cr. Law, § 1588, citing Johnson v. People, 94 Ill. 513, 514; Rey v. Pedley, 1 Leach, 385; Com. v. Cornish, 6 Bin. 249. Oftentimes affiant's knowledge of matters stated in his affidavit must, of necessity, rest upon information derived from others; and where this is the case it is generally sufficient if he aver that such matters are true to the best of his knowledge and belief. Belief is to be considered an absolute term in this connection; hence to swear that one believes a thing to be true is equivalent to swearing that it is true, and perjury may be assigned on such affidavit. 2 Cyc. Law & Proced. 25 (4b), and cases cited. It follows from these authorities that where a man swears willfully, knowingly, absolutely, and falsely to a matter material to the issue or point in question in some judicial proceeding, according to his knowledge and belief, or to the best of his knowledge and belief, he is guilty of perjury.

By reference to the indictment in this case it will be seen that it is distinctly charged that "Jordan then and there well knew that the said Sam Dunlap did not commit the offense of sodomy, * * * and the said J. W. Jordan then and there well knew that he, the said J. W. Jordan, did not believe that the said Sam Dunlap had committed the offense of sodomy." This denial of the affiant's knowledge and belief made an issue, which, though difficult to prove in some cases, is easily determined in a case of this character. As to the proper manner of negating knowledge and belief in such an indictment, see Whart. Cr. Law (10th Ed.) § 1302. In certain civil cases decided by this court it has been held that affidavits to the best of deponent's knowledge and belief were not permissible. See Bryan v. Ponder, 23 Ga. 480; Stancel v. Puryear, 58 Ga. 445; Neal v. Gordon, 60 Ga. 112; Martin v. Lamb, 77 Ga. 252, 256, 3 S. E. 10; Sprinz v. Vannucki, 80 Ga. 774, 6 S. E. 816; Plant v. Insurance Co., 92 Ga. 636, 19 S. E. 719. But on examination of these cases it will be found that the affidavits required were such as are prescribed by law as conditions precedent in pleading. They related to garnishment cases, cases of non exeat, illegality, non est factum, and attachment. The effect of these decisions is simply to require positive and unequivocal oaths in the kind of cases mentioned, and they have no application to the case now under consideration. It is true that in some of the cases cited the judges who delivered the opinions therein used terms in the way of argument or illustration which apparently support the contention of the plaintiff in error; but what was said in this respect was unnecessary to the decisions announced in those cases, and cannot, we think, properly be regarded as controlling, or even pertinent. Sometimes a statute providing for the making of an affidavit requires the facts to be positively stated, and where this is the case an affidavit based merely on information and belief cannot be received. 2 Cyc. Law & Proced. 24 (4a), and cases cited. A valid rule of practice would have the same effect.

The defendant's demurrer also set forth the complaint that there was no averment in the indictment that the affidavit therein referred to was ever filed with any officer having jurisdiction to issue a warrant. The authorities seem to regard such filing as unnecessary. Lord Tenterden, in the case of Rex v. White, M. & M. 271, said, in discussing the legal effect of an affidavit falsely made with the intention that it should be the basis of a motion for an injunction: "Can it make any difference that it afterwards turns out that the motion is not made? The crime, if any, is the same, morally, in each case; and I certainly shall not, where the objection is open hereafter, hold it necessary to give proof of a fact which does not vary the conduct of the party in taking the oath in question." "And it has been since held that an affidavit sworn for the purpose of being used in a cause, but which is neither used nor filed, is nevertheless the subject of perjury." 1 Russ. Crim. (6th Ed.) 394, citing Hammond v. Chitty, Q. B., E. T. 1846, MSS. O. S. G., and also the following American authorities: State v. Whittemore, 50 N. H. 245, 9 Am. Rep. 196; Miller v. Munson, 34 Wis. 579, 17 Am. Rep. 461; Malret v. Mariner, 34 Wis. 582. An "avermment that the affidavit was filed in court is natural enough and common; still, as the defendant's guilt does not depend on what is done after the false swearing has transpired, it is wholly useless." Bish. Direc. & Forms (2d Ed.) note 5, p. 497, citing Rex v. Crossley, 7 T. R. 315.

What has been said above as to perjury applies with equal force to the offense of subornation of perjury. In view of the statute of 23 Geo. 2, and of the provisions of our Code hereinbefore quoted, we think the indictment in this case was not subject to demurrer, either upon the grounds specifically dealt with above or upon any of the other grounds relied on by the plaintiff in error in support of his contention that the indictment was not sufficiently explicit to enable him to fully understand and prepare to meet the charge intended thereby to be preferred against him.

2. According to the evidence adduced on the trial, a scheme was formed to extort money from Dunlap by means of an infamous charge brought against him; Herring, Jordan, L. H. Callaway, and one McCowan, a deputy sheriff, being privies to the plot. Herring furnished the charge, Jordan was to do the swearing, Callaway was expected to be a witness, and McCowan undertook to finance the enterprise. McCowan, however, betrayed the conspiracy to Dunlap, and, for a consideration, paid by Dunlap, undertook to help Dunlap in bringing the other parties to justice. The affidavit hereinbefore recited was taken by Jordan, and upon it a warrant was issued against Dunlap for the offense named. Dunlap was arrested, it seems, and gave bond. Just before the time appointed for the hearing on the warrant, McCowan seems to have paid Herring, Jordan, and Callaway $5 each, though it is rather intimated than proven that Herring received from McCowan a much larger amount, inasmuch as he appears to have been able to visit Atlanta and Indian Springs, and had money on his return to Macon. It was shown that no one appeared at the time appointed for the hearing of the charge brought against Dunlap, and that the case was dismissed by the magistrate for want of prosecution. Herring was indicted, as we have seen, for subornation of perjury. McClellan, the magistrate before whom Jordan subscribed to the affidavit, Callaway, Dunlap, and Jordan, were sworn as witnesses for the state on the trial of the case. Jordan, on his cross-examination by counsel for the defendant, testified that Herring, when endeavoring to induce him to make the false affidavit, described the alleged infamous act as having been committed by Dunlap, not per anum, but in even a more disgusting way; and Herring, in his statement to the jury, gave a similar account of the way in which the act was committed, insisting that the crime was actually perpetrated. All the other witnesses who were cognizant of the conspiracy testified, in substance, that the charge brought against Dunlap was known to be false, and was devised as a part of the blackmailing scheme.

In the motion for a new trial, the greatest effort on the part of counsel for the plaintiff in error was devoted to presenting his contention that the offense of sodomy cannot be committed otherwise than per anum. We have no access to the English statutes on this subject, but that this was the construction of the common-law writers seems to be settled by the weight of authority. See 3 Russ. Crim. (6th Ed.) 250; 1 Whart. Cr. Law (10th Ed.) § 579; Bac. Abr. tit. "Sodomy"; Clark's Cr. Law (2d Ed.) 367, and cases cited. But the judicial determinations which actually so limit the way in which this crime may be committed are few and unsatisfactory, and the text-writers just mentioned, in declaring that the offense must be committed in that part in which it is "usually" committed, seem to imply that it might be practiced in some other way. In 1 Hawk. Pleas of the Crown (which was, as hereinbefore stated, a leading text-book at the time our first Penal Code was adopted) it is said, on page 357, that: "All unnatural carnal copulations, whether with man or beast, seem to come under the notion of sodomy, which was a felony by the ancient common law." Our Pen. Code 1895, § 382, defines this crime as follows: "Sodomy is the carnal knowledge and connection against the order of nature, by man with man, or in the same unnatural manner with woman." It will be noted that this definition contains no limitation as to the organ with which such unnatural connection may be made. It will also be observed that bestiality (which was, according to the common-law authorities, a form of sodomy or buggery) is omitted from the foregoing definition of sodomy, and is made a separate and distinct offense. Pen. Code 1895, § 384. The latter section reads as follows: "Bestiality is the carnal knowledge and connection against the order of nature, by man or woman in any manner with a beast." It is also to be noted that there is no limitation as to the means by which this crime may be committed. After much reflection, we are satisfied that, if the baser form of the abominable and disgusting crime against nature—i. e., by the mouth—had prevailed in the days of the early common law, the courts of England could well have held that that form of the offense was included in the current definition of the crime of sodomy. And no satisfactory reason occurs to us why the lesser form of this crime against nature should be covered by our statute, and the greater excluded, when both are committed in a like unnatural manner, and when either might well be spoken of and understood as being "the abominable crime not fit to be named among Christians." We therefore think that it made no difference in this case whether Herring and Jordan had in mind the one or the other form of the crime when Herring was persuading and procuring Jordan to make the false affidavit.

3. We have carefully read and studied the charge to the jury given by the trial judge, and have concluded that he committed no harmful error either in charging or in failing and refusing to charge. While some of the requests to charge might have been given in the language requested, they were substantially covered by the charge as given. The evidence warranted the verdict.

(119 Ga. 738)

BRANAN v. NASHVILLE, C. & ST. L. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 7, 1904.)

PRODUCTION OF BOOKS AND PAPERS—NOTICE.

1. The notice which the plaintiff caused to be served on the defendant company, calling on it to produce at the trial numerous papers and documents, was, except as to certain writings actually produced, and a document which the court held should have been also tendered the plaintiff, altogether too vague, indefinite, and unreasonable in scope; and the trial judge committed no error in permitting the defendant to produce, in lieu of an original document specified in such notice, a duly certified copy of the duplicate thereof, which was by law required to be kept in the office of an official of the executive department of this state.

2. The plaintiff was not concerned as to the regularity of the steps taken by the court in making the officer whose return of service was traversed a party to the proceeding, and there was no merit in the plaintiff's motion to dismiss the traverse on the ground that it had not been filed by the defendant company before it interposed an answer to his petition.

3. The evidence adduced at the hearing demanded a finding in favor of the defendant as to the issue raised by the traverse, and the documentary evidence which the court declined to allow the plaintiff to introduce would not, had the same been admitted, have justified a different result.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by C. I. Branan against the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Mayson, Hill & McGill, for plaintiff in error. Payne & Tye, for defendant in error.

TURNER, J. C. I. Branan complained in his petition that the "Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis R. R. Co., lessees and operators of the Western & Atlantic R. R. Co.," had injured and damaged him in a large sum, alleging that he had stored with the defendant a large quantity of dried peaches which he had caused to be shipped to Atlanta over its road, that the peaches were negligently kept by the defendant in an improper place, and that in consequence the fruit became seriously damaged. The deputy sheriff made a return of his service of the petition and process on the 12th of February, 1901, which return was subsequently amended, by leave of the court, so as to read as follows: "Served the defendant, Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis R. R. Co., a corporation, by serving J. L. McCollum, Supt., by leaving a copy of the within writ and process with him in person, at the office and place of doing business of said corporation in Fulton county, Ga." At the appearance term of the case the defendant specially appeared, and, before pleading to the merits, filed a traverse to the return of the officer, on the ground that it was untrue, "because J. L. McCollum was not at the time of said service an officer or agent of defendant, Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, nor was said McCollum at the place or office of doing business of said defendant at the time of the alleged service." The defendant also, in said traverse, asked that A. J. Shropshire, the deputy sheriff, be made a party thereto, and that he be duly served.

It appears that the plaintiff had notified the defendant company to produce the following papers, etc., at the trial of said traverse: "(1) The claim filed * * * by plaintiff, together with all exhibits thereto. (2) All letters or notes received * * * from plaintiff with reference to all or any of the fruit, or the storage thereof, concerning which" the suit was brought, as well as "copies of all letters and memoranda sent to plaintiff by" the defendant company. "(3) Contract, agreement, or lease under which the W. & A. R. R. Co. is held and operated by" the defendant "company. Also all letters, memoranda, and other papers in [its] possession with reference to said lease, and the operation of the W. & R. R. Co. thereunder. Also all checks, receipts and vouchers sent" the defendant "by the W. & A. Division. Also all ledgers, cashbooks, records of transportation, and other memoranda or books showing business done by [defendant] company, especially that portion known as the W. & A. R. R. Division, for and during the past five years, up to the trial of said cause. (4) Also, contract or copy of contract, or duplicate thereof, with J. L. McCollum for and during all or any part of the past five years, either as superintendent of the W. & A. R. R. or otherwise. Also all letters received * * * from said McCollum during the past five years, and copies of all letters sent to [him] during the same period. Also all letters and reports on file with" defendant "company from the W. & A. R. R. or any of the officers thereof, or J. L. McCollum, during the term of five years previous to the filing of said suit. (5) The minutes of" defendant "company for and during ten years previous to the filing of said suit, both of the stockholders and directors."

Upon a demand by the plaintiff for compliance with the notice, the defendant produced the claim and the exhibits attached thereto, as described in the first paragraph of the notice. The defendant answered that the lease called for was a public law, of which the court would take cognizance, and that the other portions of the notice, calling for various documents, were too indefinite and uncertain, and the bulk of the documents so called for was such that the defendant could not reasonably be expected to produce the same, especially as it was obvious that many, if not all, of them were wholly irrelevant and immaterial. The court held that the answer of the defendant as to the production of the lease was insufficient, whereupon counsel for the defendant stated that they had acted in perfect good faith in having the defendant answer that the lease was a public law, so believing themselves; but, since the court ruled otherwise, they asked for a brief time in which to produce the lease, explaining that the lease was executed in duplicate; that the defendant's duplicate was at Nashville, Tenn., the home of the defendant, which was a nonresident corporation, while the state's duplicate was in the capitol, in the city of Atlanta, in which city the case was being tried; and stated that, if given time, they would send to Nashville and get the defendant's duplicate, or produce a certified copy of the state's duplicate, as the court should direct. The court thereupon announced that, if counsel would produce a certified copy of the state's duplicate, this would be a sufficient compliance with the notice. The next morning, before the conclusion of the evidence, the defendant did produce a certified copy of the state's duplicate, and tendered the same to counsel for the plaintiff, who declined to accept it, insisting it was not what the plaintiff called for, not being the original. Defendant's counsel then offered it in evidence, whereupon counsel for the plaintiff objected on the ground that it was not the original. The court stated that, if it was objected to, the objection would be sustained on the ground that the evidence, coming from the defendant, was irrelevant to the issue being tried. The plaintiff then filed an affidavit as to the service of the notice, as to the materiality of the evidence sought, as to the documents called for being in the possession, power, and control of the defendant, etc.; and counsel for the plaintiff moved the court for a rule against the defendant to show cause why judgment should not be rendered against it on the issue formed by the traverse. The court declined to grant this rule, and held that the answer made by the defendant to the notice served upon it was sufficient, except as to the lease called for, and that the production of a certified copy of the state's duplicate of this lease was all that could be required of the defendant. To this ruling the plaintiff excepted.

1. The lease act of 1889 (Acts 1889, p. 963) required that the contract of lease should be executed in duplicate, and there is no suggestion from counsel for the plaintiff that this requirement of the law was not fulfilled. It appears, indeed, that the state's duplicate was at the capitol, presumably in the proper custody. Being a paper which was required to be kept on file in the proper office of the executive department, a certified copy of it was primary evidence. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 5211, 5212. We therefore think the court below did not err in holding that the production of a certified copy of the state's duplicate was a substantial compliance with the notice, so far as this lease was concerned. At any rate, it was sufficient to avoid the harsh penalty which the plaintiff sought to invoke. And we cannot say that the court erred in holding that the notice, in so far as it related to other documents therein referred to, but which the defendant did not attempt to produce, was altogether too indefinite and unreasonably extensive. Parish v. Weed Sewing Machine Co., 79 Ga. 682, 7 S. E. 138; Hamby Mountain Gold Mines v. Findley, 85 Ga. 431, 11 S. E. 775; Georgia Iron Co. v. Etowah Iron Co., 104 Ga. 395, 30 S. E. 878.

2. The plaintiff moved to strike the traverse on the ground that no rule had been issued thereon, as required by law, directed to the deputy sheriff, and calling on him to show cause why he should not be made a party; and, further, because the traverse was filed at the same time the defendant filed an answer to the plaintiff's petition. In this connection, counsel for the plaintiff insisted that, the traverse having been signed, "Defendant's Attorneys," the same should have been stricken by the court, because a traverse to a return of service "must be filed before pleading to the merits, and when filed at the same time it is a contradiction of terms to say that the party who has filed an answer has not been served." Exception is taken to the overruling of this motion. It appears that the deputy sheriff duly acknowledged service, and made no objection to the manner in which he was made a party. As he could undoubtedly have expressly waived a rule nisi, if such a rule were necessary, we do not see why his implied waiver was not sufficient, as in any other case; nor do we see that the plaintiff was in any way concerned as to the process by which the deputy sheriff was made a party. As to the other ground of the motion to strike the traverse, it is only necessary to say that while it is true that the defendant appears to have filed an answer on the same day on which the traverse was filed, yet it is recited in the traverse that the defendant specially appeared before pleading to the merits, in order to traverse the officer's return of service; and in the answer of the defendant is an express recital to the effect that, in thus pleading to the merits, the defendant is not to be understood as "waiving any of its rights in the premises."

3. On the trial of the traverse, McCollum, the person served, swore that he was the superintendent of the Western & Atlantic Railway Company, but had "no connection, as superintendent or in any other capacity, with the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company." He further testified that his books and papers and offices were those of the Western & Atlantic Railway Company, and that he held "no appointment as an employé of the" defendant company; that at the time the service was made upon him he occupied the same position he then held, and had held for several years prior thereto; that the books and accounts of the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company are kept separate from those of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company; that the contracts he makes are made for the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company; that he made a lease of a warehouse in the Austell building, in the city of Atlanta, on July 19th, 1899, but he did so as the representative of the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company, and the defendant company had no interest in the warehouse as lessee. It further appeared from the testimony of McCollum that the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company generally used the blanks of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company. Indeed, he testified with considerable detail as to the relations between the two companies, and as to their manner of doing business. He further stated that he was appointed by J. W. Thomas, who was the president of both companies, and that other officials of the defendant company were also general officers of the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company.

A lease covering the warehouse where the plaintiff's fruit was stored was put in evidence by the defendant, the material portion of which is as follows: "State of Georgia, Fulton Co. This indenture, made this 19th July, 1899, between Roby Robinson, Manager of Estate of Joseph Banigan (herein called the Lessor), party of the first part, and the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company (herein called the Lessee), party of the second part," etc., running for three years, and signed: "Roby Robinson, Manager [L. S.]; J. L. McCollum, Supt. for W. & A. R. R. [L. S.]"

Shropshire, the deputy sheriff, was sworn by the plaintiff, and stated that the return of service, as amended, was correct. The witness further testified, however, as follows: "I have understood Mr. McCollum was superintendent of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis leased the W. & A. I use the word 'superintendent' of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, as of that division leased by" the defendant company. "I think the Western & Atlantic Railroad is a corporation separate from the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis. My entry of service referred to J. L. McCollum as superintendent of the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company, as leased by" the defendant company. "I served McCollum from the fact that he was superintendent of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, and we thought him the proper officer on whom to serve the paper in this case. I have seen him in the office, and have served a great many papers on him in the Austell building; never as superintendent of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroad. I considered McCollum was the highest officer of this end of the line. In other words, he was the superintendent of the Western & Atlantic corporation. The place of business referred to in my return was the place of business of the Western & Atlantic Division. * * * By place of business, I mean Major McCollum's place of business. * * * I served Major McCollum at this place in the effort to serve" the defendant company through him. "I don't know whether they have signs of N. C. & St. L. on the door or not. I remember having seen the W. & A. sign on the doors in the Austell building."

The plaintiff also offered in evidence three postal cards, "headed Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, lessee of Western & Atlantic Railway, Office of Freight Agent, Atlanta, Ga.," addressed to the plaintiff, notifying him of the receipt of certain cars of dried peaches, and signed, "W. & A. R. R."; also a printed notice, likewise "headed," informing him of the receipt in Atlanta of another shipment; and also an "expense bill of freight received in Atlanta, headed Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, marked paid," and purporting to have been signed, "Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroad, lessee of W. & A." The plaintiff also tendered in evidence a receipt, marked paid March 29, 1900, the same being in the following form: "Mr. O. I. Branan, Atlanta, Ga. Storage 10/21/99 to 3/27/00, to W. & A. * * * Dr. On S. P. 14940, contains dried peaches, * * * $24.00," marked paid by "Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, lessee W. & A. Road, D. B. Carson, Agent." Similar receipts, specifying other carloads of fruit, were tendered by the plaintiff at the same time, "all the receipts being for the storage of the peaches in question."

The defendant company objected to the introduction of this documentary evidence, and presented to the court a motion to direct a verdict in its favor, on the ground that "the evidence disclosed that no service had been made upon defendant." The court thereupon excluded the documentary evidence offered by the plaintiff, and directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant company. To the action of the court in thus disposing of the case, the plaintiff duly excepted.

It appearing, from the evidence, that the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company had leased the Western & Atlantic Railroad from this state under the lease act of 1889, it must be true, as matter of law, that under the terms of that act the lessee at once became a body politic and corporate, under the laws of Georgia, under the name and style of the "Western & Atlantic Railroad Company," and subject to suit in that name only. Edwards' Case, 91 Ga. 24, 16 S. E. 347. That act further provided that after the execution of the lease the lessee should have power to make all rules and regulations usual and proper for the working and management of the leased road, and not in conflict with the Constitution and laws of this state or of the United States; and that the principal office and place of doing business of such lessee should be in this state. The evidence introduced, when considered in connection with the provisions of the lease act just referred to, demanded a finding in favor of the defendant company on the issue formed by the traverse; and the documentary evidence excluded by the trial judge would not, had the plaintiff been permitted to introduce it, have justified a different result.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except SIMMONS, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

BURWELL et al. v. FARMERS' & MERCHANTS' BANK et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

TRUST DEED—POWER OF SALE—CONSENT OF BENEFICIARIES—CO-RECEIVERS—APPOINTMENT OF NONRESIDENT.

1. The supplementary decree of the United States court, made after the hearing before the trial judge, and before his decision, was not material to the decision of any question then before him.

2. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 3172, a trustee in whom is vested the legal title to land, but to whom the deed gives no power of sale, cannot, without an order of court, sell such land without the consent of all the beneficiaries.

3. Where, by a decree of a United States Circuit Court a commissioner is appointed, and directed to sell a certain manufacturing establishment, and before the sale certain bondholders of the corporation form a syndicate and appoint one of their number to purchase the property for them at the sale under the decree, and the person so appointed makes the purchase, and the commissioner conveys the property to him as trustee of the persons composing the syndicate, but the deed gives the trustee no power to dispose of the property, the power of sale cannot be ingrafted upon the deed because of a private understanding of the persons forming the syndicate or letters or agreements among them that the intention was that the purchaser should have power of sale, there being no prayer for a reformation of the deed.

4. Where the trustee under the deed above described sold the property without the consent of all the beneficiaries, and those who had not consented filed an equitable petition to set aside the sale, and for an accounting by the trustee, praying that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the property and sell it under direction of the court; and where the trustee, in his answer, prayed that, if he had no power to sell under the deed, the court grant him leave to sell the property; and where it appeared that the sale had been rescinded by the parties thereto—it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial judge to appoint him and another person as co-receivers, and direct them to sell the property subject to the confirmation of the court.

5. It is not an abuse of discretion to appoint a nonresident of the state a receiver when he has an interest in the property, and when a resident is appointed as co-receiver.

WEED et al. v. GAINESVILLE, J. & S. R. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. March 3, 1904.)

RAILROADS—COMPETING LINES—ULTRA VIRES CONTRACTS—RESTRAINT OF TRADE—MORTGAGES—POWERS OF TRUSTEES—ABATEMENT—FORECLOSURE—INDORSEMENT OF BONDS—MARSHALING ASSETS—TRIAL BY JURY—AUDITOR'S REPORTS—SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK—LIMITATIONS.

Proceedings were begun in 1897 to foreclose on the Gainesville, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company a mortgage securing an issue of $245,000 of bonds. It appeared that $83,500 of these bonds had been sold to the plaintiffs in error at from 75 to 85, and that the remaining $161,500, together with $130,000 of the Gainesville Company's capital stock, had been sold on March 31, 1883, to the Georgia Railroad Company for $145,350. Some of the parties to the cases insisted that this was a sale of the stock at par, with the bonds as a bonus, and therefore usurious. Others contended that it was a sale of bonds at 90, with the stock as a bonus, and that therefore the purchaser was liable for $130,000 as on an unpaid subscription. The purchaser contended that the sale was of the stocks and bonds, as a unit, to it, acting as a construction company, with a contemporaneous understanding under which it had expended $107,000 additional in completing the Gainesville Railroad. The $161,500 of bonds were indorsed by the Georgia Railroad Company, and sold to purchasers at 105; they having no notice of the terms of the original issue. Intervening bondholders contended that the $83,500 of bonds should be first paid out of the proceeds of the mortgaged property, and that the purchase of the stock was ultra vires and tended to lessen competition. They prayed for a marshaling of assets, and that the Georgia Company be required to account for profits made, for its management of the Gainesville Company. The latter company answered, and filed a plea of set-off for $385,000. Held:

1. The completion of the Gainesville Road by the Georgia Company did not lessen or defeat competition, but created competition where none previously existed.

2. The state, the stockholders, and the parties alone could attack the contract as being ultra vires or in restraint of trade. Bondholders could not do so.

3. The trustees under the mortgage represent all the bondholders. Where bondholders were allowed to intervene to represent their special contentions, and one of the class dies before the decree, the case does not abate, nor is it necessary to have the deceased bondholder's representative made a party before the litigation can proceed.

4. It is not necessary to have all the bonds proved before decree of foreclosure, but proper provision can be made for proof thereof before the master in the order providing for the disposition of the proceeds of sale.

5. The fact that some of the bonds were indorsed did not make the rule of two funds applicable. The indorsement was not a lien, not equally accessible, and was not even a liability of the common debtor.

6. In actions at law the constitutional right to a trial by jury requires that exceptions of fact to an auditor's report shall be submitted to a jury.

7. There is no such provision as to equity cases, and, on exceptions of fact to an auditor's report therein, if there is evidence to sustain the finding, and the chancellor is satisfied therewith, he need not refer the exceptions to a jury.

8. If the evidence is so conflicting as to leave the chancellor in doubt, he may refer the exceptions to a jury.

9. If the chancellor is dissatisfied with the finding because it is without evidence or contrary to the evidence, the statute does not permit him to sustain the exception finally, but requires that it be submitted to a jury, even though he would feel bound to grant a new trial if the exception were not sustained by the verdict. Civ. Code 1895, § 4595.

10. In the present case there was evidence to support the auditor's report, and there was no error in overruling the exceptions to his findings of fact.

11. If the purchase price ($143,500) was in payment of $161,500 at 90, and the stock was a bonus, the liability of the original purchaser and subscriber as for unpaid subscriptions was barred by the statute, and the same would be true as to any claim of forfeiture for excessive interest. Civ. Code 1895, § 2891.

12. If the purchaser, on an accounting, was liable in any sum, it had a set-off against the Gainesville Company for $365,000, and the plaintiff in error would have no right to a reversal under the prayer to marshal the assets, since on no theory of the evidence would the Georgia Company's liability exceed its set-off for $365,000.

13. If the finding on the plea of set-off was too large, it was harmless as against intervening bondholders, who were entitled, under the decree, to payment of their first lien before anything could be received on the judgment for set-off.

14. An intervening bondholder could not object to a stockholder dismissing its exceptions to the auditor's finding, as to there being no usury, nor use the exception as the basis for an original assignment of error to this court.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

15. The decisions as to the effect of usury on negotiable instruments in the hands of bona fide purchasers for value are based on Bailey v. Lumpkin, 1 Ga. 407, which construed a statute (Cobb's Dig. 393) expressly making all notes and bonds void as to excessive interest.

16. The present statute (Civ. Code 1895, § 2836) makes no such declaration, and under Civ. Code 1895, § 3694, the consideration must be both illegal and immoral, in order to prejudice the rights of a bona fide holder of negotiable paper. Perkins v. Rowland, 69 Ga. 664; Rhodes v. Beall, 78 Ga. 641.

17. The defense of usury is not good as against a bona fide purchaser of corporate bonds for value, without notice, and before maturity. Civ. Code 1895, § 3694.

Per Lamar, J.

Error from Superior Court, Hall County; J. J. Kimsey, Judge.

Suit by Alexander against the Gainesville, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company and others, and by Brown, Barnes and Phinizy against the same defendants. Joseph D. Weed and others intervene. The cases were consolidated, and from the decree, interveners bring error. Affirmed.

The Gainesville, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company (hereinafter referred to as the Gainesville Company) was incorporated by an act approved August 25, 1872 (Acts 1872, p. 333), to construct a railroad from Gainesville, by way of Jefferson, to some point to be selected by it on the Georgia Railroad. The minimum capital stock was $250,000. The company was authorized by acts of August 3 and 4, 1881, to mortgage its property and franchises, and consolidate with connecting lines. Acts 1880-81, pp. 241, 242. The full capital stock required was not subscribed, and many of the subscriptions made were not paid in; but the company began the construction, and issued a mortgage to secure $245,000 of bonds, of which $83,500 were sold in open market at prices of from 75 to 85. These $83,500 of bonds are referred to in the record as "unindorsed bonds"; the money derived from their sale and from stock subscriptions, including one for 500 shares from the city of Gainesville, being spent in the construction of about 15 miles and grading 23 miles out of a total of 65 miles of the road leading from Gainesville towards Monroe. In 1883, being entirely without funds, and unable to secure subscriptions to its stock, or to sell the remaining $161,500 of first mortgage bonds, the company, through its president, A. D. Candler, entered into negotiations with the Georgia Railroad Company, lessee of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company, with a view to procure funds to complete the road, and devise a plan for its successful operation thereafter. The contract of March 31, 1883, between the Gainesville Company and the Georgia Company, recited, that, in consideration of $145,350 to be paid by the Georgia Company, the Gainesville Company sold, transferred, and delivered to the Georgia Company 2,600 shares (par $50) of the Gainesville Company's capital stock, fully paid up, and $161,500 of first mortgage bonds, the same to be paid in 14 installments, aggregating $100,462.46, up to October 1, 1883, and the balance to be paid in the purchase of 1,100 or 1,200 tons of rails, to be charged to the Gainesville Company at cost. All unpaid subscriptions of the Gainesville Company were to be turned over to the Georgia Company to be used in the construction of the road. The stock was to be deposited with the cashier of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company, to be held by him in escrow, and not to be delivered until the fulfillment of the undertaking by the Georgia Company, though in the meantime it was to have the right to vote the stock as if its title were complete. The bonds were also to be deposited with said cashier, and to be delivered to the Georgia Company at the rate of $1,000 of bonds for $900 of the payments stipulated; but the payments were to be applied first for the payment in full of the stock, and the overplus, after the stock was fully paid for, was to be in full for the purchase of the bonds. On each of the $161,500 bonds the Georgia Company placed a written indorsement, guarantying the prompt payment of the principal and interest thereof, and agreeing to appropriate thereto the income from $250,000 of Atlanta & West Point debentures, which accrued to the Georgia Company during the continuance of its 99 year lease of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company.

It appeared that the city of Gainesville, as a stockholder of the Gainesville Company, filed a bill in 1884 attacking the contract of March 31, 1883. In this case, which was dismissed without a hearing, the Gainesville Company filed an answer which contained the following statement: "Defendant had failed to get the stock subscribed, and had for eighteen months vainly endeavored to negotiate any more bonds beyond the $83,000 originally sold at a discount of $12,350. Its floating debt had become urgent, the interest on its bonded debt accruing; and it had to choose between raising money by lawful means, on the one hand, or abandoning its enterprise, and losing all investments made, on the other. After most strenuous efforts, defendant found it could not have the stock subscribed for without offering special inducements to subscribers, nor could it dispose of its bonds, except in connection with a controlling interest in the stock, nor would any prudent purchaser take the stock, except as fully paid up." Under these circumstances, the defendant negotiated with its codefendant Green, who was the general manager of the Georgia Company, and the outcome was the contract for the sale of the stock and bonds. In this same suit of the city of Gainesville the Georgia Railroad Company, by Green, general manager, also filed an answer containing the following statement: "As a part of the transaction in which this defendant paid to its codefendant $145,350, and received from it 2,600 shares of stock, fully paid up, and $161,500 face value bonds, was the understanding on the part of this defendant, not expressed in the instrument of March 31, 1883, but implied from the nature and necessity of the case, and since steadily acted on, that this defendant would go on and complete codefendant's railroad, and equip it, without any reference to the question whether the resale of the bonds would furnish enough money for the purpose or not. It has been in pursuance of such implied undertaking of this defendant that the sum of $92,600 has already been expended, and the further sum of $15,000, or more, if needed, will be expended." $161,500 bonds at 90 amount to $145,350, the contract price for stock and bonds set out in the contract of March 31, 1883. In a letter dated May 12, 1883, from John M. Green, general manager of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company, who signed the contract, to T. M. Cunningham, cashier of the Central Railroad & Banking Company, then one of the lessees of the Georgia Railroad Company, appears the following, as indicative that the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company considered that it was paying 90 for the bonds: "We have acquired $66,000 par value of bonds of the G., J. & S. R. R.; cost of same $59,400." A. D. Candler, president of the Gainesville Company, testified before the auditor that the reasons which "led me to sell the stock and bonds to the Georgia Railroad were, I was trying to build to a connection with it in order to secure Gainesville the benefit of competition in freight. I only had $70,000 to begin with, and expended that, and issued a first mortgage for $245,000. The broker sold $85,000 of these unindorsed. I put that in the construction of the road, and could go no further. The company owed $40,000, with nothing to pay it. I tried to effect some arrangements with the Central, and could not do so, and it was suggested that I see the Georgia Road, and this arrangement was made with it. I could not find anybody who would furnish the money to complete the road, unless I gave with the bonds a controlling amount of the stock. The contract was all one transaction with the Georgia, and the bonds and stock were sold together, and that is what I meant by calling it a 'lumping trade.' The arrangement was called to the attention of the Gainesville Company and ratified before the stock was transferred, so as to make the Georgia a majority stockholder. At that time 15 miles of the road was finished, 23½ miles graded. We had on hand, for which we were indebted, rails for 14 miles, and had 15 miles still to grade. There was a branch road which was partially completed. Every dollar of the money was used in completing the road. It could not have been completed without it, and we could get it from nobody else. The lessees also guarantied to Gainesville rates of freight from the East and West as favorable as Athens and Atlanta enjoyed. That was a verbal understanding between myself and Major Green at the time the transaction was had. The completion of the road resulted at once in decreasing the rates to Gainesville. Rates of freight have been lower ever since."

None of the holders of the $161,500 "indorsed" bonds were parties to the present suit, except as represented by the trustees named in the mortgage. The Georgia Railroad Company, being the majority stockholder, elected its own general manager as president of the Gainesville Company, and proceeded to complete the road to Monroe, where it connected with the Walton Railroad, which was a narrow-gauge road. In 1884 the Walton Railroad was consolidated with the Gainesville Company, its gauge being made standard, and the entire road from Social Circle through Monroe to Gainesville was operated through officers elected by the Georgia Railroad Company. The $145,000 stipulated in the contract not being sufficient to equip the Gainesville Railroad, the Georgia Railroad Company advanced further sums, issuing a second mortgage of $75,000, taking the bonds thus secured at par; and the management of the road not being successful, and not earning the interest on the bonds, the Georgia Company from year to year advanced additional sums on said operating and interest account, which at the time of the hearing amounted to $365,000, and for which the auditor rendered judgment in favor of the Georgia Company. On February 15, 1897, the Georgia Railroad Company notified the Gainesville Company that the earnings of the latter company had been insufficient to pay its operating expenses and fixed charges; that the annual deficit had been met by advances made by the Georgia Railroad, which was the majority stockholder; and that after March 15, 1897, the Georgia Railroad Company would decline to make further advances, and the Gainesville Company must look to its own earnings to meet its obligations. In the petition to foreclose, filed by Alexander, holding undorsed bonds under the first mortgage, he prayed that the bonds held by petitioner and other holders of bonds secured by said mortgage be decreed to be a valid and binding debt of the company to the amount of the principal and interest thereof, and be secured by, and entitled to the security of, the said mortgage. In its answer the company raised no issue as to the validity of the bonds secured by the mortgage, but, in reply to the charge of waste and mismanagement, stated that the 2,600 shares of stock, of the par value of $130,000, and $161,500 of the bonds, had been already sold to the Georgia Railroad Company, "in a lumping trade," for the purpose of completing the road to Monroe, in Walton county. In the bill brought by Brown, Barnes, and Phizly, trustees under the mortgage, they also prayed that the mortgage be foreclosed, and the proceeds be prorated with the several bondholders upon their several bonds, and, having alleged that the Georgia Company had been in the management of the property, and made the Georgia Company a party defendant, they prayed that it be made to account for its management of the road, and for the income and property, over all securities received by it. The Gainesville Company answered, adopting the answer already filed in the Alexander case. The Georgia Company likewise answered, admitting its willingness to account, and averring that, while it was a majority stockholder, and had control of the election of officers, it had in no other way operated the Gainesville Road, but setting up that it had paid the interest on the bonds and supplied the deficiency, and that the annual deficit arising from the operation of the Gainesville Road had been met by advances made to it by the Georgia Railroad Company as majority stockholder. The intervention of Weed and the holders of other undorsed bonds to the amount of $83,500 recited the filing of the two suits to foreclose, and asked to be made parties so as to enforce their rights as such bondholders and creditors of the Gainesville Company; "the rights of petitioner being different from, and in some respects antagonistic to, other bondholders secured by the mortgage." They prayed that the receiver be instructed to institute an action against the several directors personally, who entered into and carried out the transaction with the Georgia Railroad Company, March 31, 1883, which is set out in the answer of the railroad company to have been a lumping trade of $161,500 bonds, with $130,000 of common stock of the company, for $145,350, thereby aiding in diverting the property of the corporation, to the injury of these interveners, as creditors, and had with a company which had no right to enter into any such contract to acquire the control and become the owner of the majority of the stock of the railroad company; that the auditor be required, in marshaling the assets, to ascertain all the facts, and particularly the character of the contract of March 31, 1883; and that the same, if found illegal, be declared to be null, unconstitutional, and void, and the Georgia Railroad Company be required to account for and pay over all the property which came into its hands under and by virtue thereof. No proceedings were ever begun against the directors. This intervention was allowed on April 2, 1897. On the same day the suits by Alexander and by the trustees were consolidated and ordered to proceed as one case.

By an amendment filed June 3, 1897, Weed and his co-intervenors recited the sale to the Georgia Company of 2,600 shares of stock, and $161,500 first mortgage bonds; that after receipt of the bonds the Georgia Company guaranteed the same, and afterwards sold the same above par; and the subsequent consolidation of the Gainesville Company and the Walton Company. This interven tion was referred to the auditor, with liberty to the Georgia Company to amend its pleadings in answer thereto. Thereafter Alexander, as a bondholder, and the trustees under the mortgage, petitioners in the consolidated cases, reciting the contract by which the Georgia Railroad Company had purchased the bonds and stock, alleged that the Georgia Company had complete dominion and control of the railroad, had wasted and mismanaged its property, and had purchased from the Gainesville Company certain locomotives and cars, subject to the lien of the mortgage, and prayed that the Georgia Railroad be required to account for the amount of assets and interest coupons received without adequate consideration, as aforesaid, and to account for the earnings of the Gainesville Company; that the sale of the rolling stock be set aside; and that the rent of all the rolling stock be charged against the Georgia Railroad Company. The Georgia Company answered the original petition, amendments, and intervention; admitted making the contract; averred that it was in good faith, for full value, and in the interest of the Gainesville Company; denied that it had operated the road, but alleged that the operation had been by the officers of the Gainesville Company, who had been elected by it as a majority stockholder; and denied all waste and mismanagement, but, on the contrary, alleged that the same had been to the best interest of the company, and with results far better than could have been secured in any other way. It denied that there had been any discrimination against the Gainesville Company, and alleged that, while rolling stock had been transferred in payment of advances made, it had never been off the line of the Gainesville Company, and had been constantly for its benefit. It averred that a deficit of $362,000 had been met by advances made by the Georgia Railroad, for which it prayed judgment. Thereafter Brown, Phinzy, and Barnes, trustees under the second mortgage to secure $75,000 of the bonds, intervened and prayed for a foreclosure of such second mortgage. Subsequently the original petitioners averred the consolidation with the Walton Railroad, and claimed that the lien of their mortgage extended thereto, as after-acquired property of the Gainesville Company; averred that the road could not be sold in sections without irreparable damage; asked for a sale of the entire line, and that the property be administered as a whole, and, when sold, that the proceeds be distributed between the creditors and bondholders of the two companies in proportion to their respective claims. Subsequently certain stockholders of the Gainesville Company intervened and attacked the validity of the sale of the stock and bonds to the Georgia Company, and prayed that the bonded indebtedness of the company be reduced to the true amount for which said company is legally bound and equiitably liable. The Gainesville Company amended its answer, alleging that the open account indebtedness to the Georgia Railroad was barred by the statute of limitations.

After the report of the auditor, and before it was recommitting, the city of Gainesville, as a stockholder owning $50,000 of the capital stock of the Gainesville Company, intervened, and attacked the sale of the bonds to the Georgia Company as having been usurious, and for a grossly inadequate sum; that bonds to the amount of $161,500 were sold to various parties to interveners unknown, and they were represented by the trustees; that it would be inequitable and illegal to allow the usurious bonds to be collected, or to allow a judgment therefor; that the Gainesville Company is not attacking the transaction as usurious, although intervenor has called upon and demanded of the officers that they should so attack the same. It prays that the trust deed be set aside for usury; that the bonds secured thereby be declared usurious; that the sale of bonds and stock to the Georgia Company be declared illegal; that the bonds be purged of usury, and the trustees of the bondholders be not allowed to collect more than the amount actually paid for the bonds, with interest at 7 per cent. The Gainesville Railroad Company thereupon abandoned its former position that the sale was a lumping trade, and pleaded usury. This intervenor and the amendment of the city were met by answer of the Georgia Company, setting up the same facts, substantially, as set out in its former answers, and further averring that "any right to recover any usurious payments from this defendant or the bondholders has long since been barred by the statute of limitations."

The auditor, H. H. Perry, filed a report, in which he found: "(11) That, under and in pursuance of the contract of March 31, 1883, the Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company sold to the Georgia Railroad Company bonds of the first-mentioned road amounting to $161,500 for the sum of $15,350, and said bonds were delivered to the Georgia Railroad Company, and said sum of $15,350 paid therefor to the Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company. (12) I find that at the time of the above sale the Georgia Railroad Company was not a stockholder of the Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company. (13) I find that the foregoing sale was duly authorized by the directors of the Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company, by resolution of March 17, 1883. (14) I find that, in said transaction by which the Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company transferred to the Georgia Railroad Company the aforesaid bonds, there was no intention on the part of either company of the contracting companies to evade the usury laws, and that the same was not a device to evade said laws. (15) I find that the aforesaid transaction did not contemplate, and was not, in contemplation of law, a loan by the Georgia Railroad Company to the Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company of the sum of $15,350, or any other sum, but a sale of its bonds, as authorized by the Acts of 1881, p. 242, approved August 4, 1881. (16) I find that said bonds, after the same were sold to the Georgia Railroad Company, were by it put on the market and sold to various parties, and that those who now hold said bonds are bona fide holders for value. (17) I find, as a matter of law, that there was no usury in the transaction aforesaid, under and by virtue of which said title to said bonds was obtained. (18) I find further, as a matter of law, that the trustee for the bondholders is entitled to recover the full face value of said bonds, and interest thereon, in the decree of foreclosure, for the benefit of said bonds, as heretofore found. (19) I find, as a matter of law, that no part of the account of the Georgia Railroad Company against the Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company for payment of coupons on the aforesaid bonds for the Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company, up to the time of the appointment of the receiver, should be diminished on the grounds of usury. (20) I find, as a matter of fact, that the aforesaid payments of said coupons were made by said Georgia Railroad Company with an understanding between said companies that said Georgia Railroad Company should pay said coupons as they fell due, and charge said payment to the account of the Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company, and that no notice was ever given by the said Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company to the Georgia Railroad Company, up to the time of said payment or payments, of any intention to set up the defense of usury. (21) I find, therefore, as a matter of law, that, even if there had been usury in the original transaction, the said Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company cannot set up the question of usury as a defense to the repayment of said amounts to the Georgia Railroad Company. I recognize it as a correct principle of law that in the case of an ordinary note or bond, between private parties, and perhaps private corporations, strictly so called, one cannot sell his own note to another at a discount, and evade the usury laws. The law will consider the transaction a loan, and, if the discount is sufficient to make the ultimate sum to be paid amount to more than the sum received, with legal interest added for the time the note or bond is to run, it will be usury. But there is a distinction between transactions of this kind and the sale of public securities, such as the bonds of municipalities, counties, railroads, and other quasi public corporations. It grows out of the character which modern usage has stamped upon such bonds. Bonds of this kind were not negotiable at common law, but their negotiable character was acquired by custom and usage, and recognized by the courts by a long course of decisions. The same usage and customs have given such securities the character of chattels. They are in reality a species of property, and not merely choses in action. As said by Justice Miller in an opinion in a case in the Supreme Court of the United States, one-half of the wealth of the country is invested in government and corporation bonds. Such bonds, as in this case, are usually made payable to bearer, and are intended to, and do, pass from hand to hand. A number of states have enacted laws prohibiting the defense of usury to corporation bonds. These statutes are based upon the existence of a distinction between such bonds and ordinary private loans. But the distinction exists in principle, and arises from the fact that universal custom and usage have given them the character of chattels. Their widespread circulation, the manner in which they pass by delivery from hand to hand, give them also a similitude to bank notes. The same sound reason which would forbid the defense of usury to bank notes would apply in a large measure to such bonds. To put upon each purchaser the duty of inquiry as to the original consideration received would destroy their utility. In this case the pleadings in no case speak of the transaction in which the Georgia Railroad Company received these bonds as a loan, but always as a sale. The statute authorizing their issue authorizes the company to issue and sell their bonds. Thus the language used bears witness to the character of such transactions. Certainly, in the hands of bona fide holders for value, the defense of usury should not avail in the case of such securities. I will content myself with referring to the reasoning of the court in Griffith v. Burden, 35 Iowa, 143, which is based upon principle, and not upon statute, and refer also to the following authorities: White Water Valley Canal Co. v. Vallette, 21 How. 414, 16 L. Ed. 154; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (1st Ed.) 1029; Morris Canal & Banking Co. v. Fisher, 9 N. J. Eq. 698, 64 Am. Dec. 423; Memphis & L. R. R. Co. v. Dow, 120 U. S. 287, 7 Sup. Ct. 482, 30 L. Ed. 595; Ayer v. Tilden, 15 Gray (Mass.) 182, 183, 77 Am. Dec. 355; City of Memphis v. Brown, 11 Am. L. T. 424; 6 West. Jur. 495; Memphis v. Bethel (Tenn.) 17 S. W. 191; City of Austin v. Nalle, 85 Tex. 520, 550, 22 S. W. 668, 900; Traders' Nat. Bank v. Lawrence, 96 N. C. 298, 3 S. E. 363; White v. Railroad Co., 21 How. 575, 16 L. Ed. 221. If there was no express contract, [the Georgia Company] was virtually compelled to make large additional advancements in order to complete the road, amounting at the beginning to between $70,000 and $80,000, and did advance, to keep up the road and to keep up its credit, sometimes during long periods of depression, all told, over $365,000, for which it has nothing to show, except an open account of very doubtful value, in addition to the amount originally paid for stock and bonds. In view of this, it can hardly be said that the directors acted unwisely, or to the real injury of any one interested in the road, either as a stockholder or bondholder. I do not think there is any reason why the transaction should now be set aside. It might almost with propriety be said that the Georgia Railroad Company practically occupied the position of a construction company in acquiring these bonds. (23) I find specially that as to the Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company, the only party in this case setting up usury in the aforesaid transaction, that the $161,000 par value of bonds, together with the 2,600 shares of the common stock of said company, was sold by said company to the lessees of the Georgia Railroad Company on March 31, 1883, for $145,350, in a lumping trade; the company having so alleged in its answer in this case, filed April 1, 1897. * * * (24) That the amount of capital stock of the Georgia, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company, as authorized by its charter, to wit, $250,000, was never fully subscribed for, nor scrip issued therefor, until pursuant to the contract of March 31, 1883, with the Georgia Railroad Company, when all unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock already subscribed for, and all subscriptions thereafter obtained to the capital stock, were agreed to be turned over to the lessees of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company, to be used in the construction of the road."

To the auditor's final report the city of Gainesville excepted on the ground that the purchase of the $161,350 of the first mortgage bonds of the Gainesville Company was usurious. After argument, and after the court had announced that it would hold that the transaction was usurious, but before the decree was signed, the city of Gainesville dismissed its exception. Weed and the other holders of unindorsed bonds amounting to $83,000 also filed exceptions to the auditor's report, but, while attacking the legality of the contract between the Gainesville Company and the Georgia Company, did not except to so much of the auditor's report as held that the contract by which the stock and bonds had been conveyed to the Georgia Company was free from usury, though they did object to the court allowing the city of Gainesville to dismiss its exceptions to the finding that the sale of the bonds was free from usury. By final decree the court ordered the sale of the property, fixing $3,000 a mile as the upset price. The only parties plaintiff in error are the holders of the $83,000 unindorsed bonds, who assign error on the decree as a whole, and on the failure of the judge to sustain their exceptions to findings of fact and rulings of law made by the auditor.

A. S. Erwin, W. K. Miller, W. H. Barrett, B. Phinzy, and H. A. Alexander, for defendants in error.

LAMAR, J. The Gainesville, Jefferson & Southern Railroad Company was authorized to issue $250,000 of stock and $245,000 of first mortgage bonds. It obtained subscriptions for $120,000 stock, and sold $83,500 of bonds. With the proceeds it constructed about one-half of its road. Its funds being then exhausted, and it being unable to sell the remaining bonds, or to secure subscriptions to the balance of the capital stock, its officers were advised to interest the lessees of the Georgia Railroad in the completion of the work. After many negotiations a contract was made, March 31, 1883, by which, in consideration of $145,350, to be paid in installments, it sold to the Georgia Railroad Company $130,000 of the Gainesville Company's capital stock, "fully paid up," and $161,500 first mortgage bonds, to be left with a depository until performance of the undertakings by the Georgia Railroad Company; but bonds to be delivered at the rate of $1,000 of bonds for $900 cash paid, "the payments to be applied first in payment in full of the stock and the overplus to be in full for the bonds." On the $161,500 bonds thus acquired the Georgia Railroad placed an indorsement guaranteeing the payment of the principal and interest. Thus indorsed they were sold in open market. By virtue of the ownership of $130,000 of capital stock, the Georgia Railroad Company elected the officers of the Gainesville Company, and proceeded to build the road, advancing $107,000, in addition to the purchase price, under the contract of March 31, 1883. During the 15 years of its management the Georgia Company made advances aggregating $365,000, much of which went to pay the coupons on the mortgage bonds. Default was made in 1897. There were two bills—one by a bondholder and one by the trustees—to foreclose the first mortgage on the Gainesville Road; another to foreclose the second mortgage; and still another to foreclose a mortgage of the Walton Road, which had been merged with the Gainesville Company. These four cases were consolidated. There were interventions by a stockholder and by the holders of $83,500 unindorsed bonds, contending that the purchase of the majority of the Gainesville stock by the Georgia Company was ultra vires and in restraint of trade; attacking the contract of March 31, 1883; and claiming that the present owners of the $161,500 bonds sold thereunder to the Georgia Company at less than par were not entitled to share equally in the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property. The Georgia Company was made a defendant, and there were prayers that it should account for its management of the Gainesville Company, for all profits made by it on a resale of the bonds bought at 10 and resold at 105, and for general relief. The Georgia Company answered, and filed a counterclaim for $365,000 against the Gainesville Company. There was an immense mass of evidence, a report by the auditor, a recommitment, another report, and many exceptions. This resulted in a record exceedingly voluminous. The court overruled all the exceptions to the auditor's report, and decreed that the road be sold, and that all the bonds should share equally in the proceeds. The holders of the $83,500 of undorsed bonds filed a bill of exceptions to this court. The assignments of error may be so grouped as to somewhat shorten what would otherwise be an exceedingly lengthy opinion. All those in reference to the allowance for fees for the receiver and attorneys were abandoned. Those relating to exceptions to the auditor's findings of fact are sufficiently dealt with in the head notes. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4594, 4595, 4596, 5876.

The construction of the Gainesville Railroad did not lessen or increase competition, but created competition where none previously existed. But if the geographical situation or character of business transacted had made the Georgia and the Gainesville competing roads, the state, the stockholders or the parties alone could have attacked the contract of March 31, 1883, as being ultra vires, or in restraint of trade. Bondholders are not authorized to act as guardians for the public or the parties, in having such a contract set aside or declared to have been illegal—certainly not in a case where the bondholder prays that the subscriber to the stock under such contract be held liable for the unpaid subscription. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 5800, 3668. The trustees under the mortgage represent all of the bondholders. And where bondholders are allowed to intervene pro inter esse suo, the death of one of a class will not cause the suit to abate, nor will it be necessary to have the representative bondholder made a party; her interest being represented by the trustee and the other bondholders making the same contention as that on which she relied. The fact that the trustee represented all bondholders also makes it unnecessary for the bonds to be proved before final decree of foreclosure. Here all the pleadings admitted that the entire issue of bonds had been sold, and, if any question as to ownership is raised, the court can frame an order to have the same determined by reference to a master, and by proper provision in the order of distribution. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4842, 4853, 4856.

The holders of the $83,500 undorsed bonds insist that, on the doctrine of two funds, those holding the $161,500 of bonds, indorsed by the Georgia Company, and the indorsement secured by the pledge of Atlanta & West Point stock, should be required to exhaust this source of payment before being allowed to participate in the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property. But the indorsement was not a lien, and was not equally accessible. The indorsement was not a liability, and the collateral was not the property, of a common debtor. In no sense does the case come within the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 2691, that "a creditor having a lien on two funds of the debtor, equally accessible to him, will be compelled to pursue the one on which other creditors have no lien." The main contentions relate to the attack on the contract of March 31, 1883, which recited that the Gainesville Company sold to the Georgia Company $161,500 of bonds, and $130,000 of fully paid up stock for $145,350, payable in installments; the stock and bonds to be deposited in escrow, and the Georgia Company to receive $1,000 in bonds for every $900 in cash paid, but the installments to be applied first to the payment of fully paid up stock, and the balance to be in full payment for the bonds. There was no objection to the introduction of parol evidence seeking to show that the paper did not set forth the real consideration; and the holders of the undorsed bonds, amounting to $83,500, insisted (a) that this was a sale of bonds at 90, with the stock as a bonus, and that therefore the Georgia Railroad Company was liable as for an unpaid subscription of $130,000; (b) the city of Gainesville, an intervening stockholder, insisted that it was a sale of stock at par, and of bonds at 10 cents on the dollar, in consequence of which the bonds were infected with usury; (c) the Gainesville Company, in its original answer, contended that the stock and bonds had been sold in a "lumping trade"; and the Georgia Railroad, uniting in this line of defense, also insisted (d) that the sale was made to it as a construction company on the further agreement that it was to advance what other sum might be needed to complete the road; that it had actually advanced $107,000 additional, besides complying with its agreement to reduce freight rates. The uncontradicted evidence may probably have been sufficient to base a finding on this last theory. But the auditor found that it was a sale of stock at par, and of $161,500 of bonds at 10 cents on the dollar. For the reasons set out in his report, he held that this transaction was not usurious, because the law applicable to loans of ordinary paper did not apply to a sale of corporate bonds. The city of Gainesville excepted to this ruling, and, over the objections of the intervening bondholders, withdrew the exceptions before the decree. As to which we hold that where there are various and independent parties to the litigation, and one files exceptions, the others have no vested interest therein; that the exception may be withdrawn, and other parties to the record cannot complain of the dismissal, or use the original exceptions as a basis for the assignment of error here. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4845, 4908. The case might be different if the trustees or other representatives of parties who had intervened had filed an exception, and his beneficiaries had relied thereon, and failed on that account to make an independent exception. But here there was no such relation between the intervening bondholders and those who originally complained of the auditor's finding on the subject of usury.

It is not necessary to elaborate the proposition that if the contract of March 31, 1883, should be construed as a sale of bonds at 90, and the stock as a bonus, there was no usury. If so, then nothing which thereafter occurred rendered invalid that which was valid in its inception. If the Georgia Railroad improperly included the $107,000 advanced by it as a construction company, as an item in the set-off, or if it took second mortgage bonds for a part thereof, this might affect that company's right under the second mortgage, and it might reduce the amount of the judgment to which it was entitled on the set-off; but it could not be effective to invalidate bonds now in the hands of innocent third persons.

If the contract was a sale of bonds at 90, and the stock was a bonus, the liability of the unpaid subscription was barred in six years. Georgia Manufacturing Co. v. Amls, 53 Ga. 228. But whether barred or not would be immaterial to the plaintiffs in error because a liability for $130,000 would not exhaust, but only reduce, the judgment for set-off of $365,000. Or, if the Georgia Company was liable on its stock subscription of $130,000, for the profit made on the resale of the bonds; for the $75,000 secured by the second mortgage, for waste and mismanagement, or other act done by it as a majority stockholder; and if it be conceded that such claims are not barred, and if the intervening bondholders, as creditors, had the right to enforce such cause of action, and if the pleadings warranted a judgment on any or all of these claims—yet it appears that the Georgia Company has a claim for $365,000 cash advanced to the Gainesville Company, much of which went to pay the coupons, including those held by the complaining interveners. And unless the claims against the Georgia Company exceeded the amount of the set-off, the plaintiffs in error have no cause to complain, since they must be paid in full on their first lien before the Georgia Company can get anything on the judgment for $365,000.

The auditor, however, did not predicate his finding that there was no usury upon the idea that the Georgia Company, as a construction company, had advanced a sum sufficient to remove any taint of usury, nor did he sustain the contention of the plaintiff in error that the bonds had been sold at 90, with the stock as a bonus; but he put his decision squarely on the proposition that a corporation may lawfully sell its bonds at a discount greater than 8 per cent. If this question was one between the Georgia Company and the Gainesville Company, the original parties to the transaction, we would be called upon to determine the point. But these bonds are in the hands of innocent third persons, who purchased the same at 105 from the Georgia Railroad Company, and the contest is between bondholders over the proceeds of the road. The majority of the court are of the opinion that the question of usury and the effect thereof is not presented by any of the assignments of the plaintiff in error. The writer is of the opinion that it is presented, because of the assignment on the court's ruling that all of the bonds should share equally, and yet the result would not be changed. And speaking for myself, and not for the court, whether there was usury or no usury in the original sale of the bonds, subsequent bona fide holders before the bonds were due, and without notice of any usury, are all entitled to share alike out of the property mortgaged to secure the entire issue. All of the decisions in this state apparently to the contrary are predicated upon Bailey v. Lumpkin, 1 Ga. 407. But that case is in perfect harmony with the uniform current of authorities, being put, as it was, upon the express language of the act of 1829 (Cobb's Dig. 393), which declared that any note or bond infected with usury was void both as to the usury and legal interest. The bona fide holder of a negotiable instrument is protected from the defense of usury, since the present statute not only does not make such contract void, but section 3694 requires both an "illegal and immoral consideration" in order to affect such paper in the hands of an innocent purchaser. Contracts to pay usury are unlawful, but only as to the usurious interest, but mere illegality in the consideration is not sufficient to defeat the right of an innocent holder. In Rhodes v. Beall, 73 Ga. 641, the common-law authorities were recognized; but the court there, in considering a contract which by act of Congress was even declared void, said: "The statute which makes such contract illegal and void must also make the same a crime, or the act itself must be immoral and contra bonos mores, to affect the bona fide holder of negotiable paper." "A contract may be illegal without being immoral but the consideration to make the defense available must be both immoral and illegal." Perkins v. Rowland, 69 Ga. 664.

Many courts, in construing the statute of usury, have recognized that, if the instrument thus infected is declared to be void, it obtains no validity by being transferred to an innocent third person. If the contract is merely declared to be unlawful or illegal, and the act is not made a crime, then an innocent purchaser takes the same free from the defense of usury. Thus Judge Story, in Fleckner v. United States Bank, 8 Wheat. 338, 5 L. Ed. 631, says: "The statutes of usury of the states, as well as of England, contain an express provision that usurious contracts shall be utterly void; and, without such an enactment, the contract would be valid, at least in respect to persons who are strangers to the usury." And in Converse v. Foster, 32 Vt. 828, cited and followed in the carefully considered case of Lynchburg National Bank

v. Scott, 91 Va. 656, 22 S. E. 499, 29 L. R. A. 827, 50 Am. St. Rep. 890, it was held that "the English statute against usury * * * not only imposes a penalty for such illegal act, but expressly declares that all notes, bonds and other securities given for such illegal consideration shall be utterly void. All the cases * * * turn upon this very distinction and difference between the statutes. In those cases in which the Legislature has declared that the illegality of the contract or consideration shall make the security void, the defendant may insist on such illegality, though the plaintiff took the same bona fide and gave a valuable consideration for it. But unless it has been so expressly declared by the Legislature, illegality of consideration would be no defense to an action at the suit of a bona fide holder for value without notice of the illegality." See, to same effect, Webb on Usury, § 159, and authorities cited. The law is opposed to usury, but it favors bona fide holders of negotiable paper. In protecting such innocent holders, it is not considering solely the rights of the respective parties to the litigation, but serving public policy, to protect the innocent purchaser, on the one hand, and, on the other, to enable owners of a valid paper to sell the same without the delay which would be inevitable if the purchaser in each instance was required to make an investigation of the consideration on which the negotiable instrument issued. If there is no consideration whatever, and the paper thereafter comes into the hands of an innocent purchaser, he would be entitled to recover the face value. Why, then, should it be that he would be liable if he received nothing, and not liable when he received something, unless that something was both illegal and immoral, and therefore by statute unenforceable? Bonds like these are now universally held to be negotiable, and pass by delivery. As in the present instance, they may be sold by the company to one purchaser at one price, and to another at another price. Or, as appears here, they may be held in this country and in Europe. To require each separate purchaser, at the point of issue, or at a distance, to make an independent investigation as to the consideration for which each separate bond was originally put upon the market, would be to establish a rule which, if it did not absolutely prevent the sale of such security, would disastrously affect a borrower's right to use his credit. A subsequent purchaser would have to make the investigation where the bonds were issued at par, as well as when they were sold at a usurious rate. The innocent borrower would thus suffer with the guilty. Consequently, and in pursuance of an imperative public policy, many states whose statutes would admit of such a defense against ordinary negotiable paper have enacted provisions preventing corporations from setting up the defense of usury when sued on corporate bonds. Others have declared by statute that the plea of usury should not be available against a bona fide holder of negotiable paper. Other courts, without statute, have declared that this defense was not available in a suit on bonds. Others (Junction R. R. v. Bank of Ashland, 12 Wall. 223, 20 L. Ed. 335) have preserved this policy by holding that a sale of bonds was not a loan. Contra, Schermerhorn v. Talman, 14 N. Y. 93. And our statute (Civ. Code 1895, § 3694) has prevented such defense against bona fide purchasers by declaring that illegality of consideration shall not prejudice a bona fide holder of negotiable instruments unless the consideration is both illegal and immoral.

HILTON & DODGE LUMBER CO. v. INGRAM.

INJURY TO EMPLOYE—FELLOW SERVANT—SELECTION BY AGENT—PRESUMPTIONS.

1. When the master performs the duty imposed by law of employing competent servants, and a fellow servant of the plaintiff, without the master's knowledge or authority, selects from the competent servants thus employed one who is unsuited for the special task created by an emergency, and transfers him from work he can do to work he cannot do, the act of thus assigning him is not the act of the master, but that of a fellow servant.

2. The duty of selection need not always be performed by the master himself. In the nature of things, in the case of corporations, such selection must be by agents.

3. If the one to whom this duty has been committed is negligent, it is treated as the negligence of the master.

4. If the agent making the selection was diligent, it is to be treated as the diligence of the master.

5. If the record is silent as to whether the agent making the selection and transferring the servant from one department to another was negligent or diligent, then the record is to be treated as likewise silent as to the master's conduct in transferring him from one task to another.

6. There is no presumption in such a case against the master, nor does any arise from the mere happening of a subsequent injury.

7. It must appear that the master, or the person authorized to make the assignment, knew or was negligent in failing to learn of the unfitness of the servant to perform the new duties to which he was assigned to meet an emergency.

8. A fellow servant, without the master's knowledge, cannot, by an assumption of authority, convert himself into a vice principal or alter ego of the master.

9. If the person making the assignment to the new duty was not authorized to employ or discharge, and made such assignment without the master's knowledge or consent, and if he was a co-employee with the injured plaintiff, then the case falls within the doctrine of fellow servants.

10. But if the person making such assignment to the new duty was authorized to employ and discharge, and to make such assignment to meet the emergency, and if he knew of the incompetency of the servant to perform the new task, his negligence would be treated as the negligence of the master. And if the other facts entitling the plaintiff to recover are established to the satisfaction of the jury, they would be authorized to find in his favor.

11. Where the defendant denied liability, and offered evidence to show that the injury was the result of an accident, the defendant was entitled to a charge adjusted to this theory, even without a special request therefor.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by W. H. Ingram against the Hilton & Dodge Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Lumber, as sawed, was trucked along an elevated platform or "brow," and thence lowered to a pile on the ground. Dudley was inspector on the brow. The regular truckman was absent. There is a conflict in the evidence as to who selected Anderson to act as a substitute. Anderson says that he was directed to leave his work on the ground by Wiles, the general superintendent, and that at the time he objected, saying that "he could not do the work, and had never done that sort before." Dudley says that he applied to Wiles, who was in charge of the men in the yard, to send up a man to take the absent truckman's place, and that he sent Anderson. There is no evidence that either Dudley or Wiles had the right to employ or discharge, or that they had the right to assign employees engaged in one department to work in another; and there is no evidence that either knew that Anderson was inexperienced, incompetent, or unable to truck lumber on a two-wheeled truck, and no evidence that the master knew of the absence of the regular truckman, or that Anderson had been assigned to the new work.

Wiles, the general superintendent, was dead at the time of the first trial. There was evidence that Ingram, the plaintiff, had originally employed Anderson for the company when Anderson was a boy of about 14 years; that afterwards Ingram had promoted Anderson to a man's work and pay; that Anderson had been with the company for 3 or 4 years, engaged at different classes of work, and had trucked lumber on the ground with a four-wheeled truck; that he had sometimes worked on the brow, but not with a two-wheeled truck; that during the morning of the day of the injury another employee assisted Anderson with the two-wheeled truck; that in the afternoon, while Anderson alone was pushing the lumber, the truck "got away from him," and a stick of lumber fell through a hole on the edge of the platform, striking Ingram, who was inspecting lumber underneath. The plaintiff insists that the company was negligent in allowing Anderson, an incompetent and inexperienced boy, to engage in the work, and was also negligent in allowing the hole to remain in the platform. The company insists that Anderson was competent to perform the work, which required strength, but no special skill; that the lumber fell while being placed sidewise on the pile on the ground; that it did not fall through the hole; and that the injury was occasioned either by the negligence of a fellow servant of the plaintiff, or as the result of an accident for which no one was to blame. Among other grounds of the motion for a new trial, it was alleged that the court erred in failing to charge on the theory that the plaintiff's injuries were occasioned by an accident, and in charging that, "whether Anderson was assigned to work on the brow by the general superintendent, or the inspector, Dudley, then they would be the alter ego of the defendant, and any negligence in this respect, if any be shown, would be attributable to the company." The plaintiff in error assigns as error that this charge was unauthorized by the evidence, and was in direct conflict with the further charge of the court that the inspector, Dudley, the truckman, Anderson, and the plaintiff were all fellow servants, and that, under the testimony, Dudley was under the jurisdiction and subject to the control of the superintendent, Wiles—not an alter ego of the defendant, but a fellow servant of the plaintiff.

W. E. Kay and W. G. Brantley, for plaintiff in error. D. W. Krauss and Toomer & Reynolds, for defendant in error.

LAMAR, J. There was evidence from which the jury could have found that Anderson was transferred from the work on the ground, for which he was competent, to work with a two-wheeled truck on the elevated platform, for which he was alleged to be incompetent. This assignment to a new department of work was by the concurrent action of Wiles, who was in charge of the hands in the yard, and Dudley, who was inspector of lumber on the elevated platform. All three were fellow servants of the plaintiff, Ingram. The record presents the question as to the responsibility of the master for injuries inflicted by Anderson upon Ingram; Anderson being competent for the work for which he was selected, and alleged to be incompetent for the new task to which he had been assigned, to fill a vacancy caused by temporary absence of the regular truckman. The master is bound to furnish safe material and safe appliances with which, and competent servants by whom, his work is to be carried on. If, however, he complies with this requirement of the law, and a fellow servant of the plaintiff, out of proper instrumentalities and agencies, makes an improper selection, the employer is not liable to a co-employee injured as a result thereof. If the master supplies the proper material, and the plaintiff's fellow servant selects, from the mass of good lumber supplied, a piece which is too small, or puts it together so unskillfully as to construct an unsafe ladder, staging, or scaffold, in consequence of which the same falls, the resulting injury is referable to the negligence of the fellow servant in making an unfit selection, or in improperly putting together the proper material furnished. By parity of reasoning, when the master performs the duty imposed by law of employing competent servants, and a fellow servant of the plaintiff, without the master's knowledge or authority, selects, from the competent servants thus employed, one who is unsuited for the special task, and transfers him from work he can do to work he cannot do, the act of thus assigning him is not the negligence of the master, but that of a fellow servant. It was therefore error to charge that whether the servant alleged to be incompetent was assigned to the task by the general superintendent, or by the inspector, in either case they would be the company's alter ego, and negligence by either would be attributable to it. A fellow servant, without the master's knowledge, cannot, by an assumption of authority, convert himself into a vice principal or alter ego.

Treating the assignment of Anderson to the new duty as the equivalent of an original employment for that purpose, the result is not different. The duty of selection need not always be performed by the master himself. In the nature of things, in the case of corporations such selection must be by agents. If the one to whom this duty has been committed is negligent, it is treated as the negligence of the master. On the other hand, if the agent making the selection was diligent, it is to be treated as the diligence of the master. If the record is silent as to whether the agent making the selection was negligent or diligent, then it is the same as though the record were silent as to the master's conduct in transferring Anderson from one task to another. There is no presumption in such a case against the master, nor does any presumption arise from the happening of the injury; but it must appear that the master, or the person authorized to make the selection, knew, or negligently failed to learn, of the incompetency of the person selected. McDonald v. Eagle & Phenix Co., 68 Ga. 842. There is here neither evidence nor presumption that Dudley himself was incompetent, or that he knew, or was negligent in failing to know, that Anderson was unsuited for the work of trucking on the elevated platform.

One would suppose that there were many cases in which the question presented by the charge here had been discussed and decided, but, after diligent search, we have found few bearing on the point. In Norfolk R. Co. v. Thomas' Adm'r (Va.) 17 S. E. 884, 44 Am. St. Rep. 909, it was raised, but left open. In other cases, where a fireman had been permitted to do the work of an engineer, the company was held liable to the injured plaintiff; it appearing that the conductor who made the assignment was authorized so to do by the company, and knew of the incompetency of the fireman, or else that the defendant knew of the custom to permit firemen to perform such duties. Harper v. Indianapolis R. Co., 47 Mo. 507, 4 Am. Rep. 353; O. & M. Ry. Co. v. Collarn, 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 22 Atl. 1094, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181; Henry v. Brady, 9 Daly, 142; Fraser v. Schroeder, 163 Ill. 459, 45 N. E. 288. Compare Blackman v. Thomson-Houston Co., 102 Ga. 69, 29 S. E. 120. There are, however, a few cases directly in point, from which we quote. In Felch v. Allen, 98 Mass. 572, it was held that if, without authority from the master in whose warehouse they are engaged in the same work, one of two servants directs the other to use in the work an elevator in a dangerous and improper manner, for which it was not intended, and the master had no reason to believe that it would be so used, and such other, in complying with this direction, is injured by a fall caused by a defect in the elevator, the master is not liable in damages for the injury. In Greenwald v. Marquette R. R., 49 Mich. 199, 18 N. W. 513, an engineer allowed a fireman to operate the engine. Without warning, he backed the train; and the court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, as the injury was occasioned by the negligence of the fireman, who was a fellow servant. See, also, Thompson v. Lake Shore R. Co., 84 Mich. 281, 47 N. W. 584. In Houston & Texas Central R. Co. v. Myers, 55 Tex. 110, the engineer was competent, but was not on the engine, which was being operated by the fireman, who backed rapidly without giving the signal. The court said: "Conceding that it was an act of negligence upon the part of the engineer to leave the engine in the hands of the fireman, to be operated by him, and that it was an act of negligence for the fireman to attempt to operate the same, still the testimony shows that the engineer selected by the company and placed in charge of the engine was a good and competent man for the business, and that this is the isolated act of negligence shown by the record, upon his part. Neither is there any complaint but that the fireman was a good and competent man for the business for which he had been selected, and to which he had been assigned by the company. If, as claimed by appellee, the injury was the direct result of negligence of the engineer and fireman, then he not only failed to show the use of [want of] reasonable care upon the part of the company in selecting and retaining such servants, but he affirmatively shows that the engineer is a good and competent man for the business. Upon clear and well-established principles of law, appellee could not recover for the injury on account of the neglect of his fellow servants, under the facts and circumstances of this case." In Core v. Ohio River Railroad Co., 38 W. Va. 468, 18 S. E. 600, where a brakeman was injured by the alleged negligence of a fireman who had been permitted by the engineer to operate the locomotive, the court held that it was necessary for the plaintiff to show that the fireman was incompetent, that he was negligent, that the defendant knew he was unskilled, that the plaintiff did not know it, that the fireman was managing the engine, and "that the defendant permitted, either expressly or impliedly, the fireman to manage the engine." Compare Wright v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 25 N. Y. 562, which, however, has been criticised because there the inexperienced engineer was assigned to duty by the superintendent, whose negligence was that of the company.

There was evidence to warrant the contention on the part of the defendant that the injury was the result of an accident, and it was entitled to a charge adjusted to that theory, without a special request therefor.

The foregoing conclusion requires the grant of a new trial, and it is unnecessary to consider in detail the other grounds of the motion.

CAWTHON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Feb. 12, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—DIRECT BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—OTHER CRIMES—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE—TRIAL—RECEPTION OF VERDICT—PRESENCE OF ACCUSED.

1. Prior to 1898 any criminal case might be carried to the Supreme Court on a direct bill of exceptions specifying the errors of law complained of, without making a motion for a new trial.

2. Act Dec. 20, 1898 (Acts 1898, p. 92; Van Epps' Code Supp. § 6241), authorizing the Supreme Court to consider assignments of error in a direct bill of exceptions, where no motion for a new trial is made, is simply declaratory of the law as it existed at the date of the passage of the act, and is not exhaustive of the right of this court to entertain jurisdiction of direct writs of error.

3. This court cannot consider as a brief of evidence a document appearing as such in a record or bill of exceptions, unless the record or bill of exceptions affirmatively shows that the document has been approved as correct by the trial judge; and this is true, even in a case where counsel agree in the Supreme Court that the document is a correct brief of the evidence and may be considered as such.

4. Evidence of the commission of a crime other than the one charged is generally not admissible.

5. "To make one criminal act evidence of another, a connection between them must have existed in the mind of the actor, linking them together for some purpose he intended to accomplish; or it must be necessary to identify the person of the actor, by a connection which shows that he who committed the one must have done the other."

6. "If the evidence be so dubious that the judge does not clearly perceive the connection, the benefit of the doubt should be given to the prisoner, instead of suffering the minds of the jurors to be prejudiced by an independent fact, carrying with it no proper evidence of the particular guilt."

7. Where the court, over objection, admits certain evidence, with the statement that the objection will be passed upon at a later stage of the trial, it is incumbent upon the objecting party, if the evidence be inadmissible, to direct the court's attention thereto, either before or at the close of the testimony, and to move to exclude it; and upon his failure to do this he will be held to have waived his objection.

8. Even if an attorney, by virtue of the relation of attorney and client existing between himself and one charged with a felony, has no implied authority to waive the right of his client to be present at the reception of the verdict, if the attorney makes an express waiver to this effect in the presence of the client, who does not at the time repudiate the action of his counsel, a verdict afterwards received, in the absence of the accused and in consequence of the waiver, will not be held to be invalid at the instance of the accused, seeking, after the reception of the verdict, to repudiate the action of his counsel in making the waiver.

9. Before a verdict received in the absence of the accused will be held to be invalid, it is incumbent upon the accused to show that he was in custody of the law at the time the waiver was made, that he made no waiver of his right to be present, and that he did not authorize his counsel to make such waiver for him, and, if an unauthorized waiver has been made by counsel, that he has not ratified the same, or allowed the court to act upon the waiver of counsel after he has notice that the same has been made.

10. This case having been brought to the Supreme Court by a direct bill of exceptions, no motion for a new trial having been made, and it appearing, in my opinion, that no ruling or order of the trial judge upon which error was assigned necessarily controlled the verdict rendered, it follows that, under the act of 1898 (Van Epps' Code Supp. § 6241) and the former adjudications of this court, such rulings and orders cannot be reviewed. Taylor v. Reese, 108 Ga. 379, 33 S. E. 917; Smith v. Smith, 112 Ga. 351, 37 S. E. 407; Wright v. Hollywood Cemetery Co., 112 Ga. 894, 38 S. E. 94, 52 L. R. A. 621 (6); Ocean Steamship Co. v. Hamilton, 112 Ga. 901, 38 S. E. 204; Ray v. Morgan, 112 Ga. 923, 38 S. E. 335; Darien Bank v. Clarke Lumber Co., 112 Ga. 951, 38 S. E. 363; Parker v. Medlock, 117 Ga. 813, 45 S. E. 61; Binion v. Georgia Southern & Fla. Ry. Co., 118 Ga. 282, 45 S. E. 278; Cable Co. v. Parantha, 118 Ga. 913, 45 S. E. 787.

Per Fish, P. J., dissenting.

11. Since the passage of the act approved December 20, 1898 (Acts 1898, p. 92), "to dispense with a motion for new trial and filing brief of the evidence, and to authorize a direct bill of exceptions, in certain cases," to authorize the reversal of a judgment on a bill of exceptions sued out directly to this court, without any motion for a new trial having first been filed in the court below, it must appear that "the judgment, decree, or verdict has necessarily been controlled by one or more rulings, orders, decisions, or charges of the court," complained of in the bill of exceptions. The present case, in my opinion, does not come within this requirement of the law.

12. Error will never be presumed, but must be clearly shown. Hence, where there is before this court no brief of evidence which it is authorized to consider, the judgment of the court below should not be reversed because the judge admitted evidence of an alleged independent crime; there being nothing before this court to show whether the transaction as to which the evidence objected to was admitted was or was not connected with the crime of which the accused was charged.

13. On the trial of one indicted for murder, evidence of a former attempt by the accused to kill the deceased is admissible, even though it should incidentally develop that in such unsuccessful attempt another person, with whose murder the accused was not charged, was killed.

R. D. Cawthon was convicted of murder, and brings error. Reversed.

COBB, J. Cawthon was convicted of murder, and sentenced to death. He made no motion for a new trial, but brings his case by a direct writ of error, alleging that certain errors prejudicial to him were committed at the trial.

1, 2. The Attorney General suggests in his brief that this court has no jurisdiction to pass upon any question made in the bill of exceptions, for the reason that the verdict was not necessarily controlled by any of the rulings, decisions, or charges complained of, within the meaning of the act of December 20, 1898. See Acts 1898, p. 92; Van Epps' Code Supp. § 6241. In order to determine the true interpretation to be placed upon the act of 1898, it is necessary to consider the practice as it existed in this court at the date of and prior to the passage of that act. The act establishing this court declared that "any criminal cause may be carried up to the Supreme Court on a bill of exceptions, in writing, specifying the error or errors of law complained of," and that "any cause of a civil nature, either on the law or equity side of the superior court, may, in like manner, be carried to the Supreme Court on a bill of exceptions specifying the error or errors complained of in any decision or judgment." See 1 Ga. vi, vii. The first criminal case brought to this court was Sealy v. State, 1 Ga. 213, 44 Am. Dec. 641, and the second was Reynolds v. State, 1 Ga. 222. Hines Holt and Henry L. Benning represented the plaintiff in error in each case. In the first no motion for a new trial was made, but the case was brought to this court upon a bill of exceptions assigning error upon a ruling refusing to continue the case, upon rulings made while the jury was being impaneled, and upon rulings made on the admission and rejection of evidence. The court entertained jurisdiction of the writ of error, and reversed the judgment. In Reynolds v. State the bill of exceptions assigned error upon various rulings at the trial, upon the overruling of a motion to arrest the judgment, and upon the overruling of a motion for a new trial. The court entertained jurisdiction of this writ of error, and awarded a new trial. While no question was made in either case, or directly passed upon by the court, as to what was the proper practice to be pursued, or what was the proper construction of the act organizing the court, the practice followed by lawyers of the standing of those who represented the plaintiffs in error, and acquiesced in by such lawyers as Levi B. Smith, E. H. Worrill, and Absalom H. Chappell, who represented the state in the respective cases, is entitled to very grave consideration, when it is to be determined what was the opinion of the profession at that time as to the practice to be pursued in bringing cases to this court. An examination of the records of this court in the earlier volumes will show that the practice above indicated was followed generally by the profession throughout the state; that is, the losing party determined for himself whether he would bring an error of law to this court by direct bill of exceptions, or embody it in a motion for a new trial, if the ruling was of such a character as could be properly made the ground of such a motion. That part of the act of 1845 (Laws 1845, p. 18) establishing the Supreme Court which declared what causes should be brought before it was carried into the Code of 1863 in the following language: "Either party in a civil cause, and the defendant in any criminal proceeding in the superior courts of this state, may except to any sentence, judgment, decision, or decree of such court, or of the judge thereof in any matter heard at chambers. Such bill of exceptions shall specify plainly the decision complained of, and the alleged error, and shall be signed by the party, or his attorney or solicitor." Code 1863, § 4160. So much of the provision just quoted as relates to criminal cases is embodied in Pen. Code 1895, § 1070, in the same language. In the early history of this court many cases, both civil and criminal, in which verdicts were rendered, were brought to this court by direct writ of error, without motions for new trials having been made. In the later history of the court, especially in the more recent years, the practice of making a motion for a new trial, in all cases where such a remedy was appropriate, has prevailed; the bill of exceptions bringing the case to this court assigning error upon the judgment overruling the motion. Prior to 1898 there was no legislation having the effect to change or modify the practice as it existed in the early history of the court. The practice act passed in that year (Acts 1898, p. 92) is in the following language:

15. See Criminal Law, vol. 14, Cent. Dig. §§ 823, 824.

"An act to dispense with a motion for new trial and filing brief of evidence, and to authorize a direct bill of exceptions, in certain cases.

"Be it enacted, * * * that in any case now or hereafter brought, where the judgment, decree, or verdict has necessarily been controlled by one or more rulings, orders, decisions, or charges of the court, and the losing party desires to except to such judgment, decree or verdict, and to assign error on the ruling, order, decision, or charge of the court, it shall not be necessary to make a motion for new trial, nor file a brief of the evidence, but the party complaining shall be permitted to present a bill of exceptions containing only so much of the evidence or statement of facts as may be necessary to enable the Supreme Court to clearly understand the ruling, order, decision, or charge complained of."

This act came before this court for construction for the first time in Taylor v. Reese, 108 Ga. 379, 33 S. E. 917, which was an application for a mandamus to compel Judge Reese to sign a bill of exceptions tendered to him in a criminal case in which no motion for a new trial had been filed, and which he had refused to certify solely upon the ground that in his opinion he had no authority to do so. This case was thoroughly and carefully considered, and the conclusion was reached that the accused had a right to bring his case to this court in the manner above indicated. In the course of the opinion Mr. Presiding Justice Lumpkin says: "The act of 1898 simply gives in explicit terms a right of which parties litigant frequently availed themselves before its passage." And several cases are cited to illustrate the correctness of this statement. The number of cases in which parties have availed themselves of this right since the establishment of the court could be largely increased by an examination of the records on file in the office of the clerk, as well as the reports of the cases in the published volumes. The learned Presiding Justice further says: "There is enough in each of the bills of exceptions tendered to the judge to enable this court to clearly understand and pass upon the rulings complained of; and, if the positions taken by counsel for the accused are well founded, it was the right of the accused to have the jury determine the question whether or not they were guilty of a lower grade of homicide than murder. If the judge committed the errors alleged, they were deprived of this substantial right, and the verdicts actually rendered were necessarily so far controlled by the judge's action as to necessitate a new trial." In the light of what is said in the opinion in the mandamus case, it is important now to look to the opinion in the criminal case, when it finally reached this court (Taylor v. State, 34 S. E. 2), to see what were the assignments of error therein raised. One of the assignments of error was upon the refusal of the judge to charge, in substance, that if, at the time of the killing, Taylor was a member of a chain gang, of which Dennard, the deceased, was a guard, and that if Dennard endeavored to whip him, before they could find that the attempted punishment was lawful, they must believe from the evidence that the chain gang was a legal one, and the burden was on the state to prove that it was. Another assignment of error was upon the refusal of the judge to charge that if the evidence failed to show that the weapon used was one in its nature calculated to produce death, and they further believed that the person striking the blow did not in fact intend to kill Dennard, nevertheless the blow was unlawful, and they would be justified in finding that the accused was guilty of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. Another assignment of error was upon the refusal of the judge to charge the law of involuntary manslaughter, though requested in writing to do so. The bill of exceptions also assigns error upon the failure of the judge to charge upon the subject of voluntary manslaughter. Each of these assignments of error was passed upon by this court.

It is now contended that, since the passage of the act of 1898, this court has no jurisdiction to entertain a direct bill of exceptions, in any case where a verdict has been rendered and a motion for a new trial would be an appropriate remedy, until such a motion has been made and passed upon by the trial judge, except in those cases where it appears distinctly from the bill of exceptions and the record that the ruling complained of was of such a character as to constrain the jury to find the verdict rendered; that is, the ruling must be of such a character that no jury could have legally rendered any other verdict than the one complained of. It is claimed that the effect of the act of 1898 is to abolish altogether the right of this court to review by direct writ of error any other rulings than those of the character above indicated, and that the effect of the act was to work a radical change in the practice which was more or less followed from the time the court was established down to the passage of the act of 1898, and even since that date. This court has on many occasions commended the practice of making a motion for a new trial before filing a bill of exceptions, thus giving to the trial judge an opportunity to review his rulings which are complained of. This court has never held, so far as we are advised, that it was absolutely necessary to make a motion for a new trial, in order to give it jurisdiction to review an error of law in a ruling made in the trial of a case. If the act of 1898 be construed as contended for by counsel for the state, it would be applicable to very few cases; and if it be given the construction which we give it, it preserves to litigants a right which has existed ever since the establishment of the court. We do not think it was the purpose of the General Assembly to abolish this long-established practice; nor do we think the language of the act, properly construed, has this effect. We did not think so when the case of Taylor v. Reese was before us. The language of Mr. Presiding Justice Lumpkin, above quoted, who was speaking for the entire court, after a careful investigation, both individually and collectively, indicates that it was our opinion at that time that the act of 1898 was only declaratory of existing law, being a recognition of the practice which had long been followed, with the approval of the bar and without the disapproval of the bench. It is impossible for any one to carefully examine the assignments of error which were dealt with in Taylor v. State, and reach the conclusion that the act of 1898 was then construed as is now contended for by counsel for the state. None of the rulings which were considered and passed upon in that case were of such a character as to constrain the jury to find the verdict rendered. The alleged errors were, as held in Taylor v. Reese, simply of such a character as deprived the accused of a substantial right, and, using the language of the learned justice who wrote the opinion, "the verdicts actually rendered were necessarily so far controlled by the judge's action as to necessitate a new trial." A careful consideration of the opinion in Taylor v. Reese, as well as that in Taylor v. State, cannot lead to any other conclusion than that it was the opinion of the court, for whom the author of those opinions was speaking, that under the act of 1898 the accused in a criminal case could by a direct bill of exceptions complain of any error committed during the progress of the trial which deprived him of a substantial right and required a reversal of the judgment of the trial court. These opinions were concurred in by six justices.

It is claimed now that in subsequent opinions a different rule is laid down. Any ruling or language, which is in conflict with the ruling in Taylor v. Reese, that may be contained in the case of Ocean Steamship Company v. Hamilton, 112 Ga. 901, 38 S. E. 204, Ray v. Morgan, 112 Ga. 923, 38 S. E. 335, and Darien Bank v. Clarke Lumber Company, 112 Ga. 951, 38 S. E. 363, cannot be treated as modifying the decision in Taylor v. Reese, for the reason that none of the decisions named were concurred in by six justices: the last being concurred in by only four justices, and the other two by five. There is nothing in Parker v. Medlock, 117 Ga. 813, 45 S. E. 61, to conflict with the view now presented, for the reason that it was simply ruled in that case that a direct bill of exceptions would lie in a case where the ruling complained of controlled the verdict. This was true before the passage of the act of 1898. If there is anything said or ruled in Smith v. Smith, 112 Ga. 351, 37 S. E. 407, or in Cable Company v. Parantha, 118 Ga. 913, 45 S. E. 787, which is in conflict with Taylor v. Reese, these decisions must yield to the earlier ruling.

3. There appears in the record what purports to be a brief of the evidence in the case; but it does not appear, either from the record or the bill of exceptions, that it has ever been approved by the trial judge. There are certain recitals in the bill of exceptions from which it might be inferred that it was possible that the alleged brief of evidence had been approved. Before this court can consider a document as a brief of evidence, it must appear affirmatively, from the record or the bill of exceptions, that the document has been approved as a brief of the evidence introduced on the trial of the case. Massey v. Pitts, 48 Ga. 124; Spencer v. Railroad Co., 55 Ga. 584; Porter v. State, 56 Ga. 530; Stephens v. Woolbright, 60 Ga. 322; Harrison v. Hall Safe Co., 64 Ga. 558. It is to be said, to the credit of the able and conscientious public officers who represented the state, that the Solicitor General stated in open court that the document appearing in the record was in fact a correct brief of the evidence, and that both he and the Attorney General consented that it should be so treated by this court. We cannot, however, do this, notwithstanding this consent. It is the approval of the brief of evidence by the trial judge which gives this court jurisdiction to consider it. Without such authentication this court has no authority to accept it as a correct transcript of the evidence introduced on the trial; and no consent of parties or counsel can confer jurisdiction to do so. See Massey v. Pitts, 48 Ga. 124; Porter v. State, 56 Ga. 530; Stephens v. Woolbright, 60 Ga. 322; Harrison v. Hall Safe Co., 64 Ga. 558; Hicks v. Brantley, 75 Ga. 885 (a). Some of the earlier decisions contained intimations that consent of counsel would dispense with the necessity of an approval by the trial judge; but in none of these, so far as we can ascertain, was the point expressly adjudicated, and the decisions above cited settle the rule as we have announced it. It has also been held that consent of counsel cannot dispense with the requirements of the law as to the manner in which briefs of evidence shall be prepared. Augusta Southern R. Co. v. Williams, 99 Ga. 75, 24 S. E. 852. We shall therefore deal with the case without reference to the alleged brief of evidence appearing in the record.

4, 5, 6. As the document purporting to be a brief of the evidence in the case cannot be considered, we must look alone to the bill of exceptions, and decide the assignments of error entirely with reference to what is therein contained. Some of these assignments can be properly decided from the recitals in the bill of exceptions. Cawthon was indicted for the murder of Tucker; it being alleged that his death was brought about by poisoning, the article used being strychnine. Tucker died on the 21st of July, 1903. The court allowed the state, over objection of counsel for the accused, to prove that, 10 days before the death of Tucker, Joel Horne, a neighbor, died on the way home from Tucker's house, within an hour or less after taking a drink of peach brandy given to him at that house, and that the symptoms manifested while dying, and the condition of Horne's body after death, indicated that his death resulted from strychnine poisoning. The court also allowed proof by the state chemist that he had found strychnine in a few drops of brandy taken from the bottle from which Horne was alleged to have drank. There was no evidence that the accused ever handled or saw the brandy at any time before the death of Horne. The only evidence connecting the accused with the bottle of brandy was the testimony of the daughter of Tucker, to the effect that after the death of Horne the accused poured out the brandy left in the bottle from which Horne was shown to have drank. This evidence was objected to on the ground that it was evidence of an independent crime not connected with the offense for which the accused was being tried, was irrelevant, and exceedingly prejudicial to the accused. When one is on trial, charged with the commission of a crime, proof of a distinct and independent offense is never admissible, unless there is some logical connection between the two, from which it can be said that proof of the one tends to establish the other. While this rule is general, and subject to few exceptions, still there are some exceptions, as when the extraneous crime forms part of the res gestæ, or is one of a system of mutually dependent crimes, or is evidence of guilty knowledge, or may bear upon the question of the identity of the accused or articles connected with the offense, or is evidence of prior attempts by the accused to commit the same crime upon the victim of the offense for which he stands charged, or where it tends to prove malice, intent, motive, or the like, if such an element enters into the offense charged. See Gillett on Ind. & Col. Ev. § 57; Whart. Crim. Ev. (9th Ed.) § 80 et seq.; Kerr's Law of Homicide, § 469; McKelvey on Ev. §§ 156-157; Underhill's Crim. Ev. § 87 et seq.; 1 Bish. New Crim. Proc. § 1120 et seq.; 1 Gr. Ev. (15th Ed.) § 53; 1 Crim. Law Mag. 29; Farmer v. State, 100 Ga. 41, 28 S. E. 26 (2). In order to justify the admission of evidence relating to an independent crime committed by the accused, it is absolutely essential that there should be evidence establishing the fact that the independent crime was committed by the accused, and satisfactorily connecting that crime with the offense for which the accused is indicted.

Even if the evidence establishes the commission by the accused of the independent offense, it is inadmissible, until it be shown satisfactorily that that crime had some connection with the transaction then under investigation.

Let it be conceded for the moment that the evidence offered in the present case was sufficient to show that Horne died from the effects of poison which had been prepared by the accused for the purpose of bringing about the death of Tucker; is there evidence so connecting the death of Horne with the death of Tucker as that the murder of Horne by the accused in the manner indicated would throw any light upon the question as to whether Tucker came to his death as a result of a poison administered by the accused with murderous intent? If Horne's death resulted from the drink of brandy given to him by Tucker, then the only connection which the accused was shown to have had with Horne's death was that shown by the evidence of Tucker's daughter, to the effect that she saw the accused pour the brandy from the bottle from which Horne drank. The evidence did not show that Tucker's death resulted from drinking any of the brandy contained in the bottle just referred to. In the case of Shaffner v. Commonwealth, 72 Pa. 60, 13 Am. Rep. 649, it is said that, in order for one crime to be evidence of another, there must be a connection between them in the mind of the criminal, or it must be necessary to identify the accused as the person who committed both crimes; and Agnew, J., in the opinion, says: "If the evidence be so dubious that the judge does not clearly perceive the connection, the benefit of the doubt should be given to the prisoner, instead of suffering the minds of the jurors to be prejudiced by an independent fact, carrying with it no proper evidence of the particular guilt." Mr. Underhill, in his work on Criminal Evidence (section 88, p. 110), says: "This connection must clearly appear from the evidence. Whether any connection exists is a judicial question. If the court does not clearly perceive it, the accused should be given the benefit of the doubt, and the evidence should be rejected. The minds of the jurors must not be poisoned and prejudiced against the prisoner by receiving evidence of this irrelevant and dangerous description"—citing the language of Agnew, J., above quoted. See, also, Gillett on Ind. & Col. Ev. § 57, p. 81, where the language of Agnew, J., is also referred to with approval. Applying this rule, we do not think the evidence offered for the purpose of connecting the two crimes alleged to have been committed by the accused was sufficient to authorize evidence of the independent crime.

We have so far dealt with the question as if the evidence was sufficient to show that the accused was guilty of the murder of Horne. Even if it be conceded as established that Horne died from the effects of strychnine poisoning administered with felonious intent, the evidence relied upon to show that the accused was guilty of the murder of Horne is far from satisfactory. The circumstances are such as to raise a grave suspicion, but nothing more than this. The harmful effect of the evidence can readily be seen, when it is considered how slightly the two offenses are connected with each other, if there were really two offenses, as well as how little evidence there was to establish the independent crime, evidence of which was offered for the purpose of throwing light upon the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused of the crime charged in the indictment. It is apparent from the recitals in the bill of exceptions that the accused was on trial as much for the murder of Horne as he was for the murder of Tucker; and, as there was no sufficient connection between the two deaths to authorize proof of the homicide of Horne, we feel constrained to reverse the judgment. The accused was entitled to be tried for the offense charged in the indictment, independently of any other offense not connected with the transaction upon which the indictment was based.

7. The state proved by a witness, who was a physician, that he tasted the contents of the bottle from which the state claimed that Horne drank poisoned brandy, and that in his opinion it contained strychnine. This testimony was objected to; the court stating that it would not rule upon the question at that time, but would allow the evidence to come in for the present. It does not appear that the attention of the court was called at any subsequent stage of the case to the condition upon which this testimony was admitted, or that any motion was made to exclude it. Under the ruling in Stone v. State, 118 Ga. 705, 45 S. E. 680, this affords no cause for a new trial.

8, 9. The accused excepted to the action of the court in receiving the verdict in his absence; the assignment of error in the bill of exceptions being in the following language: "After the evidence, statement of prisoner, the argument of counsel, and the charge of the court had been concluded, and while the jury were out considering their verdict in the case, the presiding judge, with the consent of the defendant's counsel, and in the interest of the safety of the prisoner and the preservation of order, sent the defendant back to jail, and the verdict finding him guilty of murder was received in the absence of the prisoner, who was in jail under this charge, and could not control his own movements; and such reception of the verdict in the absence of the defendant, being also with the consent of defendant's counsel, who stated that they would take no exception thereto, and in the interest of the prisoner's safety and of the preservation of order. The defendant excepts to the receiving of the verdict finding him guilty of murder in his absence, as being illegal and in violation of his constitutional and statutory right to be present in the courtroom when the verdict was received, and says that his counsel, though acting in the most perfect good faith and in the interest of his personal safety, had no legal authority to waive his right to be present, and he says that for this reason the verdict in this case and the sentence based on said verdict should be held to be illegal and set aside." Where the accused is in custody, and does not consent that the verdict shall be received in his absence, the reception of the verdict while he is thus involuntarily absent will render the same illegal. Nolan v. State, 53 Ga. 187, s. c. 55 Ga. 521, 21 Am. Rep. 281; Rose v. State, 20 Ohio, 81; People v. Perkins, 1 Wend. 91; State v. Ford, 30 La. Ann. 311. It is settled in this state that the voluntary absence of the accused at the time the verdict is received will not vitiate the verdict. Barton v. State, 67 Ga. 653, 44 Am. Rep. 743; Robson v. State, 83 Ga. 167, 9 S. E. 610 (9). This doctrine finds support in other states. See Fight v. State, 28 Am. Dec. 626, and notes on page 630; Price v. State, 36 Miss. 531, 72 Am. Dec. 195. This view is, however, opposed by the decisions in Andrews v. State, 2 Sneed, 550, and Sneed v. State, 5 Ark. 431, 41 Am. Dec. 102. By the great weight of authority the accused may himself waive his right to be present, and there are but few decisions to the contrary. Some of the cases both for and against the rule may be found in the note to Fight v. State, 28 Am. Dec. 630. In State v. Kelly, 97 N. C. 404, 2 S. E. 185, 2 Am. St. Rep. 299, the court draws a distinction between capital and lesser felonies, holding that in capital felonies the prisoner must be present at all stages of the trial, while in others he may waive his right to be present. See, also, in this connection, Prine v. Com., 18 Pa. 103, 105. In Smith v. State, 59 Ga. 513, 27 Am. Rep. 393, it was held that, notwithstanding the accused may be in custody, he may consent that the verdict shall be received in his absence, and that a verdict received in his absence in pursuance of such consent is valid, notwithstanding he was at the time confined in jail. This case was not a capital felony, but we are unable to perceive any sound distinction with reference to the prisoner's right to waive his presence between this class of felonies and any other. The law is as careful not to deprive a man unjustly of his liberty as it is of his life, and fairness and regularity is required equally in both classes of cases. Without reference to whether the accused in a felony case can waive his right to be present during the progress of the trial between arraignment and verdict, it may be taken as settled that he may make an express waiver of his right to be present at the reception of the verdict, and that a waiver will be implied from his voluntary absence when he is out on bail. The open question in this state is whether his counsel can make the waiver for him. There is an intimation in Robson v. State, 83 Ga. 167, 9 S. E. 610 (9), that counsel might make an express waiver; but the point was not directly involved. In Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 630, Judge Nisbet thus speaks of the relation which an attorney bears his client: "He represents his client. He is the substitute of his client. Whatever the client may do in the conduct of his cause, therefore, his counsel may do." The weight of authority in other jurisdictions seems, however, to be that counsel cannot waive the right of the accused to be present. See Rex v. Streak, 2 Car. & P. 413, 12 E. C. L. 646; Fight v. State, 28 Am. Dec. 630 (notes); State v. Kelly, 97 N. C. 407, 2 S. E. 185, 2 Am. St. Rep. 299, and cases cited. In Rose v. State, 20 Ohio, 84, it was held that counsel could not make an implied waiver by simply failing to object to the reception of the verdict, and that it was doubtful whether he could make an express waiver. These decisions seem to draw no distinction between a waiver made by counsel in the presence of his client and one made in his absence. While counsel may have no implied authority, growing out of the relation of attorney and client, to make a waiver of this character for his client in his absence, we can see no good reason why the accused would not be bound by an express waiver made in his presence. Such a waiver is to all intents and purposes the waiver of the client. It would be trifling with the court to allow it to act upon a waiver thus made, and then impeach its action on the ground that counsel had been guilty of an unauthorized act; and while we recognize fully that there are limitations upon the authority of counsel, the client, even though he be charged with a capital felony, should not be allowed to impeach the authority of his counsel, when he acts in his presence, unless he promptly repudiates the unauthorized act before the court bases action upon it.

Speaking for myself, I am inclined to the opinion that the right to make the waiver resides in the counsel, whether the accused be present or not at the time of the waiver; his authority arising from the mere relation of attorney and client. The reasoning of the courts that hold to the contrary is not, in my opinion, satisfactory or by any means conclusive. Counsel is generally much better able to take care of the rights of the accused than he is himself, and the accused is better protected from improvident waivers by his case being left to the control of his counsel than if he were to take charge of the same in his own behalf. But under the facts of this case it is not necessary for a direct ruling to be made upon this point, as, in our opinion, a waiver by counsel in the presence of the accused, unrepudiated by him at the time of the waiver, is so binding as to make valid any action of the court based thereon. When it appears that a verdict has been received, the presumption is that it was received in the manner and under the circumstances authorized by law, and it is incumbent upon him who attacks it to show reasons why it is invalid. The record in the present case discloses that the accused did not himself make an express waiver of his presence. It also appears that his counsel did make an express waiver, but it does not appear that the accused was absent when this waiver was made. It is incumbent upon him to show in his assignment of error that he was absent when this express waiver was made; for if he was present, and did not object to its reception, he would be bound by it. This waiver by counsel appears to have been made after the charge was concluded, and while the jury were considering their verdict, and in consequence of this waiver the judge "sent the defendant back to jail." It is therefore to be inferred that the accused was present in the courtroom at the time of the waiver. In any event, when the accused shows that his counsel had made an express waiver of his right to be present, and had agreed with the judge that no exception would be taken to the reception of the verdict in his absence, it will be presumed that the accused was present when the waiver was made, in the absence of a showing to the contrary; and especially would there be such a presumption if, as claimed, counsel had no implied right to make the waiver.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except FISH, P. J., and CANDLER, J., who dissent.

CANDLER, J. "Hard cases make bad law," and it is because I believe that this maxim is about to be demonstrated in the present case that I feel constrained to dissent from the judgment rendered by the majority.

1. Unquestionably there were instances, prior to the passage of the act of 1898, where this court entertained jurisdiction of bills of exceptions brought directly to various rulings of the trial court without any motion for a new trial having been made; but there is not, so far as I am aware, any case in our Reports which rules that this was the proper practice, or in which the correctness of the practice was called in question. It will be observed that the only cases cited on this subject in the majority opinion are the first two criminal cases ever brought to this court, and presumably, long before the act of 1898 was passed, the practice had fallen into disuse. At all events, the cases cited are at best mere physical precedents, and contain no ruling of benefit in arriving at what the law then was. The General Assembly seems to have realized the need of legislation in order to enable dissatisfied parties to bring cases to this court, under certain circumstances, without first filing a motion for a new trial; and by the act of 1898 they "authorized" the practice, first throwing around it well-defined restrictions. Of all the legislation relating to the bringing of bills of exceptions to this court, this was the first act bearing on this particular practice. How, then, can it be said that the act of 1898 was merely declaratory of existing law?

The case of Taylor v. Reese, 108 Ga. 379, 33 S. E. 917, so confidently relied on in the opinion of the majority, I do not think has any bearing upon the case now under consideration. That was a mandamus to require a judge of the superior court to certify a bill of exceptions. Bolled down, the holding of this court was nothing more nor less than that the reason given by the judge for refusing to certify, viz., that no motion for a new trial had been made, was insufficient in view of the act of 1898, and that there was enough in the bill of exceptions tendered the judge to enable this court to clearly understand and pass upon the rulings complained of. A construction of the act of 1898 was not called for, and the statement that that act "simply gives in explicit terms a right of which parties litigant frequently availed themselves before its passage" is purely obiter. I am not willing to concede, however, that Mr. Presiding Justice Lumpkin used the language quoted in the sense given it in the majority opinion. That he meant to recognize that the practice of bringing cases to this court by direct bill of exceptions without a motion for a new trial had been indulged in before the passage of the act of 1898 seems clear; but that it was in his mind to hold, as is now held by the majority, that that act "is not exhaustive of the right of this court to entertain jurisdiction of direct writs of error," I cannot bring myself to believe, in view of the fact that he delivered the opinion in the subsequent case of Smith v. Smith, 112 Ga. 351, 37 S. E. 407, where for the first time the construction of the act of 1898 was directly involved, and where it was held in unmistakable language that since its passage "such rulings only as necessarily controlled the verdict or judgment rendered" can be properly brought to this court by direct bill of exceptions, without a motion for a new trial having been first filed in the court below. That the interpretation now given by the majority to the ruling in Taylor v. Reese is forced and utterly unwarranted seems to me to be conclusively demonstrated by the fact that not only was the opinion in Smith v. Smith written by the same learned justice who spoke for the court in Taylor v. Reese, but Taylor v. Reese is actually cited in the Smith Case as authority for the position which I now maintain, and in direct connection with the language which I have just quoted. There are other cases which follow the last cited, not one of which is sought to be overruled, and some of which have been decided by this court as now constituted. See Binlon v. Ga. So. R. Co., 118 Ga. 282, 45 S. E. 276; Cable Co. v. Parantha, 118 Ga. 913, 45 S. E. 787. I conclude, therefore, that in the present state of the law, where no motion for a new trial has been filed in the court below, a bill of exceptions to this court must, in order to authorize a reversal of the judgment, or indeed to enable this court to consider the questions sought to be made, show that "the judgment, decree, or verdict has necessarily been controlled by one or more rulings" complained of, and that, unless the present bill of exceptions comes within that rule, there is no warrant for reversing the judgment of the court below. However true it may be that laws do not always express their meaning, I am willing to give this one the benefit of the doubt, and to believe that it means what it says.

2. I fully concur in the opinion of the majority that there is before this court no legal brief of evidence, and that we have no power to act on the suggestion of counsel, and consider the unapproved document appearing in the transcript of the record and purporting to be a brief of the evidence introduced on the trial in the court below. It follows that whatever rulings are made by us depending on a knowledge of the evidence must be made solely on the strength of what appears in the bill of exceptions. That document does not undertake to set out verbatim the testimony of any witness, or to quote in any way from what counsel agreed was a correct brief of the evidence. It complains in general terms that the court allowed the state to prove the death of Horne after drinking from a bottle of peach brandy belonging to Tucker, and also that the accused was seen to pour out what remained of the brandy in the bottle, and that a few drops of that brandy, when analyzed, were found to contain strychnine. It does not appear that at the time this evidence was offered it was objected that there was nothing to connect the death of Horne with that of Tucker. The objection made to it seems to have been that the accused was not put on notice by the indictment that such evidence would be introduced, and that it was not shown that prior to the death of Horne the accused ever had possession of the brandy. The bill of exceptions does not even state that there was no other evidence to connect the two occurrences. It is a part of the a, b, c of the law that error will not be presumed, but must be clearly shown; and I cannot consent to hold, where no brief of evidence is before this court, that it was error for the court to admit certain evidence complained of in the bill of exceptions, on the ground that the remaining evidence, which is not here, and of which we are judicially in complete ignorance, failed to connect it with the crime of which the accused stood charged. I am equally unwilling to hold, as must be done in order to say that the ruling complained of constrained the verdict, that the jury were compelled as matter of law to believe these witnesses, or that without their testimony the accused might not legally have been convicted.

3. While I freely admit that evidence of the poisoning of Horne as an independent crime would not be admissible to prove that the accused killed Tucker, I maintain that evidence of a previous attempt by the accused to kill Tucker was admissible, and that its admissibility was not affected by the fact that it incidentally developed that in the attempt mentioned Horne lost his life. And where, as was done in this case, the trial judge especially instructed the jury that they were not to consider the evidence as going to prove that the accused was guilty of an independent crime, I insist that the admission of the evidence was not erroneous. It was shown that Horne died under suspicious circumstances after drinking Tucker's brandy, which the accused had had an opportunity to poison, and that immediately thereafter the accused was seen to pour out the brandy that remained in the bottle. It was also shown that a few drops of brandy sticking to the sides of the bottle contained strychnine. The jury might well have inferred that the pouring out of the brandy by the accused was done for the purpose of concealing the fact that it had been poisoned; and this, in my opinion, furnished a sufficient link to connect the so-called independent crime with the one of which the accused was charged. On the trial of A. for shooting and killing B., evidence that, some time previously to the transaction under investigation, A. had shot and killed C., would not, without more, be admissible; but there could be no objection to showing that, in an attempt to kill B., A. had shot at him, but missed him, and killed C. Of like character, in my opinion, is the evidence in the present case of the death of Horne.

I can see no warrant for reversing the judgment on anything appearing in the present bill of exceptions.

GADDESS et al. v. NORRIS' EX'RS et al.

WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—PARTIES.

1. In an action to construe a will, where the issue was distinctly made as to the validity of the will, and the question whether or not the grandchildren of testator have an interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, and, if so, the extent of their interest, depends on the determination of that question, they are necessary parties.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fauquier County.

Bill by Norris' executors and others against Gaddess and others, to construe a will. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Moore & Keith and Henry E. Davis, for appellants. Munford, Hunton, Williams & Anderson, for appellees.

WHITTLE, J. This is an appeal from a decree of the circuit court of Fauquier county, construing the will of Henry De Butt Norris, late of that county, deceased.

The will is as follows:

"I, Henry De Butt Norris, of the County of Fauquier and State of Virginia, do make this my last will and testament.

"Item 1st. I bequeath the following legacies to servants or employes now in my service, to-wit:—to Ellen Flynn the sum of five hundred dollars, and to Lewis Fletcher, Sallie Braxton, and Adeline Wright, each the sum of one hundred dollars, provided they continue in my service till my death; but should either of them be not then in my employ and service, this legacy to him or her shall be void and lapse.

"Item 2nd. I desire that the farm where I now reside known as 'Barrymore,' including that portion bought of Margaret A. Wright and Martha Emma Wright, and containing in all four hundred and one acres, more or less, shall pass to the trustees hereinafter appointed, for the use and benefit of my son Henry C. Norris, subject to the same trusts and limitations as hereafter mentioned in clause fourth; and I therefore request my children in whom the title has been vested, at my request by deed from Chas. R. Flinch to Mrs. Edna Norris, to convey the said tract or tracts of land to said trustees to be held by them in and on the trusts aforesaid (as presently recited) for the use and benefit of said Henry C. Norris, and should any of my children fail or refuse to unite in conveying said property to said trustees, as herein requested, then the devise and bequest hereinafter made in his or her favor shall be rescinded and void as to him or her thus failing or refusing, and the same shall pass and be held by said trustees for the use and benefit of said Henry C. Norris; and in the event of all of my children failing or refusing to make said conveyance, then the whole of my estate hereinafter devised and bequeathed shall be held by said trustees for Henry C. Norris, as the sole beneficiary of the trust.

"Item 3d. I bequeath to the said Henry C. Norris all my furniture, books, paintings and household effects, and all live stock and farming implements on said farm of 'Barrymore' as a gift, and not subject to the limitations and trusts as set forth in clause fourth.

"Item 4th. I devise and bequeath to the said trustees hereinafter named all the rest and residue of my property, both real and personal, to be divided into six equal shares or parts, and one share each shall be allotted and held for my six children—Golda Calhoun Saunders, Alexander J. Norris, Marie A. Saunders, Emma P. Norris, Virginia G. Norris and Dudley Norris—during their respective lives in and upon the following trusts: That said trustees shall collect and receive the rents, issues, interests and profits of said properties both real and personal, and after adding one per cent. of said income yearly to the capital shall pay and apply the balance to the use and benefit of said children respectively during their lives. The shares of my daughters and the income thereof to be for their sole and separate use, free from any control of their husbands or liability to be in any way pledged for their debts or obligations; that said trustees shall have power to sell and reinvest any of said properties or securities and shall keep a separate trust account of each share; and that each of said children shall have power of appointment, that is to dispose of his or her share by will in favor of any of his or her issue; and in case of any of my said children dying and leaving issue without having made a will, then his or her share shall pass to his or her issue; and in case any of my said children should die without issue or intestate, then his or her share shall be divided among his or her surviving brothers and sisters, to be held by said trustees upon the same trusts.

"But said trustees shall permit my son Henry C. Norris to occupy and use the property devised and bequeathed for his use and benefit in the second clause above without accountability for the rents, profits or income thereof, and furthermore, they may keep any real estate that may pass to them under the fourth clause above, intact and undivided if in their judgment it be best to do so, until it can be divided or sold, and re-invested to advantage, dividing the rents and profits among the several shares as above provided.

"Item 5th. Anything that I may have given, or may in my life time give, to any of my children, is a gift, and shall not be treated as a debt or advancement, nor be deducted from any of the devisees or bequests herein made.

"Item 6th. I hereby nominate and appoint Henry C. Norris, Alexander J. Norris and my son-in-law William H. Saunders, the executor of this will, and trustees for the trusts herein provided; and if in the event of a vacancy by reason of death or otherwise, I nominate and appoint Dudley Norris as an executor and trustee to fill such vacancy when he shall have become twenty-one years of age. And I request that they shall be allowed to qualify without security.

"Item 7th. Should any difference of opinion occur between my said executors or trustees as to the holding and retaining or re-investing of property or securities or otherwise in the discharge of their duties, then, so long as there shall be three of them acting, the decision of two of them shall be conclusive; and in the event there be only two of them acting, then the opinion of Henry C. Norris shall prevail."

"(Codicil)

"I, H. D. B. Norris, of Marshall, Fauquier county, Virginia, do make this my codicil to my will dated the 25th day of November, 1893, and I hereby expressly confirm my said will, excepting so far as the disposition of my property is changed by this codicil.

"I desire that my dear friend Alexander J. Morrison, of London, England, in whose judgment and sense of justice I have full confidence, shall make settlement of all matters of business between my estate and my son-in-law W. H. Saunders, both as to our personal accounts and the real estate business of W. H. Saunders & Co. in the manner following: I do not desire any public appraisal of the business or the property owned by the said firm, but it is my will that our personal accounts and the accounts of the said firm be submitted to the executors of my will and that they furnish Mr. Morrison with such statements and information as may be necessary to a settlement as aforesaid:

"I direct also, that my said son-in-law shall have such time as he may desire to make payment of any money that may be due my estate by him at the time of my death, such time not to exceed five years after my decease.

"If my said son-in-law do not concur in the aforesaid manner of settlement between him and my estate, or if my said friend Alexander J. Morrison be not living at the time of my death, then I direct that my executors make settlement with my son-in-law as to said private and firm accounts relying on their discretion and fairness to all concerned."

It is conceded that there were grandchildren of the testator living at the commencement of this litigation, who are yet living, and who are not parties to the proceeding. The issue as to the validity of the will is distinctly made by the pleadings, and the question whether or not the grandchildren have an interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, and, if so, the extent of their interest, depends upon the determination of that question. This being the case, it is plain that the rights of the grandchildren are directly involved in the controversy, and must be affected by any decree that may be pronounced. They are therefore indispensable parties to the suit.

The principle is fundamental, and lies at the foundation of the administration of justice, that every person whose interests are immediately involved in a cause must be made a party, and afforded an opportunity to assert or defend his rights. Calvert on Parties to Suits in Equity, p. 2, upon a review of the authorities, concludes that "all persons having an interest in the object of the suit" are necessary parties.

In 1 Daniell's Chy. Pr. p. 244, the rule is stated thus: "A person may be affected by the demands of the plaintiff in a suit, either immediately or consequentially. Where an individual is in the actual enjoyment of the subject-matter, or has an interest in it, either in possession or expectancy, which is likely either to be defeated or diminished by the plaintiff's claim, in such case he has an immediate interest in resisting the demand, and all persons who have such immediate interests are necessary parties to the suit."

And Mr. Barton says: "It is a general rule in equity that all persons interested in the subject-matter of the bill, and which is involved in and to be affected by the proceedings and result of the suit, should be made parties, however numerous they may be." 1 Bar. Chy. Pr. (2d Ed.) p. 141, and authorities cited; Turner v. Barraud, 102 Va. —, 46 S. E. 318; Lloyd v. Lloyd's Ex'r, 102 Va. —, 46 S. E. 687.

It follows from these views that the circuit court erred in passing the decree appealed from in a suit to which the grandchildren of the testator were not parties, and for that error the decree must be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings to be had therein in accordance with this opinion.

MORIEN v. NORFOLK & A. TERMINAL CO.

NEW TRIALS—VERDICT—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. A verdict cannot be set aside where the preponderance of the evidence is against it, but only where there is a palpable insufficiency of evidence to sustain it.

Error from Court of Law and Chancery of City of Norfolk.

Action by one Morien against the Norfolk & Atlantic Terminal Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

W. S. Hillyer and Thos. H. Wilcox, for plaintiff in error. H. L. Lowenburg, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. This action was brought to recover damages for injuries suffered by the plaintiff, which she alleges were caused by the negligence of the defendant company.

At the first trial there was a verdict of $2,000 in favor of the plaintiff, which was set aside, and at the second trial no evidence was introduced, and judgment was given for the defendant.

Was it error to set aside the first verdict? This is the sole question presented for our consideration.

The plaintiff was a passenger upon the electric street car of the defendant company, and alleges that at her destination, for the purpose of allowing her to get off, the car stopped, and that, while she was in the act of alighting, the car was violently and suddenly started, whereby she was thrown with great force and violence to the ground, thereby sustaining the injuries complained of.

The contention of the defendant company is that the injury sustained by the plaintiff was the result of her own negligence in alighting from the car while it was in motion and slowing down to stop. The clearly defined issue of fact, therefore, submitted to the jury, was, had the car stopped, or was it still moving, when the plaintiff attempted to alight?

The evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, if the jury believed it, fully sustained her contention that the car had stopped; and the evidence of the defendant was ample, if the jury believed that, to sustain its contention that the car was still in motion when the plaintiff attempted to alight. The jury accepted as true the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, and returned a verdict in accordance therewith.

This court has so frequently and so recently dealt with the power of courts to disturb the verdicts of juries, where the issue determined was a pure question of fact, that it is wholly unnecessary to again elaborate the subject. Under repeated decisions of this court, the verdict of a jury cannot be set aside unless there is a palpable insufficiency of evidence to sustain it. Nor is interference with a verdict authorized where the court merely doubts its correctness, or would itself have found a different verdict. The admissibility of evidence is with the court, but its weight is wholly with the jury. Kimball & Fink v. Friend's Adm'r, 95 Va. 125, 143, 27 S. E. 901; Reusens v. Lawson, 96 Va. 285, 31 S. E. 528; Marshall's Adm'r v. Valley R. Co., 99 Va. 798, 34 S. E. 455.

In the light of these well-established principles, we are of opinion that it was error to set aside the verdict found by the jury on the first trial. The judgment complained of must therefore be reversed, and judgment entered here in favor of the plaintiff in error in accordance with the first verdict found by the jury.

LYNCHBURG COTTON MILLS v. STANLEY.

BILLS OF EXCEPTIONS—SIGNING—INJURY TO INFANT EMPLOYE—WARNINGS—DAMAGES.

1. Under the act of February 15, 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 186, c. 172), bills of exceptions may be signed within 30 days from the adjournment of the term of the court at which the final judgment is rendered.

2. The law presumes that an infant between 7 and 14 years of age cannot be guilty of contributory negligence, and in an action by such infant the burden is on the defendant to overcome this presumption by proof of intelligence and capacity.

3. A master who employs children must warn them against dangers to which their work exposes them, and must put this warning in such plain language as to be sure that they understand and appreciate the danger. It is not enough that he should do his best to make children understand; they must understand in fact.

4. Where a child has neither natural nor legal guardian, in estimating the damages for a personal injury received by him he may receive compensation for loss of time.

Error from Circuit Court of City of Lynchburg.

Action by Fitzhugh Stanley, by his next friend, against the Lynchburg Cotton Mills. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

P. H. O. Cabell and Horsley & Blackford, for plaintiff in error. Don P. Halsey and A. W. Nowlin, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. This action was brought by Fitzhugh Stanley, suing by his next friend, to recover damages from the Lynchburg Cotton Mills for injuries sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the alleged negligence of the defendant.

There was a demurrer to the evidence, which was overruled by the circuit court, and judgment given in favor of the plaintiff for $5,000, the damages ascertained by the jury. It is insisted that bills of exception Nos. 1, 2, and 3, taken by the defendant, are not parts of the record, because the bills were not signed within 30 days from the adjournment of the term of the court at which the decisions were rendered to which they object. Acts 1901, p. 186, c. 172.

This position is not tenable. The objections were taken and overruled at the November term, 1902. Upon the demurrer to the evidence the court took time to consider, and did not render its judgment until the next term. Within 30 days from this last-named term, at which the final judgment was rendered, the bills of exception in question were signed. As the law stood prior to the act relied on, the bills of exception could have been signed at the April term, 1903, at which the final judgment was entered. Hudgins v. Simon, 94 Va. 659, 27 S. E. 606. The act cited, of February 15, 1901, was intended to extend the time within which bills of exception could be tendered and signed. Until the final judgment is rendered, the case is open for the purpose of perfecting exceptions duly taken to rulings during the trial. The act extends the time in which they may be perfected for 30 days beyond the final judgment, or until such time as the parties shall agree, of record, to extend it. If the contention now made were to prevail, the result would be that the act which was plainly intended to enlarge the time, would be converted into a means of curtailing such rights by giving litigants less time in which to perfect their bills of exception than they had before the act was passed.

For convenience, we will consider the bills of exception in their inverse order.

The fourth bill of exceptions presents the real question in the case, to which the arguments, both written and oral, have been almost exclusively devoted; that is, whether or not the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the evidence. At the time of the injury complained of, the plaintiff was a boy not quite 12 years of age. He was employed by the defendant company to work in its bagging room as a "doffer"—that is, work on the spinning frames in taking off and putting on bobbins—and had been engaged in this and other employment for several weeks. Adjacent to the bagging room was a large carding room in which 51 carding machines were operated. These carding machines were located in rows, with alleys between each row, and a space 7 feet 8 inches wide around the entire room next to the walls. It was necessary for the employees in the bagging room to go through the carding room to reach the water-closet, and the route usually taken for this purpose was around the walkway next to the walls. On the occasion of the accident the plaintiff was pursuing this route on his way to the water-closet, when he came upon several small boys, his companions from the bagging room, who were playing with the belt of one of the carding machines by throwing it off and on the revolving wheels. The plaintiff had never engaged in such sport, but it appealed to his childish instincts, and he stopped, and began to engage in the performance himself. He had hardly begun to do so when his arm was caught between the belt and the pulley, and so seriously injured that it had to be amputated above the elbow. It is further shown that it was a common thing for the boys about the mill to play with the belts, and that this fact was known to those in charge of the machinery and other departments. It is established by the testimony of the plaintiff, which, under the demurrer to the evidence, must be taken as true, that he had frequently seen boys play with the belts as on this occasion; that he did not know it was dangerous; and that he had never at any time been warned against doing so, or received instruction of any sort with respect to the dangers surrounding him. There must have been a peculiar fascination in throwing the belts off and on as these boys were doing, for the superintendent of the mills testifies that he had seen grown men play with the belts.

The law presumes that an infant between 7 and 14 years of age cannot be guilty of contributory negligence, and in an action by such infant the burden is on the defendant to overcome this presumption, by proof of intelligence and capacity. Roanoke v. Shull, 97 Va. 419, 34 S. E. 34, 75 Am. St. Rep. 791. The defendant made no effort to overcome this presumption. Indeed, as said by the learned judge of the circuit court, "so far as any conclusion as to the plaintiff's intelligence can be drawn from his testimony, it is of an unfavorable character." The single inquiry here is, therefore, was the defendant guilty of negligence in the discharge of its duty to this little boy? The degree of care due by the master to an infant employé of tender years is much greater than is due to an adult. That course of conduct which would be ordinary care when applied to persons of mature judgment and discretion might be gross, and even criminal, negligence toward children of tender years. The same discernment and foresight that older people and experienced persons habitually employ in discovering dangers cannot be reasonably expected of children of tender years, and therefore the greater precaution should be taken where children are exposed to such dangers. Under the head of "Special Duties of Masters to Minors," the duty of one who employs young persons is thus stated in section 219 of Shearman and Redfield on Negligence, by the learned authors of that valuable work: "It is the duty of one who employs young persons in his service to take notice of their apparent age and ability, and to use ordinary care to protect them from risks which they cannot properly appreciate, and to which they ought not to be exposed. This is a duty which cannot be delegated; and any failure to perform it leaves the master subject to the same liability, with respect to such risks, as if the child were not a servant. For this purpose the master must instruct such young servants in their work, and warn them against the dangers to which it exposes them, and he must put this warning in such plain language as to be sure that they understand and appreciate the danger. For it is not enough that he should do his best to make children understand. They must not be exposed to dangers which they do not fully understand in fact. Bearing in mind the natural forgetfulness of youth, he must renew this warning from time to time, as may be reasonably necessary. And if the servant has not capacity enough to understand the warning and appreciate the danger, or for any other reason does not in fact understand it, the master will be liable for any injury which such servant may suffer in consequence, if continued at such work. But the master is not required to point out dangers which are known, or must be obvious to and fully appreciated by, the servant, after making due allowance for his youth. Generally, this question is for the jury."

In Thompson on Neg. 978, it is said: "The law puts upon a master, when he takes an infant into his service, the duty of explaining to him fully the hazards and dangers connected with the business, and of instructing him how to avoid them. Nor is this all. The master will not have discharged his duty in this regard unless the instructions and precautions given are so graduated to the youth, ignorance, and inexperience of the servant as to make him fully aware of the danger to him, and to place him, with reference to it, in substantially the same state as if he were an adult."

In Bailey on Per. Inj. § 2766, it is said: "Persons who employ children to work with dangerous machinery or in dangerous places should anticipate that they will exercise only such judgment, discretion, and care as is usual among children of the same age under similar circumstances, and are bound to use due care, having regard to their age and inexperience, to protect them from dangers incident to the situation in which they are placed; and as a reasonable precaution in the exercise of such care in that behalf it is the duty of the employer to so instruct such employes concerning the dangers connected with their employment, which dangers, from their youth and inexperience, they may not comprehend or appreciate, that they may, by the exercise of such care as ought reasonably to be expected of them, guard against and avoid injuries arising therefrom." And further adds that an infant who, by reason of his youth and inexperience, is injured, when not properly instructed and warned as to the dangers incident to his work, may recover therefor.

In Watson on Per. Inj. § 114, it is said: "The defendant will be liable if negligent, though it is the act of the child injured which is proximate to his own injuries, if such act is of a character naturally to be expected of a child, and in accordance with the usual indiscretions and errors of judgment characteristic of immature years."

The statement of the law by these authors of acknowledged accuracy and ability is sustained by numerous decisions of the courts of last resort throughout the country. Sullivan v. India Mfg. Co., 113 Mass. 399; Rock v. Orchard Mills, 142 Mass. 528, 8 N. E. 401; Glover v. Dwight Mfg. Co., 148 Mass. 22, 18 N. E. 597, 12 Am. St. Rep. 512; Ogley v. Miles (Sup.), 8 N. Y. Supp. 270; Hickey v. Taaffe, 105 N. Y. 28, 12 N. E. 286; Smith v. Irwin, 51 N. J. Law, 507, 18 Atl. 852, 14 Am. St. Rep. 699; Rolling Mill v. Cooper, etc., 161 Ind. 363, 30 N. E. 294; Hinckley v. Horadowsky, 133 Ill. 359, 24 N. E. 421, 8 L. R. A. 490, 23 Am. St. Rep. 618; Harris v. Shebek, etc., 151 Ill. 287, 37 N. E. 1015; Fisk, etc., v. R. R. Co., 72 Cal. 38, 13 Pac. 144, 1 Am. St. Rep. 22; Cotton Seed Oil Co. v. Hale, 56 Ark. 232, 19 S. W. 600; Fitzgerald v. Furniture Co., 131 N. C. 636, 42 S. E. 946; Cleveland Rolling-Mill Co. v. Corrigan, 46 Ohio St. 283, 20 N. E. 466, 3 L. R. A. 385.

The rule established by the authorities cited is both just and humane. Children of tender years are often employed about factories filled with complicated and dangerous machinery, where they will be exposed to revolving wheels, belts, and pulleys, where any one may know that, by reason of inexperience and immature judgment, they are liable to be killed or maimed. In the case under consideration there are, as shown by the record, employed in the mills of the defendant company 75 children under 14 years of age, of which number 45 are under the age of 12 years. If it is to the interest of manufacturing establishments to employ infants of such tender years, with their immature judgment and lack of experience, not only the dictates of humanity, but public policy, demands that they should be held to the highest degree of responsibility for their care and protection. They must take knowledge of their childish disposition to play, and to play with fire, and of their inability to recognize danger, although open and obvious to those of riper years. They must instruct them as to the many dangers with which they are surrounded, and the way to avoid such dangers; and they must continue to repeat such instruction until they know the danger is fully understood and appreciated. And, in view of the proneness of children to forget, they must from time to time renew these instructions, warnings, and cautions. Of the existence of the rule requiring these duties of the master, and of its pre-eminent justice, there can be no doubt, and we are of opinion that the case at bar is clearly within its influence. The plaintiff was an ignorant child, less than 12 years of age, without father, mother, or legal guardian. In these cotton mills he was surrounded by innumerable dangers. He was put to work in a position where, upon every call of nature, he was compelled to pass through a large carding room filled with machinery, with its countless revolving wheels and belts. He was subjected to all these perils without instruction or warning from his employers with respect to such dangers, or how to act in order to avoid them. He was left to his own resources and immature judgment, with the natural result that, in ignorance of the danger, he was guilty of an act which brought upon him a calamity that compels him to a maimed and comparatively helpless life. Such want of care and watchfulness over the immaturity of tender years by the master renders him liable under the rule of duty that we have seen he must observe.

The third bill of exceptions is to the action of the court in giving an instruction which provided that the jury might, in estimating the plaintiff's damage, take into consideration, among other things, his loss of time, and any other elements of damage necessarily occasioned by or growing out of said injury.

The plaintiff had neither a natural nor legal guardian who was entitled to his wages, and, so far as the record throws any light on the subject, he was working for his living and receiving his own wages. Under these circumstances his time was his own, and he was entitled to compensation for its loss. As to the second ground of objection, the language expressly limits the recovery to the elements of damage necessarily occasioned by or growing out of the injury, and there was no error in its use.

The second and first bills of exception are to the action of the court in admitting certain evidence tending to establish negligence on the part of the defendant in not having fenced the machinery off, the objection being that the evidence was immaterial, and the witnesses deposing on the subject not experts.

In the conclusion we have reached this evidence has played no part, and therefore the defendant has suffered no prejudice by its introduction, even if it was inadmissible, as to which we express no opinion.

For these reasons the judgment of the circuit court must be affirmed.

ATLANTIC COAST LINE RY. CO. et al. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. March 24, 1904.)

CORPORATION COMMISSION—VALIDITY OF REGULATIONS—WHEN DETERMINED—POLICE POWER—REGULATION OF INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

1. A state may make valid enactments, in the exercise of its police power, to promote the welfare and convenience of its citizens, though such laws, in their operation, incidentally interfere with interstate and foreign commerce.

2. The rules prescribed by the corporation commission pursuant to the authority of Const. 1902, § 155, and Act May 16, 1903 (Acts 1902-04, p. 392), with reference to storage, demurrage, car service, and car detention charges, are not void because in their operation they affect incidentally interstate and foreign commerce.

3. Const. 1902, § 156, subsec. "b," providing that the right of any person to institute in the courts any action against any transportation company shall not be impaired by reason of any fine or penalty which the corporation commission may impose on such company for its failure to comply with any order of the commission, but in no proceeding against such corporation shall the reasonableness or validity of any rate, charge, rule, etc., prescribed by the commission within the scope of its authority be questioned, does not prevent the question of the validity of any regulations of the commission under the federal or state Constitutions from being inquired into in an action based on such regulations.

4. The validity of the rules prescribed by the corporation commission pursuant to the authority of Const. 1902, § 155, and Act May 16, 1903 (Acts 1902-04, p. 392), with reference to storage, demurrage, car service, and car detention charges, so far as they in their operation unlawfully interfere with interstate and foreign commerce, or deprive transportation companies of their property without due process of law, may be raised and determined in any particular case in which the question can be raised and determined.

Appeal from the State Corporation Commission.

Proceedings to test the validity of regulations prescribed by the corporation commission. From the action of the commission the Atlantic Coast Line Railway Company and others appeal. Affirmed.

By section 155 of the Constitution, which went into effect July 10, 1902, a permanent commission is created, to be known as the "State Corporation Commission." By subsection "a" of section 156 it is declared that, "subject to the provisions of this Constitution and to such requirements, rules and regulations as may be prescribed by law, the State Corporation Commission shall be the department of government * * * through which shall be carried out all the provisions of this Constitution, and of the laws made in pursuance thereof, for the creation, visitation, supervision, regulation and control of corporations chartered by, or doing business in, this state." Subsection "b" of that section provides that: "The commission shall have the power, and be charged with the duty, of supervising, regulating and controlling all transportation and transmission companies doing business in this state, in all matters relating to the performance of their public duties and their charges therefor, and of correcting abuses therein by such companies; and to that end the commission shall, from time to time, prescribe, and enforce against such companies, in the manner hereinafter authorized, such rates, charges, classifications of traffic, and rules and regulations, and shall require them to establish and maintain all such public service, facilities and conveniences, as may be reasonable and just, which said rates, charges, classifications, rules, regulations and requirements, the commission may, from time to time, alter or amend. * * * Before the commission shall make or prescribe any general order, rule, regulation or requirement, not directed against any specific company or companies by name, the contemplated general order, rule, regulation or requirement shall first be published in substance, not less than once a week for four consecutive weeks in one or more of the newspapers of general circulation published in the city of Richmond, Virginia, together with notice of the time and place, when and where the commission will hear any objections which may be urged by any person interested, against the proposed order, rule, regulation or requirement; and every such general order, rule, regulation or requirement, made by the commission, shall be published at length, for the time and in the manner above specified, before it shall go into effect, and shall also, as long as it remains in force, be published in each subsequent annual report of the commission. The authority of the commission (subject to review on appeal as hereinafter provided) to prescribe rates, charges and classifications of traffic, for transportation and transmission companies, shall be paramount; but its authority to prescribe any other rules, regulations or requirements for corporations or other persons shall be subject to the superior authority of the General Assembly to legislate thereon by general laws. * * *

By subsection "d" of that section it is provided that: "From any action of the commission prescribing rates, charges or classifications of traffic, or affecting the train schedule of any transportation company, or requiring additional facilities, conveniences or public service of any transportation or transmission company, or refusing to approve a suspending bond, or requiring additional security thereon or an increase thereof, as provided for in subsection 'e' of this section, an appeal (subject to such reasonable limitations as to time, regulations as to procedure and provisions as to costs, as may be prescribed by law) may be taken by the corporation whose rates, charges or classifications of traffic, schedule, facilities, conveniences or service, are affected, or by any person deeming himself aggrieved by such action, or (if allowed by law) by the commonwealth." That subsection further provides that such appeal shall be as of right, and to the Supreme Court of Appeals only.

Subsection "f" of that section, after providing how the record for an appeal shall be made up, and that the commission shall file with it, and as a part thereof, a written statement of the reasons upon which the action appealed from was based, which statement shall be read and considered by this court upon disposing of the appeal, provides that this court "shall have jurisdiction, on such appeal, to consider and determine the reasonableness and justness of the action of the commission appealed from, as well as any other matter arising under such appeal: provided, however, that the action of the commission appealed from shall be regarded as prima facie just, reasonable and correct. * * *"

By an act approved May 16, 1903 (Acts 1902-03-04, p. 392), the corporation commission was required to fix and prescribe storage, demurrage, and car-service charges which may be collected by railroad and other transportation companies on freight transported or to be transported by them, and to be paid by them on freight delayed and cars not promptly furnished or placed by them, with rules and regulations governing the same.

By virtue of the authority conferred by the Constitution and the Act of Assembly, the corporation commission, after notice and hearing as provided by the Constitution, prescribed and fixed certain rules and regulations for the government of transportation companies and shippers doing business in this state, and which are as follows:

"All storage, demurrage and car service charges, and all car detention charges, shall be as prescribed in these rules. Nothing in these rules shall apply to shipments of live stock and perishable freight, which shipments shall be governed by the statutes now in force, with such additional requirements as may be ordered by the commission from time to time. In all computation of time under these rules, Sundays and legal holidays are to be excluded.

"Rule I. When a shipper makes a verbal or written application to a railroad company for a car or cars, to be loaded with any kind of freight embraced in the tariff of said company, stating in said application the character of the freight, and its final destination, the railroad company shall furnish same within four days from seven o'clock a. m. the day following such application.

"Or, when the shipper making such application specifies a future day on which he desires to make a shipment, giving not less than four days' notice thereof, computing from seven o'clock a. m. the day following such application, the railroad company shall furnish such car or cars on the day specified in the application.

"For failure to comply with this rule, the company so offending shall forfeit and pay to the shipper applying the sum of $1.00 per car per day, or fraction of a day's delay after expiration of free time, upon demand in writing, made within thirty days thereafter by the shipper:

"Provided, however, that this rule shall not apply to shipments of coal and coke from mines and ovens.

"Rule II. When freight in carloads or less is tendered to a railroad company, and correct shipping instructions given, the railroad agent must immediately receive the same for shipment, and issue bills of lading therefor, and whenever such shipments have been so received by any railroad company, they must be carried forward at the rate of not less than fifty (50) miles per day of twenty-four hours, computing from seven o'clock a. m. the day following receipt of shipment, and for failure to receive and transport such shipments, within the time prescribed, the railroad company so offending shall forfeit and pay to the shipper the sum of $10.00 per car per day, or fraction thereof, on all carload freight, and one cent per hundred pounds per day, or fraction thereof, on freight in less than carloads, with minimum charge of five (5) cents for any one package, upon demand in writing by the shipper, or other party whose interest is affected by such delay: provided, that in computing the time of freight in transit, there shall be allowed twenty-four hours at each point where transferring from one railroad to another, or re-handling of freight, is involved.

"The period during which the movement of freight is suspended on account of accident, or any cause not within the power of the railroad company to prevent, shall be added to the free time allowed in this rule, and counted as additional free time.

"Rule III. Railroad companies shall, within twenty-four hours after arrival of shipments, give notice, by mail or otherwise, to consignee, of the arrival of shipments, together with the weight and amount of freight charges due thereon, and where goods or freight in carload quantities arrive, such notice shall contain also identifying numbers, letters, and initials of the car or cars, and if transferred in transit, the number and initials of the car in which originally shipped. Any railroad company failing to give such notice shall forfeit and pay to the shipper, or other party whose interest is affected, the sum of $1.00 per car per day, or fraction of a day's delay, on all carload shipments, and one cent per hundred pounds per day, or fraction thereof, on freight in less than carloads, with minimum charge of five (5) cents for any one package, after the expiration of the said twenty-four hours: provided, that not more than one dollar per day be charged for any one consignment not in excess of a carload.

"(a) This rule is applicable also to steamboat and steamship lines.

"Rule IV. Railroad companies shall deliver freight at their depots or warehouses, or, in case of shipments for track delivery, shall place loaded cars at an accessible place for unloading within twenty-four hours after arrival, computing from 7 o'clock a. m. the day following arrival of same. Except that carload shipments for track delivery at local stations having not more than one team track, shall be placed at an accessible point for unloading by the conductor of the train on which the car arrives. The shipper or consignee shall be paid $1.00 per car per day for each day, or fraction of a day, such delivery is so delayed.

"Rule V. All carload freight, or freight carried at carload rates, and all freight in cars, whether full carload or not, taking track delivery, shall be subject to the demurrage, or car service charges prescribed in these rules.

"Rule VI. A shipper, on whose order a car or cars have been placed for loading, shall be allowed forty-eight hours for the loading of such car or cars, computing time from seven o'clock a. m. the day after such car or cars have been placed subject to the order of shipper, and thereafter a demurrage charge of not more than $1.00 per car per day, or fraction of a day, may be assessed and collected on all such cars as have not been tendered to the railroad company with shipping instructions within said forty-eight hours: provided, however, that should the shipper fail to begin loading within forty-eight hours after the expiration of free time, the railroad company shall consider the car or cars released, and may assess and collect

$2.00 on each car, covering the demurrage then due.

"Railroad companies shall not be compelled to furnish cars for future shipments to parties in default as to the payment of the demurrage charges, herein last provided for, until such demurrage charges have been paid.

"If, after placing the car or cars as required by this rule, the railroad company shall, during or after free time, temporarily remove all or any of them, or in any way prevent, obstruct or delay the loading of same, the shipper shall not be chargeable with the delay caused thereby.

"When, by reason of delay or irregularity on the part of the railroad company in filling orders, cars are bunched in excess of the ability of the shipper to load, as indicated in his applications, the shipper shall be allowed separate and distinct periods of free time within which to load the car or cars specified in each separate application.

"Rule VII. A car or cars detained or held at point of shipment for want of proper shipping instructions, or by reason of imperfect or excessive loading, where loading is done by shipper, shall be subject to a demurrage charge of $1.00 per car per day, or fraction of a day, said car or cars are so detained or held. In cases of imperfect or excessive loading the shipper shall be notified thereof as early as practicable after said car or cars have been received from him, in which case car service charges shall begin at the time of notification.

"Rule VIII. Legal notice, as referred to in these rules, may be either actual or constructive. Where the consignee or his agent is personally served with notice of the arrival of freight at or before 6 p. m. of any day, free time begins at seven o'clock a. m. on the day after such notice has been given. Constructive notice referred to consists of posting notice by mail to consignee. Where this mode of giving notice is adopted there shall be twenty-four hours' additional free time: provided, however, that when, in any case where notice of arrival is given by mail, the consignee shall make oath that neither he, his agents, nor employees, have received such notice then he will be held not to have received legal notice by reason of posting of said notice by mail.

"Rule IX. All package freight unloaded by railroad companies in their depots or warehouses, and all freight which, in order to release cars, is unloaded in the yard space of a railroad company, which is not removed by the owners thereof from the custody of the railroad company within forty-eight hours, computing from seven o'clock a. m. of the day following legal notice of arrival, may be subject to the charge of storage for each day, or fraction of a day, it may remain in the custody of the railroad company, as follows:

"In less than carloads, not more than one cent per hundred pounds per day, or fraction thereof; in carload quantities, not more than ten cents per ton of 2,000 pounds per day or fraction thereof, but not exceeding $1.00 per car per day, or fraction of a day: provided that in no case shall the amount so collected for storage of a less than carload shipment exceed the amount authorized to be charged as storage or demurrage on a carload of similar freight for the same length of time when not unloaded from car, as provided by the demurrage rules.

"(b) This rule shall apply also to steamboat and steamship companies unloading package freight in their warehouses, except that one hundred and twenty (120) hours of free time shall be allowed instead of forty-eight.

"Rule X. Loaded cars containing fertilizers, hay, coal, coke, brick, and lumber in covered cars, and the following articles in bulk: Meat, potatoes, grain, and grain products, cotton seed, and cotton seed hulls, taking track delivery, which are to be unloaded by consignee, but are not unloaded within seventy-two hours, computed from seven o'clock a. m. the day following the day legal notice of arrival is given (having been placed at an accessible point for unloading) may be subject thereafter to a charge for demurrage of $1.00 per car for each day, or fraction of a day, that they may remain loaded in possession of the railroad company. All other loaded cars, taking track delivery, to be unloaded by consignee, shall be limited to forty-eight hours of free time: provided, however, that if, after placing a car or cars, as required in this rule, the railroad company shall, during or after free time, temporarily remove all of them, or in any way obstruct the unloading of same, the consignee shall not be chargeable with the delay caused thereby.

"Provided, that when, on account of delay or irregularity in transportation, cars are bunched in transit and delivered to consignee in numbers beyond his reasonable ascertained ability to unload within the free time prescribed in these rules, he shall be allowed by the carrier such additional time as may be necessary to unload cars so in excess by the exercise of due and usual diligence on the part of consignee.

"Rule XI. Whenever the weather, during the period of free time, is so severe, inclement, or rainy that it is impossible or impracticable to secure means of loading or unloading freight, or when, from the nature of the goods, loading or unloading would cause injury or damage, such time shall be added to the free period, and no demurrage charges shall be allowed for such additional free time. This rule applies to the state of the weather during business hours.

"Rule XII. A consignee or consignor five miles or more from the depot, and whose freight is destined to or from his place of business or residence so located, shall not be subject to storage or demurrage charges allowed in the foregoing rules until a sufficient time has elapsed after notice for said consignee or consignor to remove or load said goods by the exercise of ordinary diligence. But the time limit for loading or unloading shall not exceed five days.

"Rule XIII. On carload freight originating in Virginia, and shipped on local bills of lading to a terminal point at a port within this state, there shall be allowed ten days' free time, computing from seven o'clock a. m. the day after arrival of car or cars, before application of storage or demurrage charges: provided the consignee, within forty-eight hours after the arrival of such car or cars, notifies the delivering line at such terminal point that it is intended for further movement.

"Rule XIV. Incoming carload freight, coming under the provisions of rules XI and XII, may be stored by railroad companies in depots or warehouses at the expense of owner, if same is not removed before demurrage charges attach: provided, that daily storage charge on such freight shall not exceed the demurrage allowed under these rules.

"Rule XV. If the consignee shall refuse to accept freight tendered in pursuance of the bill of lading, the carrier charged with the duty of delivery shall give legal notice to the consignor of such refusal; and if he shall not, within three days thereafter, give direction for the re-shipment or unloading, or other disposition of such goods, he shall thenceforth become liable to such carrier for storage on such goods, or demurrage upon the car or cars in which they are stored, to the same extent, and at the same rates as such charges are now, under like circumstances, by the rules of this commission, imposed upon consignees who neglect or refuse after notice of arrival, to remove freight of like character from the depots or cars of a carrier. A consignee who has once refused to accept a consignment of goods shall not thereafter be entitled to receive the same, except upon payment of all charges for storage or demurrage which have accrued; and if the consignee of freight in carloads, or less than carloads, shall fail or neglect to remove such freight within three days after the expiration of free time, then the carrier shall, through the agent at point of shipment, so notify the shipper, unless the consignee has signified his acceptance of the property. Said notice may either be served personally or given by mail.

"Rule XVI. When consignors ship goods consigned to order, but express in their bills of lading or shipping directions, the name of a person at destination to notify, it shall be the duty of the railroad, or other transportation company, to give legal notice to such party in the same way, and under the same rule, as if the shipment had been made direct to him. But when the consignors do not comply with this condition, the railroad, or other transportation company, shall give such notice only to such consignors; except, that in shipments of grain or hay, notice shall also be given to the local exchanges; provided, that at the expiration of free time the carrier shall give notice thereof to the consignor.

"Rule XVII. Railroads shall not discriminate between persons or places in storage or demurrage charges. No rebate, drawback, or other similar device will be allowed: provided, that this rule shall not apply to package freight received in less than car-load lots and unloaded in depots and warehouses.

"Rule XVIII. No demurrage shall be charged on private cars standing on private tracks, when both cars and tracks are owned by the same person. Where the cars are not owned by the owner of the tracks, no demurrage shall be charged: provided, the person owning the tracks shall furnish to the delivering railway satisfactory evidence that the owner of the cars releases both him and the delivering road from the payment of demurrage.

"Rule XIX. Nothing in the foregoing rules shall be construed to prohibit railroad companies from contracting with shippers and consignees on terms of mutual convenience in the matter of furnishing and discharging cars: provided, that such contracts shall be so drawn as to give to either party the right to cancel same on ten days' notice, and thereafter demand the application of these rules.

"Rule XX. The commission reserves the right on its own motion to suspend the operation of these rules, or any one or more of them, in whole or in part, whenever it shall appear that justice demands such action, and the commission will, upon complaint, hear and act upon applications for a like suspension.

"The commission further reserves all of its powers under the Constitution and laws of the state to impose fines and penalties upon transportation companies persistently disregarding these rules, or failing to furnish reasonable transportation facilities."

From the action of the corporation commission prescribing said rules, the appellants took this appeal.

Alexander Hamilton, H. T. Wickham, Thos. H. Willcox, J. Allen Watts, E. Randolph Williams, A. P. Thom, Leake & Carter, and John G. Wilson, for appellants. William A. Anderson, Atty. Gen., A. C. Braxton, and Jeffries & Lawless, for the Commonwealth.

BUCHANAN, J. (after stating the facts). The errors assigned upon this appeal are as follows:

First. That the commission did not sustain the objections made by each of the appellants at the hearing that each of said rules, regulations, and requirements applies to and attempts to regulate or control interstate commerce, and, in so far as it does so, is in excess of the powers of the commission.

Second. That the commission did not sustain the objection made by each of the appellants that the said rules, regulations, or requirements apply to and attempt to regulate or control foreign commerce, and, in so far as they do, are in excess of the powers of the commission.

Third. That the said commission did not sustain the objections made by each of the appellants to each of the rules numbered, respectively, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, that said rules attempt to give to the patrons of each of the transportation companies the use of its property without compensation, for the time indicated in the said rules, respectively.

No objection is made here to the reasonableness or justness of the rules, but their validity is attacked upon the ground that each and all of them, so far as they apply to interstate and foreign commerce, are in violation of the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States, and the acts of Congress passed pursuant thereto, and that certain of the rules make requirements which will deprive the appellants of the use of their property without due process of law, and are therefore in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The questions raised on this appeal, which have been discussed at length, and very ably, both in writing and in oral argument, are of great importance. They involve the right of the state, under its reserved power, whether that power be called police, governmental, or legislative, to regulate the relative rights and duties of persons and corporations within its jurisdiction, so as to provide for the public good and the public convenience, by laws which are not inconsistent with the Constitution of the state, and which do not, by their operation, directly intrench upon the authority of the United States, or violate some right protected by the federal Constitution. To draw the line between the two fields of jurisdiction, and to define and declare when a state regulation is an unconstitutional encroachment upon federal power, is often a question very difficult to solve, even in a concrete case. But that difficulty is greatly increased and rendered well-nigh impossible when a court is called upon to pass upon a body of rules and regulations like those now under consideration, and to declare whether or not they, or any of them, in their operation, will directly intrench upon the authority of the United States, or violate some right protected by the federal Constitution.

The validity of the rules and regulations in question, so far as they apply to interstate commerce, is not denied, except so far as they may, in their operation, deprive the appellants of the use of their property without compensation; but it is insisted that they are wholly invalid so far as they apply to interstate commerce and foreign commerce, upon the ground that that subject is wholly within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

That this contention is not true, to the extent claimed, is well settled by numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the case of Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Ohio, etc., 173 U. S. 285, 297, 19 Sup. Ct. 465, 470, 43 L. Ed. 702, Mr. Justice Harlan, speaking for the court, said that the cases of that court recognize "the fundamental principle that outside of the field directly occupied by the general government, under the powers granted to it by the Constitution, all questions arising within a state that relate to its internal order, or that involve the public convenience or the general good, are primarily for the determination of the state, and that its legislative enactments relating to these subjects, and which are not inconsistent with the state Constitution, are to be respected and enforced in the courts of the Union, if they do not by their operation directly trench upon the authority of the United States, or violate some right protected by the national Constitution. The power here referred to is, to use the words of Chief Justice Shaw, the power to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth, and of the subjects of the same. Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53, 85.

"Mr. Cooley well said, 'It cannot be doubted that there is ample power in the legislative department of the state to adopt all necessary legislation for the purpose of enforcing the obligations of railway companies, as carriers of persons and goods, to accommodate the public impartially, and to make any reasonable provision for carrying with safety and expedition.' Cooley's Const. Law (6th Ed.) p. 715.

"It may be that such legislation is not within the 'police power' of a state, as those words have been sometimes, although inaccurately, used. But, in our opinion, the power, whether called police, governmental, or legislative, exists in each state, by appropriate enactments, not forbidden by its own Constitution or by the Constitution of the United States, to regulate the relative rights and duties of all persons and corporations within its jurisdiction, and therefore to provide for the public convenience and the public good. This power in the state is entirely distinct from any power granted to the general government, although when exercised it may sometimes reach the subjects over which national legislation can be constitutionally extended."

In the case of Cleveland, etc., Ry. Co. v. Illinois, 177 U. S. 514, 516, 20 Sup. Ct. 722, 44 L. Ed. 888, it was said that "few classes of cases have become more common of recent years than those wherein the police power of the state over the vehicles of interstate commerce have been drawn in question. That such power exists, and will be enforced, notwithstanding the constitutional authority of Congress to regulate such commerce, is evident from the large number of cases in which we have sustained the validity of local laws designed to secure the safety and comfort of passengers, employes, persons crossing railway tracks, and adjacent property owners, as well as other regulations intended for the public good.

"We have recently applied this doctrine to state laws requiring locomotive engineers to be examined and licensed by the state authorities (Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 31 L. Ed. 508, 8 Sup. Ct. 564); requiring such engineers to be examined from time to time with respect to their ability to distinguish colors (Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. Ed. 352, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. 28); requiring telegraph companies to receive dispatches and to transmit and deliver them with due diligence, as applied to messages from outside the state (Western U. Tele. Co. v. James, 162 U. S. 650, 40 L. Ed. 1105, 16 Sup. Ct. 934); forbidding the running of freight trains on Sunday (Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 209, 41 L. Ed. 166, 16 Sup. Ct. 1086); requiring railway companies to fix their rates annually for the transportation of passengers and freight, and also requiring them to post a printed copy of such rates at all their stations (Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Fuller, 17 Wall. 560, 21 L. Ed. 710); forbidding the consolidation of parallel or competing lines of railway (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 40 L. Ed. 849, 16 Sup. Ct. 714); regulating the heating of passenger cars, and directing guards and guard posts to be placed on railroad bridges and trestles and the approaches thereto (New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. New York, 165 U. S. 628, 41 L. Ed. 853, 17 Sup. Ct. 418); providing that no contract shall exempt any railroad corporation from the liability of a common carrier or a carrier of passengers, which would have existed if no contract had been made (Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 42 L. Ed. 688, 18 Sup. Ct. 289); and declaring that, when a common carrier accepts for transportation anything directed to a point of destination beyond the terminus of his own line or route, he shall be deemed thereby to assume an obligation for its safe carriage to such point of destination, unless at the time of such acceptance such carrier be released or exempted from such liability by contract in writing, signed by the owner or his agent (Richmond & A. R. Co. v. R. A. Patterson Tobacco Co., 169 U. S. 311, 42 L. Ed. 759, 18 Sup. Ct. 335). In none of these cases was it thought that the regulations were unreasonable, or operated in any just sense as a restriction upon interstate commerce."

And in one of the most recent decisions of that court (Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes [decided December last] 24 Sup. Ct. 132, 48 L. Ed. —) it was held that the refusal of a state court to limit the liability of a common carrier for its negligence in the execution of a contract for interstate carriage to the valuation agreed upon does not contravene the various provisions of the interstate commerce act enacted by Congress, making it obligatory upon carriers to provide proper facilities for interstate carriage of freight, and preventing them from obstructing continuing shipments on interstate lines. In delivering the opinion of the court in that case, Mr. Justice Day said, "It is well settled that the state may make valid enactments in the exercise of its legislative power to promote the welfare and convenience of its citizens, although in their operation they may have an effect upon interstate traffic."

It is impossible for us, on this appeal, to make a wholesale exposition of the constitutionality of the rules and regulations in question, so far as they may, in their varied application and enforcement, affect the rights of persons and corporations engaged in interstate and foreign shipments and transportation, or violate rights protected by the federal Constitution. To hold that they are invalid so far as they apply to interstate and foreign commerce, as the appellants insist should be done, might have the effect of depriving the state of her undoubted right, under her reserved powers, to make provisions for the purpose of enforcing the obligations of transportation companies to accommodate the public, and for regulating the relative rights and duties of all persons and corporations within its jurisdiction, and therefore to provide for the public convenience and the public good, when such regulations are in aid of, or only incidentally affect, interstate commerce, and do not violate any right protected by the Constitution of the United States.

To hold, on the other hand, that the rules would not, in their operation, directly trench upon the authority of the United States, nor violate any right protected by the federal Constitution, might result in our denying transportation companies and others their just rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and drive them to the federal courts for the assertion and maintenance of rights which ought to be guarded and enforced by the courts of the state whose government they support, and from which they are entitled to protection. For these and other reasons which might be given, we are of opinion that we ought not, upon this appeal, to attempt to decide to what extent, if at all, the said rules and regulations, in their operation, may directly infringe upon the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States, or violate any right of the appellants under that instrument, and that the decision of those questions can only be properly made as they arise in concrete cases, and upon the particular facts of each case.

It is insisted by the appellants' counsel that if no relief is given them upon this appeal, as to the validity of the rules in question, their validity is by the express terms of the Constitution made conclusive, and cannot be questioned in an action or suit based upon the rules, and that no other provision is made by the Constitution by which their validity can be questioned, except in quasi criminal proceedings, which the commission is authorized to institute against them for the alleged violation of said rules and regulations. The provision of the Constitution relied on to sustain this contention is subsection "h" of section 156, and is as follows:

"The right of any person to institute and prosecute in the ordinary courts of justice, any action, suit or motion against any transportation or transmission company, for any claim or cause of action against such company, shall not be extinguished or impaired, by reason of any fine or other penalty which the commission may impose, or be authorized to impose, upon such company because of its breach of any public duty, or because of its failure to comply with any order or requirement of the commission; but in no such proceeding by any person against such corporation, nor in any collateral proceeding, shall the reasonableness, justness or validity of any rate, charge, classification of traffic, rule, regulation, or requirement, theretofore prescribed by the commission, within the scope of its authority, and then in force, be questioned: provided, however, that no case based upon or involving any order of the commission shall be heard, or disposed of, against the objection of either party, so long as such order is suspended in its operation by an order of the Supreme Court of Appeals as authorized by this Constitution or by any law passed in pursuance thereof."

The subsection quoted does not prevent the validity of any rule or regulation prescribed by the commission from being inquired into upon the trial of a cause of the kind mentioned in said subsection, if such rule or regulation, in its application to the facts of the case, violates any right of the defendant protected by the Constitution of the United States, for such rule or regulation is, to that extent, not within the scope of the authority of the commission, but in excess of its powers, and invalid not only because it is in violation of the Constitution of the United States, but also because in conflict with section 153, art. 12, of the Constitution of the state—the article creating the corporation commission, and defining its powers and duties, which expressly declares that "the provisions of this article shall always be so restricted in their application as not to conflict with any of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and as if the necessary limitations upon their interpretation had been herein expressed in each case."

There being no objection made here to the reasonableness or justness of the rules and regulations in question, and their validity being attacked only to the extent of their application to interstate and foreign commerce, and in so far as they may deprive the appellants of the use of their property without due process of law, we are therefore of opinion that the said rules and regulations are reasonable, just, and valid, except in so far as they may in their operation directly trench upon the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States, or violate some right of the appellants protected by that instrument; and we are further of opinion that the question of their validity, so far as affected by the Constitution of the United States, may be raised and determined in any case in which that question could be raised and determined if the rules and regulations in question had been enacted as statutes by the General Assembly, except as prohibited by subsection "d" of section 156 of the Constitution.

WAID v. DIXON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 1, 1904.)

ASSUMPSIT—DECLARATION—PROMISE OF PAYMENT.

1. A declaration purporting to be a declaration in trespass on the case in assumpsit, which fails to aver any promise of payment on the part of the defendant, is demurrable.

2. In assumpsit the gist of the action is the promise of payment on the part of the defendant, which must be clearly averred.

3. Such promise of payment may be either express, or implied by law. Whether express or implied, the averment thereof may be in the same form or language.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Greenbrier County; J. M. McWhorter, Judge.

Action by William S. Waid against John T. Dixon. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

H. L. Van Sickler and Williams & Dice, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Arbuckle and Preston & Wallace, for defendant in error.

DENT, J. John T. Dixon, defendant, complains of a judgment of the circuit court of Greenbrier county in favor of William S. Waid for the sum of $362.50, rendered the 4th day of May, 1903.

The first error relied on is the overruling of the demurrer to the declaration, and each count or allegation thereof. The declaration is as follows, to wit:

"The State of West Virginia. In the Circuit Court of Greenbrier County, to wit: Wm. S. Waid complains of John T. Dixon, defendant, of a plea of trespass on the case, for this, to wit: That whereas, on the day of January, 1899, the defendant, John

T. Dixon, then and still a resident of the said county and state, was the owner of large tracts of timbered lands lying in the county of Buchanan and Russell, in the state of Virginia, and also the owner of a valuable steam engine, sawmill, and fixtures complete and ready for sawing and manufacturing logs into lumber. That on the 19th day of January, 1899, aforesaid, the said defendant induced said plaintiff to agree to go upon said tracts of land and saw and manufacture all the logs put to said sawmill into lumber, and entered into a contract with plaintiff by which defendant leased or hired his said sawmill and fixtures, engine, etc., to said plaintiff for twelve months at the price of eleven hundred dollars, and on the same day the said defendant, John T. Dixon, through his agent, and in the name of his agent, John C. Hunter, entered into a contract with this plaintiff whereby plaintiff agreed to saw and stack all the oak and poplar timber bought of Albert Pack, trustee, and others, and located on Gresson creek, in Buchanan county, Virginia, for said defendant, John T. Dixon, at the price of $3.50 per M for common and better oak, $2.75 for common and better poplar, and $1.38 for poplar culls, to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff each month on the 20th of the month following that on which the lumber was sawed. That said contracts were made and entered into at Ronceverte, in the county of Greenbrier, aforesaid. That under the contract aforesaid with said defendant the said steam engine, sawmill, and fixtures were to become the property of plaintiff at the expiration of the said twelve months. That said plaintiff, in pursuance of said contract, at great cost and expense to him, went at once and took possession and control of said engine, sawmill, and fixtures, and set the same as directed by the defendant on defendant's land at Grisson creek, in the county of Buchanan, as aforesaid, and sawed at the least five hundred thousand feet of lumber of the classes and grades set forth in said contract, and as ordered and directed by defendant. That in May, 1899, plaintiff in pursuance of the order and direction of defendant, moved his said engine, sawmill, and fixtures to a second set on said land on Grisson's creek, and at said second set sawed for defendant at the least six hundred thousand feet of lumber of the classes and grades set forth in said contract, and as directed by the defendant, and at his request. That about the 1st of September, 1899, and while plaintiff was sawing at said second set with hands employed, said defendant ordered the sawing to stop, and the mill to be closed for two months, without the consent and over his protest, and to his injury, loss, and damage. That in November, 1899, the defendant ordered the engine, sawmill, and fixtures to be moved and set up at Bartontown, or near there. That plaintiff, at heavy costs, moved the said engine, sawmill, and fixtures in pursuance of said directions, and at the request of said defendant, and set the same up at the place near said Bartontown, where he operated until April, 1900, sawing at this set at least five hundred thousand feet of lumber of the classes and grades set forth in said contract, and as directed and requested by said defendant. That in April, 1900, at the request and directions of said defendant, plaintiff again moved said engine, sawmill, and fixtures, at great cost and expense, to Hart creek, in Russell county, Virginia, and then again set up the same at defendant's land, and operated until July, 1900, and at this set sawed at the least two hundred and fifty thousand feet of lumber of the classes and grades named in said contract, and as directed and requested to do by said defendant. That at all of said sets, and at each one of them, plaintiff sawed the lumber and trimmed the same in a workmanlike manner, and as required by his contract, and in every way complied with his contract, but the defendant did not in any instance comply with his part of the contract. Plaintiff further avers: That about the last of July, 1900, said defendant stopped logging the mill, and ordered said sawing to stop, and said sawmill to be closed down, at a time when plaintiff had men employed and at work, without plaintiff's consent or agreement, and refused to allow plaintiff to complete the job at that set, estimated at one million feet of lumber, to the great injury, loss, and damage to plaintiff. Plaintiff further avers that at the expiration of the twelve months set out in the said contract, to wit, on the 19th day of January, 1900, he, by and with the consent of said defendant, took complete possession and control of said steam engine, sawmill, and fixtures, and absolute ownership of the same. That when said defendant ordered the work to stop and the mill closed in July, 1900, he represented to plaintiff that the work would only be stopped about two months, and then resumed. That defendant would see and undertook that the steam engine, sawmill, and all the machinery and fixtures attached and belonging thereto would be properly and safely taken care of and kept in good condition and ready for work when the work began at the expiration of said two months. That at the expiration of said time plaintiff was ready to resume the work of sawing, but defendant refused to permit plaintiff to resume work, and refused to do anything to carry out his part of the contract. Plaintiff further avers: That the defendant failed, neglected, and refused to furnish plaintiff means to carry on his work of sawing under the contract, as defendant was bound and agreed to do; and in consequence of said neglect, failure, and refusal of said defendant to furnish plaintiff with such means plaintiff, in order to carry on the work for defendant, was compelled to seek credit to meet his expenses, and to mortgage the said steam engine, sawmill, machinery, and fixtures by giving deed of trust thereon, and that said steam engine and sawmill was sold away from plaintiff to meet the debts so incurred at the price of $300. That said defendant, instead of seeing that said steam engine, sawmill, machinery, and fixtures were well cared for and protected, and kept safe and in good condition, as he agreed to do, permitted, as plaintiff is informed, John Hunter and David Gambell to use and occupy the mill and saw with, and permitted said engine, sawmill, machinery, and fixtures to stand out in the weather unprotected, so that the belting and many valuable parts of the mill and machinery were carried away, stolen, and destroyed, to such an extent that the whole that was left thereof was sold at said sum of $300; and all this entailed heavy loss, injury, and damage to plaintiff, to wit, $3,000. Plaintiff avers that he kept and performed his contract in every particular, and was always ready and willing to fulfill his part of the contract in every particular; that the lumber he sawed was taken by defendant and placed upon the market, or taken into the possession of said defendant; that said defendant kept monthly estimates of the lumber; and, although plaintiff sawed nearly two millions of feet of lumber for defendant, defendant has not settled for the same, or accounted to plaintiff, although often requested to do so. Yet the said defendant, so being informed of the amount and value of the lumber sawed by plaintiff, and of his obligations under said contract to plaintiff, and utterly disregarding the rights of plaintiff in neglecting, refusing, and failing to furnish plaintiff means to carry on his work under said contract, and in refusing to permit plaintiff to finish the job of sawing at Hart's creek, and ordering the work to stop and the mill to be closed, and refusing and failing to allow plaintiff to resume that work and complete the job of sawing, and in neglecting, failing, and refusing to look after and take care of said engine, sawmill, machinery, and fixtures as he agreed to do, and permitting the same to be used and the belting and other parts of the machinery and fixtures to be carried away, stolen, and destroyed, and in refusing to account to plaintiff and pay for the lumber sawed for him by the plaintiff, and in neglecting, refusing, and failing to carry out his contract and furnish plaintiff means to keep up his work, and thereby forcing plaintiff to suffer his valuable machinery to be taken from him and sold, and in depriving plaintiff of the labor and profits he was justly entitled to possess and enjoy by sawing the timber left unsawed at Hart's creek when defendant ordered the work stopped, but wholly neglected so to do. And by reason of all this bad care, negligence, and default of said defendant in complying with his contract and obligations to plaintiff, as hereinbefore set forth, although often requested so to do, said plaintiff has been greatly wronged, and caused to pay out money, and suffer great injury, loss, and damage to the said plaintiff three thousand dollars. And therefore he sues. John W. Arbuckle, P. Q."

From an inspection of this declaration it is impossible to say whether the draftsman thereof intended it to be a declaration for trespass on the case or trespass on the case in assumpsit. In form it is a commingling of the two actions, while the substance thereof and the account filed therewith are proper only in an action of assumpsit. The difference between the two actions is that case is for damages occasioned by wrongful action or negligence, while assumpsit is damages for failure to perform, or breaches of promises, express or implied by law. In the latter the promise is the gist of the action, and where there is no promise alleged on the part of the defendant the declaration is fatally defective, for it presents no averment on which the defendant can take issue by the plea of nonassumpsit. 2 Tuck. Com. 143; Wolf v. Spence, 39 W. Va. 491, 494, 20 S. E. 610; 4 Minor's Institutes, pt. 1, p. 577; 2 Chit. Pl. 279; 1 Rob. Forms, 527; Sexton v. Holmes, 3 Munf. 566; Winston's Ex'rs v. Francisco, 2 Wash. 189; Hogg's Pleading and Forms, p. 72, § 84. It would have been a very easy matter for the plaintiff to have made this declaration good in assumpsit by having added after the matter of inducement and consideration "that by reason whereof the defendant became indebted to and liable to the plaintiff in the sum of $—, and, being so indebted, he, in consideration thereof, undertook and faithfully promised to pay the same to the plaintiff on request, yet the defendant, though often requested, hath not paid the same, but refuses, to the damage of the plaintiff $—, and therefore he sues," or words to the same effect averring a promise on the part of the defendant. It does not make any difference whether the defendant ever made any such promise, nor is it necessary to prove it. All that is necessary to prove is a liability under the allegations of the declaration, and the law implies the promise if it is properly alleged. Nor is such promise rendered unnecessary by section 29, c. 125, Code 1899, for such section was not intended to do away with the common-law forms of pleading, or destroy the essential characteristics of the different kinds of actions, as these are highly necessary to promote the ends of justice. The declaration being bad because of the want of the necessary allegation of promise on the part of the defendant, the demurrer thereto should have been sustained, and plaintiff should have been required to amend his declaration so that a proper issue thereon could have been joined. There is no misjoinder of action, for the plaintiff has the right to recover in an action of assumpsit for the various matters averred in the declaration when he properly amends the same to conform to an action of trespass on the case in assumpsit or on promises. This seems a technical matter on which to reverse the case, but, according to long established principles of law calculated to promote justice and a fair trial between litigants, and precedent firmly established, the court cannot do otherwise.

The judgment is reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case is remanded to the circuit court, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his declaration.

HANNA v. CHARLESTON NAT. BANK et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. March 1, 1904.)

APPEAL—PARTY IN INTEREST—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE—FUTURE SUPPORT.

1. A surety in an execution levied on the property of the principal debtor has such interest in the controversy over the ownership of such property, to which he is a party, as to entitle him to appeal from a judgment discharging such property from the lien of such execution.

2. Among others, a deed from a father to a daughter, conveying her his property, contains the following stipulations: "The further consideration of this deed is that the party of the second part, shall not dispose of said property during the lifetime of the party of the first part without the written consent of the party of the first part and that the party of the second part will furnish to the party of the first part a comfortable and proper support and maintenance during his natural life." Such stipulation renders such deed, in law, prima facie a nullity and void as to existing creditors, and it cannot be sustained unless it is shown that the grantor retained a sufficient amount of property to satisfy his debts.

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County; J. H. Couch, Special Judge.

Action by Kate P. Hanna against the Charleston National Bank and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and Peter Silman brings error. Reversed.

A. M. Prichard, for plaintiff in error. A. B. Littlepage and Flournoy, Price & Smith, for defendant in error.

DENT, J. Peter Silman complains of a judgment of the circuit court of Kanawha county rendered in certain proceedings to try the right to certain personal property, wherein Kate P. Hanna was plaintiff, and the Charleston National Bank, plaintiff in error, Peter Silman, and George Pfeiffer were defendants. The property in controversy was levied on as the property of George Pfeiffer by virtue of an execution for the sum of $165.07, with interest and costs, in favor of the Charleston National Bank, against George Pfeiffer, as principal, and Peter Silman, as surety. By verdict of a jury, under the instructions of the court, the property was found to be the property of the claimant, and judgment was rendered accordingly. Peter Silman obtained this writ of error. The defendant in error, Mrs. Hanna, claims that he has no such interest in the subject-matter in controversy as entitles him to maintain this writ. He is surety for the judgment, and entitled to have it made out of the property of his principal for his relief. If the property levied on was the property of his principal, he was virtually interested in preventing its release, and in having it applied in satisfaction of the execution. By section 138, c. 50, Code 1899, it is provided that "when a joint judgment is rendered against a principal debtor and his surety, if such suretyship appears to the satisfaction of the justice by any evidence at the trial or paper filed in the cause, or by admission of the parties, he shall note the fact on his docket, and in such case a memorandum thereof shall be endorsed on the execution, and the personal property of the principal debtor subject to execution, within the jurisdiction of the officer, shall be first sold, unless the surety direct otherwise." This section confers on the surety the right to have his principal's property subjected to the payment of the judgment for his benefit. This right always existed in equity under certain limitations, and by this statute it is made a matter of law. Or the surety had the right to pay the judgment, and he was then substituted to all the rights and remedies of the judgment creditor. Now, under the statute, before payment of the judgment he has the legal right to have the principal's property subjected to the payment of the execution. This invests him with an appealable interest in this case, for he has the right to have the property levied on, if the property of the principal, applied for his benefit. The surety's right, then, to maintain this writ, depends entirely on the merits of the controversy, and this is as to whether the property claimed by the defendant in error was leviable on as the property of George Pfeiffer, the principal debtor. If so, the surety has the right to have it held and applied for his relief. The record shows affirmatively and clearly that if the property released from the levy was subject thereto, as the property of the principal debtor, the surety was aggrieved by the release thereof; and such grievance does not depend on the contingency that there may probably be other property of the debtor subject to such levy, or that the creditor might otherwise be able to make its money out of the principal debtor. Such contingencies are too remote to destroy the surety's grievance occasioned by the release of the debtor's property actually in the custody of the law for the satisfaction of the debt. A bird in hand, under such circumstances, is worth a whole flock in the dense forest of uncertain probabilities.

The first question on the merits which presents itself is whether, for any reason, the conveyance under which the defendant in error claims the property in controversy is void as to the plaintiff's debt. If so, the motion of the defendant, Peter Silman, united in by the Charleston National Bank, to set aside the verdict "and grant them a new trial on the ground that the same was contrary to the law and the evidence," should have been sustained, and the circuit court erred in not doing so. The conveyance is as follows:

"This deed, made this 29th day of March, 1900, between George Pfeiffer, of the county of Kanawha, West Virginia, of the first part, and Mrs. Mary Catherine Hanna, daughter of the said George Pfeiffer, of the same county and state of the second party:

"Witnesseth: That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration that the party of the first part is indebted to the party of the second part in a large sum of money for services rendered him as his housekeeper during a period of several years, and for other services, and for other valuable considerations hereinafter mentioned, and that this conveyance shall operate as a release of all liability now existing on the part of the party of the first part to the party of the second part.

"Doth grant unto the party of the second part all the following real estate owned by the party of the first part situate in the said county of Kanawha and below the city of Charleston, to wit: First. About 23 acres of land on Kanawha River bottom and between the Popp lands and the Wm. Pfeiffer 23 acres recently sold to John S. Payne. Second. About 50 acres of land conveyed to said George Pfeiffer by Henry G. Tucker and wife. Third. A certain lot known as lot No. 91, block 22, West Charleston. Fourth. 100 acres of land known as the Stanley tract, and lying back of what is known as the Military Grant; all of which foregoing tracts of land are the same which are described in a certain deed of trust executed by said George Pfeiffer to George S. Couch, Trustee, to secure certain indebtedness due to one Aaron Baer, which said deed of trust is recorded in Kanawha County Court Clerk's Office in Trust Deed Book No. 20, page 442, to which reference may be had for a fuller description of the property above mentioned. Fifth. About 150 acres of land lying north of the county road, and being the land upon which the said George Pfeiffer now resides, the same being made up of two tracts, to wit: one of about 142 acres conveyed to said George Pfeiffer by Henry G. Tucker and wife, by deed dated October 10th, 1859, and recorded in said clerk's office in Book W, at page 140, and about 8 acres described in a deed from Matilda Stanley and others to said George Pfeiffer, and recorded in deed book No. 32, page 627, to which two said deeds reference may be had for a fuller description of the said 150 acres. Sixth. Also the following personal property now on the lands of the party of the first party, to wit, two horses, one grain drill, two mowers, one self-binder, one spring wagon, one farm wagon, two buggies, and all farm implements of the party of the first part. The further consideration of this deed is, that the party of the second part shall not dispose of said property during the lifetime of the party of the first part without the written consent of the party of the first part, and that the party of the second part will furnish to the party of the first part a comfortable and proper support and maintenance during his natural life, and it is further understood and agreed that this deed is subject to a certain deed of trust this day executed by the party of the first part in favor of F. A. Sattes.

"And the said party of the first part doth hereby covenant with the party of the second part, that he will warrant generally the property hereby conveyed:

"Witness the following signature and seal.

"George Pfeiffer. [Seal.]"

The following provision, to wit, "The further consideration of this deed is, that the party of the second part shall not dispose of said property during the lifetime of the party of the first part without the written consent of the party of the first part, and that the party of the second part will furnish to the party of the first part a comfortable and proper support and maintenance during his natural life," makes this deed void, as a matter of law, as to existing creditors, it matters not how pure may have been the intentions and motives of the parties thereto, unless it be shown that the grantor retained a sufficient amount of property to pay all of his existing debts; and this can best be established by showing that all such debts have been satisfied. In 14 Am. & En. En. Law (2d Ed.) 246, it is stated that "a conveyance of property by an insolvent or embarrassed debtor, upon consideration of his future support by the grantee, is fraudulent and void as against existing creditors." This text is supported by a numerous array of authorities, from Alabama to Vermont, without dissent. Davidson v. Burke, 143 Ill. 139, 32 N. E. 514, 36 Am. St. Rep. 367. In note on page 375, 36 Am. St. Rep., it is said: "An agreement for future support, while it is a valuable consideration, is not sufficient to sustain a conveyance, when to do so will operate to the prejudice of the grantor's existing creditors. Harting v. Jockers, 136 Ill. 627 [27 N. E. 188, 29 Am. St. Rep. 341]; Sidsensparker v. Sidsensparker, 52 Me. 481 [83 Am. Dec. 527]." In the case of Smith v. Smith, 11 N. H. 459, it is said that the grantee who accepts a deed on consideration, in whole or part, for future support, should see that all existing debts of the grantor are satisfied. If the property, however, is conveyed for full and adequate consideration, a cotemporaneous agreement for future support of the grantor, which forms no part of the consideration, will not render the conveyance void. 14 Am. & En. En. Law (2d Ed.) 246. In the present case, on the face of the deed itself, the future support is made a part of the consideration thereof, and it is rendered thereby prima facie void, as a matter of law. This can only be overcome by the grantee showing that the grantor reserved a sufficient amount of property to pay all his existing debts, the best evidence of which, as heretofore said, is that all existing debts have been satisfied. The void character of the deed cannot be cured by showing that the grantee had afterwards assumed and paid debts to the full value of the property conveyed. Welcome v. Batchelder, 23 Me. 85. In the case of Sidsensparker v. Sidsensparker, 52 Me. 481, 83 Am. Dec. 532, it is said: "The gist of the objection to the validity of the conveyance in this respect consists not in the amount to be paid in future support, but in the fact that the promise of such support formed part of the consideration, as an inducement to the sale. In such case the grantor essays to put his property beyond the reach of his creditors, and receives therefor an inadequate present consideration with which to satisfy their claims. When this fact is established, whatever be the amount so secured from attachment, instead of entering upon the task of determining what part of the consideration was paid in money or other property, and what part was agreed to be paid in future support of the grantor, and of holding the grantee responsible to the grantor's creditors for the latter sum, the law treats the conveyance as a nullity, as between the grantee and the grantor's creditors, and holds the property liable for their claims. Such an arrangement between grantor and grantee is a continuing fraud, and has been held void not only as against precedent, but as against subsequent creditors. Clark v. French, 23 Me. 221, 39 Am. Dec. 618; Smith v. Smith, 11 N. H. 400; Jackson v. Brush, 20 Johns. 5." While there may be some doubt as to whether such a deed, under our recording acts, would be invalid as to subsequent creditors who deal with full knowledge thereof, it is unquestionably void as to existing creditors, as a matter of law, without regard to the intent of the parties. The effect of it is to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, and this renders it void. No debtor, as against existing creditors, can secure to himself the benefit of his property, either in whole or part, by conveying it to some one else. This being a question of actual fraud in law, section 2, c. 74, Code 1899, is not involved, as it applies only to unlawful preferences. Nor does the bona fides of Mrs. Hanna's conduct or claim affect the matter. She having accepted a deed which the law presumes void on its face as to existing creditors, she can only preserve it from their demands by paying them, or showing that her father retained sufficient property to satisfy them. This renders it unnecessary to consider the instructions either of the plaintiff or the defendant. As the deed is, in law, prima facie fraudulent, lent, neither the good nor bad intent of Mrs. Hanna in accepting the same, nor the bona fides of her debt, nor the question of unlawful preference, can change the legal status thereof. She must show that her father retained sufficient property to pay the debt involved, or she must pay it, or allow the property levied on to be sold for its satisfaction.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, a new trial is awarded the defendants, and the case remanded.

RYLAND & RANKIN v. CHESAPEAKE & O. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 1, 1904.)

CARRIERS—SHIPMENT OF GOODS—REFUSAL TO ACCEPT—CONVERSION BY CARRIER.

1. R. & R. shipped by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company a box of goods on the 14th day of September, 1900, from White Sulphur, W. Va., to Newark, N. J. On the 28th of November, 1900, the carrier tendered the box to La Pierre Company, the consignee, who refused to accept the same. R. & R. brought their action of assumpsit for the value of the goods, alleging their loss. The plaintiffs proved the tender of the goods to the consignee, and consignee's refusal to accept them. Held, plaintiffs could not recover the value of the goods in said action, not having first made a demand on the carrier therefor.

2. Delay on the part of a carrier does not constitute a conversion of the goods, no matter how long continued, so as to make him liable for their value; and, so long as the goods remain in specie, the plaintiff can recover from the carrier only the damages which he has sustained by the delay.

3. The owner cannot charge the carrier with a conversion, or the value of the goods, for a delay, however long, if they are safely kept, unless they have been demanded of the carrier, and their delivery refused.

Error from Circuit Court, Greenbrier County; J. M. McWhorter, Judge.

Action by Ryland & Rankin against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant brings error. Reversed.

Simms & Enslow, for plaintiff in error.
Gilmer & Gilmer and H. L. Van Sickler, for defendants in error.

McWHORTER, J. Ryland & Rankin filed their declaration in the clerk's office of the circuit court of Greenbrier county against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, averring that on the 14th day of September, 1900, plaintiffs shipped from White Sulphur Springs, in said county, by the defendant railway company, to the city of Newark, N. J., a box containing certain goods in the declaration described, of the aggregate value of $418.21, and that said defendant on the said day undertook and faithfully promised to take care of the said goods and chattels, and safely and securely carry and convey the same on and by the railroad cars of said defendant from the said White Sulphur Springs to the said city of Newark, N. J., and there safely and securely deliver the same for the said plaintiffs; that, although the said defendant had received the said goods and chattels for the said purpose, yet, not regarding its duty as such carrier, nor its promise and undertaking, it had not taken care of the goods and chattels, and safely and securely conveyed them and delivered them at the said city of Newark, N. J., but had so carelessly and negligently behaved and conducted itself with respect to the said goods and chattels that, by and through the mere carelessness, negligence, and improper conduct of the defendant and its servants, said goods and chattels, being of the said value, afterwards, on the said day and year, became and were wholly lost to the said plaintiffs. The declaration contains three counts, all substantially the same; each count closing with the allegation that the goods were wholly lost to the plaintiffs. The defendant entered its general plea. A jury was impaneled, and the case tried, and a verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiffs for $418.21. The defendant filed its bill of exceptions, certifying all the evidence taken in the case, and showing that the defendant had moved to set aside the verdict and grant it a new trial because the verdict was contrary to law, and because of improper instructions given the jury, which motion the court overruled, and refused to set aside the verdict, and entered judgment thereon.

It appears from the evidence introduced by the plaintiffs that the box containing the goods which were shipped was tendered by the defendant on the 28th of November, 1900, to La Pierre Manufacturing Company at its place of business in the city of Newark, N. J., who refused to receive it; La Pierre Manufacturing Company being the consignee named on the box, and to whom the evidence shows the box was shipped, although the declaration fails to disclose the name of the consignee of the goods. The declaration is a declaration for the loss of the goods, and yet the evidence shows that the goods were not lost; hence they must be yet in the custody and care of the defendant. Instructions Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, and 7 given for plaintiffs, as well as instruction No. 1 offered by defendant and refused, are all based upon the theory of the declaration, that the box was lost, and there is no evidence in the case upon which to base any such instructions; and therefore plaintiffs' instructions were improperly given, and defendant's instruction No. 1, of the same character, was properly refused. The only instruction offered which was proper to be given was defendant's instruction No. 2, which was refused by the court, and is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if they find from the evidence that the defendant or any one else offered to deliver to the consignees, La Pierre Manufacturing Company, at their place of business in Newark, New Jersey, the box shipped by Ryland & Rankin on September 14, 1900, from White Sulphur, and the said manufacturing company refused to receive the same, then you should find for the defendant." This instruction was in line with the evidence given in the case. The goods were never demanded of the defendant by the consignors, and the consignee had refused to receive the box when tendered to it. On the 30th of November, 1900, Ryland & Rankin wrote to R. H. Boatright, agent of the defendant, referring to the fact that they had on the 22d of October advised the defendant that La Pierre Manufacturing Company had not received the goods, and that, unless they were delivered to them on or before the 1st of November, the goods would not be accepted, and stating that they had that morning received advice from the La Pierre Manufacturing Company that defendant had endeavored to deliver to them a package on the 28th, which they presumed was the package containing the goods shipped on the 14th of September, and that they had refused to receive the same, and they thought the La Pierre Manufacturing Company was right in so doing, and closed by saying, "You will confer a favor on us by having this matter adjusted immediately and send us check to cover the amount of invoice." They did not demand the goods, but demanded of the defendant that it pay the invoice price of the goods; treating it as a conversion of the goods, which they could not do until after making a demand, and a failure or refusal on the part of the defendant to deliver the goods. Section 775, Hutchinson on Carriers, pp. 927, 928, says: "Delay on the part of the carrier does not constitute a conversion of the goods, no matter how long continued, so as to make him liable for their value; and, so long as the goods remain in specie, however much they may be depreciated in value, the consignee or owner must receive them when tendered, and can recover from the carrier only the damages which he has sustained by the delay. Nor will a voluntary acceptance of the goods, when there has been inexcusable delay on the part of the carrier in their delivery, preclude the owner from a recovery of whatever damages he may have sustained thereby." And authorities there cited. And the same writer, in treating of the duties of common carriers in section 328, says, in part: "But as to this implied contract or duty, his responsibility is only that of an ordinary bailee for hire; and, if he fail in the performance of it, he becomes liable for only such damages as the bailor may have suffered by his negligence. Although he may have delayed the carriage for an unreasonable length of time, the bailor is still bound to receive the goods, when tendered where the delivery is required to be made, and cannot refuse them, and hold the carrier liable for their value. And though the carrier may delay ever so long, the owner cannot charge him with a conversion, or for value of the goods, if they are safely kept, unless they have been demanded of the carrier, and their delivery refused. But if by the unreasonable delay they have deteriorated, or their market value has fallen, or they arrived too late for the market, he may hold him liable for the damages. And in an action to recover such damages, he may recover for any reasonable expense to which he has been put by the delay."

The evidence wholly fails to support the allegations of the declaration, and, the court having erred in giving the instructions named for plaintiffs, and refused the second instruction for defendant, hereinbefore set forth, the judgment must be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the cause remanded, and the plaintiffs granted leave, if they so desire, to amend their declaration, or take such other proceedings as they may be advised it is proper to do.

COCHRAN v. COCHRAN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 1, 1904.)

CO-TENANCY—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. When one tenant in common occupies the common property, openly, notoriously, and exclusively, as the sole owner, keeping up the improvements, paying the taxes thereon, and receiving to himself the rents and profits, and exercising over the property such acts of ownership as evidence an intention to ignore the rights of his co-tenants, such acts amount to a disseisin, and his possession will be regarded as adverse to his co-tenants from the time they are shown to have knowledge of such acts and claims.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pocahontas County; J. M. McWhorter, Judge.

Bill by D. J. Cochran against George B. Cochran and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant George B. Cochran appeals. Reversed in part.

Gilmer & Gilmer, for appellant. McNeill & McNeill, for appellee.

McWHORTER, J. D. J. Cochran filed his bill in the circuit court of Pocahontas county against Michael Cochran, Miles Cochran, Nancy Cochran, Samuel Cochran, and George B. Cochran, praying for the partition of two tracts of land, containing, respectively, 215 acres and 72 acres, in said county; the 215 acres having descended from his father, Jesse Cochran, and the 72 acres from Jane Cochran, his mother. George B. Cochran filed his answer and cross-bill, admitting that the plaintiff was entitled to a partition among himself and the other heirs of the 215 acres, but claiming the 72 acres as his own, alleging that it belonged to his mother, Jane Cochran; that his father had died in 1865; that respondent had from that time until his mother's death, in 1882, taken care of and supported her, and that she had promised to give to him, and in fact had given to him, the 72 acres of land, and placed him in actual possession thereof, and that he had continued in possession of said 72 acres of land from that time until the present; that he had tilled the same, maintaining the fences, exercised sole and exclusive possession and control thereof, had paid all taxes thereon, and, as much as 18 years prior to the making of his answer, notified the plaintiff in this cause, and all the other heirs at law of Jane Cochran, that respondent claimed all of said 72 acres, and that he did not recognize any other right thereto; that no one of the children of Jane Cochran, other than respondent, ever had any part of said 72 acres in possession; and denied that plaintiff was entitled to any part, share, or interest therein, but denied that the 72 acres was capable of being partitioned, and that the plaintiff had any right to have the same partitioned or sold; that plaintiff lived close to respondent, and well knew he had never allowed any rights on said 72 acres, and that respondent had expressly claimed all of the same, and had never allowed any one else to have any control or possession of it; that the county road separated the 72 acres from the part owned by Jesse Cochran; that respondent had paid all taxes on his father's interest in 430 acres of land, which was the 215-acre tract, for over 30 years, and that neither the plaintiff, nor any one of the defendants, other than respondent, had ever paid any taxes on said land, and he had saved the land from forfeiture; and prayed that all he had so paid be repaid to him, and that his title to the 72 acres be quieted; that this answer be treated as a cross-bill, and that process issue against plaintiff and the other defendants in said suit; and that he recover his costs; and for general relief. The plaintiff and defendants who were made parties defendant to the cross-bill were summoned, but none of them filed answers to said answer and cross-bill. Depositions were taken and filed in the cause, and the cause came on to be heard on the 11th day of April, 1902. While no answers were filed to the cross-bill, it is stated in the decree that D. J. Cochran and Samuel Cochran contested the claim set up by G. B. Cochran. "Upon consideration of the pleadings, depositions, and exhibits, and the court being of the opinion that the defendant George B. Cochran is not entitled to the 72-acre tract, as claimed by his answer, in the nature of a cross-bill, filed in this cause, but that his possession of the same inures to the benefit of the coparceners," the court proceeded to appoint commissioners to go upon the said two tracts of 215 acres and 72 acres, and partition the same amongst the parties entitled thereto according to their respective interests, from which decree the said defendant George B. Cochran appealed.

But one question arises for consideration in this cause. The appellant, George B. Cochran, by his answer and cross-bill, shows that he had sole, actual, exclusive, and adverse possession of the 72 acres of land from the time of the death of his mother, in 1882, and that 18 years before the institution of this suit he had notified the plaintiff and all the other heirs at law of his mother of his exclusive claim to the land, and the fact that he did not recognize any rights in any of the said heirs in said land. It is shown that the plaintiff lived on land adjoining the 72 acres, and that he helped said George B. Cochran to maintain a line fence between the land of plaintiff and this 72 acres. The answer and cross-bill of defendant was taken for confessed as to the plaintiff and all the other heirs, defendants thereto. In Newell on Ejectment, § 72, p. 763, it is said: "The possession of one co-tenant is the possession of all the rest. * * * But when one tenant in common occupies the common property openly, notoriously, and exclusively as the sole owner, improving it and receiving to himself the rents and profits, or exercising over the property such acts of ownership as evidence an intention to ignore the rights of his co-tenants, such acts will amount to a disseisin, and his possession will be regarded as adverse to his co-tenants from the time they are shown to have knowledge of such acts and claims." And authorities there cited. See, also, Buswell on Limitations & Adverse Possession, § 298, to the same effect; Cooley v. Porter, 22 W. Va. 120. And in Justice v. Lawson, 46 W. Va. 163, 33 S. E. 102 (Syl., points 3, 4), it is held: "(3) One tenant in common may oust his co-tenant, and hold in severalty, but a silent possession, unaccompanied with any action amounting to an ouster, or giving notice to the co-tenant that his possession is adverse, cannot be construed into an adverse possession. (4) It is the intention of the tenant or parcener in possession to hold the common property in severalty and exclusively as his own, with notice or knowledge to his co-tenants of such intention, that constitutes the disseisin."

Defendant George B. Cochran, after notifying plaintiff and all the other heirs of his claim to said 72 acres, claiming it under his mother, the owner, who placed him in possession of it, continued in open, notorious, adverse, and exclusive possession, if not with the consent, with the acquiescence, of all the other heirs, undisturbed in such possession, for a period of 18 years before the institution of this suit; and this, under the authorities cited, entitles the said George B. Cochran to have title to the said 72 acres of land, and the court erred in directing its partition among the heirs at law of the said Jane Cochran.

The decree of the circuit court, only to that extent, is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to require the heirs at law of the said Jane Cochran to convey the said 72 acres to said George B. Cochran, and to appoint a commissioner to convey the same for them in default of their doing so, and for such further proceedings in said cause as may be proper to be had therein.

TILLIS v. TILLIS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 1, 1904.)

DIVORCE—DESERTION—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS.

1. It requires willful desertion to warrant a divorce from the bond of matrimony. Willful desertion is a breach of matrimonial duty, and is composed, first, of a breaking off of matrimonial cohabitation; and, second, an intent in the mind to desert. Both must combine to make the desertion complete. Noncohabitation alone is not desertion.

2. To authorize a divorce for willful desertion, the plaintiff bears the burden of proof, and the evidence of such desertion must be full and clear.

3. Whether admissions are competent evidence on which to ground a divorce or not, they are competent evidence to defeat a divorce.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mason County;
F. A. Guthrie, Judge.

Bill by Smith Tillis against Mary A. D. Tillis. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. A. Parsons, Hogg & Kerwood, and W. M. Duffy, for appellant. J. E. Neller, for appellee.

BRANNON, J. This is an appeal from a decree from the circuit court of Mason county granting an absolute divorce to Smith Tillis from his wife, Mary A. D. Tillis, upon a bill filed by him charging her with abandonment, from which decree she has appealed.

It is at once enough to reverse the decree to say that the evidence fails to show a material element; that is, willful abandonment. It is of the very core of such a case to show, not merely that the wife went away from home, as that is only one element or circumstance of the case; but it must be shown that she ceased cohabitation with willful design and intent to desert her husband. Both facts must be shown. Willful desertion cannot be inferred from the fact that the parties do not live together. Mere cessation of cohabitation is not enough. Burk v. Burk, 21 W. Va. 445. The words of the Code of 1899, c. 64, § 5, giving this cause of divorce, gives it "where either party willfully abandons or deserts the other for three years." This shows there must be intent to finally desert. I may fairly say that the plaintiff's case rests only on his own evidence, and that is too short. He says that they lived together in Mason county, but had not lived together for four years, and, being asked why, he answered, "Because I considered it an utter impossibility, on account of the disposition and temper of the woman, to live together agreeably." The question was then propounded, "Do I understand by your answer that she has abandoned and deserted you?" He answered, "Yes, sir. She left Mason county in November, 1898, and moved her goods and chattels to Jackson county." Now, this shows rather, from his own lips, that he abandoned her than that she abandoned him. At any rate, it utterly fails to show willful, intentional abandonment, giving it the most favorable construction for the plaintiff. His evidence shows merely his assertion that his wife had abandoned him, his mere opinion of the character of her actions, without facts and circumstances to explain why she went to Jackson county, or give cast to her act in so doing. Why she left he does not say, nor for what cause. Perhaps his wrong caused her to leave. He ought to show that she did wrong in leaving, and make her act unjustifiable, and vindicate himself from blame. His failure as a witness to do so is significant. There is absolutely no evidence given by the plaintiff to show willful design to desert. His case signally fails to show this cardinal element. It does show that she left home, and moved to Jackson county, and there resided. It does show a cessation of matrimonial cohabitation; but willful abandonment is not shown, and that is the very cause on which alone the statute grants the divorce. The law and moral and religious sentiment of the country do not favor divorce, and, as Judge Johnson said in Burk v. Burk, "The bonds of matrimony should never be dissolved, unless for the most cogent legal reasons made clearly to appear." Full proof is required. 2 Bishop on Marriage, Divorce and Separation, § 762. Turning to the evidence of the defendant, she swears that when she was sick, and was merely able to sit up when helped to a chair, her husband told her that he was going to Sayre's after his son, to get him back in school, leaving her with not over a gallon of flour and not over two gallons of meal, and some eight or ten bushels of corn in the ear, and without a bit of lamp oil for light, and when she could not wait on herself. He said he was coming back as soon as he could get back, but she says he never returned again, and refused to live with or support her. He admits that he then lived with his son-in-law. She says that there was never any trouble between them. She swears that in about three weeks after he left her she went to him at Bud Conley's, and cried and begged him to come back and live with her, and told him that, if she had said or done anything wrong, she begged him to forgive her, and come back; and that he told her she had never said or done anything that was hard. He said that "he had left, and that was all there was of it; that he left just because he left." She says he refused all support to her. This is the woman's version under oath, and, if it comes from an interested party, I respond that her version is entitled to as much credit as is his, and the burden is on him to prove his case. And it is here very important to say that he never went upon the stand to deny her statement. A son of hers by a former marriage was present at this interview, and swears that she asked him if she or her children had said anything causing him to leave, and he said "No"; and she asked him why he left, and he said just because he wanted to leave. The son swears that he asked Tillis to come back, and that he declared that he never intended to do so, and that he told the son to take his mother away. The son swears that his mother was clinging to her husband, and that her husband shoved her away, got on his horse, and ran his horse nearly to the top of the hill, the woman following him part of the way, and fell in the road under her excitement, and that Mrs. Conley helped to take her home. H. E. Greer swears that he met Tillis in the road shortly after Tillis left his wife, and he told Tillis that he had heard that Tillis had left his wife, and said to him that he thought he had done wrong, and had better go back, and that he had left the woman in bad shape and circumstances, and Tillis said that he had left with the intention of not going back, and would not go back. Mrs. Reesa Greer, a school teacher, swears that Mrs. Tillis sent for her, and requested her to write a letter to her husband, requesting him to come back home; and she wrote the letter. Another witness swears that Tillis stated to him that he had no grounds on which to bring a suit for divorce, and requested the witness to go to see his wife, and get her to apply for a divorce, and said that he (Tillis) would bear her expenses and pay all the cost, and that he would make a statement before the court that he would not live with or support her, and that that would get a divorce. Tillis came back on the witness stand to meet this evidence of Nicholas King. At first he denied King's evidence, but on cross-examination, while denying such conversation at the two points named by King, he admitted an important fact in these words: "I did tell Nicholas King that if she would go ahead and apply for a divorce that I would pay the expenses, but I didn't tell him I knew I had no grounds." Thus it is clearly proven that Tillis wanted a divorce, and clearly proven that he abandoned his wife. The evidence clearly shows that he abandoned his wife. Admissions from his own lips clearly prove it. Whatever construction may be properly put on the language in section 8, c. 64, of the Code of 1899, that "the cause shall be heard independently of the admissions of either party in the pleading or otherwise"; whatever we may think of the correctness of the case of Bailey v. Bailey, 21 Grat. 43, holding that said statute does not render admissions, except by collusion, incompetent evidence on which to obtain a divorce—we cannot question their admissibility as evidence to defeat a divorce. "In a suit for divorce the admissions of the plaintiff are competent evidence to support the averments of the answer." Cralle v. Cralle, 79 Va. 182. It is plain that we must reverse the decree and dismiss the bill.

PAYNE et al. v. STAUNTON, County Clerk.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 1, 1904.)

ELECTIONS—POLLBOOKS—INSPECTION—REFUSAL—MANDAMUS—WHO MAY BRING.

1. Pollbooks of a special election, under a special act of the Legislature, deposited in the office of the clerk of a county court, are public papers or documents under sections 3 and 3 of chapter 117, Code 1899, and the clerk is under duty to allow inspection of them, under proper circumstances, to a person interested in them, though such special act be unconstitutional.

2. Several persons who make common application to a clerk of a county court for inspection of public records, and are refused it, if entitled to such inspection, may unite in mandamus to compel such inspection.

3. A clerk of a county court has such interest as entitles him to refuse an inspection of records in his office, when such inspection is not called for by law.

4. Ministerial officer. Can he refuse to perform an act required by an unconstitutional statute, before it has been judicially declared invalid?

5. A pecuniary interest in an individual in the act sought to be compelled by mandamus must exist to maintain it.

6. One or more individuals may maintain mandamus to compel the doing of an act in which the public at large, including them, have a common interest.

7. Inspection of records and papers in a county clerk's office is not a right vested in every person or under all circumstances. The person asking it must have an interest in the record or paper of which inspection is sought, and the inspection must be for a legitimate purpose.

8. Mandamus will not lie to compel inspection of records by a private individual for the sole purpose of learning evidence for the institution of criminal prosecution.

McWhorter, P. J., and Dent, J., dissenting.
(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County;
F. A. Guthrie, Judge.

Action by J. M. Payne and others against E. W. Staunton, county clerk. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Linn, Byrne & Cato, P. G. Walker, and A. Burlew, for plaintiffs in error. Mollohan, McClintic & Mathews, for defendant in error.

BRANNON, J. The Legislature of 1903 passed chapter 59 (Acts 1903, p. 170), "to authorize the county court of Kanawha county to fund the indebtedness of said county by issuing its bonds, and to authorize a special election for that purpose." Under that act an election was held upon the question whether bonds should be issued, and the returns of the election were made and canvassed and the result ascertained, and the pollbooks and ballots were returned to the office of the clerk of the county court. J. M. Payne and others applied to E. W. Staunton, clerk of the county court, to be allowed to inspect the pollbooks of said election for all the precincts of the county, but he refused to do so. Then they demanded that said clerk make them certified copies of certain ones of said pollbooks, offering to pay for them, but said clerk refused to make such copies. Then said Payne and others applied to the circuit court of the county by petition for a mandamus to compel the clerk to allow them to inspect said pollbooks and to make such copies as they should require. An alternative mandamus was awarded, and upon its return Staunton demurred to it, and moved to quash the alternative mandamus, and the court gave judgment sustaining the demurrer to the petition and quashing the alternative mandamus, and from this judgment the plaintiffs sued out a writ of error.

One defense made by Staunton is that the pollbooks are not records or papers contemplated and provided for in section 5, c. 117, Code 1899, providing that "the records and papers of every court shall be open to the inspection of any person, and the clerk shall, when required, furnish copies thereof." The reason given for such denial of the public character of these pollbooks is that the act of the Legislature under which the election was held violates article 6, § 39, of the Constitution, prohibiting special or local legislation in certain cases. Staunton claims that these pollbooks are not more than waste paper in his office, and that no duty rests upon him to allow inspection or make copies of them, because of the unconstitutionality of the act. We will not pass upon the validity of the act, because we do not find it imperative upon us to do so. In deference to the Legislature, it is everywhere held by the courts that courts will not pass upon this question, unless a decision upon that very point is necessary to the determination of the case. Edgell v. Conaway, 24 W. Va. 747. Even if we say that the act is open to such objections, still we hold that these pollbooks are public papers on file in a public office, subject to inspection for the purpose of this case; they are such pro hac vice. It is of primary import that public records and papers shall be of ready access to the public, and we must be reluctant to declare that a custodian of them can restrict this right incorporated in the cited provision of the Code. We must be slow to announce that a clerk, whose duties as to their inspection and making copies of them are purely ministerial, not discretionary, can assume the dangerous power to hold an act of the Legislature invalid, and for that reason deny to citizens the right to inspect papers deposited in his office and custody only for preservation and public inspection and use, because merely they originated under such a statute. We do not say that any and every paper happening to be in the clerk's office is official, or that any but legally public ones give the right to inspection; but that is not the case in this instance. These election papers have higher character. The election was held, the returns made, the result canvassed and declared, and the pollbooks put in the keeping of the clerk in the public office under color of law; they were actually in the office. Section 3, c. 117, Code 1899, says: "All papers returned to, or filed in the clerk's office shall be preserved therein until legally delivered out." This only requires that they be "returned to or filed in" the office. It does not draw the refined distinction that those filed under valid law are to be preserved, while those filed under an act turning out to be unconstitutional, though filed under color of law, are simply refuse or waste in the office. Could they be thrown in the street, or altered or burnt, by the clerk with impunity? If citizens favorable to or against the bonds, believing a recount would sustain or defeat the proposition, should ask inspection prior to demand of recount, could they not lawfully do so?

A question of great practical importance comes up in this case. Can a clerk asked to do a ministerial act refuse on the ground that the statute under which he is asked to do that act is unconstitutional? Can he say that the Legislature has violated the Constitution before the statute has been judicially declared void? Merrill on Mandamus, § 65, says: "But the courts will not consider the constitutionality of a law in a mandamus proceeding at the instance of a ministerial officer. If he should be allowed to question the law of the land, the operations of the government would be thwarted, and great confusion would result. If the law is void, the parties can appeal to the courts for further protection. A mandamus will not be issued to compel the granting of a license under a law for a reason which, if valid, shows the law itself to be unconstitutional." Not much consistency or clear guidance is there in that section. Merrill cites Smyth v. Titcomb, 31 Me. 272, holding that a ministerial officer, collecting and disbursing revenue, has no right to withhold performance of ministerial acts, prescribed by law, merely because, possibly, the law may be unconstitutional. He cites People v. Salomon, 54 Ill. 39. In it an assessor refused to assess certain taxes on the ground that the law was invalid. The law was held valid, but the court broadly states the law to be that a ministerial officer cannot be allowed to decide upon the validity. "It is the duty of a ministerial officer to obey an act of the Legislature directing his action, not to question or decide upon its validity," the court said. The fully considered case of State ex rel. v. Auditor, 47 La. Ann. 1679, 18 South. 746, holds, even against the State Auditor and Treasurer refusing to pay money under a statute allowing it, that "executive officers of the state government have no authority to decline performance of purely ministerial duties imposed upon them by a law, on the ground that it contravenes the Constitution. Laws are presumed to be and must be treated and acted upon by subordinate executive officers as constitutional and legal until their unconstitutionality has been judicially established." For the double purpose of showing that these pollbooks are, for the matter involved, public papers properly in the office, and also the holding that a ministerial officer cannot refuse to file them because, in his opinion, the act under which an election is held is unconstitutional, I refer to Franklin Co. v. State, 20 Am. & Eng. Corp. cases, 60; Id., 24 Fla. 55, 3 South. 471, 12 Am. St. Rep. 183. The syllabus says: "A statute which requires inspectors to canvass votes of an election and make return to the county commissioners imposes upon such commissioners the duty of receiving and keeping the returns in their official custody as records. Neither the constitutionality of such statute nor the legality of the election held thereunder can be considered by the commissioners officially, nor can the same be raised by them as ground for not performing such duty in a mandamus brought to compel its performance." In State v. Commissioners, 18 Neb. 506, 28 N. W. 315, a mandamus issued to compel commissioners to call an election, the court refusing to pass on the validity of the act, saying that the presumption is in favor of the validity of a statute, and that it is the duty of all ministerial officers to obey it until it is declared invalid. There the court by mandamus compelled an act going straight to the enforcement of the statute. The presumption that a statute is valid always operates. Just how far is not clear. Some courts say that it operates until it is judicially declared to be void. The expression in point 2 in State v. Buchanan, 24 W. Va. 362, has this import. It is a very grave assumption of power for an officer exercising ministerial functions to say that the highest, the sole, lawmaking power has violated the Constitution, and he will therefore disobey its will. Great confusion and disorder might ensue from the exercise of such power. It should rarely be exercised, very prudently, only in plainest cases. I do not think that mandamus will go to compel an officer to do an act going directly to execute an invalid statute. I do not see that a court will take affirmative action to support it. But this is not a mandamus to enforce the statute. It is not to compel officers to hold, return, declare the result of an election, or issue bonds, under the statute. The demand upon the clerk did not call for an act on his part to enforce the statute in question. It was made under the Code section, given above, allowing inspection and copies, and the contested statute does not enter into the matter, except from the fact that the documents were created under it. And the pollbooks did not go to the enforcement of that statute, as they were to be used only as evidence to punish frauds in elections. So the court was not asked to enforce the statute condemned as invalid. In support of the position that mandamus will not be awarded to compel the direct enforcement of a statute against the Constitution, it may be useful to give some cases. A mandamus was sought to compel a town clerk to assess a tax; but the court holding that the statute commanding it was unconstitutional, it was refused. State v. Tappan, 29 Wis. 664, 9 Am. Rep. 622. A statute required supervisors to divide counties into districts. Mandamus refused to compel them. Van Horn v. State, 46 Neb. 62, 64 N. W. 365. Mandamus refused to compel canvassing board to count ballots as directed by the statute. Maynard v. Board, 84 Mich. 228, 47 N. W. 756, 11 L. R. A. 332. Mandamus refused to compel controller to draw warrant to pay a demand allowed by a statute. Patty v. Colgan, 97 Cal. 251, 31 Pac. 1133, 18 L. R. A. 744. Mandamus refused to pay bond. Brandenstein v. Hoke, 101 Cal. 131, 35 Pac. 562. Mandamus refused to compel payment of judge's salary. McDermont v. Dinnie, 6 N. D. 278, 69 N. W. 294. So to compel issue of town bonds to build a railroad. People v. Bachellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480. These are the cases where mandamus would operate directly to execute the unconstitutional law. For this reason I do not doubt the text of 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 1090, that "it is the prevailing rule that ministerial officers charged by a certain act with a duty may urge the unconstitutionality of the act as a defense to mandamus to compel them to perform the duty." An officer surely can refuse to do an act not imposed upon him as a duty by law. "An unconstitutional act is not a law; it confers no right; it imposes no duty; it affords no protection; it creates no office; it is, in legal contemplation, as operative as though it had never been passed." Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178. Though in 1813, in Custis v. Lane, 3 Munf. 579, the eminent Judge Roane said that it was a grave question whether action would lie against an officer acting in obedience to a legislative act found to be in conflict with the Constitution, it is at this day fully settled that such an act is no law, and affords no protection to a ministerial officer for an act doing harm to another. Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178; Mechem on Pub. Offices, § 662; Fisher v. McGirr, 61 Am. Dec. 381; 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 369. "When an act is adjudged to be unconstitutional, it is as if it never had been. Rights cannot be built up under it; contracts which depend upon it for their consideration are void; it constitutes a protection to no one who has acted under it; and no one can be punished for having refused obedience to it before the decision was made." Cooley, Con. Lim. (7th Ed.) 259. It would seem to be logical and just that an officer has a right to refuse to act under a void statute on the principle of self-preservation. But in so doing he acts at his peril; for, if he is mistaken, he is liable for nonfeasance of duty. "If it is unconstitutional, no one is obliged to obey. If constitutional, it binds every one to obedience. Disobedience on such ground is always at the peril of the party disobeying, whether a private individual or a public officer." Clark v. Miller, 54 N. Y. 528. As he cannot be compelled to act, cannot be sued or punished for not acting, it follows that he may refuse to do an act under a void statute. The case of State v. Butler (Mo. Sup.) 77 S. W. 560, is a well-considered, elaborate case based on this principle. An indictment was found against a person for attempt to bribe an officer to vote in a certain way in discharging a duty under a city ordinance, and the Supreme Court of Missouri held the ordinance void, and that it imposed no legal duty, and therefore there could be no bribery to do the act. Under this doctrine I would hold that if the duty asked of Staunton went to execute the act, and if the act were void, he could not be compelled to perform it.

It is contended by Staunton that the plaintiffs cannot join in a mandamus; that each individual has a separate right, not joint; and cites 13 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 645, reading: "Those who have a common and joint interest" may join in mandamus, and should join. Without strain, it may be said that all citizens have a common interest in seeing that records in a clerk's office are preserved, and that proper inspection be granted, as it is that the county be supplied with a courthouse. Is this not a matter of common public right, and may not citizens unite to vindicate it? But these plaintiffs united in a demand for inspection; the demand was joint; the refusal to all in common; the wrong done, one single wrong to all alike.

The plaintiffs say that Staunton could not refuse them inspection because he has no such pecuniary interest as will enable him to raise the question of the constitutionality of the act of the Legislature, and this upon the legal principle that courts do not hear "an objection made to the constitutionality of an act by a party whose rights it does not affect, and who has therefore no interest in defeating it." Cooley Con. Lim. 232; Lampsasac v. Bell, 180 U. S. 276, 21 Sup. Ct. 368, 45 L. Ed. 527; 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 1080. The plaintiff say that all Staunton had to do was to keep the records, and allow inspection, and make copies for pay. So Judge Johnson remarked of the assessor in State v. Buchanan, 24 W. Va. 375. But it does not strike me that an officer, as regards his individual interest, is not compelled to spend time and labor to do a thing which the law does not impose upon him as a duty. He has an actual, we may say valuable or pecuniary, interest in resisting. But then many cases, several cited above, allow an officer called on to exercise his office to resist mandamus by pleading the Constitution against the statute. He is actually interested in the matter.

We now encounter a question raised by Staunton's demurrer to the petition and motion to quash the mandamus nisi, which question is, whether the plaintiffs present to the court such interest in the documents and purpose in their inspection as entitles them to inspection and mandamus to secure it. "The remedy by mandamus is restricted to cases where the relator is deprived of some pecuniary right." "A mere abstract right, unattended by any substantial benefit to the relator, will not be enforced by mandamus." 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 884, 758. "To maintain his mandamus in such a case [private right] the relator must show some personal or special interest in the matter." Merrill on Mandamus, § 228. As to the private individual right of the plaintiffs: The election was over. They do not say that its result was unsatisfactory, or that it had been falsely declared, or that they sought by recount or contest to change it, or that they had been denied their votes, or that the election had already prejudiced them, or that they were harmed. They do not point out how they as individuals had any pecuniary interest, or sought by the document to vindicate such interest. They do not say that they had suffered or would suffer a penny's loss because of the election, or that they had been, or would be, detrimented thereby. Therefore, as individuals, they show no actual interest or loss or damaged right to be vindicated by the inspection or writ. They say they are citizens, voters, and taxpayers of the county; but it is not seen that that fact gives them any individual right over persons, not such, asking inspection of records. Could they sustain an action against Staunton for damages? They could not.

Can the plaintiffs sustain their case upon the theory that they represent and seek to vindicate the public right? They do not sue for themselves and others, but only as themselves—citizens, taxpayers, and voters. Where a clear public right, common to the community at large, is wronged and calls for vindication, some cases hold that it must be done by the public officer; others, that citizens may do so. 13 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 630. Merrill on Mandamus, § 230, says: "The great weight of American authority is to the effect that, where relief is sought in a public matter or a matter of public right, the people at large are the real party, and any citizen is entitled to a writ of mandamus to enforce the performance of a public duty." This is likely the true rule, as otherwise often the public interest would deeply suffer. On this theory this court has entertained mandamus to compel building of a bridge, a courthouse, and to declare the result of an election upon change of county seat. Doolittle v. County Court, 28 W. Va. 158; Brown v. Randolph County, 45 W. Va. 727, 32 S. E. 165; State v. County Court, 47 W. Va. 672, 35 S. E. 959; Morgan v. Wetzel County, 53 W. Va. —, 44 S. E. 182. Though not cases of mandamus, as showing that citizens have such interest as enables them to prosecute proper proceedings in public matters, I refer to Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 640; Hamilton v. County Court, 38 W. Va. 71, 18 S. E. 8, and citations; Welch v. County Court, 29 W. Va. 63, 1 S. E. 837; Davis v. Brown, 46 W. Va. 716, 34 S. E. 839.

Conceding the right of citizens, taxpayers, and voters to judicial process to defend or promote the public weal or interest, still what is the public interest in this case that is to be defended, promoted, established? The election over; no recount asked; no objection made to its result; no future public interest to be advanced by interference with it. The petition says the proposition to issue bonds was defeated, and it is not proposed to contest that result. That is ended. The petition proposes to do nothing whatever to affect that election or any right dependent upon or arising from it. That petition sets forth only one purpose in view. It says that in certain precincts frauds and irregularities were committed by the officers of the election, in conducting it and declaring its result; that persons were recorded as voting who did not vote; and that the officers "stuffed" and "padded" the ballot boxes, as would be shown by the pollbooks; and that inspection and copies of them were sought in order to know whether such officers had honestly and lawfully performed their duties, and for the purpose of instituting criminal prosecutions against them if the disclosure of the facts should warrant it. It would be a fishing writ. Will mandamus go for this purpose? I repeat the rule that mandamus is restricted "to cases where the relator is deprived of some pecuniary right." Where is the pecuniary interest in the plaintiffs or the public? "Mandamus is applied to the protection of civil rights." Merrill on Mandamus, § 61. No criminal warrant is asked. In People v. Masonic Benev. Ass'n, 98 Ill. 635, a mandamus was asked to compel officers of a Masonic society to declare the adoption of an amendment to the constitution of the body. The case holds: "Pecuniary interest must be involved. Mandamus will not be awarded to a party until he shows that he has a clear legal right, which is denied, and that the denial of the right affects his pecuniary interest. It will not be granted to settle a mere fancy question." In State v. St. Louis Paint Co., 21 Mo. App. 526, it is held that every application for this writ must state two essential requisites: First, the legal duty imposed upon the defendant to do the thing asked; second, a pecuniary interest not to be compensated in damages. "The individuals must have this interest, or the public must have a substantial, actual right in having the act done. What interest had the public in the inspection, or in having copies? I have seen no case holding that mandamus will issue merely and only to glean evidence for criminal prosecution. Equity will not entertain a bill of discovery to do so.

It becomes pertinent in this connection to see how far the right to inspect records goes. It is virtually claimed by the plaintiffs to be unlimited. True, the words of our statute are broad in saying that records shall be open to the inspection of "any persons," and so State v. Long, 37 W. Va. 266, 16 S. E. 578, says, using the words of the statute. As Clark had a plain right of inspection for business, it was not necessary to go far in interpretation of the law. Does the statute mean that inspection is for every one for pastime, whim, fancy? Is the right of inspection to be granted under all circumstances? An Alabama statute said: "The records of the judge of probate's office must be free for examination of all persons." It was held that the right was "limited to any person having an interest," and that it did not confer the right on those engaged in negotiating loans on mortgage to make abstracts to all land in the county for future business use. Randolph v. State (Ala.) 2 South. 714, 60 Am. Rep. 761. Two former cases there cited held that examination was "not the unqualified right of every citizen, * * * and the individual who claims access to the records * * * can properly be required to show that he has an interest in the documents, and that the inspection is for a legitimate purpose. The qualification of the rule is that no person can demand the right save those who have an interest in the record." The right to make abstracts or copies for speculative purposes in compiling abstracts was denied in Weber v. Worth, 43 Mich. 534, 38 Am. Rep. 213. The right is not given "to all indiscriminately, who may, for curiosity or otherwise, desire the same, but is limited to those who have some interest therein." In Cormack v. Wolcott, 37 Kan. 391, 15 Pac. 245, the statute read: "All books required to be in their offices shall be open for the examination of any person." The court said that the common law gave inspection to only those having interest in the land or subject of the record. 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 182. The court said the inspection must be under the eye of the clerk, and under reasonable rules made by him. "The right claimed by the plaintiff for himself and every other person to inspect the records at will, and make copies, must of equal necessity be governed. If the right exists, it exists for all." The court said that under an unlimited right the office might be clogged, the use of the books engrossed for simply private ends, and they diverted from the public use designed. Right to make general abstracts of title for business was denied. The Colorado statute said the books "shall be open for the examinations for all persons." The court refused mandamus to allow abstract makers to abstract the entire land titles of the county for sale. "It matters not that relators require no aid from him; for he is charged with the safe-keeping and preservation of the records, and is responsible for their truthfulness and freedom from mutilation. A single stroke of the pen, the erasure or addition of a single word, may change the character of a consequence, or destroy the most valuable property right. The clerk is unfaithful to his trust if he allow one of the record books to remain for an instant in the hand of a stranger out of his sight." Even where a statute gave a stockholder of a corporation right to examine its records, in mandamus it was required to plead and prove some property right involved, that some controversy existed, or that some specific and valuable interest was in question, to settle which an inspection of the documents was necessary. Ellsworth v. Dorwart (Iowa) 63 N. W. 588, 58 Am. St. Rep. 427. "Any person who has an existing interest in information to be obtained from public records in any county office has a right to make an examination to the extent of his interest," under an act saying that records "shall be open for the examination for any person." Boylan v. Warren (Kan.) 18 Pac. 174, 7 Am. St. Rep. 551. See 60 Am. Rep. 764, full note; 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 183. Under the law, common and statute, I think we may say that when it comes to the test, under strict law, when mandamus is asked to compel inspection, the plaintiff must have some legal right to have inspection for legitimate use. Mechen on Public Officers so regards the authorities. In section 687 we read: "It is the duty of the clerk to permit persons having a present or prospective interest in the particular public records in his office to inspect and copy the same at reasonable times and under reasonable regulations. The performance of this duty may be enforced by mandamus." The case of Barber v. West Jersey, 53 N. J. Eq. 158, 32 Atl. 222, holds that "every person has right of access to the public records of the county clerk's office, without payment of fees, to examine any title in which he is interested, subject to reasonable rules and regulations." It held that an abstracting company had right of inspection to examine title to a "particular piece of property, but not to occupy the office to make a general abstract."

I think that the plaintiffs as citizens and taxpayers had right to inspection, it not appearing but that they desired a recount to change the result. I think people have right to inspect public papers, unless it appears that their object is an improper one, for whim or scandal, as the publication of indecent evidence in a divorce suit, tending to degrade the parties and injure public morals or any other improper or useless purpose. But when it does so appear, then there is no right of inspection. How far a clerk may inquire into the purpose we need not say. I have said so much on this point because State v. Long, 37 W. Va. 266, 16 S. E. 578, is relied upon as giving unlimited right of inspection, and because that case does not enter far into the subject, and I have thought the decisions here given may be of public use. What interest have the plaintiffs on which to predicate the demand? What object which the public interest law can realize to subserve? "The judicial records of the state should always be accessible to the people for all proper purposes, under reasonable restrictions as to the time and mode of examining the same; but no one has a right to examine or obtain copies from mere curiosity, or for the purpose of creating public scandal." In re Caswell (R. I.) 29 Atl. 259, 27 L. R. A. 82, 49 Am. St. Rep. 814. I am not for a moment to be taken to intimate the slightest impeachment of the honest public motive of the worthy men who seek this mandamus. I do not doubt their motive, but I am stating legal principles as I see them. And it is a fixed rule that if there be other remedy to accomplish the end sought, mandamus does not lie. The only end stated is to gather evidence for criminal prosecution. The grand jury is the medium of that end. It can send for persons and papers, and bring offenders to justice. Citizens cannot meddle in prosecutions save in the appointed modes, by becoming prosecutors or informants before grand juries, or by recourse to criminal process. We do not think they can use mandamus for such purpose.

Judgment affirmed.

DENT, J. (dissenting). This is an application of citizens, taxpayers, and voters of Kanawha county, who have been excluded from the right of inspecting the pollbooks of an election lately held therein, and refused copies thereof by the clerk of the county court, for a mandamus against such clerk to compel him to permit such inspection and make such copies.

The majority of the court, in determining the interests and rights of the applicants and the duties of the respondent, to some extent have chosen to follow the ancient English common-law rule, emanating from a throne to its subjects, instead of the modern American republican-democratic doctrine, applicable to a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people." 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 184, 183, note 5; State v. Long, 37 W. Va. 266, 16 S. E. 578; State v. King, 154 Ind. 621, 57 N. E. 535. By the former imperialistic rule, the keeper of the rolls or records was a deputy of the King, from whom all power was derived, and in allegiance to whom all rights were held, who was only permitted to allow such royal subjects to inspect the records who might have or show a special pecuniary interest therein, all others being excluded therefrom, except where public interests were involved; while the modern, popular doctrine is that the clerk, the custodian of the records, is the servant of the people, chosen by them as their trustee to have charge of such records in their behalf, and to hold them open for their inspection at reasonable times, under reasonable regulations, without let, interference, or hindrance on the part of such clerk, or inquiry as to the purpose or object of such inspection. Every citizen, taxpayer, and voter has the presumptive right of such inspection as adhering to his sovereignty, which the clerk cannot deny him unless he can show that the object of the inspection is for illegitimate, improper, or scandalous purposes. This is especially true in the strongest sense as to pollbooks or other election records, in which all the people have a common interest, as a repository of the sovereign exercise of their right to select their servants and determine the extent of their powers, including taxation for public purposes. 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 170. The most open publicity is required by the public good as to such records, to prevent crime, detect crime, and punish crime against the purity of the ballot box, the sovereignty of the people, and the rights of citizenship. Every qualified voter has a two-fold interest therein: First, an interest in common with the people for the preservation of the purity of the ballot box, the object of which is the continuity of the government and the preservation and perpetuation of its benefits; second, a personal interest in the right to vote, to have such vote recorded and counted, and to preserve it from being vitiated or destroyed by fraud. As incident thereto, he has the right to inspect the pollbooks to see that his vote has been recorded, and that it has not been invalidated by the insertion of fictitious names as a cover for fictitious ballots. It is a more heinous wrong to deprive a voter of his vote by fraud than it is by force. In the latter case he can have a speedy remedy by mandamus under the election law, or by an action for damages by suit (10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law [2d Ed.] 678); while in the former case, he is remediless unless he is accorded the right of inspecting the pollbooks, and then he may be able to detect the fraud by which he has been cheated. For this reason, although he has no pecuniary interest involved, yet because the right to vote is so important to himself and the public, as indirectly affecting his pecuniary interest, that he not only should be accorded the right of inspection, but also the right to have copies of the pollbooks, and to have the privilege of enforcing such rights by mandamus. 13 En. Plead. & Pract. 632; Clay v. Ballard, 87 Va. 787, 13 S. E. 262; Wise v. Bigger, Clerk, etc., 79 Va.

269. Section 22, c. 147, Code 1899, provides that: "If a clerk of a court or other public officer, fraudulently make a false entry, or erase, alter, secrete or destroy any record in his keeping and belonging to his office, he shall be confined in jail not more than one year and fined not exceeding one thousand dollars." The concealment from public inspection, while not technically so, comes very near being an offense under this section, and should be made so by law. The word "secrete," used here, is undoubtedly broad enough to cover the willful concealment of public records from persons having the right to inspect the same, although it would not cover the overt act of refusal where the clerk is acting from pure motives for justifiable ends. The sixth clause of section 74, c. 3, Code 1899, provides that if any person "erase, deface, or change in any manner, any election record or any ballot, poll book, tally sheet or certificate of election, deposited with either of the clerks of the county or circuit courts, or conspire with another to do any of said acts, or induce or attempt to induce, any other person to do any of said acts, whether or not said acts or any of them, be committed or attempted to be committed, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than two nor more than five years." A comparison of these two sections shows how much more important and necessary to the public weal the Legislature regarded the records of an election, than it did the ordinary records kept in the clerk's office. In one case the offense is a misdemeanor, with forfeiture of office; the other is a felony, carrying with it not only the forfeiture of office, but the forfeiture of citizenship. The Legislature, in making this great difference between these two classes of records, undoubtedly acted in obedience to the will of the people. As the records are more sacred, so should the right of inspection by the people and the voters be held the more sacred. Under section 68, c. 3, Code 1899, the clerk of the county court is made the custodian of the pollbooks. They thereby become public records, subject to the same right of inspection to those interested as other public records in his office. The clerk himself thereby became a part of the election machinery of the state, subject to the same penalties and the same remedies as all other election officers. Section 89, c. 3, Code 1899, provides that "any officer or person upon whom any duty is devolved by this chapter, may be compelled to perform the same by writ of mandamus." By this chapter the duty devolved upon the clerk to preserve the pollbooks for the benefit of the public, which necessarily includes the right of inspection. They are still election records, in which the public interest continues unabated and undiminished, although in the hands of the clerk, and are subject to protection and inspection under the penalties and remedies of the election law. By this same section it is provided that this court may compel any officer mentioned therein to do and perform legally any duty required of him by mandamus.

So it seems to be perfectly clear that the applicants, without regard to any direct, pecuniary interest, had the right to enforce the publicity of the pollbooks, both in the interest of themselves as voters, and in common with the public generally. It seems to be conceded in the opinion of the majority that the right of inspection exists and that mandamus lies, but, as the applicants have stated the purpose for which they want inspection, and that is to ascertain whether the pollbooks have been feloniously tampered with and the names of fictitious voters placed thereon, that the mandamus should be refused because such writ cannot be used in ascertaining evidence to aid in criminal prosecutions. No authority is cited for such proposition, but it is alleged in support thereof that a bill of discovery will not lie to compel a defendant to incriminate or subject himself to criminal prosecution. There is no analogy between the two proceedings. 6 En. Plead. & Pract. 742. Section 5, art. 3, of the Constitution, provides that no person shall in any criminal case be compelled to be a witness against himself. There is no provision in the Constitution or in the law, statutory or common, that provides that a public officer may refuse the inspection of public records because he or some one else may be thereby subjected to prosecution or malfeasance in office or for the felonious defacement of public records. Nor is there any law that permits the clerk to secrete or conceal public records from public inspection because such inspection may lead to the prosecution of some person or officer for a public crime. Such laws would be contrary to public policy, injurious to public morals, and subversive of the public weal. The very object of publicity is to prevent the perpetration of crime and the making of criminals. Mandamus lies in support of criminal prosecutions. 13 En. Plead. & Pract. 593. A bill in equity never does. Not only has the clerk no legal right to shield crime from the gaze of the public, but, if the public records in his control show the commission of felonies, it is his duty to aid and assist in bringing the perpetrators to the bar of justice. This is a duty he owes to the public by reason of his agency and trusteeship in its service. If guilty himself, he is not bound to disclose it, but such guilt gives him no legal excuse to deny access to the public records. If a clerk deface, or knows that the record of a deed to property owned by another has been mutilated and defaced, he cannot deny to the person injured the right to inspect such record, and then resist a mandamus because the party injured says he wants to inspect the record for the purpose of instituting criminal proceedings to punish the guilty party. Nor can he interpose such objection to a mandamus for inspection of the election records; and the courts, instead of entertaining such objection, should not deny any legal remedy to citizens and voters who are honestly endeavoring to preserve the integrity of the election laws, because, forsooth, it may eventuate in a criminal prosecution; nor does an appeal to a grand jury afford a remedy, for the reason that they have no definite information on which to act. The information applicants want, and are bound to have, before they can call on the grand jury for investigation in their behalf, and which they are justly entitled to have, is withheld from them by the illegal and arbitrary action of the clerk. Such pretenses as these, which stand in the way of the zealous voter endeavoring to enforce the election law in the interest of pure elections, for his own and the public good, will hardly meet with the moral approval of the public conscience, or excite a responsive thrill in the great, honest, trustful heart of the people, full of truth and justice, and always made glad with pride inexpressible by the immovable integrity and unsullied uprightness of their chosen servants. Nor can it be believed that Mr. Staunton, who has so long been before the public and enjoyed the esteem of his fellow citizens, will derive any satisfaction from pleas of this character interposed for his protection from a mandamus far less harmful in its nature. He has certainly not been guilty of any crime himself that he is endeavoring to conceal from the people, nor does he want to place himself in the position of preventing investigation into crimes committed by others. I cannot help but think that the denial of the applicants' rights, and his defense, in this case, is wholly actuated by misconception of his legal duties, and probably wounded pride. Public office is a public trust, to be exercised wholly in the public interest. The officer who forgets this, and is controlled in the discharge of his public duties by base and partisan ends, in disregard of patriotic love for the whole people, though he may temporarily triumph and reach success in all his undertakings, will live to realize the sober truth that "corruption wins not more than honesty," and to feel the full force of those most remorseful words of tongue or pen, uttered by the great, fallen politician, Cardinal Wolsey: "Oh, Cromwell, Cromwell, had I but served my God with half the zeal I served my King, He would not in mine age, have left me naked to mine enemies!" All that the applicants should be required to show is that they are citizens, taxpayers, and voters, and as such have an interest in the records of an election in which they participated, and have demanded and been refused the right to inspect the pollbooks of such election deposited with the clerk; and on such showing a mandamus should issue as a matter of course, unless the clerk shows that the purposes for which such inspection is desired are unlawful, scandalous, or for some other reason improper. Neither the inspection of such pollbooks for publication, nor for the institution of a civil suit, or prosecution for crime, is an unlawful, improper, or scandalous purpose, for they are all in the interest of and promote the public good.

The sentiment held and being fostered by politicians, through a corruptible vote, that crime against the election laws is no crime, should be firmly met and vigorously repelled before it becomes a floodtide, destructive of popular government. Courts of justice, at least, should give no countenance to such a false and dangerous sentiment. Sound public policy, in the interest of public morals, for the promotion of the public good and the vindication of the sovereign rights of the people, enjoyed in common by citizens, taxpayers, and voters, demands the reversal of the judgment and the award of a mandamus. Hence my dissent.

MCWHORTER, P. J., concurs in this opinion.

CLAYTOR v. PIERSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 1, 1904.)

GIFT CAUSA MORTIS—EVIDENCE.

1. W. D. C., being ill, and in the expectation of death, gave and delivered to J. E. C., his brother, a paper in the words and figures following, to wit: "Sewell, W. Va., Aug. 26th, 1899. $1100.00. Eleven hundred dollars. Received of William Claytor for safe keeping. L. C. Claytor;" William Claytor mentioned in the receipt being said W. D. C. At the time of the gift and delivery of the receipt the donor said to donee that he had a present for him (donee); that donor took the receipt from his trunk, and said to donee, "Here, I will give you this; here is a note I have for $1,100. I will make you a present of this; take it, and keep it, and go and draw the money on it;" that donor further told donee not to let anybody else have it—his (donor's) wife, or anybody else; that he did not want his wife to have it; that he was going to the hospital, and the way the disease worked on him he didn't think that he would get well; and further said, "I will give it [the receipt] to you before I go, so you will be sure to have it;" that donor was then the owner of said money, which was at the time in the care and keeping of L. C. C.; that donor was on that day taken to the hospital, where he died one month thereafter, as a result of his said illness; that two days before his death, at the hospital, donor asked another brother, did Ed (meaning donee) have the note (meaning the receipt) which he gave him, and, being told that Ed had the receipt, donor then said to tell him (Ed) to be sure and keep it, to go and get the money on it; that donee kept possession of said receipt continuously until after the death of donor; and that donor died without making any change in relation to the gift, and leaving donee surviving him. Held, that the acts and declarations of the donor constitute a valid gift of said money causa mortis.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Fayette County; J. M. McWhorter, Judge.

Action by J. E. Claytor against E. G. Pierson and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

C. W. Osenton and W. L. Ashby, for plaintiff in error. Dillon & Nuckalls, for defendants in error.

MILLER, J. J. E. Claytor appeals from a decree of the circuit court of Fayette county entered on the 6th day of March, 1902, in a chancery cause wherein he was plaintiff, and E. G. Pierson, in his own right, and as administrator of W. D. Claytor, deceased, and L. C. Claytor, were defendants.

The bill alleges that on the 26th day of August, 1899, W. D. Claytor, who was sometimes called William Claytor, deposited and left $1,100 belonging to him with defendant L. C. Claytor for safe-keeping; that L. C. Claytor thereafter executed and delivered to W. O. Claytor a receipt therefor, in the words and figures following, to wit: "Sewell, W. Va., Aug. 26th, 1899. $1100.00. Eleven hundred dollars. Received of William Claytor for safe keeping. L. C. Claytor." That on the — day of —, 1900, said W. D. Claytor was taken suddenly and violently ill, and continued to grow worse until the 19th day of November, 1900, when he died; and that during his said last sickness, and in expectation of death, he gave and delivered to the plaintiff said sum of $1,100 then deposited for safe-keeping with said L. C. Claytor as aforesaid, and then and there gave and delivered to the plaintiff said receipt for said money. That on the 22d day of November, 1900, the defendant E. G. Pierson, without authority of law therefor, caused himself to be appointed administrator of the estate of said W. D. Claytor, and qualified as such; that on the — day of —, 1900, said E. G. Pierson asked plaintiff to allow him to inspect said receipt for said $1,100, which plaintiff did; and that thereupon said Pierson, in violation of plaintiff's rights, kept said receipt and refused to return it to plaintiff, and that plaintiff was informed that Pierson had collected from L. C. Claytor $800 on said receipt. Plaintiff then prays that L. C. Claytor be required to answer and disclose what disposition, if any, he has made of said $1,100; that said Pierson be also required to answer and discover what disposition, if any, he has made of said receipt; that said $1,100 be decreed to plaintiff; and for general relief.

Defendant Pierson answered the bill, and avers in his answer that, at the instance of Annie Claytor, widow of W. D. Claytor, he was appointed administrator of said decedent; that, as such administrator, he took into his possession the said receipt for said $1,100, with the other personal property of the estate of the decedent; and that he found said receipt in the possession of said J. E.

Claytor, who turned it over to respondent without objection. Respondent denies the gift of said receipt, and of the money therein mentioned by said W. D. Claytor to plaintiff as alleged in the bill, but admits that he had collected $865 from said L. O. Claytor upon said receipt, which receipt he files with his answer.

Eliminating the incompetent testimony in the cause, we think the legal evidence therein clearly and conclusively establishes the following facts: That the plaintiff and W. D. Claytor, the decedent, were brothers; that on the 26th day of August, 1899, said W. D. Claytor delivered to his cousin, L. C. Claytor, said $1,100 for safe-keeping, and took from him the receipt set out in the bill, which was then signed by said L. O. Claytor and delivered to W. D. Claytor; that in the latter part of October, 1900, W. D. Claytor became ill; that on the 19th day of that month he was removed from his home to the hospital at Paint Creek, in said county, where he died on the 19th day of November, 1900, not having recovered from his illness above mentioned. On the morning of the 19th day of October, 1900, while being prepared for his removal from his home to the hospital, he was, with the assistance of his two brothers, and at his request, taken to his trunk in his house, from which he took the said receipt, and gave and delivered it to his brother, the plaintiff. The evidence touching this transaction, as given by Richard Claytor, is substantially as follows: "He told Ed [meaning the plaintiff, J. E. Claytor] that he had a present for him; and Ed told him all right, and asked him what it was; and he would not say, but got up, and witness and John Claytor assisted him to his trunk." After stating about the finding of the receipt in the trunk by said W. D. Claytor, witness states that W. D. Claytor further said: "Here, I will give you this; here is a note I have for $1,100; I will make you a present of this;" and Ed told him, "All right." Witness also says that, after the receipt was handed to J. E. Claytor, he (J. E. Claytor) handed it to witness, who read it to plaintiff, and then plaintiff put it into his pocket. Witness states that W. D. Claytor also said to plaintiff "to take it [the receipt] and keep it, and go and draw the money on it; that it was his [plaintiff's]; he made him a present of it; and Ed told him, 'All right.' He [decedent] told him [plaintiff] not to let anybody else have it—his wife or anybody else. * * * He further told him [plaintiff], 'Don't let my wife get hold of it, because she hasn't treated me right; I don't want her to have it.' He said he was going to the hospital, and the way the disease worked on him he didn't think that he would get well; and, 'I will give it [the receipt] to you before I go so you will be sure to have it.'" This same witness says that W. D. Claytor died on Monday; that he was down to see him at the hospital on the preceding Saturday; that "he [W. D. Claytor] asked me, that Saturday I was there, did Ed have the note which he gave him? and I told him 'Yes'; and he told me to tell him [Ed] to be sure and keep it, and 'don't let Annie or anybody else have it'; to go and get the money on it; and I told him, 'All right.'" The witness says that, at that time, decedent told him that he was not getting any better; and "I asked him if he thought he would get well; and he said, 'No'; and he said that the Lord had forgiven him of his sins; and he didn't think he would be here but a little while; and to tell Ed [the plaintiff] to keep what he gave him." John Claytor, another brother of deceased, testifies that he was present at the time the receipt was given by W. D. Claytor to J. E. Claytor. He corroborates Richard Claytor about the receipt being taken out of the trunk and given to the plaintiff by decedent, who at the time said to plaintiff: "Here it is; you can have this. * * * This is yours; you can get the money on it any time you want it." It is also shown by the evidence that the receipt was seen in the possession of plaintiff about two weeks before the death of the donor; that plaintiff then claimed it as his own; and that it remained in his possession up to the time when it was procured from him by Pierson. The evidence further shows that Annie, the wife of decedent, was a woman of questionable character, and was convicted upon an indictment on the charge of causing the death of her husband, W. D. Claytor, by poison, but that on a second trial she was acquitted of the charge.

The court, at the final hearing of the cause, dismissed the plaintiff's bill at his cost, and of this action the appellant complains, and says that the decree of dismissal was and is erroneous.

The principal question presented for our determination is whether or not the evidence clearly and conclusively establishes all the essential attributes or constituent elements of a donatio mortis causa as defined by the law and established by the course of adjudication. In Dickeschied v. Bank, 28 W. Va. 340, this court defined and established the essential elements of a valid gift causa mortis, and held that the donor should make the gift in contemplation of death, either in his last illness or while he is in other imminent peril; that his death should result from such illness or peril; that the donor must part with all dominion over the subject of the gift, so that no further act by him or the personal representative will be necessary to vest the title perfectly in the donee, in order that it may belong to him presently, as his own property, in case the owner should die of his present illness, or from the impending peril, without making any change in relation to the gift, and leaving the donee surviving him. Blackstone says that a donatio mortis causa takes place "when a person in his last sickness, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers or causes to be delivered to another the possession of any personal goods * * * to keep in case of his decease." In Dickeschied v. Bank, supra, it is also held "that delivery at the time of making the gift is essential to a perfect gift causa mortis. It is not the possession of the donee, but the delivery to him by the donor, that is material; and that where a party claims title to personal property as a gift, either inter vivos or causa mortis, the burden of proof, in whatever form the issue may be presented, rests upon him to establish the validity of the gift, of which the delivery of possession is the strongest and most material. * * * The mere possession of the chattel, unaccompanied by proof of its delivery by the donor to the donee, is insufficient to establish a gift either inter vivos or causa mortis, for every person claiming title by gift necessarily admits that up to the time when the gift was alleged to have been made the chattel was the property of the donor. And as the law does not presume that the owner has voluntarily parted with his property without any valuable consideration, the gift itself, and the delivery thereof, must be proved by the party claiming under it. * * * The donor must not only give, but he must deliver; and that delivery must be actual, when the subject of the gift is capable of an actual delivery of the thing itself; or it must be the delivery of the means of getting the possession and enjoyment of the thing; and this delivery must be at the time of the gift." 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1029, says: "It is well settled that choses in action may be the subject of valid gifts. Thus, gifts of promissory notes, bonds, mortgages, savings banks books, certificates of deposit, etc., have been upheld." The words "goods and chattels," in section 1 of chapter 71 of our Code of 1899, include money and every other kind of personal property which may be the subject of a gift inter vivos or causa mortis. Dickeschied v. Bank, 28 W. Va. 368; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1028.

No absolute rule can be laid down as to what will constitute a sufficient delivery to support a gift in all cases, for in each case the character of the requisite to sustain the transaction as a gift will depend very largely upon the nature of the subject-matter of the gift and the situation and circumstances of the parties. Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, supra, 1019. It is well established that where the chose in action is a bill, promissory note, or other written instrument payable to order, no indorsement of the instrument is necessary. 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1023, and cases cited. Counsel for appellee cites 3 Minor, 91. The entire text, of which a part is given in the brief, is as follows: "The delivery under the statute, as well as at common law, must be, as in every other case, according to the nature of the thing—always being an actual delivery, so far as the subject is capable of it, and not momentary nor colorable, but bona fide, remaining for a time with the donee or his assigns. If the thing be not capable of actual delivery in the literal sense, there must be some act equivalent to it. The donor must part, not only with the possession, but with the dominion, of the property. If the thing given be a chose in action, or an interest in a chattel by way of remainder, the law requires an assignment, or some equivalent instrument in writing, and the transfer must be actually executed. His intention to execute it not being perfected it does not amount to a gift." Mayo's Ex'r v. Carrington's Ex'r, 19 Grat. 74, cited by Mr. Minor, holds, "as the result of all the authorities, that a voluntary gift valid in law or equity, may be made of any property, real or personal, legal or equitable, in possession, reversion, or remainder, vested or contingent, and including choses in action, unless they be of such a nature as that an assignment of them would be a violation of the law against maintenance and champerty; that such a gift, to be valid, must be complete, and not executory; that what is necessary to the completion of the gift depends on the nature of the subject and the circumstances of the case; and that it is always sufficient, though not always necessary, to the completion of a gift, at least between the parties, that the donor do everything in his power, or which the nature of the case will admit of, to make it complete."

The above seems to be a correct statement of the legal principle involved here. If any other requirement as to delivery be essential in cases where the owner does not have, and cannot at the time have, actual possession of the specific thing which is the subject-matter of the gift, or in instances where the donor is physically or otherwise incapable of making an actual transfer or delivery, there no valid gift could be made by him.

In the case of Elam v. Keen, 4 Leigh, 333, 26 Am. Dec. 322, the owner of a bond which was in suit, and for which the owner held an attorney's receipt, told the plaintiff that he might have the bond, and delivered him the attorney's receipt for it, instead of delivering the bond itself, which was then filed in the suit in court; no consideration was given by the plaintiff for the bond. Held, this was a valid gift of the bond to the plaintiff, and he is entitled to recover the money collected upon it. Brooke, J., in his opinion, says: "The gift in the case before us was proved to have been made by Mrs. Keen to the appellee, and the attorney's receipt for the bond, the subject of the gift then in suit, was delivered to the donee. This was as effectual as the delivery of the bond itself. The attorney was bound to respect his receipt; he could not have refused to pay the money collected on the bond, or to deliver the bond itself, if demanded, to the donee."

In the case of Ward v. Turner [2 Ves. Sr.

431, 442], the doctrine is very fully explained by Lord Hardwicke. That was the case of a donation causa mortis of receipts for South Sea stock, which was held invalid. His first objection was that there was but one witness, whereas the civil law, from which the doctrine was taken, required five; but this he did not rely on. In conclusion, he said that the gift there was merely legatory, and amounted to a nuncupative will, and contrary to the statute of frauds. He seems to admit the authority of Jones v. Selby [Finch, Prec. in Ch. 300], where a tally for £500 was given by the delivery of the key of a trunk in which it was found, though he intimates that Lord Cowper went in that case on the ground of a satisfaction or ademption. This doctrine was examined by this court in Ewing v. Ewing [2 Leigh, 337], where it is said that "there is no distinction between gifts causa mortis and gifts inter vivos [like that now before us], except that in the former case the gift does not take effect until the death of the donor, in the latter it takes effect immediately." Carr, J., says: "The bond itself could not be delivered; it was in court, in the custody of the law. The receipt was its representative. We must presume it described the bond accurately, and stated that it was received to be put in suit; and that, when collected, the attorney would account for it. As in the case of the key, the delivery of this receipt 'was the true and effectual way of obtaining the use of the subject.' Speaking from my own experience, I should say an attorney requires no better order for the payment of money he has collected on a bond than the receipt he has given for the bond; when he takes this in, with a receipt upon it for the money, he feels himself safe. I think, therefore, the circuit court did not err in refusing to give the instruction to the jury asked by the appellant."

In Thomas' Adm'r v. Lewis, 89 Va. 1, 15 S. E. 389, 18 L. R. A. 170, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848, cited by appellee, it is, among other things, held that: "A valid gift causa mortis, including the valuables in the depository, is effected where a man, sick in bed, on the day of his death sends for securities and the keys to the depository containing other securities all belonging to him, and with the remark, 'I am a sick man, and don't know what may happen to me,' picks up the securities and hands them to the donee, saying, 'I give you these,' and taking the keys describes in a general way the contents of the depository, and, handing the keys to the donee, says, 'These keys I now give you' are where the valuable papers are; 'whatever you find you can have—it is yours,' and then directs the donee to place the securities and keys in her trunk and lock it, which the donee does." But it is also held therein that delivery of possession of a savings bank pass-book in consummation of a gift causa mortis is not sufficient to transfer the bank deposit.

We are unable to determine upon what fact or legal principle involved in that case the decision as to the passbook is based. Many cases hold the contrary. Page v. Lewis, 18 L. R. A. 171, note; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1029, and cases there cited.

In Elam v. Keen, 4 Leigh, 335, 26 Am. Dec. 822, Carr, J., said: "There are many things of which actual manual tradition cannot be made, either from their nature or their situation at the time. It is not the intention of the law to take from the owner the power of giving these; it merely requires that he shall do what, under the circumstances, will in reason be considered equivalent to an actual delivery."

In Stephenson's Adm'r v. King, 81 Ky. 425, 50 Am. Rep. 173, it is held that the delivery by the decedent of the key of her desk, and the actual delivery to her mother of the letter of King, containing a full description of the notes and bonds held by him as agent of the decedent, is a sufficient delivery to make the gift causa mortis complete, and that the arbitrary rule, requiring an assignment and delivery of the identical thing in order to make such a gift valid, has been abandoned.

The facts in the case show all the elements of a valid gift causa mortis. The gift was made by the donor in the peril and contemplation of death; it was of personal property, such as, under the law, may be the subject of a gift causa mortis; possession of the receipt by the donee was taken at the time of the gift; and the donor died of his then illness in a month thereafter, without making any change in relation to the gift. It was accepted by the donee at the time it was made, and it became absolute at the donor's death. Donor did not want his wife to have his money for the reason stated by him, and, doubtless, for the other reasons disclosed by the record. He did want his brother, J. E. Claytor, to have it, because, as he said, "he always thought more of him than the rest." Therefore, applying the law to the facts, we hold that the plaintiff was and is entitled to the money specified in said receipt, at and from the time of W. D. Claytor's death.

The evidence proves that, about two weeks before the death of W. D. Claytor, the plaintiff showed said receipt to defendant L. C. Claytor; that after Pierson obtained possession of the receipt, and before L. C. Claytor paid him any money thereon, the plaintiff told said L. C. Claytor not to pay the money therein mentioned to Pierson; that L. C. Claytor afterwards, on the 3d day of December, 1900, paid $865 of the money mentioned in the receipt to Pierson; that on the 4th day of December, 1900, Pierson gave his check on the Fayetteville National Bank, for $600, payable to Annie Claytor, and signed it by the name and designation of "E. G. Pierson, Administrator," which check was indorsed by her, and delivered to C. W. Dillon, who, in turn, indorsed the same, deposited it in the bank, and received credit for it on the same day. There is some conflict in the evidence as to whether or not Pierson was notified by the plaintiff not to pay out the money before the said check was delivered to Annie Claytor, but it does sufficiently appear that he had knowledge of the claim of plaintiff to the money before and at the time he collected it from L. C. Claytor.

The plaintiff was entitled to collect the money from defendant L. C. Claytor immediately upon the death of W. D. Claytor. L. C. Claytor, having notice of the claim of plaintiff to the money, did not relieve himself of liability to the plaintiff by his said payment to Pierson; and Pierson, also having notice of plaintiff's claim, paid the $600 to Annie Claytor at his own risk, and subject to plaintiff's right thereto. Therefore defendant L. C. Claytor is liable to plaintiff for the whole sum of $1,100, and Pierson is likewise liable for said sum of $865, with interest thereon from the time he received the same; but, as between said defendants, Pierson is primarily liable for said last-mentioned sum. Upon the evidence, the circuit court should have made and entered its decree in the cause, requiring Pierson and L. C. Claytor to pay the plaintiff said $865, with interest thereon from the 3d day of December, 1900, and further requiring said L. C. Claytor to pay to the plaintiff $225, with interest thereon from the 19th day of November, 1900, being the balance of said $1,100.

For the reasons stated, the decree of the circuit court must be reversed and held for naught, and a decree entered by this court as above indicated.

STATE v. ELMORE

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 4, 1904.)

PAROL EVIDENCE—LANDLORD'S LIENS—ASSIGNMENT—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. After an account has been offered in evidence as between defendant and J. Bros., parol evidence is inadmissible to show that the items sold were in fact sold by J.

2. Code of Laws 1902, § 3057, relating to landlord's liens for rents and advances, is constitutional.

3. Code of Laws 1902, § 3057, gives a lien to landlords for advances made during the year. Held that, where a landlord assigns his rent to some other person, such assignment does not make such assignee a landlord, so as to entitle him to a lien.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Spartanburg County; Buchanan, Judge.

Alfred Elmore was convicted of violation of the act relating to landlords and tenants, where rent is secured by levy on crops, and appeals. Reversed.

The contract on which the indictment was based is as follows:

"State of South Carolina, County of Spartanburg. This indenture, made this 7th day of October, A. D. 1901, between L. L. McLemore and Alfred Elmore, witnesseth that Alfred Elmore is to labor on the land of L. L. McLemore for the year 1902, and to cultivate all of the land on the John Johnson plantation, from the new fence to the line, except three acres on the northwest of plantation above the road. Said land situate in said county and state, and bounded by lands of L. P. Walker, Jos. Walker, and others, and John N. Cudd, containing about ninety acres. And it is distinctly agreed that the entire crop belongs to L. L. McLemore, that they are to have possession and control of the same, and that for the labor to be done by Alfred Elmore he is to pay said Alfred Elmore all the crops grown on said plantation, after paying themselves, from said laborer's aforesaid wages, all advancements made or debts due to the said L. L. McLemore, and four bales of the first lint cotton, weighing five hundred pounds each, and the seed out of the same; and the said Alfred Elmore further agrees that he will take good care of the premises, will keep all persons from trespassing thereon, and the houses occupied by him in good repair; and said Alfred Elmore agrees to keep all ditches, terraces, branches, or creeks, surrounded by or bordering on land worked by him, open and in good, clean condition, and that no animal shall be pastured on said land, except at such times as L. L. McLemore, except four head of cattle and two mules, shall give written consent thereto. Only timber is to be used for firewood, except by express permission of L. L. McLemore. If the crop is not cultivated and gathered promptly, L. L. McLemore can hire help to cultivate and gather the same at the expense of Alfred Elmore. L. L. McLemore is to be at no other expense, except expressly stipulated herein; and the said Alfred Elmore is to have charge of the shop and tools that are on said place, to use as he sees fit, and all plows and tools on said place. The covenants herein shall be binding on the heirs, executors, or administrators of the parties herein. Witness the hands and seals of the parties aforesaid the day and year above written.

Ralph K. Carson and John S. Reynolds, for appellant. T. S. Sease, Sol., for the State.

§ 2. See Landlord and Tenant, vol. 22, Cent. Dig. § 987.

POPE, J. The defendant was tried before the court of general sessions for Spartanburg county, in this state. The jury found him guilty, and he was duly sentenced. Thereafter he appealed from such judgment.

The following statement embodies the pertinent facts underlying the contention:

On the 7th day of October, 1901, the defendant leased from one L. L. McLemore 80 acres of land, in the county of Spartanburg, in this state, for the year 1902, as farming lands. The agreement was under seal and signed by both parties. The rent was fixed at four bales of cotton, each bale weighing 500 pounds, and the seed from said 2,000 pounds of cotton, with a lien upon the entire crop to secure payment of rent and any advances made by said landlord. After said lease had been made, the landlord, L. L. McLemore, assigned said contract to one J. F. Johnson. On the 27th March, 1902, the said defendant, wishing guano and some supplies, executed a note and mortgage of one horse and top buggy to the firm of Johnson Bros., as merchants, of which firm J. F. Johnson was one of the partners, for the sum of $110. The defendant's account with said firm was allowed to reach the sum of $175.15. On August 2, 1902, this account was transferred on the books of Johnson Bros. to J. F. Johnson. Some time in the month of October, 1902, the defendant paid to J. F. Johnson the entire rent. During the same month, October of 1902, the defendant paid off his note and mortgage to the firm of Johnson Bros., and received from said firm said note and mortgage fully satisfied by said firm of Johnson Bros. But there remained unpaid the sum of $85.15, which the defendant promised to pay as soon as he picked out the balance of his cotton crop. Three days after such promise, J. F. Johnson went upon the leased premises, and found that the defendant had removed all of his cotton from said premises. The defendant was indicted for a violation of section 3057, relating to landlords and tenants, whereby rent is secured by a lien on all crops grown upon the rented lands and supplies furnished by landlord to tenant. While his trial was in progress, and after it had been proved by the books themselves, of the firm of Johnson Bros., that the defendant's account for supplies and guano had been entered as with Johnson Bros., as well as the note and mortgage, the prosecution sought to establish, by asking one of the state's witnesses, if the firm did not look to J. F. Johnson as the person really liable to them for payment of such advances. The defendant objected to such testimony, on the ground that it was at variance with the rule of law declaring that parol testimony which tended to vary a written contract was not admissible. The judge allowed the testimony to be given. This is one of the grounds of appeal.

When the testimony offered by the state was announced as closed, the defendant asked the circuit judge to instruct the jury to acquit the defendant: (1) Because there was a failure of proof to establish a lien in favor of the landlord, or that the defendant was indebted to him for the supplies. (2) Because contracts for advancements must be in writing. (3) Because section 3057 of Code of Laws of this state, giving a landlord a lien for supplies advanced, whether the contract for advancements be in writing or verbal, was unconstitutional, in that it violated section 5, art. 1, of the Constitution of South Carolina. The circuit judge refused the motion. This is a ground of appeal.

No testimony was offered by the defendant. The court then charged the jury, and to certain parts of this charge the defendant has accepted. The defendant was found guilty by the jury. A motion was made for a new trial, which was refused. It should have been stated, just before the last sentence, that at the close of the judge's charge the defendant requested the court to charge the jury "that if Alfred Elmore believed that he was purchasing goods from Johnson Bros., that he was dealing with Johnson Bros., then it cannot be taken in the matter of J. F. Johnson without the knowledge or consent of Alfred Elmore; that is, if he understood that he was trading with Johnson Bros., then they could not transfer that debt to J. F. Johnson." This the court declined to charge in these words: "The view I take of it is, it is immaterial as to who he got the goods from, just so they were coming from the man that furnished him; that is sufficient. It is enough for him that he received the goods."

The defendant has preferred in his appeal several grounds of exception to the judgment against him as follows: "(1) In overruling the defendant's objection to the solicitor's question, 'Mr. Johnson, who furnished Alfred Elmore goods this year?' upon the ground that he was attempting to contradict a written contract by parol evidence. (2) In ruling and holding that a landlord had a lien under the statute for supplies advanced to his tenant without a written contract. (3) In holding that section 3057, Code of Laws, was not in violation of section 5, art. 1, of the Constitution of South Carolina. (4) In refusing to instruct the jury to acquit the defendant, upon the ground that there was no proof of lien upon his crop, or of any contract, written or verbal, for the advancement of supplies by the landlord, J. F. Johnson, to the defendant. (5) In refusing to charge the jury that, if Alfred Elmore believed that he was purchasing the goods from Johnson Bros., he could not be made the debtor of J. F. Johnson without the knowledge or consent of Elmore; that, if he understood that he was trading with Johnson Bros., then they could not transfer the account to J. F. Johnson, so as to make Alfred Elmore indebted to him for supplies furnished. (6) In refusing to instruct the jury that, in order for the landlord to have a lien for supplies furnished, they must have been furnished by him to the defendant under an agreement to that effect, and instructing the jury 'that it was immaterial as to who he got the goods from, just so they were coming through the man that furnished him; that is sufficient. It is enough for him that he received the goods.' (7) In charging, 'It makes no difference how many hands the goods come through, if the person alleged to be the owner of the crop did advance the goods alleged to have been advanced here. It makes no difference whether the guano was bought from partnership or not. If he got the advance, it makes no difference who sold him the goods, if it was done by agreement of Mr. Johnson.'"

Let us see what virtue there is in these exceptions.

1. The real object of the appellant in this exception was to establish the proposition of law that it was not proper to allow J. F. Johnson, through his own testimony or that of any other witness, to state that the contracts of the defendant with Johnson Bros. were really the contracts of the defendant with J. F. Johnson. The appellant was correct. The testimony is inadmissible.

2. The misfortune of the appellant, so far as the second exception is concerned, was that he agreed in writing to give a lien to his landlord, L. L. McLemore, for any supplies he furnished him. We are not sure but that if this landlord, L. L. McLemore, had made any advances to the defendant as his tenant, said landlord could have recovered for the same under the machinery of the law. In other words, we think this language of section 3057 of Code of Laws of this state applies: " * * * And subject to the laws hereinafter provided for and enforceable in the same, the landlord shall have a lien on all the crops raised by a tenant for all advances made by the landlord to such tenant during the year."

3. We do not see why section 3057 of the Code of Laws in this state is not constitutional. It deals with all landlords as a class. See Porter v. Railway, 63 S. C. 169, 41 S. E. 106, 9 Am. St. Rep. 670; Simmons v. Telegraph Co., 63 S. C. 425, 41 S. E. 521, 57 L. R. A. 607.

4. It seems to us that this exception is fatal to the judgment against the defendant. Section 3057 of the Code of Laws of this state is direct and specific in its reference to landlords. It provides a lien in favor of landlords. It is true, it is the power of a landlord as such to assign his rent to some other person; but that does not make such assignee of a landlord a landlord. A man, to be a landlord, must sustain some relation to the land. He must be owner, or quasi owner. The said J. F. Johnson was neither owner nor quasi owner of this land leased to the defendant. All he could do under his assignment was to collect the rent, and probably any advances L. L. McLemore had made the defendant before he assigned the lease to J. F. Johnson. Anderson's Dictionary of Law, at page 597: "A landlord is described as one who owns lands or tenements which he has rented to another or others." By Rapalje & Lawrence's Law Dictionary, "landlord" is defined: "He of whom lands or tenements are holden, who has a right to distrain for rent in arrears." Co. Litt. 57. We have just remarked that all the right of Johnson, the assignee, as against the defendant, was to collect the rent, to wit, four bales of cotton and the seed from said four bales, except the covenants as to the use of the lands. This the defendant has paid. The covenants in the lease were that Alfred Elmore bound himself therefor, so far as "the heirs, executors, or administrators" of McLemore were concerned. We hold, however, that as to the rent due the assignment was good. It follows, as no lien was given by Alfred Elmore to J. F. Johnson to secure the $65.15 still due on the account of Johnson Bros., the prosecution failed, because J. F. Johnson, as assignee of Johnson Bros., had no lien subsisting on the crops of Alfred Elmore to secure said advances.

5, 6, and 7. These exceptions become immaterial after our holding that J. F. Johnson had no enforceable lien on the crops of Alfred Elmore during the year 1902.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed.

JONES, J. I concur in the result. I do not think the first exception should be sustained, as I cannot see how the testimony admitted tended to contradict any written instrument. But I concur in reversing the judgment upon the ground that there was no proof that defendant had disposed of any crop upon which there was any existing lien.

WOODS, J. I concur in the result. The written contract, which will be printed in the report of the case, did not create the relation of landlord and tenant. McCutchen v. Crenshaw, 40 S. C. 511, 19 S. E. 140. McLemore, therefore, had no satisfactory lien to assign, and the defendant could not be convicted of disposing of crops under a lien which did not exist. I think the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh exceptions should be sustained, on this ground, as well as on the reasoning of the CHIEF JUSTICE.

(68 S. C. 133)

STATE v. THOMPSON.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 1, 1904.)

CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—HOMICIDE—SELF-DEFENSE.

1. It is not error to admit, on a trial in a criminal case, evidence in reply which should have been offered in chief, but which was ruled out because the witness was thought to be incompetent, which ruling was afterwards found to be incorrect.

2. To make out a case of self-defense, the evidence should satisfy the jury that accused actually believed that he was in immediate danger of losing his life or sustaining serious bodily harm, so that it was necessary to take the life of his assailant, and the circumstances must have been such as would, in the opinion of the jury, justify such a belief in the mind of a person possessed of ordinary firmness and reason.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Greenville County; Aldrich, Judge.

Isadore Thompson was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

The charge as to self-defense is as follows: "Self-defense is the next grade I will call your attention to. Self-defense is based upon—predicated and built upon—the theory of necessity. It is allowed to a man, when it is necessary for him to strike to save his life, or to protect his person from serious bodily harm. When does the right to self-defense come to a man? He has to show you, in the first instance, that it was when he was at the time without legal fault in bringing about the difficulty. If he brought it about, and is in legal fault in causing trouble, he cannot plead self-defense, because the foundation of self-defense is based upon the rock of necessity. Self-defense comes to a man when he is attacked, assaulted, and some effort is being made which endangers his life, or suffering serious bodily harm. It does not come to a man before he is attacked or assaulted, nor it does not remain with him after the danger is over. It comes to him when he is assaulted, and goes when danger is over. It comes to him when he is assaulted, and he honestly believes, in order to save his life from danger, or his person from serious bodily harm, that he must meet the attack with force to save his life. That is the first degree. And the second degree is this: If you, gentlemen of the jury, believe a man of ordinary courage and firmness would have formed the conclusion in this case, as the testimony shows that the defendant acted—if so, he has made out his plea of self-defense. You catch the idea. Self-defense comes to a man when he is attacked, and he honestly believes that it is necessary for him to resort to force in order to save his life, or his person from serious bodily harm, and he does it; that is self-defense. The law adopts some rule to go by, and that is the rule the law adopts to go by—the ordinary man. And you, gentlemen, are intelligent men, and it is for you to say whether or not an ordinary man would have been excusable or justifiable in acting as the testimony shows that the defendant acted? That is a question of fact for you. Self-defense rests upon the rock of necessity. If a man is assaulted, and he believes that his person is in jeopardy, and he, by some safe and easy manner, can avoid taking the life of his assailant, then the law says that he must adopt that safe and easy manner; but the law is that he is not bound to retreat, or seek to avoid difficulty, if by so doing he would increase his danger, because, if he is acting in self-defense, he can do anything and everything necessary to save his life. Now, gentlemen, when the defendant sets up the plea of self-defense, he takes upon himself the burden of proof, not as the state is required to do to prove its case of guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, but by the preponderance of the testimony—the greater weight of the testimony. That is sufficient, and he is entitled to any reasonable doubt growing out of the testimony in the whole case."

Blythe & Blythe and Jas. I. Earle, for appellant. Asst. Atty. Gen. Townsend, for the State.

POPE, C. J. The appellant was convicted of the murder, with a recommendation to mercy, of one Arch Sullivan, at the July term, 1903, of the court of general sessions for Greenville county, and thereafter duly sentenced to an imprisonment for life in the state penitentiary. The testimony tended to show that the deceased, upon a promise of marriage, had accomplished the ruin of defendant's daughter. During the progress of the trial, and while the state was offering testimony in chief, the state offered one G. F. Spann as a witness. The defendant objected to this witness on the ground that he was incompetent as a witness, having been convicted of the crime of burglary. The circuit court sustained the objection. After the defense had completed its testimony, the state again offered this witness, on the ground that it was a mistake of fact that said G. F. Spann had been convicted of burglary. The circuit judge reversed his ruling denying the right of the prosecution to use this witness. The defense objected to this testimony, not because the witness G. F. Spann had been convicted of burglary, but upon the ground that it was too late to hear the testimony, as the defense could not procure testimony in reply. The court had ruled that the defense should have the right to fully reply to this witness. The court, as before stated, ruled the testimony competent in chief, even if the defense had closed its testimony. He then testified. The defense alleges that this was error, and made this the first ground of appeal.

After the judge's charge upon murder, manslaughter, and self-defense, the defense requested him to charge as follows: "Even if the jury believe, from the evidence, that the defendant did have ill will or malice toward the deceased before and at the time of the killing, yet if they further believe that the defendant killed the deceased, not because of the malice, but to save himself from death, or great bodily harm, he could still avail himself of his plea of self-defense, in spite of such malice, and if, therefore, the jury believe, from the evidence, that he has established such plea by the preponderance of the evidence, then the verdict should be 'not guilty.' The circuit judge refused to charge such request, and said: "I think I have charged fully on that question." This is made the second ground of appeal.

We will now pass upon these two grounds of appeal in their order.

1. It is clear to our minds that the circuit judge made no error as here presented. Suppose the circuit judge had erred in refusing to allow one of defendant's witnesses to be examined after the state had fully gone into its evidence in reply to the defense, and then for the first time the court became conscious of his error; ought he not to have allowed defendant's witnesses to be examined? Clearly so. Courts are organized to dispense justice, and, when such courts find that they have made mistakes in refusing to admit competent testimony, they should at once admit such testimony. There are numerous decisions in our state sustaining such conclusions. The case of State v. Jagers, 58 S. C., at page 46, 36 S. E. 436, does not contravene this rule; for in the case just cited the late Chief Justice McIver said in that case, when one Wilson had been allowed to testify after the close of the testimony for the defense: "It does not appear in this case as prepared for argument here, or from the supplement found in the argument of the solicitor, that the defendant had offered any testimony to which the testimony of the witness Wilson could in any sense be regarded as a reply. Nor does it appear at any part of the record before us that the testimony of Wilson tended to contradict anything testified to by the defendant. * * * This testimony, while no doubt competent, if it had been offered by the state when developing its testimony in chief, when the defendant would have had an opportunity to contradict or explain it, was clearly incompetent in reply; for it was not in reply to any testimony adduced by the defendant." In the case at bar, the state, or prosecution, had in its testimony in chief offered testimony to show threats by the defendant against the life of the deceased, and the defense had replied to this testimony. This exception is overruled.

2. In reference to the second exception, it may be well to reproduce from the case of State v. McGreer, 18 S. C. 466, what this court says in regard to the plea of self-defense: "To make out a case of self-defense, two things are necessary: (1) The evidence should satisfy the jury that the accused actually believed that he was in such immediate danger of losing his life, or sustaining serious bodily harm, that it was necessary, for his own protection, to take the life of his assailant. (2) That the circumstances in which the accused was placed were such as would, in the opinion of the jury, justify such a belief in the mind of a person possessed of ordinary firmness and reason. It is not a question which depends solely upon the belief which the accused may have entertained; but the question is, what was his belief, and, under all the circumstances as they existed at the time the violence was inflicted, the jury think he ought to have formed such belief." Now, this doctrine has been declared to be the law in this state repeatedly since it was announced. The charge of the circuit judge was in conformity with this ruling. The Reporter will set out that part of the charge of the circuit judge as found on pages 15 and 16, at folios 58, 59, 60, 61, and 62 of the "case" for appeal. An inspection of so much of the charge of the circuit judge as referred to self-defense will be found to contain sound law. Sometimes it is hazardous to charge requests to charge in the exact language embodied in such requests. We do not think the circuit judge erred in refusing this request.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

RUSHTON v. WOODHAM et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Feb. 26, 1904.)

DISTRICT COURTS—JURISDICTION—NEWLY ORGANIZED COUNTY—USURY—JUDICIAL SALES.

1. 23 St. at Large, p. 1199, § 11, creating Lee county, provides that records belonging to any suits or indictments pending in those portions of other counties forming the county of Lee shall be transferred to the county of Lee within 10 days after demand therefor by the clerk of the court of Lee county. Held that, until the officers of Lee county are qualified and demand the records, the courts of the old counties out of whose territory Lee county was formed have jurisdiction of causes relating to lands in the new county, and retain jurisdiction in a case which was argued and in which an opinion was announced three days before the officers of Lee county qualified, though the decree was filed six days afterwards.

2. The words "full jurisdiction and power," as used in 23 St. at Large, p. 1199, § 14, providing that courts and officers of old counties out of which Lee county was organized should have such jurisdiction and power within the limits of Lee county taken from their respective counties until officers shall have been elected and qualified in Lee county, means jurisdiction over real and personal property in the territory.

3. Where a creditor collects an excess of interest by mistake, it will not support a plea of usury.

4. Where an order of sale in a portion of a county taken to create a new county was properly made in the old county, and before sale was made the officers of the new county qualify, it was proper to order sale made in the new county.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Darlington County; Klugh, Judge.

Action by J. E. Rushton against J. M. Woodham and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified.

Spears & Dennis, for appellants. Geo. W. Brown, for respondent.

WOODS, J. This action for the foreclosure of a mortgage of real estate was commenced July 30, 1900. The only defense set up in the answer was usury. An order was made September 28, 1901, referring the cause to T. H. Spain, Esq., master, to take testimony and report his conclusions of law and fact. The master made his report November 15, 1902, finding that there was no usury, and recommending judgment in the full amount claimed by the plaintiff. This report came up for consideration on defendants' exceptions, December 6, 1902, in the court of common pleas for Darlington county, and the counsel for the defendants then objected to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that after the commencement of the action the new county of Lee had been created, which embraced within its limits the mortgaged premises, and that its county officers had qualified and been commissioned. The circuit judge overruled the plea to the jurisdiction, heard arguments on the exceptions, and on the same day announced that he would confirm the master's report, instructing plaintiff's attorney to prepare the decree. The decree was not filed until December 15, 1902.

The defendant again raises the question of jurisdiction in this court. It is here admitted, however, that while the act creating Lee county was passed on February 25, 1902, and the county officers elected at the general election held in November, 1902, the officers did not qualify and receive their commissions until December 9, 1902, three days after this cause had been heard in the court of common pleas for Darlington county. This fact we think decisive of the question of jurisdiction. The eleventh section of the act creating Lee county provides: "Sec. 11. All suits pending in the counties of Kershaw, Darlington and Sumter in which the defendants reside in the portion of said counties now established as the county of Lee, and all indictments now pending in the aforesaid counties in which the offenses were committed in the portion of said counties now established as Lee county, shall be transferred to the calendars of the courts of the county of Lee; and all records, commissions, and other papers belonging to any of said suits or indictments, together with all the legal incidents thereto appertaining, shall be transferred to the county of Lee within ten days after notice and demand therefor by the clerk of the court for Lee county upon the clerks of the courts for Kershaw, Darlington and Sumter counties, respectively." 23 St. at Large, p. 1199. It being manifest that no transfer of records and causes from the old counties could be made until there was an officer who could receive public records and take charge of and docket causes for the court in which they were to be tried, and that no public business could be conducted without public officers, the General Assembly in the fourteenth section of the act provided that the courts and officers of the old counties should have "full jurisdiction and power in and over the people of the territory within the limits of Lee county taken from their respective counties until the officers shall have been appointed or elected, as provided by law and qualified in and for the county of Lee, as provided for in this act."

The defendant, however, insists that "jurisdiction and power in and over the people of the territory within the limits of Lee county" confers jurisdiction only over the person of any one residing in Lee county, and not over the land situated therein. Nothing but the plainest and most emphatic enactment would justify a court in imputing to the General Assembly an intention to leave any portion of the state without public officers or courts for the protection and enforcement of property rights. The term "people" is here used in a comprehensive sense, clearly intended to embrace the inhabitants of the territory with respect to their personal and property rights and liabilities, and also all personal and property rights and liabilities over which the courts of the several old counties would have had jurisdiction, and concerning which the officers of the several old counties would have had power to act before the county of Lee was created. It is therefore obvious that the court of common pleas for Darlington county had jurisdiction of the cause on December 6, 1902, when it was heard. The delay of the court until December 15, 1902, in filing the decree, the officers of Lee county having qualified in the meantime on December 9, 1902, does not affect its validity, because the decree will be referred to the date of the hearing, and regarded as filed on that day. Keep v. Leckie, 8 Rich. Law, 164; Aultman v. Utsey, 35 S. C. 596, 14 S. E. 351; Calhoun v. Ry. Co., 42 S. C. 132, 20 S. E. 30; State v. Fullmore, 47 S. C. 34, 24 S. E. 1026; Mitchell v. Overman, 103 U. S. 62, 26 L. Ed. 369.

All the remaining exceptions assign error to the circuit judge in not sustaining the plea of usury. Usury, being an affirmative defense, must be established by the preponderance of the evidence. The defendant here specifically alleges that the contract expressed in the bond and mortgage was for interest at the rate of 8 per cent., yet the real contract was for 10 per cent., and that this rate of interest was exacted by the plaintiff from the date of the mortgage until December 28, 1899. The defendant and others of his family testify in support of this allegation, and the plaintiff flatly denies the charge. A number of receipts were given for payments, and corresponding entries, were made on the bond, but none of them indicate that more than 8 per cent. was exacted. It is true the defendant made payments which would amount to about 10 per cent., but the plaintiff denies that they were received other than as general credits applicable to the interest at 8 per cent. until extinguished, and then to the principal, and charges that payments of such amounts were made by defendant with the purpose to give color to the plea of usury which he was preparing to set up. The master and the circuit judge concur in the finding that the plaintiff never contracted for a greater rate of interest than the rate stated in the bond, and did not at any time collect a greater rate. So far from the preponderance of the evidence being against this finding, we think it is well supported. According to the defendant's own computation, from January 1, 1897, the date of the bond, to December 1, 1898, when no difference had arisen between the parties, the payments exceeded the legal rate of interest by only $18.73. The plaintiff's explanation of this excess, that the payments were made in small amounts, some of them when he did not have the bond and without any accurate calculation of the interest due—accuracy not being regarded essential, as it was understood the principal should be gradually reduced—seems quite reasonable. On the other hand, if the payments had been exacted and made on the basis of 10 per cent. interest, the excess of the payments over 8 per cent. would have aggregated over $100, instead of $18.73. The explanation of the defendant that it was due to the kindness of the plaintiff that he was let off from paying the full 10 per cent. for this period on account of the hard times is not only at variance with his answer, but is not convincing in view of the fact that at the trial the plaintiff was represented on behalf of the defendant as quite an exacting creditor. It need hardly be said that the collection of an excess of interest on account of a mistake in the computation or other error in fact against the intention of the party will not support the charge of usury. 3 Parsons on Contracts, 123. As to the later payments made when serious differences had arisen between the parties as to the cutting of timber on the mortgaged premises, it seems not at all probable the plaintiff would have risked the heavy penalty of usurious interest when dealing at arm's length with his debtor, and for this reason, if no other, his statement that the payments were received on the principal as well as interest, and not for usurious interest, is more reasonable. The exceptions are therefore overruled.

As the cause is still pending, it should be transferred to the court of common pleas for the county of Lee, and application made to that court for an order directing the sale of the land to be made at Bishopville by the proper officers of Lee county, instead of by the master for Darlington county.

With this modification, the judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

LEVIN v. LEVIN.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Feb. 29, 1904.)

ACTION FOR ALIMONY—WHEN MAINTAINABLE—CRUELTY—CONDONATION.

1. Alimony should be allowed on desertion of the wife by the husband without just cause, or where he inflicts upon his wife, or threatens her with, personal injury, or he indulges in such practices as outrage all the sentiments characteristic of the sex.

2. Evidence in action for alimony reviewed, and held that the husband's cruelty justified his wife in separating from him.

3. Cruelties of the husband which have been forgiven may be considered when others have followed until the wrong becomes unbearable.

4. Where the complete alienation between husband and wife has come almost entirely from the gross misconduct of the husband, he will not be exempted from the support of his penniless wife and dependent children.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; Purdy, Judge.

Action by Dora Levin against Hyman Levin. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Bryan & Bryan, for appellant. Mordecai & Gadsden, for respondent.

WOODS, J. Hyman Levin and Dora Friedman were married on October 15, 1899. After a short bridal trip, they lived together at the home of the wife's father in New York until November 1, 1899. Levin then returned to his home in Charleston. Mrs. Levin did not accompany him, but continued to live with her father, and has continuously refused to go to her husband's home and assume the position of a wife. She commenced this action for alimony on October 26, 1901, alleging, under a number of specifications, cruel and inhuman treatment, sufficient, as she insists, to justify her in refusing to cohabit with her husband and in demanding separate support. The defendant denies the charges, and undertakes to lay the blame of separation entirely on his wife and her parents. The cause was referred to G. H. Sasa, Esq., master, and his report finding against the plaintiff has been reviewed and confirmed by the circuit judge.

The findings of fact in the report and the decree are of great value, not only on account of the sources from which they come, but because of the earnest consideration manifestly given to the cause. A careful study of the evidence leads to the conviction that these findings as to the essential issues are, in the main, correct. The chief question for discussion is as to the correctness of the legal conclusions drawn by the master and the circuit judge from the facts.

The grounds upon which alimony should be allowed are thus stated in Wise v. Wise, 60 S. C. 447, 38 S. E. 802, after a review of the decisions in this state: "(1) Desertion of the wife by the husband, without just cause. * * * (2) Where the husband inflicts upon his wife, or threatens her with, bodily injury, amounting to the sævitia of the civil law, which is defined 'to be personal violence actually inflicted or menaced, and affecting life or health.' (3) Where the husband practices such obscene and revolting indecencies in the family circle, and so outrages all the sentiments of delicacy and refinement characteristic of the sex that a modest and pure-minded woman would find these grievances more dreadful and intolerable than the most cruel inflictions upon her person." It should not be supposed that a separate support must be denied to the wife under the second proposition, because the personal violence on account of which it is claimed does not actually imperil her life or health. It is sufficient if it tends to do so. Great and continued physical indignities—such, for example, as chastisement or imprisonment—might possibly not endanger life or health, but certainly a wife is not called upon to endure them. It should also be said in this connection that the time has passed when assent can be given to the statement made in Hair v. Hair, 10 Rich. Eq. 173: "No words of reproach and insult amount to legal cruelty; no affront and indignity, no torture of the feelings and sensibilities, however severe and grievous to be borne, unaccompanied by bodily injury or a well-grounded apprehension of such, will authorize the wife to leave the bed and board of her husband, and to claim thereupon from this court a decree for alimony." At the same time we fully accept the language used in Evans v. Evans, 1 Hagg. Rep. 39, quoted with approval in Rhame v. Rhame, 1 McCord, Eq. 206, 16 Am. Dec. 597: "What merely wounds the mental feelings is, in few cases, to be admitted, where they are not accompanied with bodily injury, either actual or menaced. Mere austerity of temper, petulance of manners, rudeness of language, a want of civil attention and accommodation, even occasional sallies of passion (if they do not threaten bodily harm), do not amount to legal cruelty." One of these few cases arises when a husband habitually uses to his wife abusive language, which she cannot endure without a complete surrender of self-respect, or strikes at the vital point of female character by making and maintaining the charge of unchastity. The husband's right of dominion and the wife's duty to live with him and obey him cease to exist when the husband ceases to support them by at least decent respect and consideration. The general view of the law above stated will, no doubt, receive ready assent; but the delicacy of the subject makes the application of principles to the facts of each case the real judicial task.

While each case that has arisen in this state differs widely as to its facts from every other, a review of the cases leads to the conclusion that the decision of this case should depend upon the following questions: (1) Has the defendant inflicted on the plaintiff such physical violence or personal indignity as would make her residence with him as a wife intolerable? (2) Has the wife deserted her husband, or so contributed to the alienation that the law will deny her separate support? (3) Has the wife so condoned the alleged wrongs that her claim must fail? (4) Does the defendant's invitation to the plaintiff to come to his home as his wife discharge him of any liability he may have incurred for her separate support? It may be well to remark before beginning the discussion of these questions, that we attach slight importance, except as a mere sidelight, to the fact that the acquaintance of these parties was brought about by Levin and the parents of Mrs. Levin through the intervention of a matchmaker, and the marriage itself based more on convenience than sentiment. The court in a case of this kind has little to do with the finer sentiments and emotions of conjugal life, and must concern itself with the right of the wife to be protected from cruelty and indecency.

A number of charges are made against Levin. The first accusation—that he was very drunk on his wedding night—is clearly proved, and it cannot be doubted that this misconduct brought to his bride great mortification and disgust. Some excuse is to be allowed in the fact that he had been fasting for a day under the Jewish law, and did not take proper account of the effect of wine on an empty stomach. If the occasion had been an ordinary one, the drunkenness would, no doubt, be excused by all the charitable as accidental; but it is not easy to see how the instinct of ordinary self-respect could have been so off guard on his wedding night. This offense, however, was forgiven, and no doubt its effect on the wife's feelings would have been obliterated if the impression of lack of sensibility had not been deepened by subsequent misconduct. Levin's explanation of registering with his wife at the St. Dennis Hotel under an assumed name is sufficient to make the impropriety of little consequence in this inquiry.

Mrs. Levin testifies that on the bridal trip to Baltimore the defendant forced sexual intercourse against her will, called her "flirt and loafer," telling her "to go to the devil" or "to go to hell," in anger struck her in the face, and nearly pushed her down the stairs. Whether all these cruelties were perpetrated, it is impossible to say with certainty, for they rest in assertion by the wife, and are met by denial of the husband. It cannot be doubted, however, that there were serious disagreements on this unhappy journey arising from the husband's grossness of conduct and jealous disposition. After this they returned to the home of Mrs. Levin's parents, and lived together as husband and wife for a week or more. For some reason, during this period, Mrs. Friedman became solicitous about her daughter's physical condition, and had an examination by a physician, from which she received the impression that Mrs. Levin was pregnant. Levin insisted that he had not known his wife sexually, and we cannot doubt that, in her father's house, he strongly intimated, if he did not directly charge, that, if his wife was pregnant, she had been unchaste. While there is much conflict, we think the testimony sustains the master and circuit judge in finding that Levin, before leaving New York, insisted on sexual intercourse at a time when his wife's physical condition made his doing so indecent. It appears that this became so repulsive to her that she left his room, and sought refuge with her mother. The details of the testimony on this point are too revolting to be recited. It is sufficient to say that plaintiff's physical condition was such that it would be difficult to imagine anything more disgusting and distressing to a decent woman than the defendant's conduct in this respect towards her. When the defendant left New York, his wife was painfully, if not seriously, ill, and in great distress. He testifies that he believed she was shamming; and there is no doubt that her statement is true that he actually charged her with pretending to be sick, without having, so far as we can discern, the slightest ground for the imputation. In addition to all this, Levin, on his departure, failed to leave his wife any money, or to make provision of any kind for her maintenance and comfort.

It may be that any one of the wrongs done by Levin, standing alone, might be regarded as only "a sally of passion," or a somewhat abnormal development of human weakness, to which in some degree many men may be subject, and which ought to be borne by a wife as incident to an unfortunate alliance. But, considering all the outrages together, perpetrated as they were when his wife was a young bride, having a right to expect, even from a husband of the commoner sort, at least respectful consideration, we cannot resist the conclusion that they amount to intolerable cruelty, justifying her separation from him. We think the evidence sustains the opinion that the plaintiff's refusal to accompany her husband to Charleston was due to her sickness, and also to her aversion to him arising from ill treatment.

The real defense up to this point, linked to a total denial of all improper conduct, except drunkenness, on the part of the defendant, is the allegation that all the matrimonial differences arose from the officious intermeddling of Mrs. Friedman, the plaintiff's mother. While the failure of the plaintiff to have her father and mother testify has not impressed us favorably, we have sought in vain for facts adequate to support this defense. Mrs. Friedman was satisfied with the alliance, and in defendant's behalf had induced her daughter to be reconciled to him after his drunkenness. This kindly attitude, even if her temper was not of the best, is entirely inconsistent with Levin's statement that, upon his return from the bridal tour, without any provocation, Mrs. Friedman became prejudiced against him, and determined to separate her daughter from him. Nor does the evidence bear out the allegation, pressed with so much vigor in argument, that plaintiff's parents were determined all along that their daughter should not live in Charleston, being willing to separate her from her husband to prevent her doing so, and that this is the secret of the separation; for after the marriage Mrs. Levin's personal apparel and all the wedding presents were packed by Levin, and shipped to Charleston, with the apparent acquiescence of the entire family. This theory requires for its support much stronger evidence than is offered here. It is against nature that parents should be anxious to separate a daughter from her husband, and thus wreck her life, in order to keep her at home.

We next inquire, has the wife deserted her husband, or so contributed to the alienation that the law will deny her a separate support? Having already held that she committed no breach of duty in separating herself from her husband, it follows that she did not in any legal sense desert him.

One phase of Mrs. Levin's conduct, which has given rise to the greatest perplexity in the effort to reach a just conclusion, is the accusation made by her that her husband had imparted to her a repulsive disease. She does not allege this as one of her grounds of action, but it is considered here for the reason that, if she falsely and recklessly made such a charge, in connection with her refusal to live with her husband, she would be entitled to no relief. The charge she made was on the trial completely disproved by the best evidence on the subject that could then be offered. We hold that Levin did not have such a disease, and therefore could not impart it. Nevertheless, it cannot be said that Mrs. Levin is subject to great censure for entertaining the opinion she expressed. The attending physician discussed her symptoms with her or her mother, and while he did tell them that he could only be sure of the cause which produced them by the use of the microscope, yet it is manifest from his testimony that he regarded these unusual symptoms as probably indicating venereal disease; and this view was no doubt expressed at that time as strongly as it was in his testimony. Mrs. Levin cannot be acquitted of a lack of care in not doing what she could to relieve her husband of this dreadful imputation by procuring a microscopic examination, as suggested by the physician; but it must be remembered that Levin knew of his wife's condition, and her belief as to the cause, before he left New York, and yet he left with this shocking charge hanging over him without even seeing the physician who had made the examination, and from whom, as we must suppose, the impression came. It is said in Hair v. Hair, supra, that: "The conduct of the wife must be blameless. If she elopes, or commits adultery, or violates or omits to discharge any of the important hymeneal obligations which she has assumed upon herself, the husband may abandon her without providing for her support." It is not meant by this that a wife must be perfect—her conduct absolutely free from fault—in all distressing circumstances. It does not mean that when her husband has brought upon her great wrongs sufficient to sustain her appeal to the courts, she must be entirely free from imputing to him other wrongs of which he is not guilty. We do not think, when all the circumstances are considered, such blame attaches to the plaintiff as should defeat her action.

We next inquire, is the defendant protected from his wife's claim by condonation of his offenses? It is quite clear that a decree for alimony cannot be based upon wrongs which have been condoned, all misconduct having ceased after such condonation. But to hold that cruelties of a husband which have been forgiven are not to be considered when others have followed until the wrong becomes unbearable would not be to give encouragement and support to a wife's patient endurance, but to mock at it. In such case, as is said in Threewits v. Threewits, 4 De S. 574, the wife has a right to judge of the future by the past; and the court will connect the whole of the husband's conduct, in order to form a correct judgment. The case of Wise v. Wise, supra, is not in conflict with this view, because the conditions under which the condonation was there held a bar are essentially different from those existing here.

The last inquiry is, does the defendant's invitation to the plaintiff to come to his home as his wife discharge him from any liability he may have incurred for her separate support? At the outset of the discussion of this question it is proper to remark that ordinarily evidence as to negotiations for settlement should be excluded, but in this case these negotiations were brought into the issue by the answer, and we do not perceive how testimony concerning them could have been rejected by the master, or could now be excluded from consideration at the defendant's instance. When the past misconduct of a husband has justified his wife in leaving him, it is too obvious for argument that a mere invitation to her to return to him does not impose upon the wife any obligation to comply with her husband's wish at the risk of receiving like treatment. Under the decisions of this state and elsewhere, his invitation must be accompanied by such expressions of sorrow as would lead a court to hold that the wife had reasonable ground to expect ordinary respect and consideration in future. Levin's position from first to last, except as to the drunkenness, has been one of absolute self-justification and denial of wrong, laying all the misconduct at the door of the wife and her parents. But, aside from this, and attributing to the defendant an honest conviction that he did nothing, while his wife was cohabiting with him, that was not strictly within his marital rights, her refusal to return was justified by his charge of unchastity. That he made the accusation before parting with his wife cannot be doubted. He himself testifies that his suspicions were removed on the birth of the child. Yet after this, when professing to wish his wife to come to him, assuring her by letter that he did not blame her, but her mother, for any wrong done to him, he says no word of retraction or regret. He sends Mr. Banov to influence his wife to come to him, who returns with a written retraction for his signature, which she asks at his hands, but the paper is not signed. Levin's attorney, Mr. Mordecai, says he told Mr. Bryan, attorney for Mrs. Levin, before this suit was brought, that she would come out of court "with her character as a wife ruined." Whatever meaning Mr. Mordecai may have intended to convey by this language, in view of the serious charge of unchastity before made, and apparently adhered to, it must have meant to her a threat to establish this charge. An invitation extended under such circumstances as these we cannot hold a wife bound to accept.

We conclude that Levin's acts of cruelty justified his wife in separating from him; that, while her behavior has not been faultless, her fault had such excuse as to make it insufficient to deprive her of support for herself and her child; that her claim is not barred by condonation; and that she had sufficient reason to decline her husband's invitation to go to his home as his wife.

The consideration of the mass of nauseous testimony will not leave in an impartial mind any hope of reconciliation of these parties. This complete alienation has come almost entirely from the gross misconduct of the defendant, and we cannot exempt him from the support of his penniless wife and dependent infant.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and that the cause be remanded to that court for the purpose of ascertaining and adjudging a proper allowance for the expenses of this suit and reasonable alimony for the plaintiff, having in view all the circumstances of the husband and wife.

STATE v. DUNN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 16, 1904.)

ASSOCIATIONS — NATURE — RELIGIOUS AND BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES—TREASURER—FUNDS — FAILURE TO ACCOUNT — STATUTES — CONSTRUCTION.

1. Code, § 1017, provides that if any treasurer or other financial officer of any benevolent, religious institution, society, or congregation shall lend any of its moneys without its consent, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the words "benevolent" and "religious" qualified the words "society or congregation," as well as the word "institution," so that societies or congregations which were neither benevolent nor religious were not within the section.

2. An association formed to extend aid to sick members, and to defray burial expenses of their dead, from funds accumulated from initiation fees and monthly dues, is not a benevolent or religious society within Code, § 1017, relating to misdemeanors of treasurers of such societies.

3. Where the treasurer of an association rendered a statement in writing of his receipts and payments as treasurer, including a list of items of debits and credits, with their respective dates, etc., which was acceptable to the association's officers, he thereby complied with Code, § 1017, requiring a treasurer of a benevolent or religious institution to "account" for moneys belonging to the association, though he failed to pay over the balance in his hands on demand.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; Geo. H. Brown, Judge.

C. F. Dunn was convicted of unlawfully failing to account for money belonging to an alleged benevolent religious association, and he appeals. Reversed.

N. J. Rouse, Loftin & Varser, and W. D. Pollock, for appellant. Land & Cowper, with the Attorney General, for the State.

WALKER, J. The defendant was indicted under section 1017 of the Code, in one count for unlawfully lending, and in the other for unlawfully failing to account for money belonging to the Love & Union Society, an unincorporated body or association of individuals. The members paid an initiation fee and monthly dues, and in this way the necessary funds were raised for the uses of the society, which was formed "for extending aid to sick members and their families and to defray the expenses of burying their dead." The defendant was a member of the society, and was elected treasurer. In his official capacity he received the funds of the society, and, when demand was made by the proper authority upon him to account and pay over the money to his successor, he refused to pay the money, though he presented a statement of the amount in his hands; and this appears to have been correct, and to have been satisfactory to the trustees. We deem it necessary to consider only one or two of the questions involved in the case, in order to dispose of this appeal.

The defendant's counsel requested the court to charge the jury that the Love & Union Society is not such a benevolent institution or organization as is described in section 1017 of the Code, and that they should therefore acquit the defendant. The court refused to give this instruction, but charged the jury that, if they believed the testimony beyond a reasonable doubt, it is established that the Love & Union Society is a society or congregation, within the meaning of that section of the Code; that the words "benevolent" and "religious" are adjectives qualifying the word "institution," but not the words "society or congregation." The court further charged that, if the jury believed the testimony beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant, as treasurer of the society, had failed to account for and pay over the said money to the proper officers, and therefore that he was guilty under the second count. The defendant excepted to the refusal to give the instruction, and also to the charge. The jury convicted the defendant, and from the judgment upon the verdict he appealed.

In this construction of the statute we cannot concur. The society was organized for the mutual benefit and advantage of its members, and was not "benevolent," within the ordinary meaning and acceptation of that word. Webster defines "benevolent" to mean "having a disposition to do good; possessing or manifesting love to mankind, and a desire to promote their prosperity and happiness; disposed to give to good objects; kind; charitable." Substantially the same definition is given in the other standard dictionaries. Black, in his Law Dictionary, defines "benevolence" as the doing a kind or helpful action towards another, under no obligation except an ethical one. He says it will include all gifts prompted by good will or kind feeling towards the recipient, whether an object of charity or not. A benevolent society, of course, is one organized for benevolent purposes. He defines a benefit society as one which receives periodical payments from its members, and holds them as a fund to be loaned or given to those of the members needing pecuniary relief. "The essential difference between a benevolent association and a beneficial society, in the strict use of those terms, is that the former has for its object the conferring of benefits without requiring an equivalent from the one benefited, and in that sense it may be a charity." 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. (2d Ed.) p. 1043. In the case of State ex rel. Attorney General v. Critchett, 37 Minn. 13, 32 N. W. 787, an association was organized as a "benevolent" one, under a special statute, for the purpose of endowing the wife of each member, on his marriage, with a sum equal to as many dollars as there were members. The court, in passing upon the validity of its incorporation, said, "It is clear from the plan of the association that it was not intended to bestow any benefit or help, without what was thought to be an equivalent;" and the court therefore held that it could not be a "benevolent society," within the ordinary or legal meaning of those words. And so, in another case, in which the association was in all essential respects like the one described in this case, the same court said that "the undertaking is not in any sense benevolent, but is for a quid pro quo. It is paid for. It is no more a benevolent society than any mutual insurance company or other mutual company, or any partnership of which one member undertakes to do something for the pecuniary advantage of another member, in consideration of the undertaking of the latter to do a like thing for him." Foster v. Moulton, 35 Minn. 458, 29 N. W. 155; Beam, Benev. Soc. § 44. The law upon the subject is clearly stated in Gorman v. Russell, 14 Cal. 581. In that case it appeared that certain persons of a particular avocation associated and agreed that each should contribute a certain fixed sum to the common treasury, which sum, consisting of initiation fees and dues, was to be applied, in certain events, as in sickness, etc., to the relief of the necessities or wants of the individual members, or of their families. The court held that it was not a benevolent society, or a charity, any more than an assurance or benefit society is a charity, and that it was simply a fair and reciprocal contract among the members to pay certain amounts, under certain contingencies, to each other, out of a common fund. It is perfectly clear in our case that the members of the society united for the purpose of mutual benefit and advantage, and not merely from motives of charity, or with the desire or the design merely of doing good to others, which would seem to be the very essence of benevolence. The object of their organization was a most commendable one, but, though it was laudable in its purpose, it was not for that reason benevolent. The statute (Code, § 1017), being a penal one, must be construed strictly. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the court erred in refusing to give the instruction prayed for by the defendant, and in the instruction given to the jury, to the effect that the Love & Union Society was a benevolent society, within the meaning of section 1017 of the Code.

We think there was also error in the instruction that the adjectives "benevolent" and "religious" do not qualify the words "society or congregation." The general arrangement of the section and of those particular words with respect to each other, and the punctuation, clearly indicate that the purpose was to protect only benevolent or religious institutions and benevolent or religious societies or congregations, and it was not intended that the section should apply to any society, regardless of its being either of a benevolent or religious character. We observe that the word "congregation" is used in the indictment in describing the society. The evidence does not disclose why this word was so used. It may be that it is a religious society or congregation, in fact, though the proof does not show it to be such. If it is, then, of course, the case would come within the provisions of that section of the Code; but it may be necessary in that event to send another bill, so that the allegations can be made to correspond with the facts as they will be shown at the next trial.

If the defendant is not indictable under section 1017, it may be that he is amenable to the law under section 1014. We do not think that the words "fail to account," as used in section 1017, refer to any failure to pay upon demand what is in the hands of the fiduciary, but only require that he shall render an account or statement of the funds, and, too, an itemized account, if required, in order that it may be known what disposition he has made of the funds intrusted to him. An account is defined to be "a statement in writing of debts and credits, or of receipts and payments; a list of items of debts and credits, with their respective dates." Black's Dictionary, p. 17. In our statutes the word is used in this sense, and when not only an account, but payment or settlement, is intended, additional words are used to express that idea. Code, §§ 1016, 1017, 1018, 724, 764, 1399 to 1402, 1837, 1865, 1868. In this case the defendant seems to have rendered what was accepted by the prosecutors as a satisfactory account, but the court charged that, if he failed to pay on demand, he had not complied with the requirement of the law. We do not think this is so. A failure to pay or settle on demand would be an unlawful conversion, and, if done with a dishonest, corrupt, or fraudulent intent, would be embezzlement, which particular offense is indictable and punishable under section 1014. It is for this reason that we have suggested that the defendant may be indictable under the latter section. If so, there must be a separate bill, as counts under each of the sections 1014 and 1017 cannot be united in the same bill. State v. Watts, 82 N. C. 656. The fact that the defendant is a member of the society may seem to present an obstacle in the way of his successful prosecution under section 1014, but it seems to be settled by the authorities that where a member of an unincorporated society receives money of the society, not in his capacity merely as a member, but in trust or as a fiduciary, he will be criminally liable for any embezzlement of the money so held by him. Having acquired it by virtue of the confidence reposed in him, any fraudulent conversion of it is indictable, although, as a member of the society, he may be one of the joint owners of the money, and his conversion of it therefore would not, at common law, have been criminal. McLain, Crim. Law, § 631; Reg. v. Woolley, 4 Cox, C. L. C. 251, 255; Reg. v. Turberville, Id. 18; Rex v. Hall, 2 Eng. Cr. Cases (1 Moody) 474; Reg. v. Proud, L. & C. Cr. Cases 97; Reg. v. Murphy, 4 Cox, Cr. L. Cases, 101. In Reg. v. Woolley, 4 Cox, C. L. C. 251, the defendant was indicted for embezzling funds, the property of E. M. B. and others, his partners (members of Friendly Society), and pleaded that he could not be convicted, because he was a member of the society. The court said: "Even assuming that the prisoner, being himself one of the members, was included in the words 'others,' that point was taken in a case before Mr. Justice Erie at the last Monmouth assizes [Reg. v. Turberville, supra], and that learned judge ruled that he should consider the prisoner included or excluded in the word 'others' as the justice of the case might require." The same principle is laid down in Laycock v. State, 136 Ind. 217, 38 N. E. 187, in which the court says: "The fund in question was set apart and devoted to charitable and benevolent purposes. The appellant was made the trusted agent of the association, charged with the duty of preserving its funds for the use of the needy and distressed brothers of the order; and an answer by him to a charge of fraudulent conversion that he had an equal interest with the others therein, and no one had a right to complain because there was no principal entitled to its recovery, does not find support under existing statutes. This money having been dedicated to the wants of the sick and helpless, the trustee had no right to profane or violate a sacred trust in the manner charged, and for such he is answerable. The act of embezzlement may be perpetrated as well against the property of an association as of a corporation." We see, therefore, that the technical rule of the common law that in general a party having a right of property in goods, and also a right to the possession, cannot be guilty of larceny, and consequently that tenants in common, joint tenants, and partners cannot be guilty of stealing their own property (Roscoe, Cr. Ev. p. 626), seems not to apply to a case of embezzlement by one who has received the property in trust and confidence to apply it to certain specific uses. We merely call attention to this principle for the purpose of showing the difference between section 1014 and section 1017 of the Code; the latter referring only to the unlawful lending of money, or failing to "account" for the same, when received in trust for a benevolent or religious institution, society, or congregation, and the former to the fraudulent conversion of the same (evidenced by the failure to pay over on demand) when received in trust for any corporation, person—or persons, by Code, § 3765 (1)—or copartnership.

Whether the prosecution can be successfully maintained under the present indictment, and whether it is advisable to send a bill under section 1014, are matters which we leave entirely to the consideration of the learned and able solicitor who prosecutes in behalf of the state in the district from which the case has come to this court. We only decide now that there was error in the rulings of the court, as above indicated, and, because of them, there must be another trial. New trial.

(134 N. C. 428)

ISLER v. BROCK et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 22, 1904.)

TESTAMENTARY TRUST — ADMINISTRATION — SUBSTITUTION OF TRUSTEES—FINALITY OF DECREE—ACCOUNTING—INTEREST ON TRUST FUND.

1. A testamentary trustee was to receive the rents, profits, and interest thereof, and to pay such part thereof to testator's son and his children as the trustee might think proper during the son's life, and after his death to hold the same for the use of such children as the son might have, etc. In an action by the cestuis que trust, a third party was substituted as trustee, the decree vesting in him the title to the property in as full a manner as the same was vested in his predecessor by the will, and he was thereby directed and empowered to lend the money which should come into his hands, and to pay the interest, with the rents, to the testator's son during his life. Held, that this gave him no right to encroach on the principal fund.

2. The judgment was final, and did not keep the action open for further ex parte orders as to the administration of the trust, made without notice to the cestuis que trust.

3. A trustee who was required by the terms of a testamentary trust, and the decree by which he was appointed in place of the original trustee, to pay the trust money and property to remaindermen on the death of the life tenant, was properly required to pay interest from the latter's death on whatever sums he had in his hands, it not appearing that he was unable to lend the money at interest, or that he kept it separate or apart from his own funds.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wayne County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by S. W. Isler against O. Brock and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Battle & Mordecai, for appellant. Stevens, Beasley & Weeks, for appellees.

MONTGOMERY, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff for an account and settlement between himself as trustee and the defendants, cestuis que trust, for a division of the personal property and proceeds of sale of real property belonging to the cestuis que trust, and for a sale of certain land also belonging to them. At September term, 1895, of Wayne superior court, in a regularly constituted action, wherein Everett Joyner, Jr., and the defendants in this action were plaintiffs, and A. U. Kornegay, executor of W. F. Kornegay, and others, were defendants, the plaintiff was substituted as trustee in place of James F. Kornegay, the latter having been appointed trustee under the will of Everett Joyner, deceased. Under that decree, the plaintiff received from James F. Kornegay, former trustee, the sum of $3,960. At November term, 1901, of said court, it appeared in the present action that a long and complicated account would have to be taken, and it was by consent of the parties ordered that F. R. Cooper be appointed referee to find the facts and make his conclusions of law under the Code, and the plaintiff was directed to proceed with the sale of the land described in the complaint. The referee heard the matters in dispute, and made a report of his findings of fact and conclusions of law to the September term, 1903, of the superior court. Exceptions were filed by both parties to the report of the referee. A judgment was rendered at September term, 1903, from which the plaintiff appealed.

The principal contention on the part of the plaintiff is that he should have been allowed certain credits, which were admittedly encroachments on the trust fund, on the grounds, first, that the terms of the decree of the court under which he was made trustee gave him the right to encroach upon the principal fund, and, second, because he was empowered specially by the superior court of Wayne county at various terms to expend part of the principal fund. In the third item of the will of Everett Joyner, the testator said: "I give, devise and bequeath all the balance of my estate, real, personal, mixed, or in action, to my friend James F. Kornegay, in trust to receive the rents, profits and interest thereof, and to pay in his discretion such parts thereof to my son Everett and his children, as he may think proper during the life of said Everett, and after the death of said Everett to hold the same for the use of such children as said Everett may have, and to the issue of such as may be dead, such issue to represent the parent and to take such share as the parent would if living." Kornegay, as we have seen, acted for a while as trustee, but afterwards, as we have seen, the plaintiff was substituted in his place as trustee, and, in the decree of the court in which the substitution was made, the nature of the trust under the will of Everett Joyner was set forth. In that judgment the court said: "It is further adjudged that S. W. Isler be and is hereby appointed trustee in place of James F. Kornegay and W. F. Kornegay, under the will of Everett Joyner, Sr., and that the title to said land and money is hereby vested in said S. W. Isler in as full and ample a manner as the same was vested in James F. Kornegay by said will, and he is hereby directed and empowered to lend the money which shall come into his hands upon first mortgage security upon land as he shall have opportunity, and to pay such interest as he may obtain upon the same, together with the rents from said real estate, to the plaintiff, Everett Joyner, Jr., son of said Everett, Sr., during his life, and after the death of the said Everett, Jr., to hold the balance in trust for such child or children as said Everett, Jr., may leave, and to the issue of such as may be dead, such issue to represent the parent, and to take such share as the parent would if living; and said trustee is authorized to deposit any funds which may come into his hands in the Bank of Wayne of Goldsboro, N. C., while in the judgment of said trustee the said bank is a safe place of deposit, until such time as he shall be able to lend the same upon satisfactory mortgage security as herein directed, or until the court shall appoint some other trustee." Counsel of the plaintiff contend that no notice to the defendants was necessary, for the reason that the judgment of September term, 1895, was of such a nature as to keep the action open for further orders in reference to the administration of the trust. That is a mistaken view of the character of the judgment.

It will be seen from the plain language of the judgment of September term, 1895, that the plaintiff as trustee could only disburse to the cestui que trust the interest arising from a loan of the money on hand and the rents and profits of the real estate. It is true that orders were made in the superior court of Wayne county, at several terms thereof, either authorizing the expenditure by the plaintiff of such amounts as were encroachments upon the principal fund, or approving such expenditures after they had been made. Those orders, however, were made on the ex parte application of the plaintiff, and without notice to the defendants. It was not interlocutory, but final. In the judgment in the present action the plaintiff was held liable for the principal fund which he received, to wit, $3,900, and from that amount he was allowed to deduct 5 per cent. commissions for his services. Upon the balance, to wit, $3,762, the plaintiff was charged with interest from June 14, 1891, the date of the death of the life tenant, Everett Joyner, Jr., less 5 per cent. commissions on the interest up to the date of the judgment, September term, 1903. Three thousand three hundred dollars was to be credited on the judgment by reason of that amount having been paid into the clerk's office by the plaintiff on September 14, 1903. The judgment further provided that that amount—$3,800—should bear interest from September 14, 1903.

The plaintiff excepted also to that part of the judgment on the ground that in the decree of September, 1895, in which he was made trustee, he was held liable for only such interest as he might obtain or that might come into his hands. We are not called upon to decide what that language in the decree means. But under the will of Everett Joyner, deceased, and also under the decree of September, 1895, the money and the property in the hands of the trustee were to be paid to those in remainder at the death of the life tenant, and it was certainly proper that in the judgment it should be required that the trustee pay interest on whatever sums he may have in his hands from the time of the death of the life tenant, he not having shown to the referee or to the court that he was not able to lend the money out at interest, or that he kept it separate and apart from his own funds. The judgment embraced also the amount for which the real estate had been sold by the plaintiff, and the manner of distribution of the money, and also of the proceeds of the sale of the land amongst the defendants, to which there was no exception.

After a careful consideration of the record, we find that there is no error in the judgment, and the same is affirmed.

HUMPHREY-GIBSON CO. v. ROBINSON
et al.

REAL ESTATE BROKERS—COMMISSIONS—PERSON BY WHOM PAID—CONCEALMENT OF FACTS FROM PRINCIPAL.

1. The owner of notes employed real estate brokers to negotiate an exchange of them for land. They found a landowner who authorized them to sell his property for $10,155, the landowner to pay the brokers all their commissions and compensation. The brokers had no authority to close the trade for either party, except upon terms that were agreeable to both, and their agency consisted merely in bringing the parties together to make such trade as was acceptable to each. An agent of the owner of the notes agreed to pay the landowner $12,300, the notes, with accrued interest, amounting to $13,440. The brokers were to pay the owner of the notes $1,140 in cash, and to retain for themselves the difference between $10,155 and $12,300. The owner of the notes was not informed of the change in the terms, and did not consent to the new contract. Held, that the brokers could not recover commissions from her.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wayne County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by E. A. Humphrey and W. J. Gibson, partners doing business under the firm name of the Humphrey-Gibson Company, against M. E. Robinson and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

This action was brought by the plaintiffs, who are real estate brokers, to recover damages arising out of an alleged breach of contract by the defendants. The complaint is as follows:

"(1) That the plaintiffs, E. A. Humphrey and W. J. Gibson, constitute a partnership as brokers, middlemen, and agents in negotiating trades for the sale, exchange, and purchase of real estate and other properties, and were such partners, and so negotiating, at the times hereafter mentioned.

"(2) That during the early part of 1902 the defendant Mary O. G. Kirby was the holder of six notes of the East Goldsboro Land & Investment Company for $2,000 each, with accrued interest.

"(3) That during the early part of said year of 1902 the defendant Mary O. G. Kirby asked the plaintiffs if they could not negotiate some trade for her by which she could reduce said notes to cash, or invest said notes in real estate that would bring her in a larger income monthly; said notes running 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 years, and only the interest on each note payable as it fell due.

"(4) That, in compliance with such request, the plaintiffs saw J. F. Southerland, the owner of the real estate hereinafter described, and told him of the desire of the defendant Kirby to invest her notes in real estate, and thereupon said Southerland authorized the plaintiffs to sell to defendant Kirby the following described property [description of land] for the sum of $10,155 in said notes, including interest, clear of all commissions, attorney's fees, and expenses.

"(5) That, during the negotiation as aforesaid, the defendant Kirby knew that the plaintiffs were representing Southerland in the sale of his said real estate, and Southerland knew that the plaintiffs were representing said defendant in the effort to invest her said notes, and it was understood and agreed with the said defendant that the plaintiffs were to look to Southerland for their commissions and compensation for negotiating said transaction.

"(6) That in said transaction the plaintiffs had no authority to close the trade for either party, except upon terms that were agreeable to said parties, which had to be made known to the parties respectively for their approval, and their agency consisted merely in bringing the parties together, in order that they might consummate such trade as was acceptable to each party respectively.

"(7) That the defendant M. E. Robinson acted as agent of the defendant Kirby in said negotiation, and, as such agent, agreed with the plaintiffs to pay Southerland the sum of $12,300 for the above-described real estate, which payment was to be made by delivery of said notes to Southerland, with accrued interest, amounting to $13,440, and the plaintiffs were to pay to the defendant Kirby $1,140 in cash, all of which notes, with the exception of $10,155, which was to be paid to Southerland as the purchase price, were to belong to the plaintiffs, as their compensation for negotiating said transaction, in lieu of commissions.

"(8) That, in compliance with said agreement, the plaintiffs had executed by Southerland and wife, and duly proved and acknowledged, with the privy examination of Addie Southerland, wife of J. F. Southerland, properly taken, a good and indefeasible deed in fee simple, with covenants of warranty, to said land, and tendered the same to the defendant, Kirby, and offered to pay the $1,140 difference in value between the notes and the purchase price of said land to said Kirby, and she, through her agent, Robinson, refused to comply with said contract and deliver said notes and accept said deed and money, and repudiated and refused to carry out said contract, to the plaintiff's damage $2,045.

"(9) That said Robinson stated to the plaintiffs that he would not carry out said contract, and that they might bring a suit, and that he would pay any damage for which defendant Kirby might be held liable for the breach of said contract. Wherefore the plaintiffs demand judgment for $2,045, and costs," etc.

The defendants in their answer denied the material allegations of the complaint, and specially denied that the contract for the purchase of the land had been made.

After the pleadings were read, it was admitted that neither of the defendants signed any writing touching the purchase of the land mentioned in the pleadings, and, it being further admitted that the plaintiffs did not disclose to either of the defendants that Southerland was getting only $10,155 for the land, and that the plaintiffs were to get the balance of the purchase money, to wit, $2,145, the court intimated that it would charge the jury that under such circumstances the plaintiffs could not recover of the defendants. Thereupon the plaintiffs submitted to a nonsuit, and appealed.

I. F. Dortch, W. O. Munroe, and W. O. Dortch, for appellants. F. A. Daniels and F. A. & S. A. Woodard, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The court below was right in the opinion it expressed that the plaintiffs cannot recover in this action. We know of no legal or equitable principle upon which the plaintiffs can base their right to recover damages of the defendants. It is alleged that the defendant Mrs. Kirby owned certain notes which she wished to invest in real estate, or with which she intended to purchase real estate as an investment, and she asked the plaintiff to negotiate with some one in her behalf so that the notes could be thus invested. The plaintiffs thereupon applied to Southerland for the purchase of the land described in the complaint, and he authorized them to sell the land to Mrs. Kirby for $10,155 in notes, clear of all commissions, attorney's fees, and expenses. The plaintiffs had no authority to close the trade for either party, except upon terms agreeable to both; their agency consisting merely in bringing the parties together, so that they could consummate such a trade as they might be able to agree upon.

We do not attach any importance to what is alleged in the seventh paragraph of the complaint, as we think Mrs. Kirby was not in any way bound, under the circumstances of the case, by what the defendant Robinson did. Southerland had agreed to sell the land to Mrs. Kirby for $10,155 clear of commissions and other expenses, and Mrs. Kirby was entitled to have the land at this price. To compel her to comply with the terms of the contract alleged to have been made by the defendant Robinson for her, but without her knowledge and consent, would be virtually to make her pay the plaintiffs' commissions, in violation of the previous express understanding and agreement. The plaintiffs were representing Mrs. Kirby, even if the defendant Robinson was also acting for her, and they knew that Southerland had agreed to sell at the price of $10,155 clear of commissions and expenses. If the amount had been increased to $12,300, in order that the obligation to pay the commissions might fall on Mrs. Kirby, or if any material change had been made in the transaction, she was clearly entitled to a full disclosure of the facts, and the law will not hold her to be bound by a contract or agreement, so vitally affecting her interests, of which she had no notice and to which she did not assent. It was the duty of the plaintiffs, as her agents, to communicate to their principal all the facts known to them and which were material to the transaction, and they will not be permitted to benefit, either directly or indirectly, by any dealing conducted in her name in which this was not done. The principal reposes trust and confidence in the agent, and the latter owes in return the duty to his principal of being faithful in all things, and he must, at all times and in all circumstances, put his principal's advantage above his own. This relation involves the duty of carefully guarding the interests of the principal, and reporting to him all material matters which may come to the agent's knowledge. The principle is of universal application that an agent or trustee, undertaking a special business for another, cannot, on the subject of that trust, act for his benefit to the injury of the principal. Dodd v. Wakeman, 26 N. J. Eq. 484. We think it is well settled that a broker cannot recover his commissions, nor damages in the place of them, if he has failed in any respect to make a full disclosure of the material facts to his principal, and certainly not if the latter is prejudiced thereby. Lamb v. Baxter, 130 N. C. 67, 40 S. E. 850; Hafner v. Herron, 165 Ill. 242, 46 N. E. 211; Young v. Hughes, 32 N. J. Eq. 372; Wadsworth v. Adams, 138 U. S. 380, 11 Sup. Ct. 303, 34 L. Ed. 984; Phinney v. Hall, 101 Mich. 451, 59 N. W. 814; Halsey v. Monteiro, 92 Va. 581, 24 S. E. 258; Jansen v. Williams, 36 Neb. 869, 55 N. W. 279, 20 L. R. A. 207; Humphrey v. E. T. Co., 107 Mich. 163, 65 N. W. 18. The general principle established by the authorities cited is clearly applicable to our case, and requires us to hold that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover, for the reason that the defendant Mrs. Kirby was not informed of the change in the terms, nor did she assent, in contemplation of the law or in fact, to the alleged contract. She now declines to accede to the alleged stipulations which the parties made for her without her knowledge, and it is clear, if what was done by them had been communicated to her at the time, she would have rejected the proposed terms of the agreement. The plaintiffs had been authorized by Southerland, the owner of the land, to sell it to Mrs. Kirby at $10,500 net to him; that is, free of commissions and other expenses, as above stated. A new arrangement is attempted to be made by which she is required to pay the commissions—about 20 per cent. of the original purchase price. An agent cannot thus impose an obligation upon his principal in his own favor, unless the principal is first made fully aware of all the facts and circumstances, and, after consideration, assents thereto. When we refer to a change having been made in the contract, or in the terms of the contract, we mean to say that by the enhancement of the price to $12,300 Mrs. Kirby would virtually be required to pay the commissions, contrary to the spirit, if not the very letter, of the original agreement.

The defendants also contended that, as the contract between Southerland and Mrs. Kirby had not been reduced to writing, the latter could not be held liable to the plaintiffs in damages for refusing to comply with the contract, assuming that one had been made between the parties. This presents a very interesting question, and one, too, not free from difficulty. It is not necessary that we should decide it, as we have already disposed of the appeal upon the other point presented. We will add, though, that it was contemplated by the parties that they should agree upon the terms of their contract before any commissions should be due to the plaintiffs, which it appears that they have not done, and it was not the fault of the defendant Mrs. Kirby that they did not agree. There may have been some misunderstanding between the parties, but even in that case Mrs. Kirby would not be liable to the plaintiffs. The ruling below upon the allegations of the complaint and the admissions was right, and the judgment of nonsuit must stand. No error.

LEE et al. v. BAIRD et al.

WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—APPEAL—EVIDENCE—FINDINGS.

1. In a suit to construe a will, objection was made to the testimony contained in a certain deposition as incompetent, but it did not appear that any ruling was made, and in the case on appeal there was a statement that, it having been agreed that the judge should find the facts, he found the facts as stated in the deposition, and adopted it as his finding in so far as the construction of the will was concerned. No issue as to the facts found by the court was made on appeal. Held, that it was proper for the court on appeal to consider the evidence contained in the deposition, for the purpose of construing the will.

2. On appeal in a suit for the construction of a will, an objection that the appeal was premature, in that there should have been a reference for an account of advancements before construing the will, was untenable, where no motion for such a reference was made.

3. In a suit for the construction of a will, the refusal to order a reference for an account of advancements before construing the will could be appealed from.

4. Where, in a suit for the construction of a will, the court found certain facts for the purpose of construing the will, and ordered a reference for an account of advancements, the reference was not bound, in taking the account, to follow the findings of fact.

Application for rehearing. Denied.

For former opinion, see 44 S. E. 605.

CONNOR, J. We have given to the petition to rehear this case a careful consideration. We have not "glanced over," but carefully read, the well-prepared and well-considered briefs of the learned counsel for the petitioners, and the authorities cited. As we stated in our former opinion (44 S. E. 605), the construction of the will presents serious and difficult questions, to which we then gave our best consideration and investigation. To the suggestion that "there is not the least ambiguity upon the face of Mrs. Baird's will, nor any ambiguity arising out of extrinsic facts which call for explanation by parol evidence," it would seem a sufficient answer that counsel of great learning and equal candor have at every stage of this litigation contested every point, and advanced arguments, to sustain their contentions, which were entitled to and which have received most respectful consideration. We are met at the very threshold with the contention that, in disposing of the Forest Hill property the testatrix used the word "children" when she intended to include "grandchildren"; that she not only meant grandchildren, but that she intended by the word "children" to include the children of one daughter and exclude her other grandchildren. It is further contended that when she used the word "heirs" in the fifth item she meant "children."

The learned counsel for the plaintiffs, in their brief upon the first hearing, say: "But we think that this case presents an instance where the court, to reconcile an apparent repugnancy, will give the words 'all my children' a sense beyond their natural import, and, construing items 2, 4, 5, and 7 together, will hold that 'grandchildren' are included." With the greatest possible deference to the learned counsel, we think that it would be difficult to find a will of the same length in which there are more ambiguities and difficulties. Counsel, in vigorous but entirely respectful language, urged that, in examining the parol evidence sent to us to enable us "to place ourselves in the place of the testatrix at the time of making her will," we are "indulging in forbidden fruit." The record shows that, when the deposition of John R. Baird was opened, the plaintiffs filed certain objections thereto, for that the certificate was irregular. The objections were overruled by the clerk, and his ruling upon appeal was affirmed by the judge. It is stated that no objections were made before the commissioner to the competency of the testimony, but the judge at the trial permitted the plaintiffs to file objections, which were objected to by the defendants as not being made in apt time. The record does not show any ruling of his honor upon these objections, but the case on appeal has this statement: "It having been agreed by counsel for the plaintiffs and defendants that the judge should find the facts, his honor announced that he found the facts as stated in the foregoing deposition of John R. Baird, and adopted it as his findings of fact, in so far as the construction of the will was concerned, and no further." There was no suggestion that we were to disregard the deposition. We considered it for the same purpose and to the same extent as did his honor. It did not occur to us that the estimate of values or other statements were conclusive upon the parties upon taking the account before the referee, but that, for the purpose of construing the will, the facts therein stated were taken as true.

In the appellants' brief on the first hearing we found "a brief statement of the case," in accordance with rule 34 (39 S. E. ix), which was followed by these words: "All the foregoing facts are found by the judge who tried this case in the superior court by consent of all parties, as set out in the record." The plaintiff's brief made no issue with the defendants in regard to the facts, but expressly stated, on the first page, that "the court found the facts to be as stated in the deposition, * * * and adopted it as his findings of fact in so far as the construction of the will was concerned and no further." (Italics in the brief.) The brief states that the plaintiffs objected to the introduction of the deposition. There was no exception to the action of the court in admitting it. The only further reference to the deposition is (page 5): "We think that the evidence offered by the plaintiffs to aid the court in construing the will was incompetent and unnecessary; yet, when duly considered, it confirms the view we have taken." We notice at length these facts because of the language contained in the petition to rehear and the brief filed regarding the action of this court in considering "extrinsic facts." We can decide cases only upon the record sent us, with the aid of briefs and arguments of learned counsel. If it was intended to insist that Mrs. Baird's will was free from difficulty, and that "there was not the slightest ambiguity in the description of those who are to take in item 7 of the will," it was not so suggested in the brief or argument before us upon the first hearing.

After a careful re-examination of the grounds upon which our opinion at the last term was based, we see no reason for changing the conclusion to which we then came. We fully recognize the principle of law, contended for and relied on by the plaintiffs, that where a testator directs his property, whether real or personal, to be equally divided among his heirs, the division must be per capita and not per stirpes, unless there be something in the will showing a contrary intention. For the reasons given in the former opinion, we think there was evidence in the will, as well as the extrinsic facts, of the intention to take the case out of the general rule, and this upon the principle stated by Lord Langdale, cited in Bivens v. Phifer, 47 N. C. 436.

The plaintiffs urge that the appeal was premature. In the light of the record before us in respect to the way by which the case was tried below, we cannot concur with the plaintiffs in this contention. If it was desired to have a reference before the will was construed, it should have been so insisted upon before his honor, and, upon the refusal to order a reference, an exception noted or probably an appeal taken. This appeal being by the defendants, that question is not presented for review, but the plaintiffs could have brought it before this court, by exception and appeal, upon the refusal of his honor to order a reference before construing the will. To prevent possible misconception we desire to say that we concur with the plaintiffs' contention that his honor's findings of fact are to be confined strictly to the construction of the will, and that the referee is in no sense bound thereby in taking the account of the testator's estate as ordered by the judgment below. We do not deem it necessary to repeat the views which we expressed at the last term, or the authorities upon which they were based. That we do not do so should not be construed as a failure on our part to carefully examine and consider the arguments and briefs of the learned counsel for the petitioners.

Let the petition be dismissed.

HUGHES et al. v. OLARK et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 22, 1904.)

STREET—DEDICATION—REVOCATION—ACCEPTANCE BY TOWN—EFFECT.

1. Where one has a tract of land platted into lots and streets, and sells lots with reference thereto, his dedication of the streets is irrevocable, so that he cannot thereafter convey good title to a part of one of them.

2. Where a tract outside the corporate limits of a town was platted into lots and streets, and lots sold with reference thereto, the acceptance or nonacceptance by the town, on extension of its limits so as to include the tract, of a part of one of the streets, does not affect the title thereto, but only affects the town's liability to keep it in repair.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pitt County; Moore, Judge.

Action by J. E. Hughes and others against W. T. Clark and another. From a judgment dismissing the action as of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Jarvis & Blow and F. S. Spruill, for appellant. Connor & Connor and Fleming & Moore, for appellees.

MONTGOMERY, J. The purpose of this action is to compel specific performance on the part of the defendant of a contract entered into in February, 1902, for the sale by the plaintiffs and the purchase by the defendant of a parcel or lot of land and its improvements situated in the town of Greenville. In conformity with the written agreement between the parties, the plaintiffs executed in due form a deed to the property, and tendered it to the defendant, who declined to accept it and pay the agreed purchase price on the ground that the plaintiffs had no good and sufficient title to that part of the lot of land described in the deed, upon which was located a leaf tobacco factory and machinery necessary for its operation. The only question in the case, then, is this: Did the plaintiffs have, at the time they tendered the deed to the defendant, a good and sufficient title to that part of the lot on which was situated the factory and machinery and equipment? In 1892 the Greenville Land & Improvement Company, being the owner of a tract of land known as the "Moore Land," lying to the southeast of Greenville, and adjoining the town, had the same laid out by P. Matthews, a surveyor, into building lots and streets; Matthews at the same time furnishing a map on which the streets were designated by names and the lots by numbers. Numerous deeds, in each of which one or more of the lots was embraced, to various purchasers, were executed by the Greenville Land & Improvement Company, its successor, the Greenville Lumber Company, and Lovitt Hines, receiver of the last-named company, and duly registered prior to the sales made by said Hines, receiver, of lots Nos. 21, 34, and 35; and in all those deeds reference was made, as to the description of the property conveyed, to the names of streets and numbers of lots as shown on the map of Matthews. The habendum was in these words: "To have and to hold the above-described parcel or lot of land, together with the rights of ingress and egress on all the streets leading to the same, and all other rights and privileges thereto belonging." The lots Nos. 21 and 35, with several others, were conveyed by Hines, receiver, to L. O. Arthur, and lot No. 34 was conveyed by Hines, receiver, to Strause, who in turn conveyed it to Arthur. In the deed from Hines to Arthur is also conveyed all the right, title, and interest which the Greenville Lumber Company might have in and to any or all of the streets included in the lands or dividing the lots therein conveyed. Arthur and wife, in 1901, conveyed lots Nos. 21, 34, and 35 to the plaintiffs, together with a strip of land 10 feet wide and running along the southern side of the above-mentioned lots, the said 10 feet being at the time a part of Eleventh street on the map of Matthews. The property mentioned and described in the deed which the plaintiffs tendered to the defendant embraced lots 21, 34, and 35, and also the 10-foot strip of Eleventh street, upon a part of which the plaintiffs afterwards built one end of their tobacco factory. Eleventh street, at the time of the Matthews survey, was set apart and staked off with iron stakes, but that part of the street which was between Clark and Pitt streets, upon which lots 34 and 35 abutted, was not actually put in a condition for general use at the time of the sale of lots 34 and 35, although people could and did pass over the same.

Did Arthur's deed to the plaintiffs have the effect of vesting the title to the 10-foot strip of Eleventh street in the plaintiffs? Or, to state the question in another form, could Hines, the receiver of the Greenville Lumber Company, by his deed to Arthur, enable Arthur or his grantees, the plaintiffs, to obstruct Eleventh street by building on a part of it a tobacco factory, as against purchasers of lots according to the plan of the Matthews survey? The decisions of this court are to the contrary. In Rives v. Dudley, 56 N. C. 126, 67 Am. Dec. 231, Judge Pearson, in illustrating the question decided in that case, said for the court: "What is the principle? It is this: If the owner does an act whereby he signifies his intention to appropriate land to the use of the public as a highway or street or square, to be used by the public as a pleasure ground or the like, and individuals, in consequence of this act, purchase property or build houses with reference to its being so used by the public, and become interested to have it so continue, he is precluded from resuming his private rights of property over the land, because it would be fraudulent in him to do so. When individuals have become interested in reference to the use of the land by the public, the dedication takes effect immediately." And again, in Moose v. Carson, 104 N. C. 431, 10 S. E. 689, 7 L. R. A. 548, 17 Am. St. Rep. 681, the court declared it to be a well-settled principle that where a corporation or an individual, by laying off streets, has induced third persons to buy lots adjacent to them, the dedication to the public use of the streets was irrevocable, and that even in cases where they have not been formally accepted by the authorities of a town in which they lie. In Conrad v. Land Co., 126 N. C. 776, 36 S. E. 282, the court said: "If the owner of land lays it off into squares, lots, and streets with a view to forming a town or city or as a suburb to a town or city—certainly if he causes the same [the map] to be registered in the county where the land is situate—and sells any part of the lots and squares, and in the deed refers in the description thereof to a plat, such reference will constitute an irrevocable dedication to the public of the streets marked on the plat. Meier v. Portland, 16 Or. 500 [19 Pac. 610, 1 L. R. A. 856]. We think the same principle would apply to the piece of land which was marked on a plat as squares, or courts, or parks, and that streets and public grounds designed on said map should forever be opened to the purchaser and the public." It is true that in Moore v. Carson, supra, the defense of the defendants was that their ancestor had bought lots abutting the particular street in Taylorsville, in Alexander county, and which street the commissioners had afterwards attempted to sell and convey to the plaintiffs; and in Conrad v. Land Co. the action for a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendant from selling for private purposes a part of Grace court was brought by persons who had bought lots abutting Fourth street as it ran alongside the court. Nevertheless, in the last-mentioned case the court held, as we have seen, that all the streets marked on the plat were irrevocably dedicated to the public. And in Collins v. Land Co., 128 N. C. 563, 39 S. E. 21, 83 Am. St. Rep. 720, although the streets which the defendants were obstructing and closing were in a remote and sparsely settled and comparatively less valuable section of the lands which had been laid off into streets and lots, the court held that the scheme of sale as indicated by the map was a unity, and that there was a presumption that all the public ways had added value to all the lots embraced in the scheme. In that case the court, after having referred to the lack of uniformity in the decisions of the courts of the several states upon the matter under consideration—some of them holding that the purchaser had a right of way over all the streets designated on the map, and that each and all of them must be kept open, while in other jurisdictions it was held that a purchaser could only require the public way adjoining the purchaser's lot to the highway in one direction and to the next side street in the other—declared that after a careful consideration it would not alter the decision on that question made in Conrad v. Land Company. It will not be superfluous to quote from the last-mentioned case what was said there on this point: "The principle of law involved in this case is, we think, the same as that in Conrad v. Land Co., 128 N. C. 776 [36 S. E. 282]. The inconvenience and loss which may arise here from the enforcement of that principle of law will be greater than in that case, but that argument would not be allowed to influence us in our decision. The courts of the states in which the question before us has been presented and decided are divided. In some jurisdictions it has been held that, where lots have been sold by reference to a plat representing a large tract of land into subdivisions of streets and lots, like the one before us, the purchaser of a lot does not acquire a right of way over every street laid down on the plat. Pearson v. Allen, 151 Mass. 79 [23 N. E. 731, 21 Am. St. Rep. 426]. In other courts it is held that a map or plat referred to in a deed becomes a part of the deed as if written therein, and that, therefore, the plan indicated on the plat is to be regarded as a unity, and the purchaser of a lot acquires a right to have all and each of the ways and streets on the plat or map kept open. This view is so well and clearly stated in Elliot on Roads, § 120, that we quote it: 'It is not only those who buy land or lots abutting on a street or road laid out on a map or plat that have a right to insist upon the opening of a street or road, but where streets and roads are marked on a plat, and lots are bought and sold with reference to the general plan or scheme disclosed by the plat or map, they acquire a right to all the public ways designated thereon, and may enforce the dedication. The plan or scheme indicated on the plat or map is regarded as a unity, and it is presumed, as well it may be, that all the public ways add value to all the lots embraced in the general plan or scheme. Certainly, as every one knows, lots with convenient cross-streets are of more value than those without, and it is fair to presume that the original owner would not have donated land to public ways unless it gave value to the lots. So, too, it is just to presume that the purchasers paid the added value, and the donor ought not, therefore, to be permitted to take it from them by revoking a part of his dedications.' The effect of the foregoing decisions therefore is that, where lots are sold and conveyed by reference to a map or plat which represents a division of a tract of land into subdivisions of streets and lots, such streets become dedicated to the public use, and the purchaser of a lot or lots acquires the right to have all and each of the streets kept open; and it makes no difference whether the streets be in fact opened or accepted by the governing boards of towns or cities if they lie within municipal corporations. There is a dedication, and, if they are not actually opened at the time of the sale, they must be at all times free to be opened as occasion may require. If such streets be obstructed, there is created thereby a public nuisance, and each purchaser can by injunction or other proper proceeding have the nuisance abated, as there is in all such cases an irrebuttable presumption of law that any complaining purchaser of a lot or lots has suffered peculiar loss and injury.

The plaintiffs, however, insist that they acquired a good title to the property through the action of the board of aldermen of the town of Greenville. At the time of the Matthews survey and the sale of the lots by the Greenville Land & Improvement Company and Hines, the receiver of the company, the property was outside the corporate limits of the town; but in 1899 the limits of the town were extended so as to take the entire tract of land, including Eleventh street, within them. On March 14, 1902, the board of aldermen of the town, after declaring in meeting that they had not accepted that part of Eleventh street between Clark and Pitt streets, as it appeared on the map of Matthews, as a street of the town, in consideration of an attempted donation of Arthur to the town of the land on which Eleventh street runs, presumably under his deed from Hines, receiver, and which did not pass the easement, and the further agreement of Arthur to donate the land between Pitt and Greene streets to the town, and to open Eleventh street between those points, and the proposition of the plaintiffs to open Eleventh street 40 feet wide between Clark and Pitt streets, if the board would agree to accept Eleventh street 40 feet wide in place of 50 feet (Eleventh street being 50 feet wide in fact, and also on the Matthews survey), agreed that the plaintiffs might continue to use and occupy the factory building on that part of Eleventh street lying alongside the southern end of lot 35, and they also relinquished to the plaintiffs and their assigns all right or claim the town might have acquired, if any, to said 10 feet of Eleventh street between Clark and Pitt streets where the factory of the plaintiffs is located. We cannot see how that action of the board of aldermen helped the title of the plaintiffs. There are most respectable authorities which hold that if a city or town accepts, in an amended charter, additional territory previously laid off and platted into streets and lots, the acceptance amounts to an acceptance of such an addition and the streets and alleys therein. If we should adopt that view, it might be in the power of the board of aldermen, under section 3803 of the Code, to narrow the street, but the only effect of that would be to restrict the town's liability to keep in repair the street so narrowed. They would have no right to relinquish or give away the remainder of the former street to a private individual for private purposes. Pence v. Bryant (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 275; Moose v. Carson, supra. On the other hand, the acceptance of the additional territory under the amended charter did not have the effect in law of an acceptance by the board of aldermen of Eleventh street 50 feet in width, as it appears on the map of Matthews; and if the only acceptance by the town of Eleventh street was that of March, 1902, as being 40 feet in width, leaving 10 feet thereof at the southern side of lots 34 and 35, then the town authorities had nothing to do with the 10 feet of the street which they declined to accept. It remained exactly as it did before—it became a part of the town, dedicated to the public use, though not to be kept in repair by the town, and not to be obstructed because of the reasons already given in this opinion.

We find no error in the judgment of his honor in dismissing the plaintiff's action as of nonsuit, and the judgment is affirmed.

CONNOR, J., having been of counsel, did not sit on the hearing of this case.

ATTORNEY GENERAL v. HOLLY SHELTER R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 22, 1904.)

CORPORATIONS—CHARTERS—FORFEITURE—ENFORCEMENT—ACTION BY ATTORNEY GENERAL—LEAVE TO SUE—CONDITION PRECEDENT.

1. Code, § 603, declares that writs of scire facias and quo warranto and proceedings in the nature of quo warranto are abolished, and the rights enforceable in these forms may be obtained by civil action. Section 604, as amended by Laws 1889, p. 504, c. 533, authorizes the Attorney General, whenever the Legislature shall so direct, to bring an action against a corporation to annul the act of incorporation or an act renewing its corporate existence or its letters of incorporation on the ground of fraud; and section 605 authorizes the Attorney General, on leave granted by a justice of the Supreme Court, to sue to vacate the charter of a corporation on grounds specified. Held, that the Attorney General was prohibited from bringing an action on his own motion for the vacation of a corporation's articles, etc., for fraud.

2. The right to maintain such proceeding was not given by Code, § 2788, in the chapter relating to land, providing that an action may be brought by the Attorney General in the name of the state for the purpose of vacating or annulling letters patent granted by the state where the same has been obtained by fraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pender County; Brown, Judge.

Action by the state, on the relation of the Attorney General, against the Holly Shelter Railroad Company. From a judgment in favor of defendant, relator appeals. Affirmed.

Rountree & Carr and John D. Bellamy, for appellant. Iredell Meares and Francis D. Winston, for appellee.

MONTGOMERY, J. This action is prosecuted in the name of the state of North Carolina, on the relation of Robert D. Gilmer, Attorney General, against the defendant, the Holly Shelter Railroad Company, for the purposes of having the charter of the company declared null and void and canceled, and the defendant corporation restrained and prohibited from exercising and attempting to exercise the rights of a railroad company pending the action. A restraining order was granted by Brown, J., with an order that the defendant should thereafter, on a day named, appear before him, and show cause, if any it might have, why the restraining order should not be continued to the final hearing. Afterwards, on December 2, 1903, the matter was heard, and the restraining order dissolved, from which order the plaintiff appealed.

The complaint embraces two causes of action. In the first it was alleged that the charter of the defendant company was organized for the purpose of operating a merely private logging road, and not a railroad for the benefit of the public in carrying passengers and freight, and that the articles of incorporation of the defendant were obtained from the Secretary of State by falsely representing to him that the defendant company was to be organized and chartered for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad company for public use in the conveyance of freight and passengers. In the second cause of action it was alleged that the defendant was exceeding the authority granted to it in its charter, and was exercising and threatening to exercise franchises and privileges not conferred upon it by law. The specific charge of exceeding chartered rights was that the defendant had changed one of the termini of its road, and had extended or was extending its roadbed beyond the limit mentioned in the charter. Upon the complaint and answer and the affidavits filed by the plaintiff and the defendant his honor was of the opinion: (1) That the action to set aside the charter of the defendant upon the ground of fraud in obtaining it could not be brought by the Attorney General without the express direction of the General Assembly, section 604 of the Code being a legislative limitation upon such power; and (2) that as to the second cause of action, under section 605 of the Code, the allegations were not supported by the proofs, and were fully denied in the answer.

The contentions of the plaintiff in this court were that at common law, and also under section 2788 of the Code, the Attorney General was at liberty in his discretion to bring the action. The argument was to the effect that, as the Attorney General in England was authorized and empowered to institute proceedings of his own motion to compel the dissolution of corporations, so the Attorney General of the state might exercise the same powers, as the common law is in force in North Carolina, except where it is in conflict with the genius of our institutions; and that there would be no inconsistency between the laws of England on this subject and those of our own state. On the contention that the Attorney General could proceed under section 2788 of the Code, it was insisted that that section was, through mistake or inadvertence of the code commissioners, taken from the Code of Civil Procedure (section 367) and placed in the Code under the chapter entitled "Entries and Grants," and that in so doing the words "letters patent" were made to assume a restricted meaning—one applicable to grants alone; and, further, that if section 367 of the Code of Civil Procedure (now section 2788 of the Code) had been inserted in its proper place in title 15, c. 1, of the Code (actions in place of scire facias, quo warranto, etc.), the words "letters patent" would be broad enough to include the charters of incorporated companies; and that section 604 of the Code (Code Civ. Proc. 363) might be construed as a direction from the General Assembly to the Attorney General to proceed in cases which they had examined into, in addition to the general power given in section 2788 (section 367, Code Civ. Proc.). Neither one of the contentions, in our opinion, can be sustained. The whole subject of this controversy is now of legislative authority, for section 603 of the Code declares that "the writ of scire facias, the writ of quo warranto, and proceedings by information in the nature of quo warranto are abolished, and the remedies obtainable in those forms may be obtained by civil actions under this subchapter." The next section of the Code (604) provides that "an action may be brought by the Attorney General in the name of the state, whenever the Legislature shall so direct, against a corporation for the purpose of vacating or annulling the act of incorporation or an act renewing its corporate existence, on the ground that such act or renewal was procured upon some fraudulent suggestion or concealment of a material fact by the persons incorporated, or by some of them or with their knowledge and consent." That section of the Code on its face has reference to corporations chartered by the General Assembly; but the Legislature, at its session of 1889 (page 504, c. 533), amended it by adding after the words "the act of incorporation or an act renewing its corporate existence" the words "or its letters of incorporation." That amendment, in our opinion, referred to the manner of chartering corporations, not by the General Assembly, but under chapter 16 of the Code. If the contentions of the plaintiff were true, the amendment of 1889 would have been made to section 2788 of the Code. Then, too, if the Attorney General has the right to institute proceedings in the nature of quo warranto against corporations in cases where the charters were obtained and granted through fraudulent representations or suggestions under section 2788, then why should it be thought necessary by the General Assembly that that body should provide for such a proceeding by special enactment—section 604 of the Code? And, further, the Attorney General cannot bring an action in the nature of quo warranto for the purpose of vacating the charters of corporations in the cases mentioned in section 605 of the Code unless and until he gets the leave of the Supreme Court, or one of the justices, for that purpose. The clear meaning of section 604 before the amendment of 1889 (page 504, c. 533), was that whenever the General Assembly had chartered a corporation that charter should not be annulled or vacated on the Attorney General's own motion on the alleged ground that the charter had been procured by fraud. The investigation of such a charge is reserved for the future action of the Legislature itself. The amendment of 1889 to section 604 of the Code had the effect, and was intended, to put the charters of incorporated companies procured under chapter 16 of the Code on the same footing with charters granted by the General Assembly. The ruling of his honor, therefore, that the Attorney General was not authorized to bring this action on the allegation that the defendant's charter was procured through a fraudulent suggestion or representation, was correct.

As to the second cause of action, founded on section 605 of the Code, the Attorney General had the leave of the chief justice of this court to commence such action. But we see enough from a reading of the record and evidence that his honor was correct in holding that the allegations of the second cause of action were not supported by the evidence, and that they were fully denied in the answer.

No error.

MIAL v. ELLINGTON et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 2, 1903.)

PUBLIC OFFICE—LEGISLATIVE CONTROL—PROPERTY RIGHTS.

1. An officer appointed for a definite time to a public office has not a vested property interest therein, or contract right thereto, of which the Legislature cannot deprive him.

Montgomery and Douglas, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by the state, on the relation of A. T. Mial, against J. C. Ellington and others. Judgment for defendants, and relator appeals. Affirmed.

This is a civil action in the nature of a quo warranto, tried upon the following agreed facts: At the session of 1889 (Pub. Laws, p. 360, c. 363) an act was passed entitled, "An act providing an alternative method of constructing and keeping in repair the public roads of Raleigh township, Wake county." It was provided by said act that the justices of the peace of Raleigh township should meet, and, if a majority so decided, adopt the method of keeping in repair the public roads of said township in accordance with the provisions of said act; that, when they had so adopted said method, it was by said act made the duty of the county commissioners at their regular meeting, and biennially thereafter, to appoint a supervisor of roads for said township; that said supervisor should hold his office for two years; that, in the event of a vacancy, the same should be filled by said board of commissioners. Provision was made for removal for cause, and upon notice. Said supervisor was required to qualify by taking the oath of office, and giving bond in an amount to be fixed by the board. The duties prescribed for said supervisor were that he should formulate a plan for the permanent improvement of the public roads of said township outside the city of Raleigh by the use of the labor of county convicts and workhouse hands, etc. He was required to disburse all funds paid to him upon the warrant of the county commissioners for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the said act, and to keep an account thereof, as well as a list of all tools, etc., in his possession, and to make a report thereof to the commissioners. The duties of said supervisor in all other respects were specifically pointed out in the several sections of said act. His compensation was to be fixed by the board of commissioners, but the same was not to exceed $750 per annum. Pursuant to the provisions of said act, the method prescribed therein for working the roads of Raleigh township was duly adopted by the justices of the peace, and a supervisor duly elected. At the session of 1891 (Pub. Laws, p. 182, c. 218) the maximum limit of the salary of the supervisor was fixed at $1,200. At the session of 1897 (Pub. Laws, p. 621, c. 434) the provisions of said act were extended three miles beyond the present limits of Raleigh township, in each direction. That at the regular meeting of the board of commissioners of Wake county held in December, 1902, one Bryant Harrison was appointed by the said board to be supervisor of roads of Raleigh township for a term of two years, commencing January 1, 1903. That the said board fixed his salary at $70 per month, and that the said Harrison duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such officer. That at the February meeting of said board of commissioners the said Harrison resigned the said office, to take effect on March 1, 1903, and thereupon the board accepted said resignation, and called a special meeting, to be held on February 21, 1903, to appoint a successor. That at said special meeting the relator, A. T. Mial, was duly appointed to fill out the said unexpired term, and his salary fixed at $70 per month. That he subsequently gave the required bond, took the oath of office, and was duly inducted therein, and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such officer. That at the session of 1903 the General Assembly enacted chapter 551, p. 931—an act entitled "An act to improve the public roads of Wake county." By said act it was provided that the board of county commissioners of Wake, in order to provide for the proper construction, improvement, and maintenance of the public roads of the county, "shall on or before January 1, 1904, elect a superintendent of roads for the county, who shall hold office until December, 1904, and until his successor has been elected and qualified; and at their regular meeting in December, 1904, and biennially thereafter, they shall elect a successor to said office. The superintendent of roads shall be paid such compensation as shall be fixed by said board out of the county road fund, and hold office for two years and until his successor has been elected and qualified. * * * It shall be the duty of said superintendent of roads, subject to the approval of the board of county commissioners, to supervise, direct and have charge of the maintenance and building of all public roads in the county, and he shall submit to the county board of commissioners a monthly report concerning the work in progress and the moneys expended, and he shall submit a quarterly report on the condition of the public roads and bridges and plans for their improvement. That the board of commissioners shall divide the county into three road districts, to be known as the Raleigh, the Northern and the Southern road districts, respectively. The boundary of the Raleigh road district shall be the circumference of a circle, the radius of which shall extend eight miles from the capitol building, in the city of Raleigh, in every direction; and the boundaries of the other districts shall be fixed by the board of county commissioners, and said board shall have power to create new road districts whenever in their opinion there is necessity for the same, and to alter the boundaries of any district, except the Raleigh road district, when they may consider it advisable. For each of the road districts the county commissioners shall elect, at the time herein prescribed for the election of the road superintendent, a district supervisor, who shall hold office for the same term and in the same manner that he holds, and until their successors are elected and qualified. Each supervisor shall give bond in the sum of $1,000 for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, the truthful accounting for all moneys coming into his possession, and the proper care of all teams, wagons, machinery, tools and implements entrusted to his charge; and they shall furnish inventories of such material, tools, implements, machinery and utensils of every nature that shall come into their hands upon their entrance upon and retirement from office; they shall be paid such compensation as shall be fixed by the board of county commissioners, and may be removed from office in the same manner provided for the road superintendent. The county commissioners shall furnish each supervisor with a complete outfit of teams, carts, machinery, implements, tools and utensils for use by him upon the roads of his district, and the machinery, tools, implements and property now belonging to the Raleigh road district shall not be used upon the roads of any other district, but shall be kept for the exclusive use of that district. The work of the supervisors in each district shall be under the direction and control of the superintendent of roads, and they shall faithfully conform to his directions and the requirements of this act. There shall be kept continuously employed upon the roads of each district a squad of not less than fifteen hired hands, whose compensation shall be fixed by the board of commissioners." That at the regular meeting of said board of commissioners held in April, 1903, the said board caused public notice to be given that at the regular May meeting of the said board a superintendent of roads for Wake county, and three supervisors for the respective road districts of said county, would be elected by the said board, under said chapter 551, p. 931, Laws 1903, and, in pursuance of said notice, at said May meeting the board of commissioners elected the defendant J. C. Ellington superintendent of roads for Wake county, and the defendant

1. See Constitutional Law, vol. 10, Cent. Dig. §§ 364, 367.

Alfred Jones supervisor for the Raleigh road district, and I. N. Bailey and A. R. Holloway supervisors for the Northern and Southern road districts of Wake county, respectively. That the relator, A. T. Mial, was not a candidate or applicant for either of these positions. That the defendants J. C. Ellington and Alfred Jones prior to the commencing of this action gave the bond and took the oath of office, and did all other acts required of them by the said act of March 6, 1903. Thereafter, on the 12th day of May, 1903, acting under the order of the defendants the board of county commissioners of Wake county, the said J. C. Ellington took possession of the teams and other property and effects belonging to Raleigh township, and then in the custody of the relator, A. T. Mial, by virtue of his office aforesaid, in the absence of said Mial and without his consent; and on the said 12th day of May the defendants the board of county commissioners of Wake county withdrew all the convicts, guards, and officers in their custody, and which worked upon the roads of Raleigh township, and over whom the relator, A. T. Mial, had supervision, and placed them under the charge and supervision of the defendant J. C. Ellington. That thereafter, on said May 12, 1903, the relator, A. T. Mial, demanded the return to him of all of the said property and effects, and that they give to him control of the convicts, guards, and officers, and that the same was refused by the defendants. That at the said May meeting, 1903, the board of commissioners of Wake county, in pursuance of the said act of March 6, 1903, fixed the boundaries of the Northern and Southern road districts of Wake county (the boundaries of the Raleigh road district having been fixed by the act), and included the territory formerly within the Raleigh township, under the said act of 1889, and all the acts amendatory thereof, and also included certain territory in addition thereto. The court, upon the foregoing agreed facts, rendered judgment for the defendants, and the relator appealed.

Battle & Mordecai and Womack & Hayes, for appellant. B. M. Gatling, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. We have no disposition, in the decision of this case, to place the conclusion to which we have arrived upon the ground that the position of supervisor of the roads, the title to which is in controversy, is not a public office. Adopting the settled definition of a public officer, we hold that the position comes clearly within such definition. Nor are we disposed to enter into a discussion of the many fine and delicate distinctions which have been made between the validity of an act which distributes the duties of an office, and one which abolishes the office. We prefer, rather, to discuss and decide the question which is fairly presented by this record—whether an officer appointed for a definite time to a legislative office has any vested property interest or contract right to such office, of which the Legislature cannot deprive him. The contention of the relator is based upon the proposition which was decided by this court in Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1, 25 Am. Dec. 877, which is thus stated by Ruffin, C. J.; "The sole inquiry that remains is whether the office of which the act deprives Mr. Henderson is property. It is scarcely possible to make the proposition clearer to a plain mind, accustomed to regard things according to practical results and realities, than by barely stating it. For what is property; that is, what do we understand by the term? It means, in reference to the thing, whatever a person can possess and enjoy by right; and, in reference to the person, he who has that right to the exclusion of others is said to have the property. That an office is the subject of property, thus explained, is well understood by every one, as well as distinctly stated in the law-books from the earliest times. An office is enumerated by commentators on the law among incorporeal hereditaments, and is defined to be the right to exercise a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging. A public office has been well described to be this: When one man is specially set by law, and is compellable to do another's business against his will and without his leave, and can demand therefor such compensation by way of salary or fees as by law is assigned, to the doing of which business no other person but the officer, or one deputed by him, is legally competent." This proposition was stated by the great Chief Justice and maintained in an elaborate opinion at the December term, 1833, of this court. That it has frequently been cited with approval, and, with some exceptions, followed, by this court, cannot be denied; nor can it be successfully denied that there have always been a number of the ablest members of the bar in North Carolina who have questioned its soundness. The contrary view is thus stated by Sandford, J., in Conner v. City of New York, 2 Sandf. 370: "We think it must be assumed that there is no contract, express or implied, between a public officer and the government, whose agent he is. The latter enters into no agreement that he shall receive any particular compensation for the time he shall hold office, nor, in the case of a statutory office, that the office itself shall continue any definite period. Where the Constitution limits the compensation, it is beyond legislative control, but that makes no contract. The people have the control, in their sovereign capacity, as the Legislature has in statutory offices. It is not the question whether fees or salary earned may be divested. The right to receive such fees may be conceded as perfect, without affecting the present inquiry." In Taylor v. Beckham, 178 U. S. 577, 20 Sup. Ct. 900, 1009, 44 L. Ed. 1187, Fuller, C. J., thus states the law as held and enforced by that court: "The decisions are numerous to the effect that public offices are mere agencies or trusts, and not property, as such. Nor are the salary and emoluments property, secured by contract, but compensation for services actually rendered. Nor does the fact that a constitution may forbid the Legislature from abolishing a public office, or diminishing the salary thereof, during the term of the incumbent, change its character or make it property. True, the restrictions limit the power of the Legislature to deal with the office, but even such restrictions may be removed by constitutional amendment. In short, generally speaking, the nature of the relation of a public officer to the public is inconsistent with either a property or a contract right."

We have thus presented the two views upon this most important question, and we are confronted with the necessity of either overruling and rejecting the theory upon which Hoke v. Henderson is based, or that which is stated in the cases cited as what may be called the American doctrine in respect to the relation which the public officer bears to the state. It will save any possible confusion or misunderstanding to say that nothing said by us in regard to the power of the Legislature applies to offices provided for by the Constitution. These are beyond the power of the Legislature to affect, either in respect to the term, or, except within the limitations fixed, the salary. This not because there is any property right in the office, but because the people, in their Constitution, have made provision for and regulated their terms and salaries.

The proposition involved in this appeal on behalf of the plaintiff is that neither an office, nor the duties thereof, created by an act of the Legislature fixing the term and compensation, can be transferred to some other person or affected during the term for which the incumbent has been elected; that such office is property, within the protection of the constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of his property except by due process of law, and that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of a contract, which, of course, excludes the power of the Legislature to take property from one man and give it another.

We recognize the gravity of the proposition that we shall reverse a decision of this court delivered by Chief Justice Ruffin, with the approval of Justices Daniel and Gaston, which, we concede, has received the unanimous approval of this court in a number of cases, and a majority thereof in many others. If this were a question involving the title to property, upon the decision of which property rights have been acquired, settlements have been made, and the security and peace of families were dependent, we should feel it our duty to leave it to the legislative department of the government to bring the law into harmony with sound principle and the best thought and experience of the age in which we live. Being, however, a question of public constitutional law, involving the sovereignty of the state, if it is made to appear that the principle upon which Hoke v. Henderson is founded stands without support in reason, and is opposed to the uniform, unbroken current of authority in both state and federal courts, it becomes our duty to overrule it, and place our jurisprudence in line with that of the other states and the federal government.

It is said by Douglas, J., in Caldwell v. Wilson, 121 N. C. 487, 28 S. E. 561, that, "with the exception of this state, it is the well-settled doctrine in the United States that an office is not regarded as held under a grant or contract, within the general constitutional provision protecting contracts; but, unless the Constitution otherwise expressly provides, the Legislature has power to increase or vary the duties or diminish the salary or other compensation appurtenant to the office, or abolish any of its rights or privileges, before the end of the term, or to alter or abridge the term, or to abolish the office itself. * * * Except in North Carolina, it is well settled that there is no contract, either express or implied, between a public officer and the government, whose agent he is; nor can a public office be regarded as the property of the incumbent."

We deem it proper, in view of the conclusion to which we have arrived, to review at some length the elementary principles involved, and the authorities in the United States.

It is stated by Mr. Freeman, in his note to Hoke v. Henderson, 25 Am. Dec. 704, that, "with all deference to the North Carolina courts, the conclusion may yet be drawn, with Mr. Pomeroy, that 'it may therefore be considered as a settled point of constitutional law—settled both by the national and state courts—that a public office bears no resemblance to a contract, and that the Legislatures have full power over the public offices of a commonwealth, except so far as they may be restrained by the local constitutions. The clause of the United States Constitution which prohibits state laws impairing the obligation of contracts has no application whatever to this subject.'"

Chief Justice Marshall, in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 627, 4 L. Ed. 629, said: "Public offices are not within the inhibition of the Constitution of the United States against laws impairing the obligation of contracts. That the inhibition does not extend to offices within a state for state purposes. That the Legislature must necessarily control such offices, and may change and modify the laws concerning them as circumstances may require. That grants of political power, to be employed in the administration of the government, are to be regulated by the Legislature of each state according to its own judgment, unrestrained by any limitation of its power imposed by the Constitution of the United States." In the same case Mr. Justice Story said: "The state Legislatures have power to enlarge, repeal, or limit the authority of public officers in their official capacity in all cases when the Constitutions of the states, respectively, do not prohibit them; and this, among others, for the very good reason that there is no express or implied contract that they shall always, during their continuance in office, exercise such authorities. They are to exercise them only during the good pleasure of the Legislature." In Butler v. Pennsylvania, 10 How. (51 U. S.) 402, 13 L. Ed. 472, Mr. Justice Daniel says: "The contracts designed to be protected by the tenth section of the first article of that instrument are contracts by which perfect rights—certain definite, fixed private rights—of property are vested. These are clearly distinguishable from measures or engagements adopted or undertaken by the body politic or state government for the benefit of all, and, from the necessity of the case, and according to universal understanding, to be varied or discontinued as the public good shall require. The selection of officers who are nothing more than agents for the effectuating of such public purposes is matter of public convenience or necessity, and so, too, are the periods for the appointment of such agents; but neither the one nor the other of these arrangements can constitute any obligation to continue such agents, or to reappoint them, after the measures which brought them into being shall have been found useless, shall have been fulfilled, or shall have been abrogated as even detrimental to the well-being of the public. * * *

We have already shown that the appointment to and tenure of an office created for the public use, and the regulation of the salary affixed to such an office, do not fall within the meaning of the section of the Constitution relied on by the plaintiffs in error; do not come within the import of the term 'contracts,' or, in other words, the vested, private, personal rights thereby intended to be protected." Mr. Justice Lamar, in Crenshaw v. United States, 134 U. S. 99, 104, 10 Sup. Ct. 431, 432, 33 L. Ed. 825, says: "The question is whether an officer appointed for a definite time, or during good behavior, had any vested interest or contract right in his office, of which Congress could not deprive him. The question is not novel. There seems to be but little difficulty in deciding that there was no such interest or right." In Newton v. Commissioners, 100 U. S. 559, 25 L. Ed. 710, Mr. Justice Swayne says: "The legislative power of a state, except so far as restrained by its own Constitution, is at all times absolute with respect to all offices within its reach. It may at pleasure create or abolish them, or modify their duties. It may also shorten or lengthen the term of service. And it may increase or diminish the salary or change the mode of compensation. * * * In all these cases there can be no contract and no irrepealable law, because they are 'governmental subjects,' and hence within the category before stated. * * * A different result would be fraught with evil."

We do not find a suggestion from the federal judiciary which in the slightest degree questions the authority of the cases cited. The only case to which our attention has been directed in which Hoke v. Henderson is referred to by the Supreme Court of the United States in connection with an office, is Ex parte Hennen, 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 230, 10 L. Ed. 138. That was a rule upon a district judge to show cause why he should not reinstate a clerk who had been removed by him. There was no constitutional principle involved. It was simply a question whether the judge, under the statute, had the power of removal. The court said: "The tenure of ancient common-law offices, and the rules and principles by which they are governed, have no application to this case. The tenure in those cases depends in a great measure upon ancient usage. But with us there is no ancient usage which can apply to and govern the tenure of offices created by our Constitution and laws. They are of recent origin, and must depend entirely upon a just construction of our Constitution and laws." The court proceeds to say: "The case of Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1 [25 Am. Dec. 677], decided in the Supreme Court of North Carolina, is not at all in conflict with the doctrine contained in the cases referred to. That case, like the others, turned upon the Constitution and laws of North Carolina; and by the express terms of the law the tenure was during good behavior, and was, of course, governed by very different considerations from those which apply to the case not before the court." The rule was discharged. There was no suggestion of a property right in the office.

Returning to the state courts, we find in Conner v. City of New York, supra, after discussing the opinion in Hoke v. Henderson, the learned justice says: "It appears to us, with much respect for the learned tribunal which pronounced this judgment, that it was unduly influenced by the common-law rule derived from prescriptive offices, and operating in a government whose genius and spirit are perhaps in no more respect unlike ours than in this very subject—the source and nature of the rights and interests acquired by public officers. In enumerating the qualities of an office, considered as property, the court admitted that it was inalienable, and in many instances incapable of being managed by a substitute, and, in the only point giving it the semblance of value, subject entirely to legislative control. If to these be added the consideration that it is a political agency, and not like a private contract of hiring for a definite period, we think there will remain no incident of property, in its correct signification." This cause being before the Court of Appeals in 5 N. Y. 301, Ruggles, C. J., concludes the opinion of the court as follows: "Mr. Justice Sandford has referred to so fully, and reviewed so judiciously, the authorities on the proposition under consideration, that it appears unnecessary to re-examine them. My judgment accords with his conclusion, viz., that 'these authorities, with the nature of the duties and employment of a public officer, seem conclusively to show that such an officer has no property in the prospective compensation attached to his office, whether it be in the shape of a salary or fees.'"

In 1834 Nicholl, J., in the case of State v. Dewa, R. M. Charit. (Ga.) 397, in discussing the same question, uses the following language: "That a public office is the property of him to whom the execution of its duties is intrusted is repugnant to the institutions of our country, and is at issue with that universal understanding of the community which is the result of those institutions. Public officers are, in this country, but the agents of the body politic, constituted to discharge services for the benefit of the people, under laws which the people have prescribed. So far from holding a proprietary interest in their offices, they are but naked agents, without an interest. As public agents, they are intrusted with the exercise of a portion of the sovereignty of the people—the jus publicum—which is not the subject of grant, and can be neither alienated nor annihilated; and it would be a repugnant absurdity, as incomprehensible as it would be revolting, that they can have a private property in that sovereignty. Unlike those officers in England whose offices are treated as property, they do not hold under grant, but their authority or function to discharge the duties of their offices is delegated to them by commission. In those instances in which, in England, the right to offices has been regarded as property, the instrument of conveyance has been technically a grant—a conveyance by which an estate is passed or purchased, and employing the technical terms of a grant, 'dedi et concessi.' But from the organization of the first republican government of this state, officers have been appointed by commission—a term which, whether regarded according to its ordinary meaning or its legal sense, imports a delegation of authority. And our earliest books draw a distinction between a grant of an office and a commission, and inform us that the former, as its name implies, is not revocable, but that the latter, which is only the delegation of an authority, is. The title exhibited by the defendant himself in his return, and by which only he can vindicate his possession, is that he has been duly elected sheriff, and has been duly commissioned and qualified. He claims, therefore, not by grant, but under commission, and that commission commits to him only an authority, without an interest. The title of the defendant is not by a grant which passes an estate, but by a commission, which is a delegation or warrant of authority, and which, so far from passing an estate, is founded upon and is an affirmation of the fact that the estate is not in him, but in those from whom the power proceeds. It confers upon him title to exercise the authority, but the subject of that authority is in the principal, and under his control, and the very authority of the agent is evidence of it. Every authority implies a perfect right in the grantor to the extent of that authority, at least as between him and the agent, and it is perfectly insensible that, because of such agency, the agent becomes armed with a control over the exercise of that right." It will be observed that Judge Ruffin says, "An office is enumerated by commentators on the law among incorporeal hereditaments." Judge Nicholl, dealing with that phase of the question, says: "As property, offices are classed under the head of incorporeal hereditaments, and must be held under a conveyance to a man and his heirs, or at least a freehold interest must be held in them. Nor can an action be maintained for an injury resulting from a disturbance or interference with an office, unless it be an incorporeal hereditament or a freehold." It is well settled that in the United States a public office is not, and cannot, in the very nature of our government, be, an incorporeal hereditament. 3 Kent (13th Ed.) 454.

This question came before the Supreme Court of South Carolina in Alexander v. McKenzie, 2 S. C. 81, when Willard, J., delivered an exhaustive opinion. He says: "Hoke v. Henderson, 12 N. C. 1 [25 Am. Dec. 677], holds the contrary doctrine, but is without the support of reason or authority. Misapprehension of the English doctrine on this subject has frequently given rise to erroneous views of the powers of political bodies." The court adopted the view of the New York court in Conner v. City of New York, supra.

In Standeford v. Wingate, 68 Ky. 440, the Supreme Court of Kentucky thus states the conclusion reached upon the question: "An office established and held for the public good is not a contract, nor is its tenure secured by any binding contract." Roberson, J., in the opinion of the court, at page 448, says: "Within the range of our researches, the only adjudged case which could give any countenance to such an unreasonable doctrine is that of Hoke v. Henderson, in which, as reported in 12 N. C. 1 [25 Am. Dec. 677], the Supreme Court of North Carolina decided that the term of a legislative office could not be reduced below that which was prescribed when the incumbent was elected. That anomalous decision, on a Constitution not in all respects identical with ours, as bearing on the same question, is not, in our opinion, sustained by consistent argument."

The Supreme Court of Maine, in Prince v. Skillin, 71 Me. 361, 36 Am. Rep. 325, says: "All offices, except when legislative authority is limited or restricted by constitutional provisions, are subject to the will of the Legislature. There is, with this exception, no vested right in an office or its salary."

In Kendall v. Canton, 58 Miss. 526, Chalmers, J., in the opinion of the court, says: "Counsel for the plaintiff are correct in saying that while an election or appointment to office is not a contract, in its broadest sense, it does so far partake of the attributes of a contract as to entitle the incumbent to recover all salary accruing during his incumbency. But there is no demand here for salary earned and in arrear. The action sounds wholly in damages, and proceeds upon the idea of a vested right to hold for the full term for which the plaintiff had been elected. Nothing is better settled than the legislative power to terminate at pleasure the incumbency of a statutory office, either by an abolition of the office itself, or by a change in the tenure or the mode of appointment."

Cole, J., in State v. Douglas, 26 Wis. 428, 7 Am. Rep. 87, says: "It was not claimed that the plaintiff had any vested right in his office which the Legislature could not abrogate or destroy. Such a position would be clearly untenable upon the authorities, and, as a principle, utterly inadmissible under our form of government."

In State ex rel. v. Davis, 44 Mo. 129, the court, speaking of the plaintiff's case, says: "It proceeds upon the theory that a person in the possession of a public office created by the Legislature has a vested interest—a private right of property—in it. This is not true of offices of this description in this country. They are held neither by grant nor by contract. A mere legislative office is always subject to be controlled, modified, or repealed by the body creating it. In England, offices are considered incorporeal hereditaments, grantable by the crown, and a subject of vested or private interests. Not so in the American states. They are not held by grant or contract, nor has any person a private property or vested interest in them, and they are therefore liable to such modifications and changes as the lawmaking power may deem it advisable to enact."

In Robinson v. White, 26 Ark. 139, the Supreme Court of that state has decided that "the office of assessor is a statutory office, and the Legislature has absolute control over all statutory offices, and may abolish them at pleasure, and in so doing no vested right is invaded."

In People ex rel. v. Van Gaskin, 5 Mont. 352, 6 Pac. 30, the conclusion to which the court arrived is stated to be that, "in the absence of constitutional restrictions, a Legislature, having power to create a particular office and to regulate the manner in which it should be filled, and the term and duties of the incumbent, has the power to lengthen or abridge such term, or to declare the office vacant and appoint another to fill the vacancy. The exercise of such power by the Legislature would not be in violation of section 10, art. 1, of the United States Constitution, prohibiting a state from passing any law impairing the obligations of contracts, or of the fifth amendment thereof, providing that no one shall be deprived of property without due process of law."

The Supreme Court of Nevada, in Denver v. Hobart, 10 Nev. 28, says: "The Legislature having by the act of March 4, 1865, vested certain duties upon the Lieutenant Governor, and allowed him a salary for his services, it was within the power of the Legislature to take those duties and the salary away from him before the expiration of his term of office, and confer them upon another."

Shaw, C. J., in Taft v. Adams, 3 Gray (Mass.) 126, 130, says: "When an office is created by law, and one not contemplated nor its tenure declared by the Constitution, but created by the law solely for the public benefit, it may be regulated, limited, enlarged, or terminated by law as public exigency or policy may require."

In Wyandotte v. Drennan, 46 Mich. 478, 9 N. W. 500, Cooley, J., says "This is a position that has frequently been taken, and almost as often overruled. Nothing seems better settled than that an appointment or election to public office does not establish contract relations between the person appointed or elected and the state. Offices are created for the public good, at the will of the legislative power, with such powers, privileges, and emoluments attached as are believed to be necessary or important to make them accomplish the purposes designed. But, except as it may be restrained by the Constitution, the Legislature has the same inherent authority to modify or abolish that it has to create, and it will exercise it with the like considerations in view."

In Attorney General v. Jochim, 90 Mich. 358, 58 N. W. 611, 23 L. R. A. 699, 41 Am. St. Rep. 606, the court uses the following language: "The Legislature may remove officers not only by abolishing the office, but by declaring it vacant. * * * And it may lodge the power to remove from statutory offices in boards or other officers subject to statutory regulations. And, while it cannot remove the incumbent of constitutional offices, it is not because of an inherent difference in the qualities of the office, but because the power to remove is limited to the power that creates. The constitutional officer is an agent of the government. There is the same lack of the ingredients of contract, and the same power to abolish the office or remove the officer by amendment of the Constitution." In this case the fourteenth amendment was invoked, and expressly held not applicable. "A public office cannot be called 'property,' within the meaning of these constitutional provisions. If it could be, it would follow that every public officer, no matter how insignificant, would have a vested right to hold his office until the expiration of the term. Public offices are created for the purpose of government." Id.

Andrews, J., in Nichols v. MacLean, 101 N. Y. 526, 5 N. E. 347, 54 Am. Rep. 730, says: "It is true that in this country offices are not hereditaments, nor are they held by grant. The right to hold an office, and to receive the emoluments thereof belonging to it, does not grow out of any contract with the state; nor is an office property in the same sense that cattle or land are the property of the owner." Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 149 Ill. 496, 36 N. E. 983, 24 L. R. A. 59; Jones v. Shaw, 15 Tex. 577.

"An appointment is neither a contract, nor is the office or its prospective emoluments the property of the incumbent. Upon general principles of law, the office itself and its emoluments are within the control of the government; and the legislative branch of the government, whenever, in its judgment, public policy requires it, may declare the office vacant, or transfer its duties to another officer, before the expiration of the term for which he was appointed." Kenny v. Hudspeth, 59 N. J. Law, 320, 36 Atl. 662.

In Foster v. Jones, 79 Va. 642, 52 Am. Rep. 637, the court uses the following language: "We think it may be fairly assumed in the outset to be an undeniable proposition that the two branches of the Legislature, as the direct representatives of the people, have the right, where no restrictions have been imposed upon them, either in express terms or by necessary implication, by the Constitution, to create and abolish offices accordingly as they may regard them as necessary or superfluous. And they may also, under like circumstances, deprive the officers of their salaries, either directly, by removing them from office, or indirectly, by so changing the organization of the departments to which they are attached as to leave them without a place." Mechem on Pub. Officers, § 463 et seq.; Throop on Pub. Off. § 1719; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 328.

In the case of State v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 109, 5 N. E. 233, Minshall, J., says: "The incumbent of an office has not, under our system of government, any property in it. His right to exercise it is not based upon any contract or grant. It is conferred on him by the public trust, to be exercised for the benefit of the public. Such salary as may be attached to it is not given him because of any duty on the part of the public to do so, but to enable the incumbent the better to perform the duties of his office, by the more exclusive devotion of his time thereto."

In the case of Donahue v. Will Co., 100 Ill. 94, it is said: "It is impossible to conceive how, under our form of government, a person can own or have title to a governmental office. Offices are created for the administration of public affairs. When a person is inducted into an office, he thereby becomes empowered to exercise its powers and perform its duties, not for his, but for the public, benefit. It would be a misnomer and a perversion of terms to say that an incumbent owned an office, or had any title to it."

"Some of the decisions have adopted the theory that an office is property, under a mistaken view that the common-law doctrine that an office is a hereditament applied to offices of this country, which is undoubtedly fallacious. * * * Public offices belong to the people, and are to be both conferred and taken away according to their will and appointment, and a person who accepts a public office does so subject to all the constitutional and legislative provisions in relation thereto." Moore v. Strickland, 46 W. Va. 515, 33 S. E. 274, 50 L. R. A. 279. The court in this case refers to Hoke v. Henderson, and expressly rejects the doctrine enunciated therein. A careful research fully sustains the remark of Mr. Justice Douglas, supra.

Mr. Irving Browne, in his note to Grant v. Sec. of State for India, 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 286, states the doctrine as held in the cases cited by us, with this conclusion: "Both the office itself and the compensation, upon general principles of law, are naturally within the control of the government, to diminish, increase, or abolish. This is the general doctrine as to statutory offices in this country. An appointment to an office is not a contract, the impairment of the obligation of which is forbidden by the federal Constitution." He notes the single exception in the North Carolina court, and says: "In all the other states the Legislature may do what it pleases with such offices, unless it is expressly restrained by the Constitution; an office not being regarded as property, nor the subject of contract, in any sense."

It will be observed that Chief Justice Ruffin cites no authority for the proposition maintained by him. He contents himself with the statement that "an office is enumerated by commentators on the law among the incorporeal hereditaments." And while, therefore, they are property, he says that "most of the rules regulating them have reference to the discharge of the duties and the promotion of the public convenience. They are pro commodo populi; hence they are not the subject of property, in the sense of that full and absolute dominion which is recognized in many other things. They are only the subject of property as far as they can be so in safety to the general interest involved in the discharge of their duties." He concedes that the office may be abolished. "With these limitations, and the like," says he, "a public office is the subject of property, as everything corporeal and incorporeal from which man can earn a livelihood and make a gain. And to the extent of his salary, it is private property, as much as the land which he tills, or the horse which he rides, or the debt that is owing to him." We must confess our inability to see how the right to the salary can have any higher or stronger ground upon which to rest than the right to the office. The salary is but an incident to the office. The chief justice does not express himself with his usual force and clearness when he says that offices "are not the subject of property in the sense of that absolute dominion which is recognized in many other things," and yet, "to the extent of his salary, it is private property, as much as the land he tills, or the horse which he rides, or the debt which is owing to him." When he concedes that the office may be abolished, such concession very greatly weakens the force of his conclusion.

In Mills v. Williams, 33 N. C. 558, Pearson, J., in his usual clear and concise style, thus states the distinction between legislation which is contractual and that which is not. In discussing the power of the Legislature to repeal an act establishing a county, he says: "The substantial distinction is this: Some corporations are created by the mere will of the Legislature, there being no other party interested or concerned. To this body a portion of the power of the Legislature is delegated, to be exercised for the public good, and subject at all times to be modified, changed, or annulled. Other corporations are the result of contract" (referring to private corporations). The same distinction was made and the same principle clearly enunciated by Ruffin, C. J., in University v. Maulsby, 43 N. C. 257. He says: "But the court is further of the opinion that the university is a public institution and body politic, and hence subject to legislative control; * * * and therefore the corporation was not only originally the creature of the Legislature, but is dependent on its will for its continuing existence."

"A grant of land by a state is a contract, because in making it the state deals with the purchaser precisely as any other vendor might; and, if its mode of conveyance is any different, it is only because, by virtue of its sovereignty, it has power to convey by other modes than those which the general law opens to individuals. But many things done by the state may seem to hold out promises to individuals, which, after all, cannot be treated as contracts without hampering the legislative power of the state in a manner that would soon leave it without the means of performing its essential functions. The state creates offices, and appoints persons to fill them; it establishes municipal corporations, with large and valuable privileges for its citizens; by its general laws it holds out inducements to immigration; it passes exemption laws, and laws for the encouragement of trade and agriculture; and under all these laws a greater or less number of citizens expect to derive profit and emoluments. But can these laws be regarded as contracts between the state and the officers and corporations who are, or the citizens of the state who expect to be, benefited by their passage, so as to preclude their being repealed? On these points it would seem that there could be no difficulty. When the state employs officers or creates municipal corporations as the mere agencies of government, it must have the power to discontinue the agency whenever it comes to be regarded as no longer important. 'The framers of the Constitution did not intend to restrain the state in the regulation of their civil institutions adopted for internal government.' They may therefore discontinue offices, or change the salary or other compensation, or abolish or change the organization of municipal corporations, at any time, according to the existing legislative view of state policy, unless forbidden by their own Constitution from doing so." Cooley's Const. Lim. (7th Ed.) 387.

We do not think it would be profitable to enter into a discussion of the various phases in which the question has come before this court. It is a part of the judicial history of the state. It is evident that the effort to carry it to its logical conclusion has rendered it necessary to make many delicate distinctions as to the respect in which and to what extent the word "property" applies to an office, its duties, its emoluments, and when and how an office may be abolished, or the office retained and its duties either transferred to another, or distributed among other governmental agencies. We have no disposition to review these cases, but prefer to adopt what may appropriately be called the American doctrine upon the subject, so clearly set forth in a number of the many decisions which we have quoted. Certainly in one eventful period of the history of the state it did not occur to any one to carry the doctrine of Hoke v. Henderson to its logical conclusion. Without entering into any discussion of the subject, we may, for the purpose of this argument, assume that the state of North Carolina has never at any time from its earliest existence lost or forfeited its statehood, its political integrity, nor has the allegiance of its citizens or the officers of the state been changed to any other government, except in so far as the state occupied relations to other governments. The tenure of judicial offices in North Carolina prior to 1868 was for life or good behavior. At the end of the Civil War a convention was held, and certain amendments made to the Constitution; retaining, however, this provision. The Constitution thus amended was ratified by the people, and a state government duly organized thereunder. Judges were elected and qualified, and were thereby entitled to hold such offices for life. In 1868 a second convention was held, the mode of election changed, the tenure changed from life to a term of eight years, and this court, then composed of Pearson, C. J., and Justices Reade and Battle, and the superior court bench, upon which were several of the ablest lawyers in the state, without question, recognized the right of the people by constitutional amendment to deprive them of their offices. It did not occur to either of these judges that they held their office under any contract, or that they had any property interest therein. So far as the record of our judicial history shows, no question was made of the right of the people, by amendment of their Constitution, to change the tenure and mode of election of their judges without in any respect abolishing or changing the duties of the office. The Supreme Court and superior courts of North Carolina, with few exceptions, were given the same jurisdiction by the Constitution of 1868 which they had under the old Constitution. Whatever status the state may have occupied in its federal relations from 1861 to 1868, its judges held their office for life or good behavior, and never by any action on their part forfeited such office to the state; hence, when the state resumed its federal relations with the United States government, it did so in respect to its original statehood, and not by virtue of any new source of political life; and, if Hoke v. Henderson had been the controlling principle, they were entitled and it was their duty to continue to hold their office and discharge its duties in accordance with the tenure by which they were originally conferred. Of course, we refer to this portion of our history without reference to the actual conditions existing, and upon the theory that the state, in its sovereign capacity, having withdrawn its allegiance from, in the same capacity resumed it to, the federal government. Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700, 19 L. Ed. 227; Id., 6 Rose's Notes, 1066. It has never been seriously contended that the judges in North Carolina were not from 1868 to 1868 rightfully in the discharge of their duties, or that the title to their offices was in any respect invalidated. It is a part of the history of this country that in a large majority of the original 13 states forming the Union the judicial tenure was, as in North Carolina, for life or good behavior. A large number of those states have, since the adoption of the federal Constitution, amended their Constitutions, making the judicial tenure for a term of years; and in no instance, so far as our research informs us, was the contention made that the offices were the property of the judges, held by grant. The only reference to the question which we find (and that was a mere suggestion) is in Com. v. Mann, 5 Watts & S. 418, and it is disposed of by the court in the following language: "The point that it is a contract, or partakes of the nature of a contract, will not bear the test of examination."

While we are not insensible to the responsibility which we assume in overruling a case which has been recognized as a controlling authority upon this subject for more than half a century, we feel that we are discharging a duty which the court of last resort owes when it has become apparent that the case brought into question is not supported by sound reason, and is in conflict with the uniform and unbroken current of authority in the federal and state jurisdictions. In so far as Hoke v. Henderson is based upon a construction of the federal Constitution, it is our duty to recognize and enforce the construction put upon that Constitution by the Supreme Court of the United States. We assume that, if by any lawful procedure the question could come before the Supreme Court of the United States, whether an office created by the Legislature of North Carolina was property, within the tenth section of article 1, and the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, that court would not hesitate to follow its decisions, rather than those of this state. But it is said that we should not disturb a decision so long acquiesced in and so often followed. "If a decision is based upon reasoning that can be shown to be erroneous (that is to say, contrary to the spirit and analogies of the law), it will be disregarded in other jurisdictions, and may even be overruled in the same jurisdiction." Wambaugh's Study of Cases, 53. In Myers v. Craig, 44 N. C. 169, this court, referring to a well-considered opinion theretofore rendered, speaking through Pearson, J., says: "It is clear Sprull v. Leary [35 N. C. 225] is not sustained by Flynn v. Williams [23 N. C. 509], and, after much research, no authority has been found to support 'the artificial and hard rule, the practical operation of which at this day would be to enable one man to sell another man's land, without compensation.'" This was regarded as sufficient reason for overruling a well-settled authority in this state in respect to the title to land. In speaking of the sanctity of judicial precedents, a great jurist uses the following language: "On the other hand, I hold it to be the duty of this court, as well as every other, to revise its own decisions, and, when satisfied that it has fallen into a mistake, to correct the error by overruling its own decisions." Another justice says: "It is going quite too far to say that a single decision of any court is absolutely conclusive as a precedent. It is an elementary principle that an erroneous decision is not bad law; it is no law at all." It may be final upon the parties before the court, but it does not conclude other parties having rights depending upon the same question. "It is, no doubt, true that even a single adjudication of this court upon a question properly before it is not to be questioned or disregarded except for the most cogent reasons, and then only in a case where it is plain that the judgment was the result of a mistaken view of the condition of the law applicable to the question. But the doctrine of stare decisis, like almost every other legal rule, is not without its exceptions. It does not apply to a case where it can be shown that the law has been misunderstood or misapplied, or where the former determination is contrary to reason. The authorities are abundant to show that in such cases it is the duty of the courts to re-examine the question. Chancellor Kent, commenting upon the rule of stare decisis, said that more than a thousand cases could then be pointed out in the English and American courts which had been overruled, doubted, or limited in their application." Rumsey v. Railroad, 133 N. Y. 79, 30 N. E. 654, 15 L. R. A. 618, 28 Am. St. Rep. 600.

If it is true that a public office is private property, the state, instead of being sovereign, finds herself, in her effort to perform her governmental functions, bereft of her sovereignty, her hands tied, her progress obstructed, for that those whom she has commissioned to be her servants have, by grants of parts and parcels of her sovereignty, become her masters, and, converting her commissions into grants, forbid her to proceed or go forward. That this is not fancy, or an imaginary result of enforcing the principle which we are asked to perpetuate, the reports of decided cases in this court amply show. When it was sought to change the mode of governing the asylums and other state institutions as the General Assembly deemed best for the public good, it was claimed and held that the state was powerless, because the directors had a grant based upon contract, by which they were entitled to manage its institutions for a number of years. Wood v. Bellamy, 120 N. C. 212, 27 S. E. 113; Lusk v. Sawyer, 120 N. C. 225, 27 S. E. 1007. It was held in Day's Case, 124 N. C. 369, 32 S. E. 750, that "although a new method of distributing the powers and duties of the government and conduct of the State's Prison may be desirable, and the method undertaken to be adopted by the act of 1899 may be best, yet such changes cannot be made until the expiration of the contract with the incumbent." The system of criminal courts created by legislative enactment could not be changed, or the counties in the districts adjusted to suit the needs of the people, because solicitors had contracts with the state, and held, under grants, public offices. Wilson v. Jordan, 124 N. C. 683, 33 S. E. 139; McCall v. Webb, 125 N. C. 243, 34 S. E. 430. The right of the state to control, as in the judgment of the representatives of the people it thought best, its property interest in a railroad, was perverted because the directors had, by grant, property in the office for a term of two years. Bryan v. Patrick, 124 N. C. 651, 33 S. E. 151. The power to repeal an act, abolish the office of railroad commissioner, and establish a new commission—an agency of purely legislative creation—was denied for the same reason. Abbott v. Beddingfield, 125 N. C. 256, 34 S. E. 412. What the representatives of the people deemed an improvement in the public school system was prevented because, with the grant of a public office in his hand, a school committee man asserted his property right to the office. Greene v. Owen, 125 N. C. 212, 34 S. E. 424; Dalby v. Hancock, 125 N. C. 325, 34 S. E. 516; Gattis v. Griffin, 125 N. C. 333, 34 S. E. 429. We do not cite these cases for the purpose of criticising them. For the purpose of the discussion, we regard them as the logical deduction to be drawn from the principle that a person may have a contractual right to or property in public office.

The facts in this case strikingly illustrate the wisdom of holding that a public office is not private property, thus preventing the state and its agencies from performing its functions in respect to its internal government. It became evident to the Legislature that it would be wise to inaugurate a system of working the public roads of Raleigh township by the use of the convicts. For the purpose of doing so, a scheme was devised and enacted into law. Officers were provided for, and their mode of election and term of office fixed. In process of time, it became necessary to enlarge the operations to other parts of the county. The plan which had been adopted was found to be wise, and it was desired to enlarge its sphere. It thus became necessary to have other officers; to distribute the duties and subdivide their work. For this purpose the law of 1903 was enacted. The whole scheme looked to and had for its object the public good—the improvement of the public roads—not the creation of offices to be granted to the mere agents employed for this purpose. The relator finds no place in the new scheme for working the roads. He has no duties or powers, and no salary is provided for him. If his contention be correct, the working of the public roads must be stopped until his term of office expires. This is the logical result of his contention that he has a property right in the office; that he has risen above his source; that, instead of being a mere servant or agent commissioned to discharge certain public duties, he has become the owner of part of the sovereignty of the state, and at his will a great work of public improvement must stop. This does violence to our conception of the relations which public servants bear to the people or their government. The following language used by Judge Nicholl in State v. Dewa, supra, so clearly sets forth the reason upon which the true principle is founded, that we quote at some length: "The appointment of him, as well as other officers, is not a grant in derogation of the rights of the public, but the constituting by the people, in the exercise of their sovereignty, of an agent to carry their sovereignty into effect. In creating an office, the body public does not restrict its sovereignty, or the power of the Legislature through whom that sovereignty is expressed and exercised. The purpose is to extend the sphere of its action, or at least to give it operation. But if it be true that the officer has a property in his office, that that property embraces its duties as they were prescribed by law at the moment he was commissioned and qualified, and that those duties cannot be changed without a forbidden disturbance of private property, the consequence is that by his appointment the officer becomes placed above the sovereignty of the people during the term for which he is elected."

While it is our duty to search for, and, if happily we find the law, to apply it to the case, we think it not improper, in view of the range which the discussion of the principle involved in this case has taken in our Reports, to say, in response to the argument that if the Legislature be permitted to change, modify, abolish, or otherwise deal with public office and its incumbents, uncertainty in security and constant disturbance in the administration of the domestic affairs of the state will follow, that ours is a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people"; that, except in so far as they have, in their organic law, limited their power to speak and act through their representatives, sovereignty rests with them. We, who are commissioned to perform judicial functions, may not claim to be wiser than they, or find any other guide for our conduct than the Constitution which they have ordained. If the people have not authorized their legislative department to parcel out their sovereignty by grants of public offices as private property, we dare not do so. The Legislature, having been intrusted with the power of either electing or providing for the election of officers of legislative creation, must, as the representatives of the people, be intrusted to make such changes in the tenure, duties, and emoluments of such offices as, in its judgment, the public interest demands. This power having been vested in that department of the government, it is our duty to obey and enforce the law as the "state's collected will."

To conclude the matter, the doctrine of Hoke v. Henderson is based upon the proposition that public office is private property, with all the results that logically flow therefrom. In so far as that case holds this proposition to be law, we expressly overrule it, and declare that no officer can have a property in the sovereignty of the state; that, in respect to offices created and provided for by the Constitution, the people, in convention assembled, alone can alter, change their tenure, duties, or emoluments, or abolish them; that, in respect to legislative offices, it is entirely within the power of the Legislature to deal with them as public policy may suggest and public interest may demand.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

CLARK, C. J. (concurring). The court that decided Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1, 25 Am. Dec. 677, did not deem themselves infallible, for they overruled divers of their own opinions as erroneous, and succeeding courts have overruled other opinions of that court. There is no peculiar sacredness attached to Hoke v. Henderson. No other court whatever, anywhere or at any time, has followed it as authority. All have concurred in disregarding it, and not a few have sharply criticised it, a few of which criticisms have been collected. 127 N. C., at pages 252, 253, 37 S. E. 263. If Mr. Reverdy Johnson paid the decision the scant compliment of mentioning it in his argument in Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. Ed. 366, the opinion of the court did not treat it with as much consideration. It is not referred to.

Nor has the case always been followed even by this court. It owes its prominence, not to the original decision in 1833, which was not followed for near 40 years, but to its revival and wider application after the political changes in 1870 and 1898. Its fundamental doctrine, that office is not an agency, but property obtained by contract and therefore protected by the contract clause of the federal Constitution, was most effectually denied by every judge when he took his seat on the Supreme or the Superior Court bench in 1868, since he did so in disregard of that holding. The convention of 1868 could no more abrogate a contract (if office was a contract) than it could any other contract made in 1865-68. The court has often ignored it, notably in Mills v. Williams, 83 N. C. 558. Bunting v. Gales, 77 N. C. 253, and Winslow v. Morton, 118 N. C. 486, 24 S. E. 417; and there are other cases in which it has been only partially upheld. Having discussed these cases in numerous dissenting opinions from Day's Case, 124 N. C. 362, 32 S. E. 748, down to Taylor v. Vann, 127 N. C., at pages 243-253, 37 S. E. 263, in which last many of the opinions sustaining the legislative power over offices created by legislation are again collected, it is not necessary that I should now discuss them.

As the essence of the decision in Hoke v. Henderson is that office is property based on contract, and hence protected by the United States Constitution (for there is no such clause in the state Constitution), the General Assembly could not, if that view was correct, make any rule nor pass any law to disregard it. If they could, then all future contracts of any kind whatsoever could be taken out of the protection of the federal Constitution by a simple statute that all future contracts shall not have that protection. So far from the Legislature acquiescing, every case, from Hoke v. Henderson itself down to Mial v. Ellington, the present case, was necessarily presented by legislative action taken in disregard of Hoke v. Henderson. As long as the court held to the doctrine of that case, the Legislature could make no rule to the contrary, beyond persistently disregarding it, as it has often done, as evidenced by numerous decisions. There is no way to get rid of the decision except by the court which made it repudiating it, for the reasons given in the very able opinion filed in this case by Mr. Justice CONNOR.

The Legislature shapes the administrative and political policy of the state, and its members are elected at short intervals for the purpose of conforming the direction of public affairs to the changing sentiment of the people and the progress of events. This policy must be put into operation through officers who are simply agents of the government. If a legislature elected for two years can put in its agents for life or long terms, and keep them in by the court's holding that office is a contract and incumbents are irremovable, such temporary legislature can dominate the people for any period it may see fit to fix for the duration of offices filled or created by it. This is a denial of the foundation principle of all American government—the sovereignty of the people. The fact that the Constitution fixes the term of certain officers, and forbids a diminution of their salaries, is of itself conclusive that all other officers and their salaries are not thus protected, but are subject to change and control by the people, acting through subsequent legislatures.

It must be remembered that, when Hoke v. Henderson was decided, the United States Supreme Court had not then held, as it soon afterwards did in Butler v. Pennsylvania, 10 How. 402, 416, 13 L. Ed. 472, that an office was not a contract, and not protected by the contract clause of the federal Constitution. This doctrine that court has uniformly maintained ever since, notably in Newton v. Commissioners, 100 U. S. 548, 25 L. Ed. 710, Blake v. U. S., 103 U. S. 227, 26 L. Ed. 462, Crenshaw v. U. S., 134 U. S. 99, 10 Sup. Ct. 431, 33 L. Ed. 825, and many other cases, including the late decision in Taylor v. Beckham, 178 U. S. 577, 20 Sup. Ct. 1006, 44 L. Ed. 1187. Had those decisions or any one of them, been rendered in 1833, it is quite certain Hoke v. Henderson would have been decided the other way, for the construction placed by the United States Supreme Court upon any clause of the federal Constitution is conclusive upon all other courts.

For well-nigh 40 years Hoke v. Henderson was applied to no controversy over an office. In Mills v. Williams (1851) 83 N. C. 558, it was not cited, but disregarded and practically overruled, both in the reasoning of the opinion and its effect, which was to hold that all the duties and emoluments of the office of sheriff of Polk county were transferred intact to the sheriff of Rutherford county. In Cotten v. Ellis, 52 N. C. 548, it is true Hoke v. Henderson was cited, but the decision rested on a different point—that the state could not vacate a federal office. The Legislature of 1865 disregarded Hoke v. Henderson by vacating legislative offices, and even filling such judgeships as it saw fit with new men. In 1868 the convention again did the same thing by the judges which Hoke v. Henderson held could not be done by the clerks, i. e., changed the appointive life tenure into an elective term of years. This could not have been done if office were a contract, for the federal Constitution forbids any "state to pass any law to impair the obligation of a contract." The restriction was upon the state, not merely upon its Legislature. The prohibition applies to a convention as well as to the Legislature. Louisiana v. Taylor, 105 U. S. 454, 26 L. Ed. 1133, and other cases cited; Abbott v. Beddingfield, 125 N. C., at page 285, 84 S. E. 412. As already stated, every judge who took his seat upon the bench in 1868 took it in defiance of Hoke v. Henderson. The officers turned out in 1868 held, not by virtue of any authority recognized in 1861-65, but they had all been inducted in 1865, after the war closed, or later.

After being thus silent and practically disregarded, without a single application of it, for near 40 years, Hoke v. Henderson was resurrected after the change in the political majority of the General Assembly in consequence of the elections of 1870 and 1872. Its invocation and somewhat more extended application thwarted the effort of the people, through their new representatives, to control the policy of the state by changing the incumbents of offices created by the Legislature with men of views in accord with the change expressed at the ballot box. Later on, however, Hoke v. Henderson was practically ignored, or much limited, in Bunting v. Gales, 77 N. C. 283, Winslow v. Morton, 118 N. C. 486, 24 S. E. 417, and other cases.

In Wood v. Bellamy, 120 N. C. 212, 27 S. E. 113, there was an application of Hoke v. Henderson in a case where new incumbents were placed in offices as to which there had been no change of duties, but a change of names only. This decision was within the limits of the original decision. It was the subsequent cases, beginning with Day's Case, in 124 N. C. 362, 82 S. E. 748, which carried it further, causing it to be denied, and its ultimate and inevitable overthrow. In Ward v. Elizabeth City, 121 N. C. 1, 27 S. E. 993, attention was for the first time called to the fact that the decision in Hoke v. Henderson had been denied in all other states, and, while admitting that it had been recognized in this state, it was held that Ward was not protected by it. In Caldwell v. Wilson, 121 N. C. 425, 28 S. E. 554, in a very able opinion, it was again shown (at pages 467, 468, 121 N. C., pages 560, 561, 28 S. E.), that Hoke v. Henderson was contrary to all precedents elsewhere, and the opinion was expressed that the doctrine had been "carried to its fullest legitimate extent" here, and Wilson, like Ward, was held not protected by it in his office.

With the subsequent expansion of the doctrine to new territory and wider fields, it can serve no purpose now to deal. Those matters have been fully discussed in the opinions and dissenting and concurring opinions filed in the various "officeholding cases" from Day's Case, supra, in which the Legislature was denied power to control the penitentiary, down through various offices to Taylor v. Vann, 127 N. C. 249, 37 S. E. 263, which was as to the costs in an action to recover a $2 per annum office (member of county board of education) when the term of the officer had expired before judgment. Thus expanded, the doctrine necessarily destroyed itself. The people of the state could not and would not be prohibited and controlled in the management of their own institutions and their public policies by judge-made law, which was denied by all other courts, including the highest at Washington. The doctrine has existed nowhere else. The conflict between the court and the General Assembly could not continue. No act of the Legislature could terminate it. Every time the question has been presented in all these years, it has been raised upon an act of the Legislature which had been passed in disregard of Hoke v. Henderson. Its assertion could be renounced only by the court. This it has now done, explicitly, clearly, and the doctrine of private property in public office, started on its course by the decision in Hoke v. Henderson, will, like the ghost in Hamlet, "no longer walk the earth" to disquiet the peace.

MONTGOMERY, J. (dissenting). Mr. Justice CONNOR, in writing for the court its opinion in this case, states clearly and forcibly what is called the "American Doctrine" in reference to the nature and tenure of public office, and makes copious extracts from the decisions of the courts of many of the states of the Union, and from two of the Supreme Courts of the United States, in affirmation of the view of the majority of the court; and it may be taken as true that the Supreme Court of North Carolina is the only court, state or federal, which has held that a legislative office is property, that it is held by contract between the state and the officer, and that the officer can be deprived of his office by judicial determination only. I was aware of this particular isolation of the North Carolina court when I wrote for the court, at its February term, 1897, the opinion in the case of Wood v. Bellamy, 120 N. C. 212, 27 S. E. 113. Why, then, did I not, at that time, take the opposite view, and use my voice to ally the decisions of this court, on the subject under discussion, with the universal judicial sentiment of the country? There were two reasons why I could not do so. The first was that for almost three score and ten years the law as it was written in Wood v. Bellamy, supra, had been the law under decisions of this court, and those decisions made by judges holding personally different political views, and many of them known to be of marked judicial temperament, and ranking in the very highest order of legal learning and general scholarship; and, second, those decisions, and especially the one of Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1, 25 Am. Dec. 677, delivered in 1833, and written by Chief Justice Ruffin, seemed to me to be conclusive on the subject. The judges at that time were Ruffin (Chief Justice), Daniel, and Gaston, a court of which any nation in any age might be proud. The opinion is a model of judicial style, notable for its strong and pure English and for the vigor and force of its reasoning. No synopsis of it can do the author justice. Among the conclusions was this: That an office was property, a vested right, existing under contract between the state and the officer, and that an act of the Legislature which sought to deprive the officer of his property in the office was unconstitutional and void. And that proposition was not doubted by this court until 66 years had elapsed, when the dissenting opinion in Day's Case, 124 N. C. 362, 32 S. E. 748, was filed by Justice Clark, the present Chief Justice. Within less than two years before the dissenting opinion in Day's Case was filed, the same justice had written the unanimous opinion of this court in the case of Ward v. Elizabeth City, 27 S. E. 994, upholding the doctrine of Hoke v. Henderson, in the following language: "The only restriction upon the legislative power is that after the officer has accepted office upon the terms specified in the act creating the office, this being a contract between him and the state, the Legislature cannot turn him out by an act purporting to abolish the office, but which in effect continues the same office in existence. This is on the ground that an office is a contract between the officer and the state, as was held in Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1 [25 Am. Dec. 677], and has ever since been followed in North Carolina down to and including Wood v. Bellamy, supra, though this is the only one of the 45 states of the Union which sustains that doctrine."

In writing of that celebrated opinion (Hoke v. Henderson) nearly 40 years afterwards, Pearson, C. J., in Clark v. Stanley, 66 N. C. 67, 8 Am. Rep. 488, referred to it as "that mine from which so much rich ore has been dug." I cannot think it out of place to quote, from the address of the late Honorable William A. Graham on the life of Chief Justice Ruffin, his remarks in reference to that great case—Hoke v. Henderson. The speaker said: "Judge Ruffin's conversancy with political ethics, public law, and English and American history seems to have assigned to him the task of delivering the opinions on constitutional questions which have attracted most general attention. That delivered by him in the case of Hoke v. Henderson, in which it was held that the Legislature could not, by a sentence of its own in the form of an enactment, divest a citizen of property, even in a public office, because the proceeding was an exercise of judicial power, received the encomium of Kent and other authors on constitutional law, and I happened personally to witness that it was the main authority relied on by Mr. Reverdy Johnson in the argument for the second time in Ex parte Garland, which involved the power of Congress, by a test oath, to exclude lawyers from the practice in the Supreme Court of the United States for having participated in civil war against the government, and in which its reasoning on the negative side of the question was sustained by that august tribunal." The same question was before this court again in the case of Cotten v. Ellis, 52 N. C. 545. The court there said, through Pearson, C. J.: "The legal effect of the appointment was to give the office to the applicant, and he became entitled to it as a 'vested right' for the term of three years, from which he could only be removed in the manner prescribed by law, and of which the Legislature had no power to deprive him. This is settled. Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1 [25 Am. Dec. 677]." And again the question was presented for decision in the case of King v. Hunter, 66 N. C. 603, 6 Am. Rep. 754. The opinion in the case was delivered by Judge Reade, who said: "Nothing is better settled than that an office is property. The incumbent has the same right to it that he has to any other property. There is a contract between him and the state that he will discharge the duties of the office (and he is pledged by his bond and his oath), and that he shall have the emoluments (and the state is pledged by its honor). When the contract is struck, it is as complete and binding as a contract between individuals, and it cannot be abrogated or impaired except by the consent of both parties." Again the question was presented in the case of Bailey v. Caldwell, 68 N. C. 472, and decided in the same way. Upon the reasoning and the authority of the foregoing cases, the numerous decisions involving the same question, and heard in this court, beginning with Wood v. Bellamy, down to this time have been made.

It may not be inappropriate to say that the thorough and elaborate arguments of counsel and the dissenting opinions in the cases that followed Wood v. Bellamy very much weakened my view of the correctness of the decision in Hoke v. Henderson as applicable to the genius of our institutions and the thought of the age, and I am free to say that if it had been a new question I would have adopted what is called by the court "the American Doctrine." But I cannot get my consent to join in overruling the decisions of this court, beginning with Hoke v. Henderson, and at intervals down almost to the present day: First, because the law as settled in those decisions has been too long the law of this state to be overthrown by the judicial decree of judges who may not see the law more clearly than did that great court which made the decision in that celebrated case of Hoke

v. Henderson, not to mention succeeding judges who followed the precedent. And, again, the General Assembly has met in session more than 30 times since the decision of Hoke v. Henderson. Its members knew, at any and all of its sessions, that so far as legislative offices, that is, offices not ordained by the Constitution with fixed terms, were concerned, they could alter the effect of the rule laid down in that case by the enactment of a statute, not "retrospective" in its action, thereby interfering with vested rights, but prescribing a rule of property in said office, and modifying the extent of interest and tenure therein "prospectively." Caldwell v. Wilson, 121 N. C., at page 469, 28 S. E. 554. By that means, such officers elected or appointed after the going into effect of the act would hold under the statute and subject to its provisions. No such statute has been enacted. The legislative department has acquiesced in Hoke v. Henderson, with full knowledge that it had the power to change the effect of the doctrine announced in Hoke v. Henderson in the manner and to the extent above specified. A bill for that purpose was introduced at the session of 1901, and received the unanimous report of the committee which had it in charge, but for reasons satisfactory to them it was not enacted into law. Under such an act the officer would take his office with the knowledge and understanding, when he accepted it, that he held it subject to removal under the terms of the act, and no such question could arise as was decided in Hoke v. Henderson, where the right to the office was unqualified. In case of removal of any such officer, no constitutional provision, either federal or state, could be invoked to protect his rights of property in case of his removal from office, as he agreed that that might be done when he accepted it. It was the Constitution of North Carolina of 1776, adopted at Halifax, which was referred to in the case of Hoke v. Henderson as the instrument which was violated by the act of Assembly, and the provision was section 12 in the Declaration of Rights, which was in these words: "That no freeman ought to be taken, imprisoned, or disseized of his freehold, liberties, or privileges, or outlawed or exiled, or in any manner destroyed or deprived of his life, liberty or property, but by the law of the land." That section is now section 17 of article 1 of the Constitution of North Carolina.

There was some discussion in the opinion of the court, and also in the concurring opinion, of the views and conduct of the judges elected under the state Constitution of 1868. There had never been a decision of the United States Supreme Court holding that an office was property resting in contract. Those judges must have known that fact. In Hoke v. Henderson such a holding had been made by our own court, and no doubt the judges elected under the state Constitution of 1868 believed that a convention of the people had the full right to abolish offices or remove officers, and that in the exercise of that power they had changed the terms of the judges' offices and also removed the incumbents. The doctrine of Hoke v. Henderson was that the Legislature could not deprive one of his office, because it was property and rested in contract, but there is not a hint in the case that the people in convention did not have that power.

I am pleased with the spirit and language of Mr. Justice CONNOR, manifested throughout the decision of the case, and especially to that part of it in which reference to the decisions of this court, which are said by some to be an extension of the doctrine of Hoke v. Henderson, is made. I quote it: "We do not think it will be profitable to enter into the discussion of the various phases in which the question has come before this court. It is a part of the judicial history of the state. It is evident that the effort to carry it to its logical conclusion has rendered it necessary to make many delicate distinctions as to the respect in which, and to what extent, the word 'property' applies to an office, its duties, its emoluments, and when and how an office may be abolished, or the office retained and its duties either transferred to another or distributed among other governmental agencies. We have no disposition to review these cases, but prefer to adopt what may be appropriately called the 'American Doctrine' upon the subject, so clearly set forth in a number of the many decisions which we have quoted." As to the correctness of the decisions referred to in the above quotation, with the premise admitted that the law of Hoke v. Henderson was the recognized law at that time in North Carolina, I am content, as, indeed, I must be, to abide the judgment of the profession, with the hope and in the belief that the judgment of future and of calmer times, if an adverse one, may be expressed more charitably than was that of the opponents of the decisions at the time they were made.

DOUGLAS, J. (dissenting). When the opinion of the court was filed in this case I was so seriously ill as to be helpless, and hence I take advantage of the kindly consent of my associates to now file my dissenting opinion. I would gladly drop the matter, but for the feeling that such action on my part might be misunderstood. In the light of an forgotten past, it seems proper that I should briefly state the facts that constitute my justification in consistently following in my judicial career the principle laid down in Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1, 25 Am. Dec. 677. Excuse or apology I have none to offer. I understand that the opinion of the court goes to the extent of deciding that no one can have any property in the tenure of an office, and "that in respect to legislative offices it is entirely within the power of the Legislature to deal with them as public policy may suggest and public interest may demand." This cuts up by the roots the dominating principle of Hoke v. Henderson, and of all subsequent cases based thereon. No distinction whatever is made between the different cases involving the application of the principle. It is the principle itself that is denounced as intrinsically vicious, and therefore calling for judicial extirpation. It necessarily follows that in the light of this decision we were just as wrong in 1897 in rendering our unanimous decision in Wood v. Bellamy, 120 N. C. 212, 27 S. E. 113, Lusk v. Sawyer, 120 N. C. 225, 27 S. E. 1007, and Person v. Southerland, Id., as we were in any of those subsequent decisions which became the subject of so much controversy.

There has been no change in the law, and, if the court is right now, it was wrong then in refusing to the dominant power in the Legislature the disposition of the offices to which they were legally entitled. It irresistibly follows that if the court in 1897 had been constituted as it is now, in the light of its present decision, it would have offered no bar to the will of the Legislature, and would have turned over the asylums and other state institutions to those whom we excluded. This seems the very irony of fate.

I will not undertake to defend the principle underlying the decision in Hoke v. Henderson, as I can add nothing to what has already been said. My personal views have been fully expressed when speaking for the court in Greene v. Owen, 125 N. C. 212, 34 S. E. 424, and Taylor v. Vann, 127 N. C. 243, 37 S. E. 263, and in my concurring opinion in Wilson v. Jordan, 124 N. C. 707, 33 S. E. 139. I will now confine myself to the reasons actuating me in accepting the principle as settled law when I came upon the bench, and consistently following it thereafter. The court quotes with approval from my opinion, speaking for the court, in Caldwell v. Wilson, 121 N. C. 467, 28 S. E. 561, as follows: "With the exception of this state, it is the well-settled doctrine in the United States that an office is not regarded as held under a grant or contract, within the general constitutional provision protecting contracts; but, unless the Constitution otherwise expressly provides, the Legislature has power to increase or vary the duties or diminish the salary or other compensation appurtenant to the office, or abolish any of its rights or privileges, before the end of the term, or to alter or abridge the term, or to abolish the office itself. * * * Except in North Carolina, it is well settled that there is no contract, either express or implied, between a public officer and the government, whose agent he is; nor can a public office be regarded as the property of the incumbent." That is true, but the same opinion went on to say: "But our decision in the case at bar does not conflict with that in Hoke v. Henderson. The statute now under consideration is not retrospective, and does not interfere with any vested right. Being a part of the act originally creating the office of railroad commissioner, it 'prescribed' a rule of property in said office, and modifies the extent of interest and tenure therein 'prospectively.' The defendant, taking under the act, holds subject to the act, and, relying upon his contract, is bound by all its provisions. One of its express provisions was the reserved right of the Legislature to remove, and the power and duty of the Governor to suspend, under a given state of facts. This power of suspension, together with the necessary method of its enforcement, was assented to by the defendant in his acceptance of the office; * * * that the only property he could have in the office was that given to him by the statute, which must be construed in all its parts. His commission, which is his title deed, appears to us with the fateful words of the created act written across its face by the hand of the law." In that case I also said, for a unanimous court: "We realize the responsibilities of this court in settling the line of demarcation between the legislative, executive, and supreme judicial powers, which by constitutional obligation must be kept forever separate and distinct. This vital line must be drawn by us alone, and we will endeavor to draw it with a firm and even hand, free alike from the palsied touch of interest or subserviency and the itching grasp of power. Should the legislative or executive departments of the state cross that line, we will put them back where they belong; but upon us rests the equal obligation of keeping upon our own side. This is a question, not of discretion, but of law; a matter not of expediency, but of right."

From the course of judicial conduct thus explicitly declared, I have never knowingly departed. At the same term it was said by a unanimous court, in Ward v. Elizabeth City, 121 N. C. 1, 27 S. E. 993, that "This is on the ground that an office is a contract between the officer and the state, as was held in Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1 [25 Am. Dec. 677], and has ever since been followed in North Carolina down to and including Wood v. Bellamy, supra, though this state is the only one of the 45 states of the Union which sustains that doctrine." (The italics are mine.) This language is quoted to show that, whatever differences of opinion may subsequently have arisen as to its application, the existence of the principle itself as the settled law of North Carolina was universally admitted. It was so recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States in Re Hennen, 13 Pet. 230, 10 L. Ed. 138, where the court says, on page 281, 13 Pet., 10 L. Ed. 138: "The case of Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1 [25 Am. Dec. 677], decided in the Supreme Court of North Carolina, is not at all in conflict with the doctrine contained in the cases referred to. That case, like the others, turned upon the Constitution and laws of North Carolina."

The only argument in the opinion of the court that had not been previously advanced and considered is the change in the personnel of the Supreme and Superior Courts following the adoption of the Constitution of 1868, and the relation of the seceding states to the federal Union. I will not reopen the questions involved in the Civil War and the tangled web of reconstruction. The issues of the war were settled by embattled freemen, who on both sides, believing that their cause was sacred, freely gave to it the last tribute of a loyal heart. All that we need do is to cherish the memory of their heroic deeds and guard their last resting place, feeling that every flower growing on a soldier's grave nestles its roots in a hero's breast, and expands its fairest flowers in the glad sunshine of liberty and peace in a reunited land.

When I first came upon this bench, its only new member, and in every way its junior, I was at once confronted with the class of cases represented by Wood v. Bellamy. After the most careful consideration, and certainly with no possible personal bias in that direction, I concurred with a unanimous court in the decision of those cases, thus giving to the great principle enunciated in Hoke v. Henderson the deliberate assent of my judgment and my conscience. Even if I had not approved of the decision in principle, I would have hesitated to place myself upon the lonely pedestal of solitary infallibility, assuming that I was wiser than the aggregated wisdom of the court for more than 60 years. I do not look upon the system of jurisprudence as a mere heterogeneous conglomeration of disjointed opinions, but as a harmonious whole, in which every case fits accurately upon those that have preceded it, and in turn becomes the foundation for others. Thus is reared the noble structure with all the beauty, simplicity, and grandeur of a Grecian temple. So feeling, I did not seek to signalize my advent upon the bench by prizing out the foundation stones of the law, but rather by building up, satisfied if I could add to the structure but one stone, small and roughhewn though it be.

The opinion in Hoke v. Henderson was delivered at the December term, 1883, of this court by Chief Justice Ruffin, and concurred in by his associates, Judges Daniel and Gaston. This great court sat together unchanged for more than 10 years, and has no superior here or elsewhere, either in the ability and integrity of judicial conduct or the purity of private life. No finer combination of judicial and individual character has ever existed upon any bench. Chief Justice Ruffin stands at the head of the profession in this state, with no possible rival, unless it be Chief Justice Pearson, who paid him the high compliment of saying that while Chief Justice Taylor was the most learned man that had ever been upon this bench, and Chief Justice Henderson its most reflective mind, Ruffin combined both qualities in a higher degree than any one else. Judge Daniel's opinions are models of brevity, strength, and clearness. Judge Gaston was the beau ideal of North Carolinians, whose character contained the flower and fragrance of every virtue. I have often thought that the splendor of his intellectual qualities was overshadowed by the sublimity of his moral character. It may well be said of him that, among the great men of his generation, few have left a more splendid and none a more stainless name. It is the deliberate judgment of his countrymen that throughout a long and distinguished life he ever bore the trenchant blade of heroic manhood with the spotless shield of Christian chivalry. But it has been intimated that that opinion was not carefully considered, and that those eminent judges, like Homer, might sometimes nod. The opinion itself shows no evidence of haste or want of deliberation. On the contrary, it is regarded as a model by the best of judges, and has repeatedly received the warmest commendation from the highest sources. I know it is said that even Homer sometimes nods; but I never heard of his going to sleep, and continuing in a profound slumber for 70 years. It remained for the courts of North Carolina to take this more than Rip Van Winkle nap, and as we wake up we may well ask, where are Ruffin and Daniel and Gaston and Pearson? Gone! And we who sit in the ever-widening shadow of their fame are asked to say that they knew not whereof they spoke. Let this be said by those who may; it shall not come from me.

Having given to the principles of that opinion the deliberate assent of my judgment and my conscience, in Wood v. Bellamy and the kindred cases decided at that term, I deemed it my duty to carry them to their legitimate conclusion. If it was the law when Wood v. Bellamy was decided in 1897, it remained the law, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions; and those who subsequently invoked those identical principles were entitled to their equal protection. If they were sacred enough in 1897 to keep Bellamy in office, they retained equal sanctity in 1899, when invoked in favor of Day. It may be that the application of those principles was carried too far in some subsequent cases, but I did the best I knew. I admit that sometimes my opinions when once formed may be too firmly fixed. Be that as it may, they are the result of reflection and conviction, and take their texture more from the granite of my native hills than the shifting sand dunes of a storm-swept coast. In these cases I but followed the injunction of this court in Sutton v. Phillips, 116 N. C. 502, 21 S. E. 968, wherein it says, on page 508, 116 N. C., page 969, 21 S. E., that "it is best to stand super antiquas vias." I am painfully aware of the frequent appearance of the personal pronoun in this opinion, and deeply regret its apparent necessity.

An examination of the constitutional history of the state, I think, will clearly show that the principles so clearly enunciated in Hoke v. Henderson have not only received the practically unanimous approval of succeeding judges, but have by direct implication been repeatedly ratified by the people themselves. This decision was rendered at the December term, 1833, reported in 15 N. C. 1, 25 Am. Dec. 677. Since that time there have been five separate and distinct constitutional conventions, all of which might, but none of which have, abrogated or modified the principles of that opinion. In 1835 a constitutional convention met on June 4th, and framed amendments to the Constitution of 1776, which were ratified by the people. In 1861 a convention met, and on May 20th passed the Ordinance of Secession, with some other amendments, none of which were submitted to the people. In 1865 a convention met on October 9th, repealed the Ordinance of Secession, and passed an ordinance prohibiting slavery. This convention reassembled in May, 1866, and further amended the Constitution; but with the exception of the above ordinances relating to secession and slavery, the amendments were rejected upon submission to the people. A convention called by Gen. Canby, under the reconstruction acts of Congress, assembled on January 14, 1868, and framed the Constitution of 1868, which was ratified by the people. In 1875 a convention assembled on September 6th, and amended the Constitution in several particulars, their action being ratified by the people at the election in 1876. In addition to these conventions, several amendments have been made by legislative action and popular ratification, such as the celebrated "Free Suffrage" amendment of 1854, and those prohibiting the payment of the special tax bonds, relating to the election of trustees of the University, increasing the number of justices of the Supreme Court, and some relating to other particulars set out principally in chapters 81-88, pp. 111-118, of the Laws of 1872-73. To these may be added the recent amendment restricting the suffrage. The various amendments made many changes of far-reaching importance, including the successive repudiation of the governments of the United States and of the Confederate States, and the enfranchisement and practical disfranchisement of the negro; but the underlying principle of Hoke v. Henderson remained unchanged.

Moreover, in the 70 years that have elapsed, 35 different Legislatures have met in the aggregate more than 40 times, and yet no bill to do away with the effect of these decisions has ever got beyond the calendar. Under the decisions of this court, have I not a right to assume that this long and unbroken legislative acquiescence in this decision is an indorsement of its essential principles? The Supreme Court of the United States in B. & O. Railroad v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 37 L. Ed. 772, says, on page 372, 149 U. S., page 915, 13 Sup. Ct., 37 L. Ed. 772: "Notwithstanding the interpretation placed by this decision upon the thirty-fourth section of the judiciary act of 1789, Congress has never amended that section; so it must be taken as clear that the construction thus placed is the true construction, and acceptable to the legislative, as well as to the judicial, branch of the government." In State v. Cole, 132 N. C. 1069, 44 S. E. 391, in an able and learned opinion, this court says on page 1079, 132 N. C., page 395, 44 S. E.: "To the suggestion that the construction put upon the statute in Fuller's Case [114 N. C. 885, 19 S. E. 797], decided in 1894, is 'unfortunate,' we note that the personnel of this court has since that time undergone many changes, and the case has at almost every term been cited with approval, and conceded to be the controlling authority for this court. It is also worthy of note that the Legislature has met at five different sessions, and the law in this respect has not been changed. We have no other means of ascertaining what the law is." In Harvey v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 352, 45 S. E. 644, another well-considered opinion, this court says, on page 360, 133 N. C., page 647, 45 S. E.: "We have seen that no change has been made by legislation in the law as repeatedly stated by this court, and it may safely be inferred that the Legislature has accepted our construction of the statute as the proper one, and has acquiesced in it as being in accordance with what the law should be."

In addition to this long and uniform legislative acquiescence, we have its express approval by legislative, as well as constitutional, action. The convention of 1875, in amending the Constitution, provided, in what is now section 33 of article 4 of the Constitution, that "the amendments made to the Constitution of North Carolina by this convention shall not have the effect to vacate any office or term of office now existing under the Constitution of the state, and filled or held by virtue of any election or appointment under the said Constitution and the laws of the state made in pursuance thereof." Section 3872 of the Code also provides that "all persons who shall hold any office under any of the acts hereby repealed shall continue to hold the same according to the tenure thereof." Moreover, a bill entitled, "A bill to be entitled 'An act to restore to the General Assembly the power to prescribe and regulate the tenure of public offices and the duties and emoluments thereof'" was introduced into the Legislature of 1901. This bill provided that every office, place, or position created by the General Assembly should be held and deemed a mere agency or trust, and not a contract, and that no person thereafter appointed should be deemed to have any property right or vested interest in any such office, but that any such office, place, or position might be abolished, changed, vacated, or transferred at the pleasure of the General Assembly. This bill was carefully and elaborately drawn by a most skillful draftsman, and was well calculated to effect its purpose. It was valid under the decision of this court in Caldwell v. Wilson, and, if then passed, would by this time have practically controlled nearly every legislative office in the state. Its sole purpose, openly avowed and fully understood, was to abolish the officeholding rule enunciated in Hoke v. Henderson. What was its fate? It was introduced into the House on February 18, 1901, and was at once referred to the judiciary committee. On the following day it was reported back favorably by that committee, and later, on the same day, was re-committed to the same committee. On March 15th it was indefinitely postponed, without division, and apparently by a unanimous vote. Conceding to the Legislature that devotion to duty and integrity of purpose which they are entitled to claim, we must assume that, if they had thought the purposes of the bill were in furtherance of the public interests, they would have passed it unanimously. As it is, we are equally forced to assume that their unanimous defeat of the bill was a unanimous approval of the principles of judicial decision which the bill was intended to abrogate.

In view of this long and unbroken acquiescence of the people in constitutional conventions, as well as in the General Assembly, I see neither reason nor authority for overruling the uniform decisions of 70 years. Whether this decision, now rendered by a bare majority of the court, will be permanently accepted as the law of the land, remains to be seen. It may be that in the dawn of another day this court may return to "the teachings of the elders." In the meantime, I must rest in my ignorance, if such it be, in union with the deathless dead, content to be no wiser than Ruffin, no purer than Gaston.

COWAN, McCLUNG & CO. v. ROBERTS.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 22, 1904.)

GUARANTY—NOTICE OF ACCEPTANCE—CONSIDERATION—CONDITION—DILIGENCE OF CREDITOR IN COLLECTION.

1. A writing stating that "I hereby guaranty" any debts due or to become due to a certain person, to the extent of $2,000, and "this obligation to remain in full force" till the debt is discharged and the agreement annulled in writing, being a complete guaranty, was binding on the person executing it both as to the debt due and that contracted thereafter, without notice to him of acceptance by the creditor.

2. The extension of additional credit to a debtor is sufficient consideration for a guaranty of a debt already due, as well as for that which should be thereafter incurred.

3. Where one signed a written guaranty, to be delivered only on condition that it be signed by another, and delivered it to the debtors, who delivered it to the creditor without securing the other signature, and the creditor, having no notice of the condition, extended credit on faith of the guaranty, the guarantor is liable.

4. One who guaranties payment of a debt, and not merely that the debtor shall be able to pay, or for collection, is liable without regard to the diligence of the creditor in attempting to collect from the principal debtor.

Montgomery, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; Hoke, Judge.

Action by Cowan, McClung & Co. against W. S. Roberts. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

This action was brought to recover the sum of $2,000, alleged to be due by the defendant on a guaranty. The firm of Roberts Bros. on 9th April, 1899, was indebted to the plaintiffs, who were merchants, in the sum of $1,742.60 for goods theretofore sold and delivered, and were desirous of making further purchases, but the plaintiffs refused to sell any other goods to them unless they would secure by a guaranty their then existing indebtedness and any other amount that might become due for future sales. Roberts Bros. then requested the defendant to give the required guaranty for them, so that they could purchase more goods. The defendant complied with this request by executing a paper writing, of which the following is a copy:

"Knoxville, Tenn., April 8, 1899.

"I hereby guaranty to Cowan, McClung & Co. any debts which Roberts Bros. now owe, or may owe in the future, to the extent of Two Thousand Dollars. This obligation to remain in full force until the debt now due Cowan, McClung & Co. is fully discharged and this agreement annulled in writing.
"W. S. Roberts."

The original paper is in the handwriting of one of the plaintiffs, and was delivered to the plaintiffs by Roberts Bros. On the faith of this guaranty the plaintiffs afterwards sold and delivered to Roberts Bros. several bills of goods amounting in all to $475.45, which amount they failed to pay at maturity, whereupon the plaintiffs notified the defendant of their default, and when, after demand, he refused to pay the amount specified in the guaranty they brought this action in September, 1899. The firm of Roberts Bros. became insolvent and in August, 1899, were adjudicated bankrupts. No assets were left after allotting the exemptions and paying the costs and charges of administering their estate. There was evidence tending to establish the foregoing facts, and also to show that one of the plaintiffs' salesmen demanded of the defendant the payment of the amount of the guaranty, and the latter stated to him that he had seen the guaranty, and wished to have it adjusted, and expressed surprise that he was "in for so much." He also stated to the salesman that he had signed the guaranty with the understanding that the members of the firm of Roberts Bros. would have their father, J. J. Roberts, sign the same with him. The defendant and J. J. Roberts agreed to give notes for the amount of the guaranty, but at the last moment J. J. Roberts refused to sign them. It was also in evidence that on the day after the guaranty was signed the defendant asked Roberts Bros. if J. J. Roberts had signed, to which they answered that he had not, as they had concluded not to go to him, but to get Robinson & Baird to sign it, and the defendant then told them to write to the plaintiffs, and have his name taken off the paper. The defendant inquired every week if they had received any answer from the plaintiffs, and not being able to get a satisfactory answer, wrote himself to the plaintiffs on July 7th, and requested them to erase his name, as he would not indorse for them any longer, because they had deceived him. All the goods had then been sold. The plaintiffs introduced in evidence the following letter from the defendant to them, dated July 24, 1890: "Please send me by return mail a copy of that paper with my name attached to it, sent by Roberts Bros. of this place; also amount purchased by them since the date of that paper, and oblige. * * *". And also a letter from them to the defendant dated July 8, 1890, in reply to his letter of July 7, 1890, as follows: "Your favor of July 7, 1890, is at hand. The credit extended to Roberts Bros. was based on your guaranty to the extent of Two Thousand Dollars and we cannot relinquish this guaranty of yours until the debt made under said guaranty is paid. They owe us at this time upwards of Two Thousand Dollars, and we will thank you to see to it that our debt is paid, as we are very sorely pressed for money at this time." The defendant, who was introduced as a witness in his own behalf, testified that he signed the guaranty upon the condition that J. J. Roberts would sign it with him. He was told by Roberts Bros. that they needed the guaranty in order to get more goods to renew their stock. He further stated that Roberts Bros. had told him that they had written to the plaintiffs to erase his name, but that he mistrusted them, and wrote himself after waiting three months. At the close of the testimony the court intimated that it would charge the jury to find the issue for the defendant, in deference to which intimation the plaintiffs, after excepting, submitted to a nonsuit and appealed.

Merrimon & Merrimon, for appellants. F. A. Sondley, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The defendant's counsel, in his able argument before us, relied upon three grounds of defense: (1) That there was no evidence that the plaintiffs had accepted the guaranty and notified the defendant of their acceptance;

(2) that there was no consideration to support the guaranty as to the debt already due by Roberts Bros. to the plaintiffs, amounting to $1,742.50; (3) that the guaranty was given upon a condition which was never performed, and that it is therefore void, even in the hands of the plaintiffs.

A guaranty is a promise to answer for the payment of some debt, or the performance of some duty, in case of the failure of another person who is himself in the first instance liable to such payment or performance. Carpenter v. Wall, 20 N. C. 279. There is a well-defined distinction between a guaranty of payment and a guaranty for the collection of a debt—the former being an absolute promise to pay the debt at maturity, if not paid by the principal debtor, when the guarantee may bring an action at once against the guarantor; and the latter being a promise to pay the debt upon condition that the guarantee diligently prosecutes the principal debtor for the recovery of the debt without success. Jones v. Ashford, 79 N. C. 172; Jenkins v. Wilkinson, 107 N. C. 707, 12 S. E. 630, 22 Am. St. Rep. 911. The guaranty may also be absolute in form, or one which binds the guarantor to pay unconditionally, or at all events, upon the default of the principal; or it may be in the form merely of an offer to become bound upon the default of the principal. In the former case—that is, where there is an absolute guaranty or an unconditional promise to indemnify against loss by the principal's default—no notice of acceptance by the guarantee is required, the liability of the guarantor being fixed and determined by the ordinary rules in the law of contracts. In the latter case, when the transaction takes the form of an offer merely to become responsible for the principal, notice of acceptance of the offer is, of course, necessary, in order to charge the party who makes the offer as guarantor, and this is so because the minds of the parties have not met; there is no aggregatio mentium until the offer is accepted. There is a well-recognized distinction, therefore, between an offer or proposal to guaranty and a direct promise of guaranty. The former requires in some cases notice of acceptance, while the latter does not. When the offer to guaranty is absolute, and contains in itself no intimation of a desire for or expectation of specific notice of acceptance, it may be supposed that the offerer has a reasonable knowledge that his guaranty will be accepted and acted upon, unless he is informed to the contrary. 2 Parsons, Cont. (8th Ed.) c. 2, § 4, and notes, where the subject is fully discussed. It is said that, if the party distinctly and absolutely guarantees a certain line of credit, it presupposes some sort of a request for a guaranty, emanating from the guarantee, and for this reason no formal acceptance by the guarantee is necessary; but if it be only a proposition to guaranty the credits, and not a positive promise to guaranty them, the acceptance of the proposition must in some way, and within a reasonable time, be communicated, before the guarantor can be held liable on it. Tiedeman on Com. Paper, § 420. In our case the guaranty is a direct and unconditional promise to answer for the default of the principal to the amount of $2,000. The words of the contract are in present—"I do hereby guaranty"—and super-added are the words, "This obligation to remain in full force." Language could not be stronger to express the intention to become liable at once without any expectation of notice that the plaintiffs will accept the guaranty. It was not an offer, nor did it imply an offer merely, but it was in itself a complete and binding promise to guaranty, and needed only the sale of the goods by the plaintiffs to make it otherwise effectual. 1 Parsons, Cont. pp. 466, 467.

We cannot distinguish this case from Straus v. Beardsley, 79 N. C. 59, where the court says: "If the undertaking be to guaranty the contract which may be made, the obligation is not collateral and contingent, but absolute and unconditional, and no notice is necessary. * * * The undertaking is to pay a certain sum, and by the terms of the condition it is discharged only, when the goods have been delivered under its provisions, by actual payment of the purchase price. If the goods are delivered, the contract is to pay for them, and a compliance with this condition is the only means of discharging the obligation. It thus became the duty of the intestate and his associates to ascertain for themselves if the plaintiffs furnished the goods, and that they were paid for, and no notice or demand was necessary to charge them with the debt." See, also, Walker v. Brinkley, 181 N. C. 17, 42 S. E. 383. In Williams v. Collins, 4 N. C. 383-386, this court drew the distinction between a guaranty that a certain person will be able to comply with the proposed contract and one wherein the promise is that he shall comply. In the latter case—which is ours—the court held that the guarantor, "To all legal consequences, became pledged absolutely to the same extent as the principal debtor was bound, as soon as the guarantee parted with his property." In Shewell v. Knox, 12 N. C. 405, all the judges agreed that, if the guaranty is absolute, and addressed to an individual, no notice of acceptance is necessary; and one of the judges held that it was not necessary even when a letter of credit was given under the circumstances of that case. The general principle as to when notice of acceptance of an offer to contract becomes necessary is considered in the cases of Crook v. Cowan, 64 N. C. 743, and Ober v. Smith, 78 N. C. 318. The question as to notice of acceptance in cases of guaranty is very ably and exhaustively discussed, with a full review of the English and American authorities, in the case of Wilcox v. Draper, 12 Neb. 138, 10 N. W. 579, 41 Am. Rep. 763, and the conclusion is reached that, when there is a direct promise of guaranty, no notice of acceptance is required. Allen v. Pike, 8 Cush., at page 242; Powers v. Bumcratz, 12 Ohio St. 273; Bank v. Coster's Ex'rs, 3 N. Y. 212, 53 Am. Dec. 280; Bank v. Phelps, 86 N. Y. 484; 2 Addison Cont. (8th Ed.) p. 84 (*651). The case of Gregory v. Bullock, 120 N. C. 260, 26 S. E. 820, does not apply, as the court held that there was no contract at all in that case, and what is said about the guaranty was with reference to the particular facts under consideration, from which it appeared that there was only "a proposal based upon an uncertain event." The guaranty in this case as to both the past and future indebtedness is evidenced by one and the same instrument, and is supported by one and the same consideration, and we do not, therefore, see why the law applicable to the one should not also determine the liability in the case of the other.

We are of the opinion that the testimony of the defendant as to his interviews and communications with the principals, Roberts Bros., and his subsequent promise to pay for the goods after the guaranty had been executed by him, furnishes some evidence to show that he knew the guaranty had been delivered to the plaintiffs, and that they were acting upon it, or intended to do so.

There was a sufficient consideration to support the guaranty as to the debt already due. The agreement as to the existing and the future indebtedness was indivisible, and was based upon one and the same consideration, which was that the plaintiffs should sell more goods to the principals, to enable them to replenish their stock, which he did. It is not necessary that the consideration should be full or adequate, as in the case of bona fide purchasers for value. If there was any legal consideration, it is sufficient. The promise of the guarantees to furnish the goods was such a consideration, and supports the contract of guaranty. 1 Parsons, supra, pp. 466, 467.

The third ground of defense is not tenable. If the written guaranty was given to the principals upon condition that it should not be delivered to the plaintiffs until it was signed by J. J. Roberts, and they delivered it in violation of the condition, and thus, as is said in the "case," practiced a fraud upon the defendant, the defendant is bound, as the plaintiffs did not participate in this alleged fraud; nor is it shown that they had notice of it. The liability of the defendant is founded upon the principle that, where one of two persons must suffer loss by the misconduct or fraud of a third person, or by his breach of confidence—as in our case—the loss should fall upon him who first reposed the confidence, or who, by his negligence, made it possible for the loss to occur, rather than on an innocent third person. The liability of the defendant in this respect is fully established by the case of Vass v. Riddick, 89 N. C. 6. See, also, Bank v. Hunt, 124 N.

C. 171, 32 S. E. 546; State v. Lewis, 73 N. C. 141, 21 Am. Rep. 461. The plaintiffs agreed to sell the goods to the principals not upon the single consideration that the defendant would guaranty the payment of the price, but upon the further and additional consideration that he would guaranty also the payment of the existing indebtedness. He would not have sold but for the last consideration, and therefore, by reason of the guaranty, he has been induced to change his position, and should the guaranty, as to that indebtedness, be declared invalid, he will be prejudiced as he no doubt would have taken immediate steps to collect his claim, if the guaranty had not been given. It will be impossible for him now to save himself, for the reason that the principals have become insolvent, and have been adjudged bankrupts. We have said this much, though we do not concede that, in order to charge the defendant on the guaranty, it is necessary to show a change in the guarantee's position by which he may be prejudiced if the guaranty is held to be void.

We have not commented upon the evidence in this case, from which it appears that the defendant knew, on the day after the guaranty was given, that it had been sent to the plaintiffs, and had not been signed by J. J. Roberts, and, knowing this fact, and "mis-trusting" the principals, as he did, according to his own testimony, he delayed for nearly three months to notify the plaintiffs of the alleged condition annexed to the guaranty, and in the meantime they had sold the goods. When they refused to surrender their security, he finally agreed to pay the bill for the goods sold after the date of the guaranty. This was a clear case of negligence on his part, and the consequences of this negligence must be visited upon him, and must not be borne by the plaintiffs, who are innocent parties. As said in State v. Lewis, supra, the defendant acted upon the assurance that another would do an act which he knew might be defeated or prevented by various accidents, and he must therefore take the risk of such assurance being fulfilled. He confided in the principals, Roberts Bros., and the condition that J. J. Roberts should sign with him was communicated to them alone. He failed to use ordinary precaution either to protect himself or to protect the guaranteees. If the defendant, in any phase of the testimony can be regarded as an innocent person in this transaction, it yet remains as an inflexible rule of the law that, where one of two innocent persons must suffer, he who has enabled a third person to occasion the loss must sustain it. This is said to be a doctrine of general application, and is a most just and reasonable one. State v. Lewis, supra. To permit the defendant to avail himself of his defense to this action would also contravene that other just and inflexible maxim of the law that no man shall take any advantage of his own wrong.

No question arises in this case as to diligence on the part of the guarantee in collecting the debt from the principals, as this is a guaranty of payment, and not for collection; and, besides, the burden of proof in this respect would be on the defendant. The case shows that notice of the default of the principal was given, and demand made upon the guarantor before the suit was commenced.

Our conclusion is that there was error in the intimation of opinion by the court adverse to the plaintiffs, by which they were driven to a nonsuit. The judgment must therefore be set aside, and a new trial awarded.

New trial.

MONTGOMERY, J. (dissenting in part). Roberts Bros. of Buncombe county, N. C., were in 1899 indebted to the plaintiffs, of Knoxville, Tenn., in the sum of $1,742.62 for goods sold to them, and, being unable to make further purchases on credit without security, procured their uncle, the defendant, to sign and deliver a guaranty in the following words: "Knoxville, Tenn., Apr. 8, 1899. I hereby guarantee to Cowan, McClung & Co. any debts which Roberts Bros. now owe or may owe in the future to the extent of Two Thousand Dollars. This obligation to remain in full force until the debt now due Cowan, McClung & Co. is fully discharged and this agreement annulled in writing." Afterwards the plaintiffs sold and delivered to Roberts Bros. at different times goods and wares to the value of $475.45. This action was brought to recover the $2,000, the amount named in the guaranty. No notice was given by the plaintiffs to the defendant of their acceptance of the guaranty. The guaranty, upon its face, is divisible into two parts. One branch seems to be an obligation for the payment of a debt already existing and due by the principals to the guaranteees, the plaintiffs, and the other branch is in the nature of a security for a debt to be contracted in the future by the principals with the plaintiff. By the terms of the guaranty in respect to the debt already due, the obligation appears to be an absolute guaranty, and, if there was a consideration to support it, the defendant is liable for its payment. There was in fact such a consideration, for the plaintiffs, after the execution of the guaranty, sold and delivered to the principals goods and merchandise of the value of $475.45, and the defendant testified on the trial that the guaranty was made in order that the debt already due might be secured, and that further fresh purchases of goods might be added to the stock of the principals then on hand. It was not necessary that the defendant should have been benefited in order to raise a consideration for the guaranty on the part of the guarantor. Any advantage accruing to, or any consideration moving toward, the principals from the plaintiffs was sufficient in law to make the defendant liable on the first branch of his guaranty.

As to the second branch of the guaranty—that is, the guaranty of the amount of the debt to be contracted in the future by the principals—a notice of acceptance by the guarantees, the plaintiffs, was necessary. That branch of the guaranty was not absolute, and in Gregory v. Bullock, 120 N. C. 260, 26 S. E. 820, the court said: "The answer is that the alleged guarantee gave no notice of his acceptance within a reasonable time. In Adams v. Jones, 12 Pet. 213, 9 L. Ed. 1053, Mr. Justice Story said: 'Notice is necessary to be given the guarantor that the person giving credit has accepted or acted upon the guaranty and given credit on the faith of it. This is no longer an open question in this court.'" In the case of Clune v. Ford, 55 Hun, 479, 8 N. Y. Supp. 719, cited in the argument here, the guaranty was in these words: "Dear Sir, We hereby agree to guaranty the expenses of the members of the Gaelic Athletic Association to the sum of $650 (Six hundred and fifty dollars) or the amount due under that figure." The guarantee was the proprietor of a hotel in New York City at which the members of the association were boarding, and were in arrears for board for the sum of $475. After the delivery of the guaranty, they incurred the further expense of $175. The question of notice of acceptance by the guarantee was not raised, the matter of consideration was the only point in the case, and the court held that the incurring of the $175 expense for the board after the guaranty was given was a sufficient consideration for the amount due in the past. In the case of Paige v. Parker, 74 Mass. 211, cited on the argument here, the court held that the guaranty was an absolute one, and therefore that notice was not necessary. The paper writing in that case guaranteed the prompt payment at maturity of any amount that might be due by the principal for goods, wares, and merchandise to be sold by the guarantee to the amount of $500. The court in that case said that: "However this may be, we are of opinion that the defendant in this case had notice that his guaranty was accepted. An absolute guaranty was written by Blodgett & Co. in their store, and for their benefit. The defendant signed it there, and left it with them as a complete contract, and they retained it. This was an acceptance by them, for which he must be held to have notice." In the case before us the plaintiffs contended that the guaranty was made at the request of the guarantees, and therefore that no notice of acceptance was necessary. But there was no evidence of that fact. The guaranty, it is true, was in the handwriting of the plaintiffs, but it was brought to the defendant by one of the firm of Roberts Bros.; but he made no statement at the time, or at any other time, that the plaintiffs expected that the defendant singly and particularly would sign it. And, besides, the defendant did not deliver it to the plaintiffs in person, and leave it in their possession as a contract, completed, as was the case in Paige v. Parker, supra. There was evidence offered on the trial going to show that the defendant executed the guaranty through a fraud practiced on him by one of the principals. But it was not shown that the plaintiffs had any notice of the fraud. Notwithstanding the fraud practiced on the defendant, he is liable on the first branch of the guaranty, for the reason that the plaintiffs did not participate in the fraud, or have knowledge of it. Bailes on Surety & Guarantor, p. 215.

CARTER et al. v. WHITE.

LAW OF THE CASE—TRESPASS—PARTITION—AFTER-ACQUIRED TITLE—ESTOPPEL.

1. The decision on appeal from an order continuing to the hearing in an action for trespass an injunction restraining trespass, as to the effect of a judgment and decree in another action and subsequent partition proceedings, is not the law of the case, so as to be conclusive on appeal from the final judgment in the trespass suit.

2. In trespass plaintiffs alleged they were the owners in fee simple and in the possession of the land. Defendant denied the allegation of ownership, and alleged he was the owner of a certain undivided interest. The jury found that defendant was entitled to $\frac{1}{84}$ of the land and plaintiffs to the balance, and there was judgment in accordance therewith. In subsequent partition proceedings the land was accordingly divided between the parties. Held, that defendant in an action for subsequently trespassing on the part partitioned to plaintiffs was estopped from claiming an undivided interest in such part under a deed subsequent to the partition, from one having an interest therein at the time of the partition, but who was not a party to the proceedings therefor.

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Currituck County; Council, Judge.

Action by J. C. Carter and others against Leon White. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

See 42 S. E. 442.

The plaintiffs, trustees of Swan Island Club, prosecute this action against the defendant for an alleged trespass upon the land described in the complaint. They demand judgment for damages, and other relief. The defendant, in his answer, denies the ownership as alleged, admits an entry upon the land, and sets up title to an undivided interest therein. Appropriate issues were framed and submitted to the jury. The plaintiffs introduced the record of a civil action lately pending and determined in the superior court of Currituck county, wherein the present plaintiffs James C. Carter and William Minot, Jr., together with W. H. Forbes, trustees of Swan Island Club, were parties plaintiff, and the present defendant was party defendant. It appears from an inspection of said record that the plaintiffs alleged that they were the owners in fee and in possession of the land described in the complaint, and that the defendant had committed acts of trespass thereon. The defendant, in his answer, denied that the plaintiffs were owners, and alleged that he was the owner in fee of an undivided interest in the land. He admitted the entry, and alleged that the same was lawful. The cause came on for trial at fall term, 1896, and the following issue was submitted to the jury: "To what part of the land described in the complaint are the plaintiffs, trustees, and the defendant, respectively, entitled?" and the jury responded, "The defendant to one fifty-fourth part of the whole, and the plaintiffs to the balance thereof." Judgment was rendered, in accordance with the verdict, "that the defendant owns in fee simple one undivided fifty-fourth part of said land, and the plaintiffs, trustees, the balance of the same." A full description of the land is set out in the judgment. Thereafter the plaintiffs in said action instituted a special proceeding, in which the defendant therein, being the defendant herein, was party defendant for the purpose of having partition of the land. In the petition in said proceedings the plaintiffs alleged that they were tenants in common with the defendant of the land described therein, being the same land described in the complaint in the civil action, and setting forth the interest of the parties. The defendant filed no answer, and the court rendered judgment directing partition, appointing commissioners for that purpose. The commissioners made partition, allotting to the defendant by metes and bounds one fifty-fourth part in value of the land, and to the plaintiffs the balance thereof; and on September 23, 1898, their report was duly confirmed by the court, and the parties adjudged to hold the portions allotted to them by the commissioners. Thereupon the defendant introduced a grant for the locus in quo from the state to John Williams, Thomas Williams, and Jeremiah Land; also a deed from Thomas Land to himself, bearing date February 1, 1899. The defendant showed that Thomas was one of the heirs at law of Jeremiah Land, one of the persons named in the grant. The record also states "that it is admitted the defendant is a tenant in common with them to the extent of the interest conveyed to him under the deed from Thomas Land of February 1, 1899, unless the defendant is estopped by the proceedings set up in this action." It was conceded that the present plaintiffs succeeded to the title of the plaintiffs in said action and proceeding. The plaintiffs moved for judgment, the motion was denied, and the plaintiffs excepted. The court instructed the jury that, if they found from the evidence that Jeremiah Land was one of the original grantees from the state to the land in controversy, that he died seised of the same, and that Thomas Land, from whom the defendant bought February 1, 1899, was not a party to the proceedings introduced in evidence, the defendant was not estopped. The plaintiffs excepted, and from a judgment for the defendant appealed.

Pruden & Pruden and Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellants. E. F. Aydlott, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case). The plaintiffs contend that the defendant is estopped from asserting title to any portion of or interest in the land in controversy, first, by the verdict and judgment in the civil action rendered at fall term, 1896; and, second, by the final judgment in the special proceedings for partition of September 23, 1898. The defendant admits that he is estopped to assert any title which he owned at the time of the institution of said action and of said special proceeding, or which he has derived from the parties to said action, or any person claiming under said parties, but insists that he is not estopped to assert title derived from Thomas Land, who claims under Jeremiah Land, neither of whom were parties to, or in any manner bound by, the judgment in said action or proceeding. This is the sole question presented upon this record.

Before proceeding to discuss the authorities relied on by counsel, it will be well to note the disposition of this case made by this court at August term, 1902. 131 N. C. 14, 42 S. E. 442. The case, as then presented, was an appeal from an order continuing to the hearing an injunction restraining the defendant from trespassing upon the land pending litigation. The court decided that the judge was in error in making said order. It is not contended that the judgment then rendered was final, or worked an estoppel upon the plaintiffs to further prosecute this action. The appeal was not from any "judgment," but from a "judicial order," as provided in section 548 of the Code. The term "order" is sometimes applied to an interlocutory judgment or decree. Indeed, under the Codes of the several states interlocutory judgments and decrees are no longer recognized, and "orders" have been substituted therefor. 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. 763. The defendant, however, says that this court, in the opinion rendered, decided the question now presented, and that the decision became the "law of the case," and binding upon us in all other and future steps herein. It is well settled that the decision of a question presented by the record and necessary to be decided in the final disposition of the case is conclusive upon the parties. We will not entertain a proposition to "rehear" a case by means of a second appeal. Pretzfelder v. Ins. Co., 123 N. C. 164, 31 S. E. 470, 44 L. R. A. 424; Setzer v. Setzer, 129 N. C. 296, 40

S. E. 62. This principle, however, cannot be so extended as to include such a case as this. The only question presented by the former appeal was whether his honor should have made the interlocutory order continuing the injunction to the hearing, and in no manner involved the final determination of the case or the rights of the parties upon the trial thereof. We therefore conclude that it is our duty to decide this appeal as if presented for the first time, giving to the views expressed by this court such weight as, in our opinion, they are entitled to. The learned justice, writing for the court, says: "In the action of ejectment the only title in issue was that of the defendants. The plaintiff's title was not in controversy." It was there found and adjudged that the defendant was a tenant in common with the plaintiffs. The record shows "that the action was in trespass and not ejectment." The plaintiffs expressly put their title in issue by alleging that "they were the owners in fee simple, and in the possession of the land." The defendant not only joined issue by denying the allegation of ownership, but by affirmative averment put his title in issue, alleging that he was the owner of an undivided interest, stating the extent thereof. It is difficult to see how the title of the parties could have been more clearly put in issue. Under the practice prevailing prior to the adoption of the Code, the defendant's answer would have constituted a general denial, or plea of not guilty, and a special plea of liberum tenementum. The cause would have been tried upon the general issue and the special plea. A verdict upon the general issue would not have worked an estoppel, for the reason set forth by Pearson, J., in Rogers v. Ratcliff, 48 N. C. 225; Stokes v. Fraley, 50 N. C. 377. In the last case he said: "If the defendant had relied on his special plea, there would have been an estoppel in respect of his title." The effect of a verdict and judgment in actions involving title to land under the Code system is discussed by Pearson, C. J., in Falls v. Gamble, 66 N. C. 455, where he says: "Had Gamble brought his action against Falls for trespass on the land, and Falls in his answer had admitted the possession of Gamble and the committing the alleged trespass by his orders, and put the defense on his title, * * * a verdict and judgment would have worked an estoppel in the same way that it would have done in the old action trespass quare clausum under the plea of liberum tenementum. Indeed, under the Code of Civil Procedure, in an action for land, when the complaint avers title in the plaintiff, the answer admits possession, denies the title of the plaintiff, and sets up title in the defendant, a verdict and judgment will conclude the parties and privies in respect to the title. * * * In an action for land, the plaintiff, if he does not wish the action to try title, should merely allege that he is entitled to the possession, and that the defendant withholds it to his damage; and the defendant, if he does not wish the action to conclude the title, should, in his answer, merely deny the allegation of the complaint so as to make it, in effect, a plea of 'not guilty' or the 'general issue.'" We therefore conclude that the defendant is estopped by the judgment to deny the facts found by the jury, to wit, that the plaintiffs are entitled to $\frac{3}{4}$ of the land. The effect of the judgment was to leave the parties in possession as tenants in common, each having, as between themselves, the interests adjudged by the court upon the verdict.

In the view which we take of the effect of the partition proceeding, it is not necessary to decide the effect of this estoppel upon an after-acquired outstanding title, and we forbear to express any opinion thereon.

The question next arises as to the effect of the final judgment in the partition proceeding, which was put in evidence. It is therein settled that the plaintiffs and the defendant are the owners and entitled to the possession of the several portions of the land allotted to them by the commissioners. The defendant admits that he has entered upon that portion of the land allotted to the plaintiffs, and committed acts of trespass thereon. He seeks to justify such entry by alleging that since said partition he has become the owner of one-ninth undivided interest in said land by virtue of a deed from one Thomas Land, who was at the time of said partition by title paramount the owner of such interest; that neither said Land nor those under whom he claimed were parties to said proceeding. Is the defendant estopped to assert such title against the plaintiffs? The plaintiffs say that he may not do so, for that, first, the final judgment in the proceedings in partition settled the rights of the parties to the entire tract of land, that the quantity to which each party was entitled was fixed by the judgment, and that neither party shall be heard to bring into question the fact so settled and determined either by showing that he then owned a larger interest or that he has acquired an outstanding title; and, second, that there is an implied warranty arising upon the partition, which estops, by way of rebutter, the defendant from setting up such title. In regard to the first question, it is interesting to trace the development of the law on this subject. We are thereby enabled to better understand and distinguish the conflicting decisions. It was held at one time "that a writ of partition, or a petition for partition, which is but a substitute for the former, is a mere possessory action," and that judgment therein did not bar or estop the parties in an action of higher dignity involving title. Freeman on Co-Tenancy, § 529. Mr. Freeman says: "In the greater portion of the United States, actions for partition, like actions in ejectment, have ceased to be merely possessory actions, and have come to involve the right as well as the possession." He has collected in the note (Nicely v. Boyles, 40 Am. Dec. 638) an interesting history of the law and a number of decided cases upon the subject. It is not necessary, however, that we go beyond our own Reports to find a strong, able, and exhaustive discussion of this question. Judge Pearson, writing for the court in Armfield v. Moore, 44 N. C. 157, not only vindicates the wisdom in which the law of estoppel is founded, "without which it would be impossible to administer law as a system," but applies it to proceedings for partition. This case is one of the landmarks of our jurisprudence, familiar to every lawyer in the state. It is there settled beyond controversy that a final decree or a petition for partition works an estoppel of record upon the parties thereto, and that neither shall be heard to say that any of the facts therein settled were not true. He says: "Here we have facts agreed on by the parties, entered on the record—partition and decree in pursuance thereof, possession in severalty. * * * Mr. Freeman says: 'At the present time there can be no doubt that a judgment in a proceeding for the partition of land is as conclusive upon the matter put in issue and tried as a judgment in any other proceeding, and may be set up as a bar to a writ of entry involving the same question of title. And a suit for partition is perhaps the only proceeding known to the law in which every possible question affecting the title to real estate may be made an issue and determined.'" Freeman on Judgments, § 304. This principle is in no manner affected by what is said by this court in Harrison v. Ray, 108 N. C. 215, 12 S. E. 993, 11 L. R. A. 722, 23 Am. St. Rep. 57. That was an action to correct one of the deeds of partition.

The defendant's counsel, in his well-considered brief, insists that the estoppel operates only upon the title which the parties to the record then owned, and does not affect his right to buy in and assert an existing and outstanding title not affected by the judgment. We have found but one case in our Reports in which this question is presented and decided. In Mills v. Witherington, 19 N. C. 433, it appeared that partition had been made upon petition of the defendant against the lessor of the plaintiff in the county court; that the report of the commissioners was duly confirmed and final judgment rendered; and the lessor of the plaintiff afterwards obtained a grant from the state for the land which had been assigned to the defendant in severalty, alleging that the same was vacant. In the action of ejectment against the defendant she rested her right to recover on the grant. The defendant set up the judgment in the partition proceeding as an estoppel. Daniel, J., said: "If the land sought to be recovered by the plaintiff was embraced in the report of the commissioners, which report had been confirmed, and final judgment rendered thereon, then we think the lessor of the plaintiff, who had been a party to that judgment, was concluded, bound, and estopped to controvert anything contained in it. The Legislature, by the act of 1789, gave to tenants in common of real estate the petition for partition in the place of the ancient writ of partition. The final judgment at common law in a writ of partition runs thus, 'Ideo consideratum est quod partitio prædicta firma et stabilis in perpetuum teneatur' (Thomas' Coke, 700); and it was conclusive on the parties and all claiming under them. In Clapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cowen, 569, the court say that the judgment in partition, it is true, does not change the possession, but it establishes the title, and in an ejectment must be conclusive. The judgment of the court adjudging a share to belong to one of the parties and allotting it to him to hold in severalty must be sufficient to authorize him to recover it as to all the parties to the record. The judgment is as to them an estoppel. The act of 1789 gives the same force to a final judgment in a petition for partition of real estate. It declares that the division, when made, shall be good and effectual in law to bind the parties, their heirs and assigns." Battle, J., in his note to this case, says, "The doctrine of estoppel as laid down in this case is clearly established." Chapter 47 of the Code is practically a reenactment of the act of 1789. Mr. Freeman, in his work on Co-Tenancy cites this case in support of the proposition that one of several heirs may be bound by a decree of partition, not only as to rights held by him at the time of partition, but also to the rights subsequently purchased of other heirs who were not parties to the partition; citing the case of Short v. Prettyman, 1 Houst. 334, in which it was expressly held by the Delaware court that "the decree is binding and conclusive, not only as to the rights which the parties had in the premises at the time of the partition, but also as to the rights which they had subsequently acquired from other heirs of the premises, who were not parties to the partition, and were not bound by the admissions or the decree establishing it." The Supreme Court of Missouri, in Forder v. Davis, 38 Mo. 107 (118) says: "We decide nothing here, now, concerning the rights of any stranger to the partition, or of any person not a party thereto. But in reference to this plaintiff we think this judgment operates as a bar against him at law, not only in respect of the estate and title which he then had, but in respect of any title which he might thereafter acquire. There is here no covenant of warranty by deed; but there is such a thing as an estoppel in pais and by matter of record, which, like an estoppel by deed, may have the effect to pass an after-acquired title by operation of law. The partition establishes the title, severs the unity of possession, and gives to each party an absolute possession of his portion. A partition is sometimes altogether the act of the parties, rather than the act of the law. The binding and conclusive judgment is, in its very nature, very much like the old livery of seisin under a feoffment, which was matter in pais, or like a fine or a common recovery, which was matter of record; and these ancient assurances were of that solemnity and high character that they not only passed an actual estate, and divested what title the party then had, but operated by way of estoppel to pass all future estate and possibility of right which he might thereafter acquire. Shep. Touchstone, 2-6, 204-206; Rawle on Cov. title, 402. And we see no good reason why this solemn judgment in partition, which the statute declares shall be firm and effectual forever, should not be allowed to have the same operation against all parties to the record." See, also, Reese v. Holmes, 5 Rich. Eq. 540. These authorities would seem to establish the law as laid down in Mills v. Witherington, supra.

There is another view, however, of the case, which we think equally conclusive. Mr. Freeman says that "the preponderance of the authorities is probably in favor of the theory that, as each co-tenant who has been evicted after a compulsory partition may call upon his co-tenants to contribute their proportions of his loss, each of them is, by his obligation of warranty, estopped from asserting any independent adverse title to the properties assigned to the others." Freeman on Co-Tenancy, § 533. Mr. Washburn thus states the doctrine: "Where partition has been made by law, each partitioner becomes a warrantor to all the others to the extent of his share, so long as the privity of estate continues between them. And, inasmuch as a warrantor cannot claim against his own warranty, no tenant, after partition made, can set up an adverse title to the portion of another for the purpose of ousting him from the part which has been parted off to him. When partition has been made, the tenant to whom a part has been set out is regarded in law as a purchaser for value of the same." Wash. R. P. 723. In Venable v. Beauchamp, 3 Dana, 321, 23 Am. Dec. 74, the question is discussed by Marshall, J., and a valuable note is attached by Mr. Freeman. The learned justice says: "But a further, and, as we think, a conclusive, evidence of the relation subsisting after partition is furnished by the universal acknowledgment and assertion of the principle that to every partition the law annexes an implied warranty. The implied warranty which the law annexes to the partition is, it is true, in many respects special. It is so not only with regard to the person or persons who may take advantage of it, but also with regard to the amount of the recompense; the principle being that the loss shall be equally borne by the parties making the partition, and the effect that the losing party may have a repartition. But, although the effect of the warranty is limited as to the extent of the recompense and the manner in which it is to be made, it is not limited as to the land warranted. It embraces the whole of the land allotted to the warrantee in the partition. As the law makes each partitioner the warrantor of the other as to the extent of the portion allotted to him, whether there be an express warranty in the deed or not, and as no principle is better settled at common law than that a warrantor is barred or estopped to claim against his own warranty, it seems clearly to follow that no party to a partition can be permitted to assert an adverse title for the purpose of ousting another party from his portion, allotted to him by the same partition, though there be no express warranty in the deed." We quote this language at length, as it meets the very ingenious suggestion of the defendant's counsel that the implied warranty should not operate as an estoppel, because in the event of the eviction by a stranger, the defendant will only be liable to the plaintiffs for $\frac{1}{4}$ of the value of the whole land, therefore he should be estopped only to that extent. The effect of a warranty as an estoppel upon the warrantor is so fully and ably discussed by Mr. Justice Walker in Hallyburton v. Slagle, 132 N. C. 957, 44 S. E. 659, that we deem it unnecessary to do more than to refer to his opinion in that case.

We have examined with care every case cited by the defendant's counsel, and, while some of them do lay down the law as contended by him, they are based upon constructions of statutes, as in Massachusetts. Those not thus distinguished are not in harmony with the best considered authorities and decided cases. We therefore conclude that by the judgment in the special proceeding for partition the defendant is estopped to assert his after-acquired title against the plaintiffs. It is immaterial whether this conclusion is based upon the first proposition or the last, as they bring us to the same result, and are consistent with each other. His honor should have instructed the jury in accordance with the plaintiffs' prayer, and for error in failing to do so there must be a new trial.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting). The identical point now presented was passed upon in the former appeal in this case (131 N. C. 14, 42 S. E. 442), and the decision then made by a unanimous court should be the law of this case. It was there said: "In partition proceedings between tenants in common no title passes; only the unity of possession is dissolved, and the title vests in severalty, the common source of title resting undisturbed. Lindsay v. Beaman, 128 N. C. 189, 38 S. E. 811. Land's interest never passed to plaintiffs, and was not represented, nor was he a party; therefore he was not bound by the action or special proceeding. As to him, they were void, and he had a right of entry and possession equally with the other tenants in common, whosoever they might be. By his deed passed all the right of Land to the defendant, who then stood in Land's shoes, and had all the rights and remedies of Land, independent of and notwithstanding the judgment in said action and decree of partition." Thus the identical point now presented has been decided, and in this action the matter is res judicata. It cannot be presented by a second appeal. The remedy, if error was committed by this court, would have been by a petition to rehear. Holley v. Smith, 132 N. C. 36, 43 S. E. 501; Perry v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 333, 40 S. E. 191, and cases there cited. Nor does it vary this rule that the former decision was upon an appeal from the continuance of the restraining order in this cause and this appeal comes up on appeal from a final judgment. The present appeal is solely upon exceptions that the judge charged in exact accordance with the former ruling of this court and his refusal to charge contrary thereto. Setzer v. Setzer, 129 N. C. 296, 40 S. E. 62.

Besides, the former decision was correct. Richardson v. Cambridge, 79 Am. Dec. 767, is a case on all fours, and sustains our former ruling. See, also, Christy v. Water Works, 68 Cal. 73, 8 Pac. 849. In 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. (1st Ed.) 819, it is said: "A party to a partition, who subsequently acquires a new and independent title, which was in no way represented by any of the parties to the suit, may be permitted to assert it." Henderson v. Wallace, 72 N. C. 451, holds that one not a party or privy to partition proceedings is in no way affected by the decree. To same effect 21 A. & E. (2d Ed.) 1186: "The familiar principle that judgments and decrees bind only parties and privies is as applicable to judicial proceedings in partition as to other litigation"—and cases there cited. Land, not having been a party to the partition decree in 1895, his interest was not affected by it. He could recover it or sell it to another, and the defendant could acquire and assert it as well as another. This is not the case of "feeding an estoppel." In Harrison v. Ray, 108 N. C. 215, 12 S. E. 993, 11 L. R. A. 722, 23 Am. St. Rep. 57, it is held that in voluntary, actual partition the deeds convey no title, but simply ascertain by metes and bounds the interest of each. This has been cited and affirmed by Douglas, J., in Carson v. Carson, 122 N. C., at page 648, 30 S. E. 4; by Shepherd, J., in Fort v. Allen, 110 N. C., at page 192, 14 S. E. 685, and again as recently as Harrington v. Rawls, 131 N. C. 40, 42 S. E. 461, and was stated also in Lindsay v. Beaman, 128 N. C. 189, 38 S. E. 811. In 21 A. & E. (2d Ed.) 1193, it is said that "both in voluntary and judicial partition" the decree "does not create or divest any title to, or other right in, the property, but merely severs the unity of possession, and determines the share which each tenant is entitled to possess in severalty." The title of Land could not be divested by the proceeding to which he was not a party, and the purchase of it by White after the decree was not the purchase of an outstanding incumbrance or title, but the purchase of an intact interest in the property, which was not the subject of the litigation and decree to which White had been a party in 1895. In that proceeding he only set up the title to the interest he then had. The interest of Land would be good if now held by him, and White cannot be affected by that decree, as assignee of Land's interest, any more than would be any other purchaser from Land.

MILLSAPS et al. v. ESTES et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 20, 1904.)

WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—LIFE ESTATE—SUBMISSION TO ARBITRATION OF INFANT'S CAUSE—JUDGMENT—VALIDITY.

1. A submission to arbitration of an infant's cause by the infant himself or by his next friend or attorney for him is absolutely void.
2. A judgment founded on a void submission to arbitration is void, and not merely voidable.
3. A will giving to a devisee certain real estate to be and inure to the use of the devisee "during his natural life, not subject to be sold and conveyed by him, but, in case he should have legitimate children, it is to belong to them," gives to the devisee only a life estate in the land devised.

Appeal from Superior Court, Swain County; Hoke, Judge.

Action by Orphia Millsaps and others against G. D. Estes and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

This is an action brought by the heirs of W. R. Millsaps to recover possession of a certain tract of land, together with damages for waste, and also to have certain deeds from said Millsaps to the defendants declared void and canceled, and was heard at the July term of Swain county court before Hoke, J. Plaintiffs claim title under the following clause in the will of John A. Millsaps: "I will and bequeath to my half brother, W. R. Millsaps, all that tract of land [described], to the use of said W. R. Millsaps during his natural life, not subject to be sold or conveyed by him, but in case he should have legitimate children it is to belong to them in like manner." Defendants claim title by purchase from W. R. Millsaps, and set up as defense by way of estoppel a decree in an action begun in 1888 by the same parties against the defendants, which decree declared the deeds from W. R. Millsaps valid, giving defendants title upon their paying a certain sum to plaintiffs, which sum was adjudged by arbitrators to be the difference between the value of the land and the sum actually paid for same to W. R. Millsaps. Said action of 1888 was brought for the infant plaintiffs in the name of Jas. Schuler, next of friend, and the plaintiffs contend that, the application for this appointment of Schuler and his appointment being oral, the same was irregular and void; and allege further that the said action of 1888 was brought to perfect the title to the defendants, and same was a fraud upon the rights of the infant plaintiffs, said W. R. Millsaps, the life tenant, being living at the time. The plaintiffs further contend that the original action was one for waste, and the court did not have jurisdiction to try and adjudicate the title in the same. They further contend that his honor erred in allowing the record in the former action to be amended nunc pro tunc as to the appointment of Schuler next of friend, making same in proper form. Defendants claim to be innocent purchasers without notice.

Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellants. A. M. Fry, for appellees.

MONTGOMERY, J. This action was brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants to recover possession of a certain tract of land situated in Swain county, and also to have annulled a certain decree and judgment in an action between the plaintiffs and certain of the defendants, made at spring term, 1892, of Swain superior court, on the ground that the decree was procured through fraud on the part of the defendants, and because of its invalidity, appearing on its face. The defendants admit in their answer that they hold the land under and by virtue of the decree above mentioned, but they deny that the same was procured through their fraudulent conduct, and insist that the decree is regular in form, valid and binding in law. In order that a clear understanding may be had of this controversy, it is necessary to set out the particulars of the decree, the main point of contention in the case, and also the nature of the action in which it was rendered.

In 1872 John A. Millsaps died, leaving a last will and testament, in which he devised the land described in the complaint to his brother William Millsaps, the father of the plaintiffs. The language of that part of the will is as follows: "I will and bequeath to William Millsaps, my half brother, all that part of real estate in the following boundary, to-wit, * * * to be and inure to use of said William Millsaps during his natural life, not subject to be sold and conveyed by him, but in case he should have legitimate children, it is to belong to them in like manner as the other devises above named." The devisee William Millsaps sold and conveyed the land in fee simple to certain of the defendants (the other defendants claiming title to parts of it by deeds from original purchasers from William Millsaps), and delivered possession of the same to the purchasers. Afterwards, and before the death of their father, the plaintiffs, all being infants (and five of whom were infants at the commencement of the present action) commenced an action in Swain superior court in October, 1888, for the purpose of having the deeds aforesaid, which had been executed by their father, canceled, and the life estate of their father in the land declared forfeited because of waste which had been committed on the same by those who had purchased from him, and for damages on account of such waste. In the action commenced in 1888 the plaintiffs in their first allegation in the complaint declared that they were infants under the age of 21 years, and that they brought the action in the name of their next friend, Joseph Schuler. The defendants, in their answer, denied that allegation. In the second allegation of the complaint the death of John A. Millsaps was set out, and the item of the will which we have quoted above was declared, and the defendants admitted the same. In the third allegation of the complaint it was alleged that the devisee William Millsaps went into possession of the land, and that was admitted by the defendants in their answer. In the fourth allegation of the complaint it was declared that the plaintiffs were the children of William Millsaps, born in lawful wedlock, and owners in fee of the land. The whole of that allegation was denied by the defendants. The fifth allegation of the complaint was in these words: "That after the said William Millsaps entered into possession and took charge of said land regardless of the rights of the plaintiffs, he made some kind of conveyances to the defendants in this action, purporting to convey to them the land in fee; that the defendants took said conveyances for said land with full knowledge of the rights of the plaintiffs, and for a consideration, and with full notice of the fact that the said William Millsaps had only a life estate in said land." The defendants denied the whole of that allegation, although they afterwards on the trial showed those deeds as evidence of ownership of the land. In the sixth allegation the waste and destruction of timber and soil are alleged, and the same is denied.

We have already said that the judgment demanded in that action was that the deeds and conveyances made by William Millsaps, the father of the plaintiffs, to the defendants, be canceled; that the life estate of William Millsaps be forfeited; and for damages for the waste committed on the premises. The complaint and answer in that action were filed at spring term, 1890, but no progress seems to have been made until fall term, 1891, when an order in the following words was made: "By consent of all parties this case is referred to S. R. Gibson and A. H. Hayes, as arbitrators, with power to choose an umpire in case they cannot agree, to go upon the premises of the land in controversy in the action, and value the land claimed by each of the defendants, and make report of the said values so ascertained by them to the next term of this court; and also ascertain and report the amount of money which has been heretofore paid to W. R. Millsaps by each of the said defendants, or those under whom they claim, which shall be embraced in said report as a part of their award; and it is ordered upon the coming in of said report or award, if there shall be a balance found due the plaintiffs upon said land over and above what shall have been found by said arbitrators to have been paid to said W. R. Millsaps, a judgment of this court shall be entered for said balance against each of said defendants for such amounts as shall then be ascertained to be due from them, and retained for further orders." That judgment or order was signed by one of the numerous counsel on each side. Under it the arbitrators acted, and made report to the court. In that report they set forth that there had been paid by the several purchasers, defendants and those who claim under them, to W. R. Millsaps and wife, the sum of $1,194.00; that the land was worth at a fair cash valuation $1,550, "leaving a balance due the plaintiffs of $355.40, to be paid by the defendants as follows: "We consider that Franks has paid full value of the land held by those claiming under said Franks. We consider that G. D. Estes should pay $255, and W. R. Randall should pay $45.40, and John Long should pay $55; making a total of $355.40." At spring term, 1892, that award was made a judgment of the court. In the judgment it was decreed that the deeds for that part of the land bought by Franks be declared valid, passing all the interest of all the heirs at law of W. R. Millsaps in the land described. It was further adjudged that title be made by the clerk of the superior court, as commissioner, to G. D. Estes, John Long, and W. R. Randall, separately, when they shall have paid the amounts found to be due by them into the office of the clerk of the superior court, and that the clerk's deed shall pass all the interest of the said parties and all the interest of all the heirs at law of the said W. R. Millsaps." Upon the trial of the present action his honor submitted the issues in the following words to the jury: "(1) Are the proceedings and decree in the superior court of Swain county, declaring titles to land now claimed by the plaintiffs to be in the defendants on payment of certain sums of money, and have the terms of said decree been complied with by the defendants, and money paid according to the terms of said decree? (2) Was money so paid taken and received by the plaintiffs in former actions, and who are now plaintiffs in the present action? (3) Was such proceeding regular in form? (4) Were such proceeding and decree instigated and procured by fraud? (5) Were said proceedings and decree within the scope and purpose of the suit, and within the power and jurisdiction of the court? (6) Are said proceedings and judgment a valid estoppel of record against the plaintiffs, barring the plaintiffs from maintaining the present action against the defendants? (7) Did the defendants or either of them buy for full value and take their titles for land held by them without notice or knowledge of any charge of fraud or claim of invalidity of said decree? (8) Are the plaintiffs owners of the land sued for and described in the complaint? (9) Are the defendants in wrongful possession of said land? (10) What damages are the plaintiffs entitled to recover?" His honor instructed the jury that if they believed the evidence they would answer the first two issues "Yes," the fourth "No," the fifth "Yes," the sixth "Yes," the seventh "Yes," the eighth and ninth "No," and the tenth "Nothing."

The whole record of the action commenced in 1888 was introduced as evidence in the present action, and it appeared that Estes, Long, and Randall paid into the clerk's office the amounts found to be due by them, respectively, by the arbitrators; and that the clerk of the court, as commissioner, made deeds to them according to the judgment and award. There was also undisputed evidence that the clerk disposed of that fund, the total being $380.95, as follows: To the attorneys of the plaintiffs, $178.12; and to the guardian of the plaintiffs, $193.13.

It is not necessary for us to discuss whether or not his honor should have submitted certain of the evidence in this case on the issue of fraud in the matter of the procuring of the order of arbitration and the proceedings under the same. It is enough for us to say that the order or judgment of the court in the action of 1888, referring the case to arbitrators, and the judgment which followed on the report of the arbitrators, were coram non jure, and on that account totally void. The infants in this action were the real parties to the suit, and not Schuler, who appeared as their next friend; and an infant cannot give his consent to a submission of his cause to arbitration, and any attempt to do so for him is absolutely void. Rudston v. Yates, March 11, 1141, 1 Rolle, Abr. Arb., A, 268; Britton v. Williams, 6 Munf. (Va.) 453; Tucker v. Dabbs, 12 Helsk. 18; Jones v. Payne, 41 Ga. 23. There can be cases found in which it is held that an attorney can submit his client's cause pendente lite without the consent if his client, but it will be found on examination that the clients are of full age, as in the case of Morris v. Grier, 76 N. C. 410. We have found no case in our researches where an infant's cause of action has been submitted to arbitration.

We have said that this order of arbitration and the judgment founded upon it were not voidable, but were void; and it follows, therefore, that all that was done under them, and all titles to any part of the plaintiff's land procured by any person through them, are invalid, and of no force; and his honor was in error in instructing the jury to answer the third, fifth, sixth, and seventh issues "Yes." And he was also wrong in instructing the jury to answer the eighth and ninth issues "No," and the tenth issue "Nothing."

Such of the plaintiffs' special prayers for instruction as were of like effect with the opinion we have expressed ought to have been granted. It was argued before this court by the counsel of the defendants (appellees) that outside of the award and judgment upon the award the defendants' deeds from W. R. Millsaps were valid, and passed the title to the land to the defendants, because the language of that item of the will of John A. Millsaps, in which the land described in the complaint was devised, constituted William Millsaps tenant in tail, and under our statute (Code, § 1325) estates in tail are converted into fee-simple estates. We can see no likeness between the estate created in William Millsaps by the will of his brother to that of an estate in tail under the statute de donis. In estates tail the tenements were given to a man and the heirs of his body, for instance, and not to a man for his natural life, and then to the heirs of his body or to his children. And the incidents of an estate in tail were that the tenant in tail could commit waste without being called to account for the same; that the wife of the tenant in tail could have her dower in the estate tail; that the husband of the female tenant in tail might be tenant by the curtesy of the estate tail. In our case the language of the will is that the property is to be and inure to the use of the said William Millsaps during his natural life, not subject to be sold and conveyed by him. His estate under the will is but a life estate, and has none of the incidents of an estate in tail.

Error.

STATE v. DANIELS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 22, 1904.)

MURDER—PREMEDITATION—PEREMPTORY INSTRUCTION.

1. Under Acts 1893, p. 76, c. 85, § 3, declaring that the jury must fix the degree of murder, and the statute providing that murder in the first degree may be committed by poisoning, lying in wait, etc., in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate a felony, or by willful premeditation and deliberation, it is error for the court to instruct that certain facts show premeditation, as a matter of law.

2. The fact that pending a trial for murder, while the jury were on the street, in charge of an officer, the father of deceased bowed to one of the jurors and shook hands with him, where no conversation was had between the parties, though improper and calculated to shake confidence in the integrity of the verdict, was no ground for reversal.

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Duplin County; Geo. H. Brown, Judge.

George W. Daniels was convicted of murder, and appeals. Reversed.

The defendant moved for a new trial upon the ground, among others, of misconduct of the jury. The court heard the testimony, and found the facts as follows: "During the progress of the trial, and before the charge of the court, the jury, in a body, by the officer in charge, were carried to Dr. Jones' office for medical treatment to one juror. While there, some person walked up and spoke to two of the jurors, and shook hands with them, and talked a minute or more; and the jury walked away in one direction, and he walked the other. The court is unable to ascertain who the person was, and to whom he spoke. The court finds, upon the testimony of the officers and two jurors, that W. H. Maxwell, father of deceased, was passing by the jury on the street, bowed to the juror Hollingsworth, and extended his hand, and the juror shook it, but no word was passed. The court finds that on another day, before the charge was delivered, said Maxwell passed the jury near a stable, where they had gone for a private purpose, and shook hands with Juror Miller as he passed, but no word was spoken." The court declined to grant the motion.

Stevens, Beasley & Weeks, for appellant. Carlton & Williams and the Attorney General, for the State.

OONNOR, J. The prisoner was charged with the murder of one Maxwell, and from a conviction of murder in the first degree, and the judgment thereon, appealed. The prisoner's counsel requested several prayers for special instructions, all of which were refused. In the view we take of the case, it is unnecessary to pass upon the exceptions to his honor's refusal to give them. There was, besides the prisoner, but one eyewitness to the homicide. Rufus Stroud, introduced by the state, testified that he saw Maxwell alive last in the woods, dipping turpentine. George Daniels shot him. He saw the prisoner standing in the path; the deceased standing by the side of a pine. The prisoner asked the deceased why he went to his house last night, and the deceased said he did not go. The prisoner said: "You are a damned liar. You did. I am going to kill you. Throw up your right hand." The prisoner then shot him. He was in about 10 or 11 steps from the deceased. Shot once. When he shot, the witness ran off. The deceased ran to him and said, "I am shot." He died in a short time. The deceased was about three feet from the prisoner when shot, and had a turpentine dipper in his hand. There was evidence on the part of physicians that the deceased died from wounds inflicted by the prisoner. The prisoner testified in his own behalf that he was at his tobacco barn the night before the homicide. That he left there that morning about sunup. Susan Whaley and Hannah and their children stayed with him from midnight till he left. All started to the prisoner's house. He told Susan to prepare breakfast. The night before he had taken his gun to the tobacco barn, and as he passed by the barn, going down the path, he stopped and shot the gun. Went down the path towards the Pink Hill Road, calling the women. Had started to George Turner's, where they said they were going. Was going along the path, about 50 yards from the fence. Saw the deceased. He was about 40 yards in the woods from the road. Was standing on one knee on the ground, and one hand on a log. Did not know he was in the woods at this point. Was calling Susan and Hannah as loud as he could. Some one said, "What is the matter?" Looked in the direction of the voice, and the deceased arose and said, "What do you want?" He said, "I want my people." The deceased said, "You shan't have them. I will protect them." The deceased was coming towards the prisoner with a dipping iron in his hand—a piece of flat iron, 12 inches long, and nearly 1 inch thick to a point, and handle 5 feet long. The deceased said that the prisoner had been talking about him. He was very mad. The prisoner said, "Will, if you don't quit coming on me, I will shoot you." He said, "Shoot, shoot." Was then about 10 or 15 steps off, and had about stopped when the prisoner shot. Had the dipper in one hand, up against the tree, and with his hands spread out against two trees. He was not in striking distance, making no effort to strike the prisoner with the dipper. Had no previous difficulty with the deceased. The prisoner was looking "for his folks." Snapped the gun at him before it fired. The prisoner had not seen the deceased before on that morning. Did not know where he was. Did not know whether the women were in the woods. The prisoner and the deceased were perfectly friendly, had not had any difficulty, and was not mad with him. When he shot, was "scared" of him. He weighed about 140 pounds. "I shot him because I was scared of him, with the dipper, coming towards me. Was on good terms with him. Never went there to shoot him. Did not expect to see him." The prisoner ran off, and went to Jim Maxwell's, and told him he had shot Will Maxwell, and he asked him why, and he told him "that Maxwell was coming with a turpentine dipper at me." Told several others. Went to Stroud and surrendered. "Told him to take me in charge." There was much testimony in regard to the prisoner's mind before and after the homicide. Several witnesses described his conduct, and expressed the opinion that he was crazy, some of the witnesses saying that "he was insane." Dr. Smith, who heard the testimony, gave it as his opinion that "he was not insane." Dr. Kennedy testified that he had known the prisoner four years, and had heard the testimony. "From the evidence of the witnesses, and my previous knowledge of him, I would not say he was bright. I think he was crazy, from the way he did and the way he acted."

The prisoner excepted specially to portions of the charge. The only exception which we deem it necessary to discuss is to the following instruction: The court stated to the jury that "only two persons have testified that they were eyewitnesses to the homicide. The one is the prisoner, and the other is Rufus Stroud." The court then read the evidence of Rufus Stroud, and charged the jury that, "if you find those facts to be true beyond a reasonable doubt, the prisoner is guilty of murder in the first degree, because they show premeditation and deliberation upon the part of the prisoner." There was evidence proper to be submitted to the jury to show premeditation, and, if believed by them, to justify the verdict of murder in the first degree. Hence there was no error in the refusal of his honor to instruct the jury as prayed by the prisoner in that respect. The sole question, therefore, to be considered, is whether his honor was correct in saying to the jury that, if they found the facts to be as testified by Stroud, "the prisoner is guilty of murder in the first degree, because they show premeditation and deliberation."

Whether an act is the result of premeditation and deliberation is a fact to be found by the jury, and not a conclusion of law to be drawn by the court. In State v. McDonald, 133 N. C. 680, 45 S. E. 582, Mr. Justice Walker, writing for the court, said: "When an act becomes criminal only by reason of the intent, unless the intent is proved, the offense is not proved, and this intent must be found by the jury as a fact from the evidence. It is for them to infer, and not for the court." The authorities cited in the opinion fully sustain and illustrate the principle. It may be that, as an inference to be drawn by the jury, we should not hesitate to say that they came to a correct conclusion. In the light of the charge, they were not permitted to draw an inference, but, upon finding the account of the homicide to be true, as testified by Stroud, it became their duty, and they were required, as a conclusion of law, to find the prisoner guilty of murder in the first degree. Assuming that the jury followed his honor's instruction, and "took the law from the court," as it was their duty to do, they did not consider, pass upon, or decide the question of fact, the existence of which is an essential element in the crime charged. They did not and could not inquire whether the act was premeditated. The case as presented may be likened unto a special verdict in which the question is submitted to the court, as one of law, whether, upon the facts found, there was premeditation. The statute (Acts 1893, p. 76, c. 85, § 3) declares that the jury must fix the degree of murder. To do this, they must find the fact that the murder was committed either by means of poisoning, lying in wait, imprisonment, starving, torture, or by willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate certain enumerated crimes or other felony. The judge should instruct the jury what constitutes lying in wait or premeditation, but he may not go further, and instruct them, as a conclusion of law, that certain facts show premeditation. Mr. Justice Douglas, writing for the court in State v. Booker, 128 N. C. 713, 31 S. E. 376, said: "When the circumstances of the killing do not bring it within the classes which by the statute are made per se murder in the first degree, the state must prove deliberation and premeditation, but this may be done by circumstances, and not necessarily by express and positive evidence." It will be observed that the statute classifies murder in the first degree: (1) By poisoning, lying in wait, etc. Herein the state is not required to prove premeditation, because the manner of doing the act necessarily involves premeditation. The presumption is made, by the statute, irrebuttable. When committed in either of the methods mentioned, it is per se murder in the first degree. A person who lays poison for or waylays or tortures another unto death will not be heard to say that he did not premeditate. State v. Gilchrist, 113 N. C. 673, 18 S. E. 319. (2) In the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate a felony. Herein it is not necessary to show premeditation. The killing under these conditions, although without premeditation, is declared to be murder in the first degree. State v. Covington, 117 N. C. 834, 23 S. E. 337. (3) By willful premeditation and deliberation. The line which separates felonious homicides committed otherwise than as defined in the foregoing classes, without premeditation, from those accompanied by the additional mental condition called "premeditation," is shadowy and difficult to fix. The law cannot safely prescribe any uniform and universal rule in regard thereto. As in questions of negligence and the like, it can only define the term, and submit the question of its existence to the jury. It is well settled that the state of mind, intent, sanity, etc., is always a question of fact for the jury. The principle is well stated by the present Chief Justice in Freeman's Case, 122 N. C. 1012, 29 S. E. 94: "The degree of murder depends upon the facts as the jury find them to be, applying the law laid down by the court upon that state of facts. * * * As the jury is to determine the degree of murder, it is for the jury, not the court, to find from the evidence whether there was the premeditation which would raise the killing from murder in the second degree (presumed from the killing with a deadly weapon) to murder in the second degree." This case comes clearly within the third class. There was no lying in wait. "Whenever the degree of the offense depends upon the particular intent with which an act is done, the intent to be inferred from the circumstances is for the jury, and every fact which will throw light upon that question may be given in evidence." Filkins v. People, 69 N. Y. 101, 25 Am. Rep. 143. Danforth, J., in McKenna v. People, 81 N. Y. 360, says: "Whether this intent existed could not be a question of law. It was necessarily to be determined by the jury from all the facts and circumstances of the case, and, if not found, the prisoner could not be convicted. * * * The charge as given may well have been understood by the jury as involving an opinion of the court upon this as well as other elements of the crime. * * * Instead of informing the jury what must be established to make out the offense, and leaving it to them to determine whether it had or had not been done, the judge says, 'Enough has been proved, if you believe the witnesses on the part of the people.' Their attention is directed to evidence of inculpation, merely. Its weight is stated to them as sufficient in law to sustain a conviction for the grave offense, so that the question of fact to which their minds have been turned relates to the credibility of certain witnesses, and not the weight or measure of their testimony, or the existence of the intent. How far that testimony was modified or neutralized by that produced by the prisoner, or what inferences should be drawn from any of it, is virtually excluded from their inquiry."

While his honor correctly instructed the jury in regard to the suggestion of insanity or intoxication as relieving the prisoner from responsibility, it may be that, if the jury found that the homicide was committed in the manner and under the circumstances testified by Stroud, they would, if permitted to consider the entire evidence, have found in the testimony regarding the prisoner's peculiar behavior before and after the killing sufficient evidence to create a reasonable doubt as to the question of premeditation. They may, in this view, have reached the conclusion that, while the evidence in his behalf did not rebut the presumption of malice raised by the law from the use of a deadly weapon, it did create a reasonable doubt whether the prisoner was capable of premeditating and deliberating. However this may be, they were entitled and it was their duty to consider all of the evidence, and find all of the essential facts, before arriving at their verdict. The prisoner, however guilty, is entitled to be tried by "the ancient mode of trial by jury," in which the court decides all questions of law, and the jury all questions of fact. "The jury are the constitutional judges not only of the truth of testimony, but of the conclusions of fact resulting therefrom." Henderson, J., in Bank v. Pugh, 8 N. C. 198. For the error in the instruction, there must be a new trial.

We concur with his honor's ruling upon the motion to set aside the verdict for improper conduct on the part of the father of the deceased and of some of the jurors. We are quite sure that his honor felt, as we do, that such conduct was exceedingly improper, and calculated to shake confidence in the integrity of the verdict, so far, at least, as one of the jurors was concerned. The absolute, unquestioned, and unquestionable integrity of jurors in basing their verdicts upon the law and the evidence is of such vast and vital importance to suitors and people that any conduct which casts upon it the slightest suspicion merits severe condemnation from the courts. While the ancient custom of keeping the jury in close confinement, "without meat or drink," has been abandoned, we should be careful to see to it that while impaneled, and, in a way, set apart from the public, to true deliverance make between the state and the prisoner, the strictest vigilance be had to protect them from suggestions or approach by interested persons. The conduct of the father of the deceased was calculated to arouse suspicion that he desired to exert some influence over some of the jurors. The judge cannot, in the discharge of his duties, keep a jury at all times in his presence, and is directed to place them in charge of a sworn officer. It is the duty of the officer to promptly report to the judge any improper conduct on the part of jurors or other persons in this respect. Judges are often embarrassed to find, after long and expensive trials, verdicts in capital cases brought into question by improper conduct of the jury, often the result of thoughtlessness too frequently not so easily explained. While we approve the course pursued by his honor, we feel, in view of the frequency with which these questions are brought to our attention upon appeals, that it would be well to enforce the law by punishment for contempt, for questionable conduct by or towards jurors while engaged in the trial of capital felonies.

New trial.

OLARK, C. J. (dissenting). The entire evidence, except that of the prisoner himself, is that of Stroud, who testified that he "saw the prisoner standing in the path; the deceased standing by the side of a pine. The prisoner asked the deceased why he went to his house last night, and the deceased said he did not go. The prisoner said, 'You are a damned liar. You did. I am going to kill you. Throw up your right hand.' The prisoner then shot him. He was in about ten or eleven steps from the deceased. Shot once. When he shot, the witness ran off. The deceased ran to him and said, 'I am shot.' He died in a short time." The court read the above testimony to the jury, and told them, "If you find those facts to be true, beyond a reasonable doubt, the prisoner is guilty of murder in the first degree, because they show premeditation and deliberation upon the part of the prisoner." In this there could be no error, for if, under those circumstances, the prisoner said: "I am going to kill you. Throw up your right hand"—and then shot and killed, there was premeditation and deliberation. There was the declaration of the intention to kill, the ordering the deceased to throw up his hands, and then the aiming, firing, and killing. That the deliberate purpose is formed, for however brief a period before the killing, is sufficient, under all our authorities. State v. Dowden, 118 N. C. 1145, 24 S. E. 722; State v. Foster, 130 N. C. 606, 41 S. E. 284, 89 Am. St. Rep. 876; and many others. Here, if the evidence is believed, the purpose was not only formed, but announced, by the prisoner. When premeditation is an inference to be drawn from other facts, it is for the jury. But when the jury find that the prisoner announced his intention to shoot, and ordered the deceased to hold up his hands, and that then, without provocation, the prisoner did fire and kill, there is no inference to be drawn. The jury find the fact of premeditation when they find that the prisoner announced his intention, already formed, to kill, and then, without provocation, did kill. Authorities can be cited, but no ruling of any court could add force to this simple statement of the facts which the jury found to be true.

NEWTON et al. v. BROWN et al.

TRESPASS ON REALTY—INJUNCTION PENDENTE LITE.

1. Where plaintiffs, suing to restrain defendants from cutting timber on certain lands, showed possession under color of title for 30 years, defendants, claiming merely under an entry on the lands as vacant, entitling them to a grant from the state, were not entitled to an injunction pendente lite restraining plaintiffs from cutting timber.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pender County; Brown, Judge.

Action by H. B. Newton and others against H. A. Brown and others. From an order granting an injunction restraining plaintiffs from trespassing on the land in controversy pending suit, they appeal. Reversed.

Routree & Carr, J. D. Bellamy, and R. G. Grady, for appellants. Iredell Meares and Frank D. Winston, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. The plaintiff H. B. Newton alleges that he is the owner of a tract of land in Pender county containing more than 8,000 acres; that the plaintiff W. L. Parsley is the owner of all the timber, 12 inches and upwards in diameter, standing upon said land; that they and those under whom they claim have been for more than 21 years, and are now, in the open, notorious, adverse, and exclusive possession of said land, under known and visible boundaries; that the defendants have entered upon said lands "without any color of title, and unlawfully, willfully, wantonly, and maliciously cut around or belted several hundred cypress trees, and left them in such a condition that they will die," etc.; and that they threaten to continue and are continuing to cut, injure, and destroy the timber standing on said land, and to commit other trespasses thereupon, etc. They ask that the defendants be enjoined from continuing further trespasses, etc., for damages, and other relief. The defendants deny the material allegations of the complaint, and, for a further defense, aver that the land claimed by plaintiff, or the portion thereof in controversy, was prior to January 1, 1903, vacant land, and title thereto was in the state; that on January 6, 1903, and on other dates named in the answer, certain entries were made, which are fully set out in the answer; one of said entries being by J. W. Rowe afterwards transferred to H. A. Brown, Jr.; another entry being made by H. A. Brown, Jr.; and the third by defendant A. W. Taylor. They allege that, in respect to the first entry, the defendant H. A. Brown has perfected the same, and is entitled to a grant therefor, and, having paid the money to the Secretary of State for said grant, is the equitable owner of the land described in said entry; with respect to the second entry, he has acquired an equitable interest therein. The same allegation is made in respect to the entry of A. W. Taylor. The defendants further say that, in respect to the last two entries named, the plaintiffs H. B. Newton and W. L. Parsley filed a protest, all of which is fully set forth in the record. They deny that the plaintiffs are the owners of the land, because the same was public land prior to said entries. They allege that the plaintiffs are cutting timber and otherwise injuring the land to their damage. They further allege that the plaintiffs claim title to the land under a deed from L. A. Hart and E. D. Hall to Jacob Roberts and C. L. Woodworth, dated 30th November, 1870, and by intermediate deeds to plaintiffs. Defendants allege that the plaintiffs have had no possession under such general description, and that their possession is limited, if they have had any possession thereto, under certain deeds from one Willey and others to said Hall, bearing date of December 12, 1850, and that said deed only conveys portions of said land; that the said Hart and others undertook to convey by the description set out in the complaint, and, in doing so, included some 9,000 acres of land, although by the conveyances to them they only acquired about 2,000 acres of that land, which has never been reduced to actual possession by the plaintiffs. In accordance with the prayer in the complaint, the judge on the 12th day of October, 1903, made an order enjoining and restraining the defendants from cutting timber or otherwise trespassing upon the said lands. This order was made upon the complaint and certain deeds and affidavits introduced in evidence. From this order no appeal was taken. On the 9th day of November, 1903, his honor Judge Brown issued notice to the plaintiffs to show cause why they should not be enjoined from committing trespass on the land, and, upon the return of the notice, and on reading the affidavits introduced by the plaintiffs and defendants, he made an order on December 21, 1903, continuing said injunction against the plaintiffs until the hearing of said order. His honor recites as follows: "The defendants have already been enjoined from cutting or removing timber from said lands at instance of plaintiffs in this action. The cause was submitted on written brief, affidavits, and plats. Having considered the same, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs should be restrained pending this action. It is true that a considerable part of the land is claimed by defendants under entries. I am of opinion that they have acquired thereby, and by payment of the money to the state, such an equitable interest in the lands in controversy as should induce a court of equity to prevent the lands being denuded until the title is settled, and this may be done independent of the act of 1901, p. 900, c. 666. The spirit and purpose of that act covers, I think, this case also. Let the defendants give bond in the sum of $1,000, with usual conditions, to indemnify plaintiffs, to be approved by the clerk of Pender county superior court, and then let the injunction be continued until the final hearing." From this order the plaintiffs appealed.

The order made by his honor continuing the injunction against the defendants is based upon the finding that the plaintiffs have made out a prima facie title to the land in controversy. We think his honor is fully sustained by the deeds, affidavits, and other exhibits filed before him. The only question presented by the appeal from the order restraining the plaintiffs from proceeding is whether the defendants have made out such a prima facie case as entitles them to the order made by his honor. Without discussing the conflicting affidavits in regard to the boundaries of the several tracts of land in controversy, we think there is sufficient evidence, if believed, to show that the plaintiffs and those under whom they claim have been in possession of the land in controversy since 1870. If that be true, the state had thereby become divested of its title by such possession, and the land was not subject to entry. While it is true that an entry made in accordance with the statute confers upon the party making it an equity to call for a grant upon paying the amount prescribed by the statute and otherwise conforming with the law, we do not think that he has such an interest in the land as of itself entitles him to interfere with the possession and use of the land by those who show a possession for 30 years. The entry is not based upon any declaration by the state or its officers that the land is vacant. It is, on the contrary, the simple statement by the person making the entry that such land is vacant. He pays no money, and assumes no obligation by making the entry. He acquires nothing more than an option to complete his entry and call for a grant. At the time that this action was brought and the pleadings filed, no grants were issued for either of the tracts of land in controversy. On the 18th day of November, 1903, a grant was issued by the state for the tract of land entered on the 6th of January, 1903, containing 500 acres. In State v. Bevers, 86 N. C. 588, Ruffin, C. J., says: "It is notorious that grants are always issued at the instance of the grantee, and upon his suggestion that the land is vacant. The state does not warrant it to be so, or the liability of the land to entry. Nor is it any fraud in the state to grant land that is not so liable." We cannot think that one who simply declares that a body of land is vacant, and thereupon proceeds to lay an entry, acquires such an interest as entitles him to interfere by injunction with the possession of one who is found to be in possession. If he shall follow his entry by taking out a grant and paying his money, he has an adequate remedy to sue the person in possession upon his grant.

It will be observed that his honor does not base his order upon a finding of facts required by chapter 666, p. 900, of the Laws of 1901, but says expressly that independent of the statute the defendant is entitled to the injunction. It will be well to consider the case as if the defendants had brought the action, asking the court to restrain the plaintiffs from cutting the timber from the land until they could perfect the entries by obtaining grants from the state, and prosecuting their action for the recovery of the land. Their asserted right to affirmative relief is brought forward in the nature of a cross-bill or, in the language of the Code, a counterclaim. Their right to do so is recognized in Lumber Co. v. Wallace, 93 N. C. 22. When the defendant relies upon a counterclaim and demands affirmative relief, he becomes in that respect an actor, and takes upon himself the burden of proof, as if he were the plaintiff. Viewed from this standpoint, in the light of all the testimony, the plaintiffs are in the possession of certain lands, the boundaries of which are uncertain and in controversy; the defendants alleging that they are cutting timber beyond the boundaries covered by their deeds on lands belonging to the state; that they have made entries upon a portion of the lands, and thereby acquired an equity to call upon the state for grants by complying with the statute. The plaintiffs set up deeds which they claim cover the lands in controversy, and assert possession since 1870. We do not think that the defendants would, in this view, be entitled to an injunction to restrain Newton and Parsley from cutting the timber. It is settled by the uniform decisions of this court that an entry of lands creates an "inchoate equity" in them, which entitles the enterer, upon payment of the amount fixed by the statute, to a grant. No case is cited in the defendants' well-prepared brief in which an action for any purpose has been sustained before the issuance of the grant. This court has expressly held in Hall v. Hollifield, 76 N. C. 476, that "the public lands of the state are open to entry by any of its citizens, and the first declaration of intention is made on the books of the entry taker in the county where the land lies, and this gives priority, called a 'pre-emption right.' No estate or interest in the land is thereby acquired. No consideration is paid, and none of the requisites for that purpose are performed, but simply the right to be preferred when the money is paid, and the other formalities required by the statute are complied with." That the court will by injunction protect the owner of an equitable estate from waste cannot be questioned. Whether one having an inchoate equity, or a bare right to call for a grant from the state, will be permitted to enjoin the person in possession from using the land for the purpose for which it is fit, is an entirely different question. We find no case in this state in which the court recognized the right of an enterer to maintain an action for any purpose. Brem v. Houck, 101 N. C. 627, 8 S. E. 365, is an express authority that he cannot have injunctive relief against the issuing of a grant to another person. Courts of equity prior to 1855 were very slow to interfere by injunction with the use and enjoyment of land by those in possession, and declined to do so unless the plaintiff had established, or was seeking in the law courts to establish, his legal title. It was necessary to allege and show that irreparable injury was threatened. Usually it was necessary to show insolvency. Lyerly v. Wheeler, 45 N. C. 267, 59 Am. Dec. 596; Thompson v. Williams, 54 N. C. 176; Bogey v. Shute, 54 N. C. 180; Id., 57 N. C. 174; Thompson v. McNair, 62 N. C. 121. At the session of 1835 (page 664, c. 401) an act was passed declaring that "it shall not be necessary to allege the insolvency of the defendant," etc. The language of Merrimon, J., in Lumber Co. v. Wallace, supra, is peculiarly appropriate to this case: "While we are of the opinion that the defendants are entitled to relief, we think that the plaintiffs ought not to be restrained from cutting, using, or selling timber until the action shall be heard upon its merits. No special or peculiar cause is alleged why the timber may not be cut and sold. This is not a case wherein a party aggrieved alleged irreparable injury. We can see no adequate reason why the defendants, if they succeed in this action, may not be fully compensated in damages, if adequate means shall be afforded them for ascertaining the reasonable value of the timber. This may be done. It is against the policy of the law to restrain industries and such enterprises as tend to develop the country and its resources. It ought not to be done, unless in extreme cases, and this is not one." Lewis v. Lumber Co., 99 N. C. 11, 5 S. E. 19, in which it is said: "It appears that the defendant is cutting and carrying away from the land ordinary forest timber, suited to the purpose of marketing lumber for the markets. Obviously the plaintiffs may be compensated in damages for this timber."

To the suggestion that the land covered by the defendants' entries is included in the Wheaton grant of 1795, and that the deed of the sheriff to the state under a tax sale vests the title in the board of education, and is therefore not subject of entry, it is sufficient to say that it is not necessary that we should express any opinion. It is worthy of consideration, at the proper time, whether lands thus granted by the state, and purchased for delinquent taxes, come within the terms "vacant and unappropriated lands belonging to the state." Ruffin, J., in State v. Bevers, supra, says that they were subject to entry, but that by the act of 1872 (page 70, c. 40, § 30) they were ceded to the board of education. The affidavits tend to show that the lands in controversy are covered by the Wheaton grant.

Upon the whole record, we think that his honor should not have restrained the plaintiffs. Because the court will enjoin, at the instance of one in possession, a continuing and highly injurious trespass by one having an "inchoate equity" not based upon anything more than his "laying an entry," it does not follow that it will at his instance interfere with the use and possession of one who has made out a prima facie case of a possession under color of title for more than 30 years. If the defendants are so advised, they may move the court to require the plaintiffs to file a bond to indemnify them against loss by cutting the timber if they shall finally make good their intention. It will be within the sound discretion of the judge to make such orders in that respect as he may deem to be proper. The injunction order, appealed from should be vacated. Let this opinion be certified to the superior court of Pender county. Error.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. March 22, 1904.)

DRAINAGE — PROCEEDING FOR DITCH — JURY TRIAL — QUESTIONS FOR COMMISSIONERS — ESTOPPEL — PLEADING — APPEALABLE ORDER.

1. Summary statutory proceedings are not within Const. art. 1, § 19, declaring that in all controversies at law respecting property trial by jury ought to remain inviolable.

2. Questions as to necessity of a drainage ditch are for commissioners when appointed under Code, § 1297.

3. An estoppel should be pleaded with such certainty that it may be seen from the pleadings what facts are relied on. If a contract is relied on, its terms should be fully set forth, and if it is a judgment the suit in which it was rendered should be shown.

4. An order in a proceeding under Code, § 1297, for a drainage ditch, which directs matters which are properly for the determination of the commissioners to be referred to a jury, is within Code, § 548, authorizing an appeal from an order or determination of a superior court judge involving a matter of law which affects a substantial right.

Douglas, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pender County; Ferguson, Judge.

Proceeding by Elisha Porter against T. J. Armstrong and others. From an order plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

The plaintiff instituted this proceeding against the defendants by filing his petition in the office of the clerk of the superior court and issuing a summons in accordance with the provisions of chapter 30, § 1297, of the Code, alleging ownership of a tract of "swamp, flat, or low land" particularly described, known as the "Pigford Farm"; that the defendants were the owners of said land adjoining and "below the said Pigford farm"; that a portion of his land was ditched, cleared, and under cultivation, and was subject to inundation and sog. It could not be drained except by clearing or cutting out a canal known as the "Strawberry Canal," etc., which was cut through the defendants' land, etc., and constitutes the only natural outlet to the waters of Pigford farm. The plaintiff prayed that commissioners be appointed pursuant to chapter 30 of the Code. The defendants Armstrong and Mrs. Durham's answer, admitting the ownership of the land by the plaintiff and defendants, denies that the plaintiff's land is "swamp, flat, and low land." They deny that the plaintiff's land is subject to inundation, and that it cannot be conveniently drained except in the manner pointed out by the petitioner. They also deny certain averments in regard to the use of the canal. They aver that the canal is not cut through their land; that it stops some distance before it reaches the plaintiff's land. They allege that the plaintiff has diverted his water, and has violated certain contracts, and they say that the plaintiff "has been harassing these defendants with suit after suit in court, and the said suits have been appealed to the Supreme Court of North Carolina and it has been decided more than once that the petitioner has no right to drain into the Strawberry Canal; and these defendants plead the same as an estoppel against the petitioner having any relief herein." They further say that the petition is not filed in good faith, and for the bona fide purposes as alleged in said petition, but for the purpose of obtaining for the petitioner the right to drain the Strawberry Canal—water which the plaintiff has diverted from its natural course, and thereby injured the defendants—and that the petition is filed for no other purpose than to harass and annoy the defendants, etc.; that the plaintiff has other means of draining his land than through the defendants' land. When the cause came on for hearing upon the petition and answer the defendants made a motion that the cause be sent to the superior court, and placed upon the trial docket, to try the issues of fact raised by the answer. They also insisted that a plea in bar had been set up in the answer, which was to be passed upon before any commissioners could be appointed. The clerk allowed the motion, and transferred the cause to the civil issue docket of the court, and the plaintiff excepted, and appealed to the judge. At January term, 1904, of the superior court, the judge presiding affirmed the judgment of the clerk, denied the plaintiff's motion that commissioners be appointed, and ordered certain issues to be submitted to the jury. The plaintiff excepted and appealed.

John D. Bellamy, Stevens, Beasley & Weeks, and Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellant. E. K. Bryan and J. T. Bland, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. It is a source of regret and surprise that the procedure prescribed by the drainage laws (the first of which was enacted at the session of the General Assembly of 1795, c. 436) should continue to be in doubt and uncertainty, resulting in delay and expense. The difficulty has doubtless arisen from the changes wrought in our judicial system and mode of procedure. The substantial features of the law have been retained in the several Codes of the statute law of the state. Chapter 40 of the Revised Statutes was brought forward in the Revised Code. No change in the procedure was made until 1868. The original statute required the petition to be filed in the county court, and provided for the appointment of 12 jurors, who were required to make their report to the county court, "which shall be recorded in said court." The construction of the act in regard to the power and duty of the court and the right of the party dissatisfied to appeal, came before this court in Collins' Heirs v. Haughton's Heirs, 28 N. C. 420. The court, adopting the principle announced in Railroad v. Jones, 23 N. C. 24, regarding the construction of statutes providing for the condemnation of land for railroads, said that the county court could "only direct the verdict to be recorded or order a new jury, and from its action no appeal could be taken." Nash, J., said: "The jury, thus constituted, is the special tribunal to whom, by the act, the power exclusively belongs to say whether the land does need to be drained, and, if so, what ditches shall be dug, and the amount of the damage to be paid to the owners of the land through which they may pass." The court held in Railroad v. Jones, supra, that the general law in regard to appeals had no application. It was, however, in that case, said: "In denying the parties the right of appeal in cases of this kind, we do not deny them the privilege of having their cases heard before a superior tribunal. Any error which may be committed by the county court in its action may be revised and corrected in the superior court through the instrumentality of a writ of error, or a certiorari in the nature of a writ of error." The practice, under the provisions of the act permitting the condemnation of land for the site of a public mill (Code, c. 43, Acts 1777, c. 122), was considered by the court in Brooks v. Morgan, 27 N. C. 481. It was held that the general provisions for appeals did not apply to "summary and peculiar proceedings not according to the course of the common law, but prescribed by statute under peculiar circumstances." The language of Gaston, J., in Railroad v. Jones, supra, is: "The mode of procedure was intended to be cheap and expeditious, all which purposes would be frustrated by allowing either party the unlimited right of appeal."

This construction of the drainage act was uniformly followed by this court prior to the change in our judicial system in 1868. Upon the filing of the petition the county court appointed the jury. They went upon the land, decided upon personal inspection the necessity of the ditch, located it, and assessed the damage to be paid by the petitioner. They made their report, and after the adoption of the amendment made by the Revised Code, c. 140, the court "confirmed the report, unless good cause be shown to the contrary." Stanly v. Watson, 33 N. C. 124. In Skinner v. Nixon, 52 N. C. 342, Pearson, C. J., examines the provisions of the act, and discusses them at length, saying that the action of the county court was subject to be reviewed in the superior and supreme courts, "not by way of unlimited appeal, which would vacate as well the report of the commissioners as the judgment of the county court, and make it necessary for the superior court to proceed de novo, but by way of writ of certiorari in the nature of a writ of error, which would be, in effect, a limited appeal—in other words, an appeal restricted to the questions which the county court was authorized to pass upon—leaving the report of the commissioners open to be confirmed or set aside, according to the decision reviewing the action of the county court." In Shaw v. Burfoot, 53 N. C. 344, the petition was dismissed because it did not conform to the provisions of the statute. In Brooks v. Tucker, 61 N. C. 309, the report was set aside because it failed to conform to the statute. These cases were reviewed for error apparent on the record. They were brought up to the appellate court by a limited appeal as pointed out by Pearson, C. J., in Skinner v. Nixon, supra. Norfleet v.

Cromwell, 70 N. C. 634, 16 Am. Rep. 787, was a "civil action upon a covenant," and not under the drainage law. The able and interesting discussion of Mr. Justice Rodman is upon the rights of the parties in regard to the easement. In Gamble v. McGrady, 75 N. C. 509, the proceeding was brought under the provisions of chapter 39, Battle's Revisal, being chapter 137, p. 179, Laws 1869-70. Rodman, J., noted that chapter 40 of the Revised Code had been omitted from the revisal, and the act of 1869-70 substituted therefor. This, however, did not operate to repeal chapter 40 of the Revised Code. This chapter, with all its amendments and other drainage laws, is re-enacted in chapter 30 of the Code of 1883. The petition, with the same averments required by the act of 1795, must now be filed in the "superior court"—that is, before the clerk—and a summons issued and served. Upon the hearing of the petition the court shall appoint commissioners. Sections 1298 and 1299 prescribe the duties and method of the procedure of the commissioners. Section 1324 enacts that "the proceeding is made the same as prescribed in other special proceedings." This court undertook to harmonize the several statutes relating to the practice in these cases in Durden v. Simmons, 84 N. C. 555. While it was there held that the answer did not raise any issue as to title, it is said that, if it had done so, such issue should be tried before proceeding to the appointment of commissioners. The reason is obvious, as pointed out by Smith, C. J. It would seem that if, in cases of this kind, the answer raised an issue of fact, the decision of which in favor of the plaintiff was essential to the further prosecution of the petition, the clerk would stay proceedings until such issue was decided in accordance with the practice in other special proceedings. If questions of law are presented and decided by the clerk before the appointment of the commissioners, an appeal directed to the judge may be taken, and his decision will be certified to the clerk, who will proceed in the cause as directed. This course harmonizes the language of the statutes with the construction put upon section 1892 of the Code regarding petitions for partition. This practice should be strictly confined to defenses which lie at the threshold of the cause and pleas in bar. In respect to questions the decision of which are committed to the "special tribunal" provided by the statute, the clerk should proceed to appoint commissioners. When the report of the commissioners comes in, exceptions to it may be filed, and heard by the clerk. An appeal may be taken from his judgment, and his rulings reviewed, as was said by Pearson, C. J., in Skinner v. Nixon, supra, being an appeal restricted to questions which the (clerk) county court was authorized to pass upon, leaving the report of the commissioners open to be confirmed or set aside according to the decision reviewing the action of the court (clerk). In this way, while the rights of the parties to have the action of the clerk reviewed are secured, useless and expensive delays are avoided, and effect is given to section 1324 of the Code. We do not find in chapter 30 the language contained in section 1946, construed in Railroad v. Newton, 133 N. C. 136, 45 S. E. 549, prescribing the procedure in petitions for condemning rights of way for railroads. It is there expressly enacted that "upon the coming in of the report exceptions may be filed, and upon the determination of the same either party may appeal." This court has uniformly held that in proceedings under that statute no appeal can be taken until the coming in of the report. Tel. Co. v. Railroad, 83 N. C. 420; Railroad v. Newton, supra.

The defendant contends that the cases decided by the court in regard to the right of the defendants to have a jury trial should not be followed, because the present Constitution expressly secures to him the right to trial by jury. We do not perceive any difference between the language of section 14 of the Declaration of Rights of 1776 and section 19, art. 1, of our present Constitution. They are in identically the same words. It is true that the court has held that controversies at law include all civil actions, "suits in equity" having been abolished by the Constitution. This principle has never been understood to extend to proceedings "not according to the course of the common law" or to summary statutory proceedings.

Guided by the principles and procedure which we think correspond to the provisions of the statute and the decisions of this court, we proceed to consider the defendants' answer to ascertain whether any issues of fact are raised which must be determined by a jury at a regular term of the court. Referring to matters set up in the answer in Durden v. Simmons, supra, of a character similar to much of the answer in this case, Smith, C. J., says: "We give all the effect to which the answer is fairly entitled in construing it as a denial of the relations between the lands and the necessity and propriety of burdening the one for the other, and this, under the statute, is the appropriate function of the commissioners from the words of the act." We gather from this language that the allegations regarding the necessity for the ditches to drain the plaintiff's land were proper to be submitted to the commissioners when appointed, and was the basis for issues to be tried by a jury. In Winslow v. Winslow, 95 N. C. 24, no objection was made to the issues submitted. Merrimon, J., said: "No question is made as to the regularity and propriety of submitting to the jury the issues set out in the record, and we advert to them for the purpose of saying that it may be questionable whether it is proper to submit such as they are." In Railroad v. Ely, 101 N. C. 8, 7 S. E. 476, no objection was made to the issues submitted. In Railroad v. Par- ker, 105 N. C. 246, 11 S. E. 328, the appeal was taken after the coming in of the report. The court held that the party filing exceptions was not entitled to a jury trial. We are therefore of the opinion that the questions involved in the first, second, fifth, sixth, and seventh issues submitted by his honor should be passed upon by the commissioners when appointed, and do not present issues of fact to be tried by the jury.

The third and fourth issues are directed to an alleged estoppel growing out of an agreement made by one Levin Lane, a former owner of the defendants' land, and one Beery formerly owning the plaintiff's land; also a plea of res judicata, based upon suits heard and determined between the parties. We are not quite sure that we correctly interpret the language of the answer in respect to these matters. If, as we understand, it is sought to estop the plaintiff by the agreement referred to, the terms and extent of the agreement should have been fully set forth. If it was a personal license to drain through the defendants' land, it was not enforceable, and therefore could not work an estoppel to prosecute this petition. In regard to the suggestion that the matter set up in the petition is res judicata, we cannot see how, in the uncertainty of the reference to the alleged suits, an issue can be drawn. No reference is made to any particular suit. An estoppel which "shutteth a man's mouth to speak the truth" should be pleaded with certainty and particularity. 8 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 11. The court should be able to see from the pleadings what facts are relied upon to work the estoppel. The defendant's counsel in their well-considered brief make no reference to this part of their answer. If the defendant desires to set up the estoppel as a plea in bar, it is within the power of the clerk, if he shall think it in furtherance of justice, to permit him to do so by way of an amendment to his answer. We do not find anything in the decisions of this court, in the several cases which have come before us between the parties, which would estop the plaintiff from prosecuting his petition. Douglas, J., in Porter v. Armstrong, 129 N. C. 101, 39 S. E. 799, says: "While the question is not now before us, we see no reason, as at present advised, why the petitioner cannot proceed under chapter 30 of the Code." This petition is based upon the theory that the plaintiff has no easement or other right to drain through the defendants' land. If this is not true, he cannot maintain his petition.

We conclude upon the record that no plea in bar has been sufficiently pleaded; that the matters set up in the answer, other than those relied upon for the plea, are properly triable by the commissioners to be appointed by the clerk. We think the order of the court appealable under section 548 of the Code. It would be an idle and expensive thing to try this cause before a jury only to have the same questions submitted to the commissioners after verdict. It is one of the anomalies in the practical working of our laws that a statute passed more than a century since for the promotion of agriculture, the opening of swamp lands, and increasing the capacity of the earth to bring forth bread for the people, should be a subject of expensive litigation and almost hopeless delay. Without expressing any opinion in regard to the merits of this long-standing controversy, we are struck with the fact, as appears from the records of this court, that for nearly 30 years the owners of these lands have been in litigation in regard to their drainage. We cannot but indulge the hope that when three disinterested, intelligent freeholders shall view the premises and find the facts, both parties may find it consistent with their sense of justice and their own interests to abide the judgment.

Let this opinion be certified to the superior court of Pender county, to the end that further proceedings may be had in accordance therewith. Error.

DOUGLAS, J., dissents.

BALLENTINE v. HAMMOND.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 4, 1904.)

APPEAL—CASE-MADE—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—RIPARIAN OWNERS—OBSTRUCTING STREAM.

1. Inadvertent failure to incorporate in a case-made the fact of the entry of judgment is not ground for dismissal.

2. Where a statute has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, the judge should not, on request, charge the same as law.

3. Under Const. 1895, art. 5, § 26, providing that the judge shall not charge in respect to matters of fact, the court cannot state the testimony in his charge.

4. A lower riparian owner cannot fight off flood water of a stream just as he would surface water when it has left its natural channel.

5. In an action to recover for damages caused to plaintiff's land by the obstruction of a stream by defendant, an instruction that if the obstruction placed in the ditch stopped the natural flow of water, and caused it to back on plaintiff's land, he could recover, was erroneous, as plaintiff could recover for injuries caused by defendant's obstructions at right angles to the stream, as well as for those caused by obstructions in the stream.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court, Anderson County; Townsend, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Ballentine against W. Q. Hammond. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Motion upon one day's notice was made to amend the "case" by inserting the fact that judgment had been entered up. Respondent claimed that four days' notice was necessary. The court held that the case should not be dismissed for failure to give the required notice or to insert said fact, but that it would be continued unless parties could agree as to the proposed amendment.

B. F. Martin, for appellant. Tribble & Prince and Bonham & Watkins, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. This action was begun on May 27, 1901, and it was tried before Judge Townsend and a jury at the fall term, 1901. While two causes of action were set out in the complaint, only one was actually tried, the other being abandoned. The following is the statement of the cause of action retained:

"(1) The plaintiff is, and at the time hereinafter mentioned was, the owner of the freehold and in possession of certain lands lying along the banks of Little Beaver Dam creek, in county and state aforesaid.

"(2) During the summer of 1898, the defendant, without the consent of plaintiff, built a rock dam in the channel of said creek on his freehold, a short distance below said land of plaintiff. At a subsequent date, without consent of plaintiff, he added to said dam, and he has also built levees to a considerable height, running from points in defendant's bottoms on each side of said creek to said creek near the dam, and thence down the stream.

"(3) Said dam at first was about two and a half feet in height, and after the addition it was about four and a half feet in height, very thick, and constructed of large heavy rock. It remained at that height until the defendant, as plaintiff is informed and believes, had heard of preliminary steps being taken by plaintiff and other parties to bring suit to have it removed. Then defendant took off about a foot of said dam, but he continues to maintain said dam and levees.

"(4) By reason of the erection and maintenance of said dam and levees the channel of said creek became blocked and filled with sand for a long distance above said structure, the fall of plaintiff's bottom ditches and creek channel was lost and destroyed, and plaintiff's drainage obstructed and clogged, so that slight freshets and ordinary rains overflowed and overflow a large part of plaintiff's land and cover a part of it with sand, rendering it wet, soggy, and unfit for cultivation and pasture, whereas before it was adapted to both. This permanently damaged part of plaintiff's land, and caused loss of returns and profits therefrom, and depreciation in value.

"(5) The defendant, well knowing that these structures would injure plaintiff as above set forth, deliberately, wantonly, willfully, and in reckless disregard of plaintiff's rights erected and maintained, and still maintains, the above-described nuisance, notwithstanding the fact that on the — day of April, 1899, he was given notice, signed by plaintiff and eight others, that signers were being damaged thereby, as hereinabove set forth; all to plaintiff's damage seven hundred and fifty dollars.

"Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against defendant for the sum of seven hundred and fifty dollars and costs of this action, for abatement of said nuisance, and permanent injunction against the maintenance thereof."

Defendant, in his answer, admits having built the levees on his own premises to prevent high waters from flooding his bottom lands; that, having gone to great expense in cutting canals to convey water through and from his bottom land on said creek, he placed rock there to obstruct the sand from being washed into said canals, but he denies that said obstruction of rocks raised the bed of the original channel of said creek any higher than it was when he began said work.

For a further defense he says: "That prior to the time alleged in said complaint the defendant owned considerable land on said creek; that said lands, as well as the lands immediately above defendant's, were practically worthless, in consequence of the waters having no certain channel, as it was shifted at nearly every high water; that this defendant at great expense dug canals to convey the water from his own premises, and cut said canals entirely on his own premises; that, knowing the condition of the creek above, defendant placed bags of sand in the channel of the old run on his own premises to prevent the sand from being washed into his new canal, when some evil-disposed person or persons, to defendant unknown, cut said bags of sand in defendant's absence, whereupon he placed rock to protect himself; and, after thus protecting his canal, the old channel of the creek was not raised any higher than it was when defendant began his work; and he denies that plaintiff has any right to complain of any acts of the defendant in the premises.

"(4) That by reason of the expense incurred defendant has brought into cultivation valuable bottom lands, and but for said obstruction the canals so cut by him would soon become choked with sand, and rendered valueless for farming purposes said bottom lands.

"(5) That before this suit, and after the alleged notice, and at various times, defendant has offered to allow the plaintiff and other persons owning bottom lands above him on the said creek to enter his canal, and take the same through their lands, provided they would take the proper steps to prevent the sand above from being brought in to fill up said canal, and he is still willing to allow them the benefit of said fall for said purpose.

"Wherefore, he demands that the complaint be dismissed."

Voluminous testimony was offered by each side to the controversy, plats of surveys, etc. By consent of both parties, the jury were carried down to Little Beaver Dam creek, and with a shower on each side inspected all the bottoms in question. After a full hearing, the jury brought in a verdict for the defendant. Thereupon the plaintiff appealed to this court on the following exceptions:

"(1) His honor erred in charging in defendant's fifth request: 'That, if the old channel would not have taken the sand down before Hammond cut his ditches, plaintiff has no right under the law to use the new ditch cut by Hammond to convey away her accumulated sand from above.' This is a charge on the facts, and is in violation of Const. 1895, art. 4, § 26. It is clearly implied that Hammond cut a new ditch that plaintiff could use. This was strongly controverted in the testimony, and, if true, would properly and directly bear upon the question of injury or no injury.

"(2) His honor erred further, as a matter of law, in charging 'that, if the old channel would not have taken the sand down before Hammond cut his ditches, plaintiff has no right under the law to use the new ditch cut by Hammond to convey away her accumulated sand from above.' The testimony, convincing and undisputed, shows that the accumulation was due to defendant's obstructing the stream; and the law would be otherwise in cases where defendant himself causes the accumulation in plaintiff's channel. This error is material and hurtful.

"(3) It was error to charge in defendant's fifth request: 'That, if the jury find from the testimony that the old creek channel, in the course of time, had become filled with sand before our obstruction,' until the natural flow of the stream had spread out over the entire bottom, and had no certain channel in which to flow, and Hammond, as a prudent and thrifty farmer, saw proper to improve his own lands by cutting ditches to convey this water off of his own lands below, the fact that he stopped the ditch on his own land, and placed a dam there to keep the water from washing from the original channel the sand into the new ditch, does not give to the plaintiff any right to damages.' This is a charge upon the facts, and in violation of Const. 1895, art. 5, § 26. It is distinctly assumed as a 'fact' that the defendant put his dam in the stream 'to keep the water from washing from the original channel the sand into the new ditch.' This is extremely misleading. The undisputed and overwhelming evidence shows that it was not and could not be true that defendant's claim of 'new ditch' and 'acquired fall' therefrom was baseless, for the obvious reason that he had done no ditching on this stream when the dam and levees were built. Furthermore, this part of the charge leaves the impression that defendant ditched up to a certain point on his land and there put in the dam. The evidence is altogether otherwise.

"(4) His honor erred in charging defendant's fourth request to charge, as follows: 'That the flood water of a river or a creek may be fought as surface water, when it has left its natural channel, and if the jury find from the testimony in the case that the embankments thrown up by Hammond on his own land to obstruct the surface water with a view to throwing it in the channel, and keep it from covering his own land, then he cannot be held liable in damages, unless the jury find from the testimony that Hammond did the work in a negligent manner, or that damage has resulted to the plaintiff from the natural and probable consequences of said acts. Calro, Vincennes & Ch. Rs. Co. v. Brevoort, 62 Fed. 129, 25 L. R. A. 527.' It is respectfully submitted that this is not the law; that the common-law rule is otherwise; and that a man cannot build banks or levees to dam back upon, and to the injury of, his upper riparian neighbor, the flood water of ordinary, usual, and expected freshets, flowing as nature intended it to flow. Furthermore, his purpose in constructing the embankments is not material, much less controlling, upon the question of liability for actual damages; and it was error so to charge.

"(5) His honor erred in charging upon defendant's third request: 'That he (Hammond) had a right under the law to dig a channel or ditch to collect the waters and convey them across his own land, and he was not bound to continue that ditch with what fall he had acquired to plaintiff's line.' This request contains a charge upon facts, and is in violation of Const. 1895, art. 5, § 26. It is assumed and impliedly charged that Hammond had dug a ditch, and thereby had acquired fall. This is denied, and is not shown, but is disputed, in the evidence; and it bears upon the question of damage.

"(6) Because his honor erred in charging defendant's third request to charge, because it assumed that the dam or obstruction was in a new channel, and is therefore a charge on the facts, and in violation of Const. 1895, art. 5, § 26. The fact assumed is denied, and the evidence is all otherwise.

"(7) Because his honor erred in charging the jury as the law of this case (see defendant's third request): 'That before they can find in favor of plaintiff they must be satisfied from the testimony in the case that the obstruction placed by Hammond in his ditch stopped the natural flow of water or sand, and caused it to back upon plaintiff's land.' For the jury could have found for plaintiff for injury caused by the levees or banks at right angles to the creek as well as for that caused by the obstruction in the stream.

"(8) Because his honor impliedly charged the jury in defendant's third request that the obstruction was in Hammond's ditch, whereas the evidence shows that it was built on the bed of the original creek channel. This is a charge on the facts, in violation of Const. 1895, art. 5, § 26.

"(9) Because his honor erred in refusing to read and charge upon plaintiff's request, sections 1273, 1274, Rev. St. 1893, on the ground that they had no bearing on the case. In the evidence defendant made a strong point of the proof that the stream was filling up below the dam, seeking to show that the injury complained of would have resulted anyway from natural causes, or causes other than the obstructions complained of. Plaintiff sought to rebut this by proof of the existence of drifts below as the real cause of the filling up, and by the presumption that, in obedience to the law as laid down in those sections, they would be removed, and thus this trouble, which bears forcibly on plaintiff's case, removed. Therefore plaintiff's request should have been granted.

"(10) His honor erred in refusing to read and charge, upon plaintiff's request, St. at Large, vol. 23, p. 448 (Acts 1900). Although plaintiff might have failed to convince the jury by the proper quantum of evidence that plaintiff had received injuries for which defendant was responsible, yet the effect of this statutory law would be in this to entitle plaintiff to a verdict for nominal damages and an order for the removal of the dam."

In considering and passing upon the exceptions, we will first pass upon 9 and 10. We hold that it was not the duty of the circuit judge to pass upon these exceptions, so far as he refused to do so. Sections 1273 and 1274 and 1275 of the Revised Statutes of this state, made in the year 1893, have been declared unconstitutional (by this court), and therefore the circuit judge made no mistake in refusing to charge the same to the jury.

So far as the fifth exception is concerned, we will pass upon that. Too much care cannot be exercised by circuit judges in the matter of their charges to juries in respect to matters of fact or testimony. The following is the text of the charge of the circuit judge: "Fifth. That Hammond had a right under the law to clean up his own bottoms and ditch the same so as to convey off the waters for agricultural purposes; that while a natural water course cannot be obstructed by the landowner so as to back water upon the upper landowner, unless he has an easement either by grant or by prescriptive right, still the law does not give the upper landowner the right to dump his accumulated sand, which is a part of his freehold, upon the lower tenant, and thereby destroy the labor of the lower tenant by using the natural flow of the water to wash his accumulated sand into the ditches of the lower landowner; that, if the old channel would not have taken the sand down before Hammond cut his ditches, plaintiff had no right under the law to use the new ditch cut by Hammond to convey her accumulated sand from above; that if the jury find from the testimony that the old creek channel, in the course of time, had become filled with sand, before defendant's obstruction, until the natural flow of the stream had spread out over the entire bottoms, and had no certain channel in which to flow, and Hammond, as a prudent and thrifty farmer, saw proper to improve his own land by cutting ditches to convey this water off his own land below, the fact that he stopped the ditch on his own land, and placed a dam there to keep the water from washing from the original channel the sand into the new ditch, does not give the plaintiff any right to damages. Gray v. McWilliams [(Cal.) 32 Pac. 976] 21 L. R. A. 593 [35 Am. St. Rep. 163]." What is the requirement of our present Constitution—that of 1895—on the subject of judges' charges upon facts? Article 5, § 26, reads as follows: "Judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, but shall declare the law." The language of Const. 1868, art. 4, § 26, is: "Judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." Thus it appears that the inhibition of the present Constitution precludes judges from stating the testimony in their charges to the juries. It is permissible for them, in order to make clearer their statement of the law, to make hypothetical statements of facts. But in the present charge the circuit judge has stated alleged facts at issue between the parties, and in doing so failed to include any reference to the banks or levees constructed by the defendant, thus giving the defendant the benefit of his charge upon the effect of defendant placing a dam in the ditch cut upon his own land to keep the water from washing from the original channel the sand into the new ditch, and then declaring that in such an event it "does not give the plaintiff any right to damages." This is no hypothetical statement of facts. It is Hammond's case he is discussing. We were very much impressed with the statement of counsel that it is probable that, apart from this statement of the circuit judge that the jury would have rendered a verdict in favor of defendant. This is, however, an illustration of the danger of ignoring the requirements of the present Constitution, for it is fatal to the verdict. We are obliged to enforce this provision of the Constitution upon an exception preferred by the plaintiff. The first, second, and third exceptions must be sustained.

So, too, exceptions 5, 6, and 8, must be sustained, as charges upon the facts were made by the circuit judge, as pointed out in these exceptions.

Exception 4 must be sustained. It was error in the circuit judge to hold that the defendant could fight off flood water just as he could surface water when it has left the natural channel. Such is not the law. See Lawton v. South Bound R. R., 61 S. C. 548, 39 S. E. 752, where the late Chief Justice McIver pointed out the distinction between surface water and a natural water course, and the difference existing in the power of a riparian proprietor in regard thereto. We confine our decision to the case here made.

Exception 7 refers to the declaration of law by the circuit judge in response to the third request of defendant. He should have included in his charge the whole law on this subject, including the effect of the levees constructed by the defendant on his own land below that of plaintiff. This exception must be sustained.

We must therefore order a new trial in this case. It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the action remanded to the circuit court for a new trial.

MOORE v. CATAWBA POWER CO.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 11, 1904.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYE—PLEADING—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCES.

1. In an action for injuries to a servant, alleged to have been caused by defects in certain machinery or appliances, plaintiff should not be required to amend the complaint so as to state the particulars in which the machinery was defective.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of York County; Townsend, Judge.

Action by John B. Moore against the Catawba Power Company. From an order requiring the complaint to be made more specific, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Plaintiff alleged:

"(5) That the injury to the plaintiff from said blast and explosion was due to the gross negligence and carelessness of the defendant, its agents and servants, in furnishing to the plaintiff defective, unsafe, and unsuitable means, machinery, and appliances for said work, and failing to inspect and keep said machinery and appliances in safe and suitable condition for its said work, in that: the said defendant furnished to and for the said work a battery for the purpose of exploding the blast, which battery was imperfect, defective, unsafe, and worn; and the lead wire from the battery to the blast was defective and imperfectly insulated, and the insulation was off said wire in a number of places, and the wire was too small to carry the current of electricity necessary to discharge the blast, and the same was second-hand, badly used, and worn; moreover, the fuse wires leading from the lead wires to the blast holes and loads were defective, were kinked, and broken, and the insulation thereof was imperfect; and, by reason of the foregoing facts, some of the loads which were placed in the holes for the purpose of making the blast failed to explode when operated for that purpose, and it became necessary to clean out those holes which had exploded and those which had not, with a view to carrying on the work; and while so engaged an explosion of one of the holes which had failed to explode at the proper time occurred, causing the injuries above mentioned to the plaintiff."

The defendant moved that the complaint be made more definite and certain in the following particulars:

"(1) That the lines 4 and 5 of paragraph 5 thereof, alleging that the plaintiff was furnished with 'defective, unsuitable, and unsafe means, machinery, and appliances,' be so amended as to show what machinery, means, and appliances were unsafe, or unsuitable and defective, and the particulars or respects wherein they were so.

"(2) That further down in said paragraph, where the plaintiff alleges that the battery furnished him for exploding the blasts was 'defective, unsafe, imperfect, and worn,' be so amended as to show in what respect the said battery was imperfect, unsafe, and defective and worn.

"(3) That further down in said paragraph, where the plaintiff alleges that the wires leading from the battery to the blasts were defective, and also where he alleges that the fuse wires were defective, the said complaint be amended so as to state any defects to said wires, and the respects wherein they were defective; and in case no other defects are claimed as to said wires except those already stated, then the complaint be so amended as to limit the allegations to those already alleged and stated.

"(4) For such other and further relief as may be just."

The circuit court granted the motion on the second and third grounds, in the following words:

"It is therefore ordered that the defendant's second and third grounds of motion herein be granted, and that the plaintiff be required to amend the fifth paragraph of his complaint, where he alleges that the battery furnished to him was 'imperfect, defective, unsafe, and worn,' so as to set forth the respect wherein said battery was imperfect, defective, and so forth; that is, to set out the facts constituting such imperfections and defects. And also that he amend his said complaint further down in said paragraph, where he alleges that the lead wire and fuse wires were defective, and proceeds to set forth certain defects in said wires, by alleging any other defects that he may claim existed in said wires; or if no other defects in said wires are intended than those already alleged, then the plaintiff can so amend this portion of his complaint as to show that the defects he refers to and intends are those he has alleged."

Geo. W. Hart and D. W. Robinson, for appellant. A. G. Brice, for respondent.

WOODS, J. We do not think this case can be distinguished in principle from Lynch v. Spartan Mills, 60 S. C. 12, 44 S. E. 93. The views there expressed are in accord with the decisions of other courts. Monahan v. Northwestern Contracting Co., 84 Wis. 596, 54 N. W. 1025; Carey v. Ry. Co., 67 Wis. 608, 31 N. W. 163; Ry. Co. v. Templeton, 87 Tex. 42, 28 S. W. 1066; Cox v. Providence Gas Co.,

¶ 1. See Master and Servant, vol. 34, Cent. Dig. § 525.

17 R. I. 199, 21 Atl. 344; Preston v. R. R. Co., 64 Vt. 280, 25 Atl. 486. The motion to make the complaint more definite and certain should have been refused.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed.

PACOLET MFG. CO. v. GANTT, Secretary of State.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 10, 1904.)

CORPORATIONS—INCREASE OF STOCK—FEES.

1. Under Civ. Code 1902, §§ 1851, 1888, prescribing that a corporation increasing its capital stock shall pay the fees required on an issuance of a charter or a renewal thereof, the same fees, based on the increase of the stock, are to be paid as for an original charter.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; Townsend, Judge.

Petition for mandamus by the Pacolet Manufacturing Company against Jesse T. Gantt, as Secretary of State. From an order refusing the writ, the petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Ralph K. Carson, for appellant. Asst. Atty. Gen. Townsend, for respondent.

JONES, J. The Pacolet Manufacturing Company applied for mandamus to compel the Secretary of State to issue a certificate of increase of capital stock from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 upon the payment to him of $252.50 as fees, the Secretary of State having refused to issue the certificate upon tender of said sum, demanding as fees the sum of $552.50. The circuit court, Hon. D. A. Townsend, presiding, sustained a demurrer to the petition for insufficiency, and dismissed the same. This appeal therefrom involves the question as to the amount of fees authorized by statute in such a case.

Section 1851 of the Civil Code of 1902, after prescribing the method of procuring from the Secretary of State a certificate of an increase of capital stock of certain corporations, provides as follows: "The said corporation so increasing its capital stock shall pay to the Secretary of State the fees required by section 1888, which fees shall accompany the certificate of the board of directors." Section 1888 reads as follows: "The Secretary of State is hereby authorized and required to collect the following fees: Upon each charter issued or renewed to any corporation, payable when the said charter is issued or renewed, the sum of one mill upon each dollar of the capital stock authorized up to and including $100,000; the sum of one-half of a mill upon each dollar of the capital stock exceeding $100,000 and up to and including $1,000,000, and the sum of one-fourth of a mill upon each dollar of the capital stock exceeding $1,000,000. * * * Said section further provides for a recording fee of $2.50. Construing the two sections together, we think it is clear that the purpose was to require the same fees for an increase of capital stock as upon the issuance or renewal of a charter, said fees being based upon amount of the increase. The increase being $1,000,000, the fees demanded by the Secretary of State were correct, as follows:

On first $100,000 of increase, 1 mill..	$100 00
On second \$900,000 of increase, $\frac{1}{2}$ mill	450 00

Total fee on capital stock.....	$550 00
Recording amendment	2 50

$552 50

It is true, as contended by appellant, that this construction would require a corporation increasing its capital stock from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 to pay more in fees than would be required of a corporation originally chartered for $3,000,000; but this is not unreasonable, as there is a difference between issuing an original charter alone and issuing a charter and thereafter amending or enlarging the same. On the other hand, the construction contended for by appellant would require a smaller corporation increasing from $100,000 to $1,000,000 capital stock to pay nearly twice as much as a larger corporation increasing from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 capital stock, thus discriminating in favor of the larger corporation against the smaller for substantially the same service or benefit conferred. Equality is preserved by applying the schedule of fees to the "increase" of capital stock, just as if the amount of such "increase" constituted the whole capital stock. Such construction, we think, the terms of the statute require. The proper amount of fees not having been tendered, the Secretary of State was not in duty required to issue the certificate applied for, and the demurrer to the petition was properly sustained.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(68 S. C. 196)

SPOOL COTTON CO. v. KING & TILLER.

'PARTNERSHIP—EVIDENCE.

1. Where an action is brought for the balance for goods sold to defendants alleged to be members of a firm, and the answer admits that defendants are partners in a limited sense, and defendants' attorney admits that he did not intend to plead that defendants were limited partners in a technical sense, the allegation of partnership is admitted; and, there being evidence that certain goods were bought by the firm, and a part returned to the seller, it is sufficient to show a partnership in the line of business alleged by the complaint.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; Klugh, Judge.

Action by the Spool Cotton Company against King & Tiller. From a judgment reversing a judgment of a magistrate, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

D. W. Robinson, for appellants. Barron & Ray, for respondent.

JONES, J. This action was brought in a magistrate's court for a balance alleged to be due plaintiff by defendants upon an account for goods—spool cotton—sold and delivered to defendants. The magistrate gave judgment in favor of defendants upon the ground that he found no testimony whatever as to partnership of the defendants, as alleged in the complaint. This judgment was reversed by the circuit court, and the case remanded for a new trial. Thereupon the defendants appeal to this court.

The main question is whether the answer of the defendants is an admission of the allegation of the complaint as to the partnership. The second paragraph of the complaint alleges "that J. B. King and W. H. Tiller at the times hereinafter mentioned were copartners, trading as King & Tiller." The answer of W. H. Tiller was as follows: "(2) Denies each and all of the allegations contained in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of the complaint, except to admit that J. B. King and W. H. Tiller were partners in a special and limited sense, and limited line of business, in April, 1901. This defendant denies any indebtedness to the plaintiff."

On the trial before the magistrate, the attorney for defendants stated that he did not mean to allege that defendants were partners in the limited sense alluded to in the statutes (Code 1902, § 1680 et seq.), but that they were partners in a limited sense, as contemplated by the common law. Relying upon the admission in the answer and the statement of counsel for defendant, the counsel for plaintiff offered no further evidence of the second allegation of the complaint as to the partnership. The record before us does not show what testimony was offered in support of the other allegations of the complaint, but the magistrate's report states that counsel for plaintiff introduced evidence which consisted entirely of depositions, and that defendants introduced no evidence, and that he (the magistrate), holding that there was an utter lack of proof as to the allegations of partnership, gave judgment against the plaintiff on this ground, without trying the case on its merits. We agree with the circuit court in construing the answer as admitting the fact of partnership. It is true, the admission is qualified by the statement that the partnership was in a limited line of business, but that is nothing more than could be said of any ordinary partnership. In 22 Ency. Law, 60, it is stated: "A general partnership may be defined as one where the business includes all transactions of a particular class, as where several persons agree to carry on as partners the business of bankers, grocers, etc. Practically all partnerships are limited to some extent, but they are nevertheless general partnerships. To constitute a general partnership, nothing more is necessary than that the parties agree to carry on or conduct a specified business, and to share in its profits and losses. The business may be of a general nature, or it may relate and be confined to certain designated transactions. In either case the partnership is general." Whether the partnership admitted to exist was such as would embrace the buying of spool cotton within its limitations was a matter of evidence, but when the plaintiff, as we must assume, offered evidence of the other allegations of the complaint, viz., that on the 27th day of April the plaintiff sold and delivered to said defendants, at their request, spool cotton to the value of $102.30, and that on the 12th day of July, 1901, the defendants returned to the plaintiff a portion of these goods, to the value of $34.27, that afforded some evidence that the goods ordered and received in the name of the partnership was within the scope of the partnership business.

We do not think the circuit court committed any error in remanding the case to the magistrate for a new trial. This renders it unnecessary to consider the other exceptions.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(68 S. C. 304)

STATE v. SANDIFER et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 11, 1904.)

RES JUDICATA—ACTION ON OFFICIAL BOND.

1. Where the sureties on an official bond have been sued for a specific breach thereof, and a judgment is entered therefor, but not for the penalty of the bond, and the judgment is paid, the state cannot thereafter sue the same sureties for breaches not alleged when the first suit was brought.

Woods, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Barnwell County; J. E. McDonald, Special Judge.

Action by the state against P. W. Sandifer and others. From a judgment of dismissal, the state appeals. Affirmed.

Upon the defenses of estoppel and statute of limitations, the circuit judge said:

"As I understand it, gentlemen, this former action that resulted in the judgment here was in the name of the state against the identical and same parties, with the exception of Mrs. Mayfield. I may state, before rendering the decision, that the counsel for defendants, who did not interpose this plea of limitation and plea of estoppel by former judgment, asked leave to amend their answers, and, believing it would be the furtherance of justice that the amendments be made, I will allow the amendments, and will sign an order to that effect later. The action here is brought by the state of South Carolina against certain sureties, who are bondsmen of Allen F. Free, late treasurer of Barnwell county. In the complaint it is alleged that he gave three separate bonds, covering the three terms of his office as treasurer, the dates of the bonds being set forth in the complaint, and various breaches of the respective bonds are alleged during the three terms set forth in the complaint. The answer of the defendants set up several defenses, the principal defense being, however, the plea of the statute of limitation to all of the breaches of the bonds, except as to the last one; and, also, the plaintiff is estopped by judgment rendered in a former action between the same parties, with the exception of Mrs. Mayfield, who is made party in the present action, who is an heir at law of one of the deceased sureties, who was a defendant in the former suit.

"First, as to the statute of limitation, it seems to me that, under the doctrine of nul- lum tempus occurrit regi, the statute of limitations cannot be pleaded against the state, except in an action brought for the recovery of the land, and in that kind of action there is a special provision of the Code. The general doctrine of the common law is that no statute of limitation can be pleaded against the state. I overrule the plea of limitation.

"As to estoppel of former judgment, I am not so sure, and have some doubt, but believe that plea should be sustained. The liability was a continuing one, and the sureties who were sued in this case and who were sued in the former action were liable for all breaches for all of the bonds at the time he went out of office. I think all of these matters are included in the other case, and I think they are good as to the plea of estoppel, and should be allowed, and sustain the motion. I think it is proper to dismiss the complaint."

The court thereupon made the following order: "The defense of the bar of the statute of limitation and estoppel by judgment in a former action came up as preliminary issues in this case. After hearing argument, I am of the opinion that the statute does not apply, the state being protected by the doctrine of nul lum tempus occurrit regi. This plea is therefore overruled. As to the plea of estoppel, I think it should be allowed, and is a bar to the action. This without prejudice to any rights under the former judgment. It is therefore ordered that the complaint be, and hereby is, dismissed."

From the judgment entered thereon the plaintiff appeals on the following exceptions: "(1) That his honor the presiding judge erred in holding and concluding that the matters here complained of—breaches occurring under the official bonds of the county treasurer, given on January 20, 1891, January 3, 1893, and March 13, 1895—were included in the former action brought to recover for breaches occurring under other official bonds of the same officer, subsequently given on February 26, 1897, and February 8, 1899, and that the plaintiff is estopped by the recovery of the judgment in the former action from maintaining this action. (2) That his honor the presiding judge erred in not holding and concluding that the causes of action in this action were different from the causes of action in the former action of The State v. E. M. Kennerly et al., and in not concluding that the plaintiff's right to maintain this action is unaffected by said former action on different causes of action."

Asst. Atty. Gen. Townsend, for the State.
J. O. Patterson, Izlar Bros., and Jno. R. Bellinger, for respondents.

POPE, C. J. This action was commenced in the court of common pleas for Barnwell county, in this state, on the 4th day of September, 1901, and came on for trial at an extra term of said court before Hon. J. E. McDonald, as special judge, on the 5th May, 1903. The complaint set out three causes of action, each cause of action being bottomed upon breaches of the bonds of Allen F. Free, deceased, as county treasurer of Barnwell county, with these defendants as sureties thereto. The first bond was dated 20th January, 1891, the second bond was dated the 3d day of January, 1893, and the third bond was dated — day of January, 1895; and each of said bonds was in the penal sum of $20,000, and conditioned that if the said Allen F. Free, as county treasurer of Barnwell county, should ever and truly perform the duties of said office, as thereafter required by law, during the whole period he might continue in office, then the above obligation should be void and of no effect, or else should remain in full force and virtue. The term of office of said Allen F. Free ran from January, 1891, to January, 1897. At the annual settlements made by the Comptroller General of this state with the said Allen F. Free, as said county treasurer, the sum of $66.91 was allowed the said Allen F. Free as a credit on his account, because the said sum of $66.91 escaped detection and correction by the Comptroller General, and which said sum has never been paid out nor accounted for by said Allen F. Free, said county treasurer. This sum of $66.91 is the basis of the first action. Further, at the annual settlements made by the Comptroller General with the said Allen F. Free, as said county treasurer, the Comptroller General in his annual settlements with said Allen F. Free, as said treasurer, in the years 1893 and 1894, allowed the said county treasurer credit, through the failure of the Comptroller General to detect and correct errors, in sums aggregating $929.35, which is the basis of the second cause of action. And, further, because on the annual settlements of said county treasurer and the Comptroller General on the 28th June, 1895, and on the — day of —, 1896, errors amounting in the aggregate to $1,347.17 were allowed, because the Comptroller General failed to detect and correct the same. This is the basis for the third cause of action. Demand is for judgment for $60,000, the penalties in the aggregate for the three bonds against these defendants.

The answers of the defendants set up the plea of the statute of limitations, and also that another action by the plaintiff was heretofore brought in the court of common pleas for Barnwell county against these defendants, as sureties on the three bonds set up in the complaint, each bond being in the penalty of $20,000, and was prosecuted to final judgment in favor of the plaintiff herein against these defendants.

At the hearing, it having been agreed that the matter of estoppel by reason of the former action and judgment between the plaintiff and these defendants should be first determined, the first judgment was produced in court, showing that the plaintiff had recovered a judgment against these defendants for the three bonds sued on in the present action, because of breaches of said bonds, in the sum of $8,140.64, which sum had been actually paid to the plaintiff. It should be stated, also, that Mrs. Lida K. Mayfield was a privy of her mother, Mrs. E. M. Kennedy, a widow, who departed this life after the foregoing judgment—she being her only child and inherited her whole estate, amounting to $20,000, without administration.

His honor J. E. McDonald sustained the plea of estoppel, and by his decree ordered the complaint dismissed, but refused to sustain the statute of limitations. Let this decree of Special Judge McDonald be reported, and also the exceptions. The plaintiff appeals from this decree on the question of estoppel, though he presents his objections in two forms.

We do not think there can be any question as to the soundness of the decree of the circuit judge. While we admit that under the decisions of State v. Moses, 18 S. C., at page 373, it was the duty of the plaintiff, in its first action against these sureties of Allen F. Free, as county treasurer of Barnwell county, because of breaches of his official bonds, to have entered up judgment against these sureties, as defendants, in the penalty of the last bond, yet the state, as plaintiff, entered its judgment for the actual breaches of the bond, to wit, the sum of $8,140.64, and this court has repeatedly held that such payments, unappealed from, were the law between those parties and their privies. The plaintiff, the state of South Carolina, has actually collected every dollar due to it under that judgment. Now, is the state estopped from any action on those bonds because of breaches thereof? As we have before remarked, we think and hold that the state, as plaintiff, is estopped. Lord Coke said: "Touching estoppels, which are a curious and excellent sort of learning, it is to be observed that there be three kinds of estoppel, viz., by matter of record, by matter of writing, and by matter in pais." The ground of holding a matter of record to act as an estoppel is that a record imports such absolute verity that no person against whom it is producible shall be permitted to impeach it. Page 804 of Smith's Leading Cases makes this statement, quoting Lord Tenterden: "The authorities are clear that a party cannot be received to aver as error in fact a matter contrary to the record. In Just. 260, Lord Coke says: 'The rolls, the records, or memorials of the judges of the courts of record import in them such uncontrollable credit and verity as they admit of no averment, plea, or proof to the contrary. * * *' It should be recalled, in passing, that this very Lord Coke, in defining estoppel, quaintly said: "An estoppel is where a man is concluded by his own act or acceptance to say the truth." Very much of the learning on the subject of estoppel will be found by those anxious to look fully into it by consulting pages 798 et seq. of Smith's Leading Cases. Our own case of Spoon v. Smith, 36 S. C. 588, 15 S. E. 800, refers to the conclusiveness of a judgment against the parties thereto. All these rules are based upon considerations which appeal to all men interested in upholding the law and right. Grant that sureties are liable to respond for losses occasioned by the breaches of bonds which they have signed, yet when the obligee of a bond has instituted an action to collect for its breaches, it is his duty to bring forward in that action all the breaches for which he wishes judgment. It will not do to allow him to sue and get judgment against the sureties this year, collect the judgment, then the next year, or the next, or the next, to sue the same parties because he overlooked some breaches. There should be an end of litigation. This plaintiff has sued and obtained judgment against these very sureties; they have paid such judgment; now the plaintiff seeks to sue again for breaches of these very bonds.

Again, it is suggested that possibly only the last two bonds were sued. Any funds in the hands of Allen F. Free under the first bond were lawfully in his hands under the second bond, and were therefore included in the first suit.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

WOODS, J. (dissenting). I am unable to concur in the opinion of the Chief Justice. This is an action by the state on three official bonds of A. F. Free, as treasurer of Barnwell county. The defenses before this court are estoppel by former judgment and the statute of limitations. A judgment was heretofore obtained against the same parties, except Peacock, on two other official bonds of Free, both given after the bonds involved in this suit. The plea of estoppel is based on this judgment. It is not claimed that the defaults here alleged were actually set up in the suit from which the former judgment resulted, but only that they might have been set up. In the former suit the judgment was not entered for the penalty of the bonds, but for the actual supposed default under them. It is true in that suit, on the last two bonds, judgment might have been entered for the entire penalty, under which all claimants might have proven their demands, and it is also true that the sureties on those bonds were liable for continuing defaults standing against the treasurer when they were given. But sureties on the bonds in force when the default first occurred are also liable. State v. Moses, 18 S. C. 372. We know of no rule of law which requires the state to sue all the bonds in one action. Even if judgment had been entered for the entire penalty on the last two bonds in the former suit, the state could still have sued the first three bonds, for they were not annulled by the giving of the last two bonds, nor merged in any judgment recovered on them.

The vice in the argument of the respondent is in assuming that the state could not elect to collect actual defaults occurring under the first three bonds by suit on those three bonds, even after judgment on the last two. If an official bond is not nullified or merged in a subsequent one, then it is not for the sureties to say that the state as an injured party may not sue the first bonds for a default occurring under it because the state has either from choice or mistake not proved its claim in a suit on the last, when it might have done so. If the sureties were the same on all the bonds, we do not see how that could be any reason for denying to the state the right to enter judgment for the penalties of all the bonds in one action or several; but in this case the sureties are not all the same, and cases may arise where it would be of the utmost practical importance to enter a separate judgment for the penalty of each bond in a separate action. I can discover no principle upon which the right to do so can be denied. The period of limitation of an official bond is 20 years, and this action is therefore not barred by the statute.

I think the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed.

RICE v. BAMBERG.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 8, 1904.)

WIDOW—ELECTION—DECEDENT'S LAND—SALE—DIRECTING VERDICT—LOST PAPERS.

1. Where, under a will, a wife was a devisee of a life estate in certain property and a devisee of the rest of her husband's lands in fee simple, and she elected not to take under the devise, but to claim homestead and dower, and these were set off to her by a decree, the balance of the land was free from her claim of dower and homestead.

2. Where a husband devised certain property to his wife for life, with remainder to his children, and the wife renounced under the will, and homestead and dower were set apart to her, and thereafter the property was sold to pay debts on the petition of the wife as executrix, in which proceedings the children were not made parties, the wife had no interest in the property so sold, and when thereafter one of the children died, and the mother inherited one-half of his interest in the land and died, such interest of the surviving child was not affected by the sale to pay debts.

3. A half-brother cannot inherit while his mother and a sister of the whole blood are alive.

4. Where property of a decedent was sold under a decree of court to pay debts, a claim that the sale was made under a power of the will is without foundation.

5. Where there are no issues of fact, the judge should direct the verdict.

6. Where a paper is alleged to be lost from a record, statements of an attorney, who does not recollect having seen it, that if he had not seen it he would not have given certain advice which he is said to have given, is not sufficient proof of the existence of such paper.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Barnwell County; Gary, Judge.

Action by Eugenia M. Rice against F. M. Bamberg. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jno. R. Bellinger, for appellant. H. F. & B. T. Rice, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. John M. Whetstone departed this life in the year 1870, leaving a wife, Mrs. Susan H. Whetstone, and her two children, Eugenia M. Whetstone (now Mrs. Rice) and Adam Whetstone, as well as John Whetstone, the only child of a predeceased wife, as his only heirs at law and next of kin. He left a will of full force at his death. Mrs. Susan H. Whetstone alone qualified as the executrix thereof. By the terms of this will it was provided that the executors should sell his steam sawmill for cash and pay his debts, but, if it should turn out that the proceeds of the sale of such steam sawmill were insufficient to pay his debts, he gave the executors power to sell as much of his real estate from the western portion of his plantation, known as "China Grove," as will satisfy said debts. By the second clause of his will he gave and devised to his widow, Susan H. Whetstone, for and during her natural life, all his China Grove plantation, whereon was the dwelling house. After her death he devised all of his China Grove plantation to his children begotten of the said Susan H. Whetstone, but, should such children die without lawful issue, the same, after one-fourth part of the value of said lands had been paid to testator's sister-in-law, Miss Elizabeth Arnold, should vest in his son John Whetstone, and his heirs, forever. By the fourth clause of his will he devised all the balance of his lands to his widow, Susan H. Whetstone, and her heirs, forever.

Unfortunately for the plans developed in his will by the testator, his debts were far greater than could be paid off by the sale of his steam engine and mill, even when aided by the sale of the western portion of his plantation, known as "China Grove." Hence his widow and executrix Mrs. S. H. Whetstone, filed her complaint in the court of common pleas for Barnwell county, in this state, praying that suits against her as such executrix by individual creditors might be enjoined, and all such creditors be required to establish their claims under her action; that she might be allowed to account for her actings and doings as said executrix; that the lands of her testator might be sold to pay debts after claim for dower and homestead had been adjusted and provided for. She stated that her testator was seised of 1,100 acres of land. She named as parties defendant to her said action testator's three children, including the two she had borne him, and one or more of his creditors. The service of the summons and complaint was accepted by the creditors, also by John Whetstone, who was an adult, and Mrs. Susan H. Whetstone accepted service for her minor children, Eugenia and Adam. The judgment was by consent, allowing the widow, Susan H. Whetstone, to have set apart to her, as her dower and homestead, 200 acres of land, with the dwelling house, and requiring the balance of the land, about 900 acres, after being divided into 100-acre lots or parcels, to be sold by the sheriff, and the proceeds, after the payment of costs and counsel fee, to be applied to the payment of debts. The son Adam died in the year 1896, unmarried and childless. Then the mother, Mrs. Susan H. Whetstone, died in 1898. In the year 1899, the plaintiff, Eugenia, who had intermarried with one Thomas S. Rice, brought her action against F. M. Bamberg, as defendant, to recover some 182 acres of land, on the ground that she was not a party to the suit of her mother, just above described, and as a devisee under her father's will she was entitled to the same; the life tenant, her mother, being dead, and her brother, Adam, having died before her mother, unmarried and without issue. The defendant admitted that he was in possession of the land, but invoked the protection of the statute of limitations, and also that there must be some mistake in the judgment roll of the action of Susan H. Whetstone, executrix, as plaintiff, against John Whetstone et al., as defendants, of August, 1872, as to the service upon the infants, Eugenia and Adam Whetstone, of the summons and complaint therein; also, that the power of sale in the will conferred upon Susan H. Whetstone should be considered as exercised when she obtained the sale thereof through the court of common pleas. There was a trial of these issues before Judge Gage and a jury, which resulted in a verdict for the defendant; but the Supreme Court of this state ordered a new trial on account of the mistake of the circuit judge in ordering the jury to pass upon the documentary evidence without first passing upon and construing said documents himself. See Rice v. Bamberg, 59 S. C. 498, 38 S. E. 209. The action came on for trial before Judge Ernest Gary and a jury at the spring term of 1903. When the plaintiff closed her testimony, a motion was made for nonsuit, which was refused. At the conclusion of the testimony the presiding judge directed the jury to return the following verdict: "We find for the plaintiff the land in dispute"—which was done. After entry of judgment, the defendant appealed upon the following grounds:

"(1) Because his honor erred in refusing the nonsuit, and in directing a verdict for plaintiff, as under the will of John M. Whetstone, at the death of Adam, John C. Whetstone became a tenant in common with plaintiff, and she could not recover as sole plaintiff, the interest of John C. in Adam's interest having passed under the sale. (2) Because, under the will of John M. Whetstone, Adam took a vested interest in fee simple at the death of testator; and, dying without issue, at his death his interest went to his mother and the plaintiff in common, and under the sale in question the mother's interest passed to defendant. (3) Because, if the interest of Adam and that of plaintiff was a fee conditional, it was barred by the sale made by the life tenant. (4) Because, it being shown that the land in question was the western portion of China Grove, the sale should be referred to the power in the will, and upheld as a sale to pay debts. (5) Because the fact that the executrix went into court, seeking the aid of the court in carrying out the will, to sell these lands for the payment of debts, was not sufficient to prevent such sale from being referred to the power in the will. (6) Because the decree in Whetstone v. Smith et al., having been made as a consent decree, was the act of the parties, and, being the act of the executrix, the sale under it was her sale, and should be upheld under the power in the will. (7) Because a verdict for plaintiff should be directed only in a case where there is no testimony to support a verdict for defendant; and Gen. Bamberg having testified that he was advised by Maj. Izlar that the title to this land was good, and Maj. Izlar having testified that if he so advised, which was quite probable, he did so after examining the record in Whetstone v. Smith, and finding it complete, by which he meant everything which a practicing attorney thought necessary, and Mr. Simms having testified that the record had been out of its proper place for a year or two, and had been called for and examined by various parties, this testimony, if believed by the jury, was sufficient to support a verdict for defendant, and his honor erred in directing one for plaintiff. (8) Because, under the foregoing testimony, the jury would have been warranted in finding that when Maj. L. T. Izlar examined the record he found evidence of personal service on the infants, and, if so, the verdict should have been for the defendant. (9) Because his honor erred in sustaining the objection to the question propounded to Maj. Izlar as to whether, if he had found the record as it now is, with the only reference as to the service of the summons the indorsement thereon, he would have advised that the title was good and saying, 'No, sir, you can't impeach a record that way.' (10) Because this question was not intended to impeach a record, but to remedy a defect therein by supplying testimony from which the jury should infer that the evidence of proper service once existed and had been lost."

We will now examine these exceptions in the groups as set out in the argument of John R. Bellinger, Esq.

The first, second, and third grounds refer to the alleged error of the circuit judge in refusing the motion of defendant for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's testimony. We must recall the fact that the sale of the lands of John C. Whetstone, deceased, took place in the year 1872. Clearly, whatever estate Mrs. Susan H. Whetstone had at that time, or which she asserted she had, passed to the purchasers of such real estate at said sale. She was a devisee under the second clause of her husband's will of a life estate in his China Grove plantation for life only, and under the fourth clause of said will she was a devisee of all the rest of her husband's lands in fee simple. If she elected not to take these devises, but to claim homestead and dower, and these were provided for by the decree as 200 acres of land, the balance of the lands, some 900 acres, were free from her claim of dower and homestead. It must be remembered that the remainder of said China Grove plantation was vested in her two children, Eugenia and Adam. She had no interest in the vested estates of Eugenia and Adam at that time. The old maxim is that no one is an heir of a living person. But when Adam died, in the year 1898, she, with Eugenia, her daughter, were seised of any estate that Adam had. The brother John Whetstone, being only a half-brother of Adam, could not inherit from Adam while his mother and sister of the whole blood were alive. Then, at the death of Mrs. Susan H. Whetstone, her daughter, Eugenia, alone inherited any estate she had as derived from Adam. But it is suggested in argument that any share Susan H. Whetstone had would be cast to the purchasers at the sale in 1872. We have just answered this by showing that Mrs. Whetstone at the time had no interest or estate in the remainder in Eugenia and Adam. Indeed, she had renounced all claims under her husband's will. These exceptions are overruled.

Exceptions 4, 5, and 6 relate to the defense that the defendant, having become the owner, through succession or purchase, of the lands now sought to be recovered, as the western part of the China Grove plantation, which the executrix was authorized to sell in the event the sale of the steam sawmill did not provide funds enough to pay the debts, has the right to claim the sale by the court as the exercise of the power of sale by Susan H. Whetstone, as executrix. The record of the action instituted by Mrs. Susan H.

Whetstone, as executrix, against the creditors and the children of John C. Whetstone, deceased, as defendants, shows that not only the western part of the China Grove plantation was sold, but all the lands of testator, some 1,100 acres, were sold under the judgment in that action. Thus it is manifest that defendant's contention is these particulars cannot be sustained. These exceptions are overruled.

We will next consider the seventh and eighth exceptions, referring, as they do, to alleged assumption of power by the circuit judge to direct the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff. In Evans v. Chamberlain, 40 S. C. 104, 18 S. E. 213, this court held that, if there was any pertinent testimony for the plaintiff, the case must go to the jury. Again, this court held in Nicholls v. Hill, 42 S. C. 28, 19 S. E. 1017, that, where no issues of fact were involved, the judge may direct a verdict. There were no issues of fact here presented—only issues of law. It was the duty of the circuit judge to direct a verdict. There were no contests as to parties. There was no question as to the lands in defendant; no question as to documentary evidence, except as we shall hereafter refer to Major Izlar's testimony, which we will hereinafter show was utterly incompetent. These exceptions are overruled.

Lastly, we will pass upon the ninth and tenth exceptions, relating, as they do, to the alleged error of the circuit judge in refusing to allow Maj. Izlar, a witness for the defendant, to answer the question whether, if he had found the record as it now is, with the only reference as to the service of the summons as that indorsed thereon as accepted by Mrs. Whetstone, he would have advised that the title was good. It will be observed that in Maj. Izlar's testimony he nowhere says that he remembers having examined this record. All he says is that, if the defendant says he did, he probably did so. Now, can a witness, who has no recollection of this record, testify as to its condition? Such a paper as defendant wished to establish was one that showed that the two infants, Eugenia and Adam, were served personally with summons. No witness has testified that any such paper ever existed. It was necessary to prove that such paper once existed. On the contrary, the only service proved by the record was that accepted by Mrs. Susan H. Whetstone, their mother, while they were infants. The former decision in this very case (59 S. C. 498, 38 S. E. 209) expressly decides how the service of a summons upon an infant should be made, viz., personally upon the infant. Maj. Izlar disclaimed any knowledge. Defendant sought to substitute Maj. Izlar's inferences in the place of knowledge. This he could not do. These exceptions are overruled.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

PARK v. CITY OF LAURENS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. March 11, 1904.)

CITIES—LIABILITIES—SERVICES OF ATTORNEY—PRIVITY OF CONTRACT.

1. Where a citizen of a city employed an attorney to sue to compel performance by city officers of certain duties neglected by them, and the suit resulted in bringing funds into the city treasury, it did not create an implied contract on the part of the city to pay such attorney for his services.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Laurens County; Benet, Special Judge.

Action by James B. Park against the city of Laurens. From an order overruling a demurrer, defendant appeals. Reversed.

The following was the complaint:

"The complaint of the above-named plaintiff respectfully shows unto the court:

"(1) That the plaintiff herein is now, and was at the times hereinafter named, an attorney at law, residing at Greenwood, in the county of Greenwood, in the state of South Carolina.

"(2) That the defendant herein is now, and was at the times hereinafter named, a municipal corporation created under the laws of the state of South Carolina, and is known as and called the 'City of Laurens.'

"(3) That on or about the 1st day of November, 1898, this plaintiff, as the attorney of J. H. Garrison, a citizen and taxpayer of the said the city of Laurens, commenced an action or proceeding in the Supreme Court of the state of South Carolina, for the benefit of the said J. H. Garrison and all other citizens and taxpayers of the said the city of Laurens, against the municipal officers of the said the city of Laurens and the city of Laurens and the Laurens Cotton Mills, a corporation situate within the corporate limits of the said the city of Laurens, wherein the said J. H. Garrison, among other things, sought to have an ordinance or resolution theretofore passed by the city council of the city of Laurens, exempting the Laurens Cotton Mills from taxation for a period of twelve years, declared unconstitutional and void, and for a writ of mandamus against the corporate officers of the said the city of Laurens, compelling them to collect the back taxes at that time due by the said Laurens Cotton Mills, and thereafter levy and collect from the said Laurens Cotton Mills each year the taxes that should become due upon its property situate within the corporate limits of the said the city of Laurens.

"(4) That thereafter such proceedings were had in the said action in the Supreme Court as resulted in a decision declaring the said ordinance or resolution void, and compelling the municipal officers of the said the city of Laurens to levy and collect from the Laurens Cotton Mills the unpaid taxes for the years 1896 and 1898, and to levy and collect each year thereafter for the balance of the twelve years taxes upon the property of the Laurens Cotton Mills situate within the corporate limits of the city of Laurens.

"(5) That in the said proceedings the plaintiff asked that, inasmuch as all the citizens and taxpayers of the city of Laurens would be benefited by the said action, a reasonable attorney's fee be allowed this plaintiff for the bringing of the said action; but, before the said action was ended and a decision rendered, W. R. Richey, Esq., then the mayor of the city of Laurens, and also attorney of record for the municipal officers of the city of Laurens and said the city of Laurens in the before-mentioned action or proceeding in the Supreme Court, charged with the management and in full control thereof, assured this plaintiff that if he would abandon his claim for a fee by the Supreme Court, and would present a claim for services rendered to the city council of the city of Laurens, a reasonable fee would be allowed this plaintiff for the bringing of the said action.

"(6) That, in bringing the said action or proceeding in the Supreme Court, the said J. H. Garrison, suing for the benefit of himself and all other citizens and taxpayers of the city of Laurens, was the representative of the city of Laurens, and the said action was brought by the said J. H. Garrison, a citizen and taxpayer, because of the refusal, neglect, and failure of the corporate officers of the said the city of Laurens to perform the duties imposed upon them by law, and levy and collect the taxes due by the Laurens Cotton Mills.

"(7) That the city of Laurens, as a direct result of the said action or proceeding, has received as taxes from Laurens Cotton Mills for the years 1896 and 1898 more than $2,000, and for the years 1899, 1900, 1901, and 1902, since the decision in the said action or proceeding, more than $8,000, and will receive at the same rate for the exempted period over $10,000 more, so that as a result of the said action or proceeding the city of Laurens, for the benefit of her citizens and taxpayers, will receive more than $20,000.

"(8) That, relying upon the assurances of W. R. Richey, Esq., the then mayor of the city of Laurens, and the authorized attorney of record for the said municipal officers of the city of Laurens and said the city of Laurens, this plaintiff abandoned his claim for the allowance of a fee by the Supreme Court in the said action or proceeding, and, in accordance with the said assurances, demanded of the proper officers of the city of Laurens a reasonable fee for the said services, and the same has been refused.

"(9) That the sum of $2,000 is a reasonable fee to this plaintiff for the services rendered the said the city of Laurens.

"Wherefore the said plaintiff demands judgment against the said defendant the city of Laurens for the sum of $2,000 and the costs of this action."

The defendant demurred on the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in that:

"(1) The complaint shows on its face that the plaintiff was never employed to perform the services set out therein by the city of Laurens.

"(2) No contract, either express or implied, is shown in the complaint between the plaintiff and the city of Laurens, but, on the contrary, the complaint shows that the services therein alleged were performed by the plaintiff at the request of his client, J. H. Garrison, in an action against the mayor and aldermen of the city of Laurens.

"(3) That the complaint does not show any promise on the part of the defendant to pay for the services rendered, but simply alleges that W. R. Richey, Esq., who was then mayor, promised to see plaintiff paid, which was entirely without consideration, and in no event could bind the defendant."

A. O. Todd, for appellant. F. B. Grier (J. F. J. Caldwell, of counsel), for respondent.

WOODS, J. The city of Laurens undertook to exempt the Laurens Cotton Mills from taxation. J. H. Garrison, a resident and taxpayer of the city, filed his petition in this court, alleging such exemption to be unconstitutional, and asking for a writ of mandamus compelling the city council to collect the taxes. The city council and the cotton mill both opposed the granting of the relief sought. After litigation, the writ of mandamus was issued. The plaintiff in this action, who was employed by Garrison as his attorney, and conducted the litigation for him in that proceeding, now brings his action against the city of Laurens for his reasonable fees, alleging, first, that the city expressly, through its mayor and attorney, agreed to pay his fees; and, second, that his client, J. H. Garrison, suing for the benefit of himself and all other citizens and taxpayers of the city, was in the litigation the representative of the city, because of the neglect and refusal of the city council to perform the duty of collecting the tax required of it by law, and that through his efforts large sums have come into the city treasury. The defendant demurs on the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in that it does not state an express contract with the city, but with its mayor and attorney, which was not binding on the city, because made without authority and without consideration, and in that it does not state an implied contract with the city, but, on the contrary, that the plaintiff's services were rendered to his client, Garrison, in an action against the mayor and aldermen of the city and the city itself. The complaint and the demurrer are set out in full by the reporter. The circuit judge overruled the demurrer.

The allegations of the complaint as to the express contract are contained in the fifth paragraph:

"That in the said proceedings the plaintiff asked that, inasmuch as all the citizens and taxpayers of the city of Laurens would be benefited by the said action, a reasonable attorney's fee be allowed this plaintiff for the bringing of the said action; but, before the said action was ended and a decision rendered, W. R. Richey, Esq., then the mayor of the city of Laurens, and also attorney of record for the municipal officers of the city of Laurens and the said city of Laurens in the before-mentioned action or proceeding in the Supreme Court, charged with the management and in full control thereof, assured this plaintiff that if he would abandon his claim for a fee by the Supreme Court, and would present a claim for services rendered to the city council of the city of Laurens, that a reasonable fee would be allowed this plaintiff for the bringing of the said action."

The consideration alleged is adequate. It is quite immaterial whether the plaintiff would or would not have been allowed his claim in this court under the mandamus proceeding. The settlement of pending litigation was a valuable consideration.

The act incorporating the city of Laurens is a public act, and the court must take judicial cognizance of it. The charter of the city does not confer upon the mayor the power to make a contract for services, and therefore his agreement in that capacity could not be sustained as a valid exercise of official authority, binding on the city. We do not think there is any allegation of special authority conferred upon him by the city council. Reliance is placed on the statement in the complaint that Mr. Richey, the mayor and attorney of record of the city council and of the city of Laurens, was "charged with the management and in full control" of the mandamus proceeding; but it plainly appears from the context that this is no more than an allegation that by virtue of his office as mayor, and as attorney of record for the city council and for the city, he was charged with the management and full control of the proceeding. These relations do not imply authority to make a contract to settle the cause, or allow attorney's fees to opposing counsel. Special authority from the city council to Mr. Richey should have been alleged.

It is well settled that there is no ground to imply a contract where the parties have agreed upon an express contract covering the same subject-matter. Wood v. Ashe, 1 Strob. 407; 15 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 1078. Having found, however, that no express contract with the city of Laurens is alleged, it is necessary to consider the allegations as to implied contract. The conclusion as to the allowance of attorney's fees drawn from all the decisions in this state is that there must be a contract, express or implied, with the party to be charged, or with his representative. Nimmons v. Stewart, 13 S. C.

445; Hand v. R. Co., 21 S. C. 162; Westmoreland v. Martin, 24 S. C. 239; Ex parte Lynch, 25 S. C. 200; Hubbard v. Camperdown Mills, 25 S. C. 496, 1 S. E. 5; Ex parte Fort, 36 S. C. 25, 15 S. E. 332. See, also, Rives v. Patty (Miss.) 20 South. 862, 60 Am. St. Rep. 510; Attorney General v. North American Life Insurance Co., 43 Am. Rep. 648; Grant v. Lookout Mountain Co. (Tenn.) 28 S. W. 90, 27 L. R. A. 99; Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 533, 26 L. Ed. 1157. The difficult questions are, who is a representative, and what circumstances imply a contract?

All cases here and elsewhere in which fees have been adjudged to an attorney on the ground of representation were equity causes, where the court had actual charge of the money or other property from which the fees were allowed. We have not been able to find any cause where the action of an attorney for fees against an individual or a corporation has been sustained on the ground that such individual or corporation had an interest in, and was benefited by, a suit instituted at the instance of another person and in his name. When municipal officers refuse to perform their plain ministerial duty, any citizen interested is allowed to put the machinery of the courts in motion to require the performance of such duty, because of his own interest in its performance; but it would be stretching the doctrine of representation very far to hold that in such case he was the representative, agent, or trustee of the corporation, in the sense that his attorney could bring a direct action against the city for his services. This would be equivalent to holding that the municipality, and, through it, every one of its citizens, should be forced to accept the moving party as the municipal representative in an action which they might not sanction. We do not think it is a sufficient answer to this objection to say the attorney of the party instituting the proceeding should be paid by the city only when funds come into the city treasury, or it acquires property as the result of the proceeding. Even where there is a strict legal right, the municipal authorities may regard its enforcement injurious or impolitic, and may be supported in this view by the citizens generally. In that case one interested may nevertheless set the machinery of the law in motion to enforce his right as a citizen to have the council perform a legal duty, and the judgment of the court, made in recognition of the rights of such citizen to have the legal duty performed, may confer, from the legal standpoint, great benefit on the municipality, and through it on its citizens; but it does not follow from this that the city is legally bound to recognize the actor in such proceedings as its representative in the litigation, whose reasonable contracts for attorney's fees and other expenses of the litigation would be the city's contracts. To sustain such a proposition would be taking a very long step in advance of any precedent on the subject of implied representation that has been cited in argument, or that we have been able to find. We do not say that no case could arise where a citizen would be entitled to reimbursement from the city of funds expended as attorney's fees or otherwise in maintaining a suit for its benefit. The sole question we are called upon to decide in this case is whether the conduct of this litigation by the plaintiff under contract with Mr. Garrison implied a contract between the city and the plaintiff upon which he could bring a direct action. We are obliged to hold that there was no privity of contract between the city and the plaintiff, and therefore the action cannot be sustained.

To avoid misunderstanding, it may be well to say the right of Garrison to bring his action for counsel fees and other expenses, on the ground that he made these disbursements in securing a public municipal right which the city council refused to enforce, is not here involved. Such an action would in no wise depend upon any claim to represent the city of Laurens or its council, such as is alleged in this complaint, but, if it could stand at all, would have to rest on the principle thus laid down in Keener on Quasi Contracts, 341: "Where an obligation is imposed by law upon a person to do an act, because of the interest which the public has in its performance, it would seem that, on the defendant's failure to perform, a person performing the same with the expectation of receiving compensation should be allowed to recover against the defendant." We allude to this subject merely to make clearer the views expressed as to this case, and with no intention of intimating an opinion as to whether the facts of this transaction would sustain such an action.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, with leave to the plaintiff to move in the circuit court to amend his complaint by alleging express authority in Mr. Richey, the mayor and attorney, to make the contract set out in the fifth paragraph of the complaint, or to amend the complaint in any other particular as he may be advised.

DORR v. CAMDEN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 8, 1904.)

DUTIES OF AGENT—INFORMATION ACQUIRED— CONTINGENT FEE—COMPENSATION —NEW TRIAL.

1. Neither agents or subagents nor attorneys or assistants thereto can withhold from principal or client information acquired by them in the exercise of such agency or attorneyship, and use the same to extort an increased compensation from such principal or client, or coerce such principal or client into a contract he would not enter into upon full information.

2. To sustain a contingent fee it must be shown that no unfair advantage was taken of his client by the attorney, but that the same was entered into by the client, after full knowledge of the facts and circumstances, for legal services of skill, judgment, and ability of a character to justify a contract for such contingent fee. Ordinary services requiring no legal ability are not a sufficient consideration for such fee wholly disproportionate thereto.

3. When the services rendered are not of such character as to furnish consideration for a contract for a contingent fee unfairly obtained from a client, the attorney may recover for the value of his actual services rendered his client upon pleadings and proofs justifying such recovery.

4. When the court has improperly instructed the jury as to the law governing the facts as shown in evidence, a verdict in accordance with such instructions should, on motion of the prejudiced party, be promptly set aside, and a new trial granted.

Error to Circuit Court, Wood County; L. N. Tavenner, Judge.

Action by C. P. Dorr against J. N. Camden. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Van Winkle & Ambler, S. V. Woods, W. E. Haymond, and John H. Holt, for plaintiff in error. George E. Price, for defendant in error.

DENT, J. C. P. Dorr, plaintiff, complains of the judgment of the circuit court of Wood county bearing date on the 12th of January, 1903, in favor of Johnson N. Camden, defendant, setting aside the verdict of a jury in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $15,972.61, and granting the defendant a new trial. The gist of the action is stated in the declaration as follows, to wit:

"And for this, also, that heretofore, to wit, on the — day of —, 1890, the said defendant claiming a right to certain lands, the legal title to which was in one William S. Dewing, which lands lie in the counties of Greenbrier, Nicholas, and Webster, in the State of West Virginia, and lying within the boundaries of certain lands known as the 'Caperton Lands,' and the said plaintiff then and there being an attorney at law duly licensed and practicing under the laws of West Virginia, having a knowledge of the facts and circumstances connected with the transactions as to said land, and the rights thereto, which were of value to the said defendant, the said defendant then agreed with the plaintiff that he (the plaintiff) should furnish him the said information and certain assistance in proceeding for the recovery of the said land, to wit, should furnish the said defendant information of certain facts which were necessary in the preparation of the proper pleadings in such proceeding, and information as to obtaining the proof necessary in such proceeding, and that he (the said defendant) would pay the said plaintiff the sum of one dollar per acre for every acre that he (defendant) should recover of the said land; and he (the defendant) then and there faithfully promised the plaintiff to pay him the said sum of one dollar per acre for every acre so recovered, in consideration of the said assistance and information."

This undoubtedly shows a good cause of action free from maintenance or champerty. It is for compensation for services to be rendered, and for information to be given in support of defendant's suit, to be contingent upon and measured by the extent of defendant's final recovery, and, if plaintiff had sustained it by proof limited to such allegations, his right of recovery would have been unquestionable. He was to have no share or portion in the thing to be recovered, but his compensation was to be in proportion to the extent thereof; and it must be viewed as alleging, in effect, a contract between an attorney and his client for a fee contingent in amount on the extent of the recovery. Anderson v. Caraway, 27 W. Va. 385.

This action is a sequence to the suits of C. P. Dorr v. Dewing & Sons, 36 W. Va. 466, 15 S. E. 93; Dewing & Sons v. Hutton, 40 W. Va. 521; Hutton v. Dewing & Sons, 42 W. Va. 691, 26 S. E. 197; Dewing & Sons v. Hutton, 48 W. Va. 578, 37 S. E. 670; and Camden v. Dewing & Sons, 47 W. Va. 310, 34 S. E. 911, 81 Am. St. Rep. 797. The principal actors in all this comedy of errors, of which this seems to be the last scene or postlude, are A. H. Winchester, Elihu Hutton, Bernard J. Butcher, and C. P. Dorr, plaintiff, acting as attorneys and agents for Dewing & Sons and Johnson N. Camden, defendant. A. H. Winchester was the confidential and secret agent of Dewing & Sons, of Kalamazoo, Mich., sent into the state of West Virginia to buy timber lands for his principals. When it came to purchasing what is known as the "Gauley Lands" he took into partnership with him Elihu Hutton and Bernard L. Butcher. This partnership, finding Mr. Camden, the defendant, engaged in taking options upon and acquiring lands in the Gauley region, where they designed to make their purchases, entered into a contract with the defendant, for the purpose of avoiding competition and securing their lands at a very low rate, that if he would turn over to them his options, and abandon the region to them, they would purchase for him certain large tracts of land containing 13,366 acres, now involved in the suit, and lying within what is known as the "Caperton Survey," and charge him therefor only the actual price and expense of obtaining the same. Mr. Winchester employed the plaintiff as attorney and agent to assist in buying and securing the title to these lands, both for the partnership and for the defendant. He was fully aware that these lands were being purchased for the defendant. The defendant faithfully complied with his partnership contract, and the partnership, by reason thereof, with the aid and assistance of their attorney, the plaintiff, were enabled to purchase in this Gauley region about 55,000 acres of land, including defendant's, at a little more than one dollar per acre. Excluding their purchases for defendant, they amounted to over 40,000 acres. After these purchases were completed, Butcher having withdrawn from the partnership, Dewing & Sons take the place of Winchester, pay the purchase money for these lands, and then buy out Hutton by agreeing to pay him the rate of 50 cents per acre. William S. Dewing, acting in behalf of Dewing & Sons, agreed to take the place of Winchester, and to carry out all agreements, contracts, and understandings, in good faith, of the former partnership. Having purchased Hutton's interest, Dewing & Sons insisted that all these lands should be conveyed to them, and that they would hold the defendant's lands in trust for him, and to be conveyed to him on payment of the purchase money and expenses. The plaintiff, not having been paid for his services in full by Winchester, sued Dewing & Sons for the balance due him, and obtained a decree therefor amounting to $7,100, which decree was affirmed by this court. The defendant, not having received his portion of the lands according to his contract, and having learned that the title thereto had been invested in Dewing & Sons, demanded the same from Dewing & Sons, and, they refusing to convey the same, was preparing to institute suit to enforce the contract between himself and Winchester, Hutton, and Butcher, and of which they and Dewing & Sons had received the full benefit, enabling them to make thousands of dollars that they might not otherwise have made. The plaintiff, being employed by Winchester, Hutton, and Butcher to assist them as agent and attorney in carrying out their contract with and for the defendant, and having received a handsome compensation for his services in behalf of the defendant, approached the defendant in company with Mr. Hutton, and proposed to the defendant, to use his own language: "If you will give me two dollars an acre, I will see that you get the facts sufficient to recover this land"—meaning the land that he had assisted Mr. Winchester, Mr. Hutton, and Mr. Butcher in acquiring for the defendant, and for which service he had been paid by Dewing & Sons. According to the plaintiff's testimony, the defendant replied to this proposition: "Other people are interested with me, and I would have to pay the purchase money, and I will give you one dollar an acre for all the land I will recover in a case of that kind." He says, "I will take it." Plaintiff then told Mr. Hutton, in defendant's presence, that he would give him one-half the amount if he would aid him, to which Mr. Hutton assented. This is the contract on which this suit is brought. It is simply an agreement by an attorney to furnish the facts to secure a recovery, provided he receives compensation proportionate to such recovery. It is, in other words, a proposition by defendant's agent and attorney to furnish him information that this agent and attorney had acquired while acting as his agent in procuring these same lands for him, and for which he had received full compensation, but which had not vested according to contract, such information to be used in completing such contract according to the true tenor and effect thereof.

This proposition is innocent enough in itself, but it has no consideration to support it. This information, possessed by his agents and acquired by them in complying with this very contract, belonged to the defendant as a matter of law, and these agents had no right to charge him therefor, or make merchandise thereof at his expense. It may be said that the agency, especially that of Dorr, was at an end. Agency never ceases, in so far as the knowledge and information acquired by the agent in carrying out the same is concerned, until the contract which rendered the agency necessary is fully consummated, or the purpose which gave rise to the agency has been attained. While Dorr was not a party to the contract, nor obligated to see that it was fully carried out, yet, having been employed by Winchester as attorney and agent to aid in carrying it out, to the full extent and scope of his employment, he became as fully the defendant's agent as Winchester, Hutton, and Dewing, and the information thus acquired by law belonged to his principal without money or reward other than he had already received for his services rendered. As shown in evidence, the only testimony that Dorr proposed to produce besides his own, for which he had no right to charge, was that of Winchester, Hutton, and Butcher, defendant's agents to carry out this very contract, all of whom were under obligation, and had been fully compensated, to see that it was consummated. Therefore, neither the testimony of plaintiff nor of these other agents furnish any consideration for plaintiff's alleged contract.

"Assumpsit will not lie to recover money promised for doing that which it was the parties' duty to do without reward, for it is extortion and illegal." "So this action, being an equitable one, cannot be supported where the assumpsit arises from an unconscientious demand." 2 Tuck. 134, 135. In obtaining these lands for the defendant, Dewing & Sons, Winchester, Hutton, Butcher, and Dorr all acted as agents for the defendant and received compensation therefor, and now Dorr, one of these agents, demands a further compensation to furnish the necessary information growing out of the agency to enable the principal to compel the other agents to fulfill the contract under which they were all acting. This is an unconscientious demand unsupported by a good legal consideration. 6 Am. & En. En. Law (2d Ed.) 752. Not only is this true, but this alleged contract was obtained by open collusion between Dorr and Hutton, both of whom had been acting as agents for the defendant and under contract to secure these lands for him. By open collusion I mean they went together into the defendant's presence, and while the proposition was not made jointly to him, yet he was informed that Hutton was to participate in the additional compensation to the extent of one moiety thereof. Hutton had all the information the defendant needed, and he was under legal obligation to furnish it to him, and to see that he obtained the title to his lands from the parties whom Hutton had constituted trustee thereof for defendant's benefit, and, if it took any additional compensation to obtain the lands, Hutton was in duty bound to pay it in order to carry out the contract in good faith.

All the knowledge of the agent belongs to the principal, and he has no right to use it for his own benefit to extort money or other thing from his principal. 1 Perry on Trusts, § 206. This same rule applies to attorneys at law. In 1 Perry on Trusts, § 202, it is said: "The client is so completely in the hands of the attorney in relation to the subject-matter of litigation that it would be almost impossible for him to enter into a free and fair contract in regard to it." "This disability of an attorney continues as long as the relation of attorney and client continues, and as much longer as the influence of the relation can be supposed to extend. If the relation has ceased, but the influence of the relation continues to affect the minds of the parties, all contracts made under the influence will be avoided." Also, in section 206: "Whatever an agent may be employed to do, he cannot use his position, nor the knowledge obtained by his employment, to obtain a bargain from his principal." If he does, such bargain will be held invalid for undue influence. 27 Am. & En. En. Law, 477. In the present case, the plaintiff and Hutton, having been agents to acquire these lands for the defendant, and without giving him the information with regard to the lands he was entitled to have through Dorrr alone, advised the defendant they had the necessary information to acquire these lands for him, which he had already fully compensated them for acquiring, if he would agree to pay Dorrr one dollar per acre for every acre recovered, to be divided between himself and Hutton. By this proposition, under the circumstances, defendant was placed in a very unfair position. He knew his case depended upon the evidence of these, his agents, together with his other two agents, Butcher and Winchester, to some extent at least, unknown to the defendant. If he rejected their proposal outright, they could give him much trouble, and probably succeed, if they made up their minds to do so, in depriving him of his lands altogether. They seemingly already having broken faith with him, he was placed in the quandary of accepting an unjust contract or of running the risk of losing his lands, and he might have been thereby driven to say such things as led them to believe that he accepted their proposition, and which, as between strangers dealing at arm's length, would make a valid contract.

Subagents and assistant attorneys are the agents and attorneys of the principal and client, it matters not by whom they are employed, and are subject to all the obligations of agency or attorneyship toward their principal or client, in so far as the information acquired by them during the exercise of the agency is concerned. Neither agents nor attorneys can withhold information acquired by virtue of and in the discharge of the duties of such agency or attorneyship, and use it for the purpose of extorting from principal or client, to whom such information belongs as a matter of right and law, an increased compensation for doing that for which they had already been fully compensated.

It may be urged that there is included in the contract the future service of Dorrr as attorney, as Mr. Hutton says, in setting up the proof and getting the same in shape so a recovery might be had, which would furnish a sufficient consideration to sustain the contract for a contingent fee. In 5 Am. & En. En. Law (2d Ed.) 827, the principle of law governing contingent fees is given as follows: "It may be stated as a well-grounded rule that a contract for a contingent fee must be made in good faith, without suppression or reserve of fact or apprehended difficulties, or undue influence of any sort or degree; and the compensation bargained for must be absolutely just and fair, so that the transaction is characterized throughout by all good faith to the client." Where an attorney suppresses the facts of the case, or uses any unfairness in securing a contract of this character, it will be held invalid, and, if he has rendered any service in carrying out such contract, he will be remitted to a recovery on a quantum meruit. Chester County v. Barber, 97 Pa. 455; Stewart v. Houston & R. Co., 62 Tex. 248. A contingent fee is only permitted to attorneys as reward for skill and diligence exercised in the prosecution of doubtful and litigated claims, and is not allowed for the rendition of mere minor services which any layman or inexperienced attorney might perform. It is the skill, diligence, ability, experience, judicial knowledge, and judgment of the attorney that is thereby rewarded, and the performance of duties that require no such qualities is wholly insufficient to sustain such fee, as the true measure of such services can be ascertained on a quantum meruit.

The evidence of this case clearly shows that the only duty the plaintiff was to perform was to furnish the evidence of himself, Winchester, Butcher, and Hutton, and the record and decision in the case of Camden v. Dewing shows the case wholly depended on the evidence of Winchester, Butcher, and Hutton, all of whom were under obligation to the defendant, as his fully compensated agents; to furnish him their evidence free of charge or compensation of any kind whatsoever. It is therefore clear from the proofs that the plaintiff did nothing requiring skill, diligence, experience, ability, legal knowledge, or judgment, entitling him to a contingent fee for legal services, and, as before seen, the contract, if entered into at all, was coerced from the defendant by the unfair advantage taken of him by his agents withholding from him information that belonged to him.

This brings forward for consideration the question as to whether the contract as alleged is supported by a preponderance of the evidence. To constitute a contract there must be free, mutual assent. 7 Am. & En. En. Law (2d Ed.) 110. As heretofore shown, defendant was placed in an unfair position by the proposers, and was not dealing with them at arm's length. Even with this unfairness it is hard to say that he assented to the proposition made by one of them. The beneficiaries, plaintiff and Hutton, say that he did. He denies, and says he did not, but answered them diplomatically by referring them to his attorney, Mr. Mollohan, who had been engaged to manage the suit for him. The beneficiaries say that after he accepted, and while they were considering the matter as to whether he should sign the writing prepared by the plaintiff, Mr. Mollohan came in, and the matter was referred to him, and he advised against signing any writing, for the reason that they would all have to be witnesses in the case, and it would be dangerous for them to have such contract brought out in evidence. Mr. Mollohan is an attorney of skill and ability, of long experience and high standing in his profession. He testifies that, when the plaintiff offered to show him the writing, he refused to have anything to do with it, and advised the beneficiaries that such contract was not legal, and he then went and advised his client not to enter into or make any such contract. On such points, the beneficiaries on one side, and the defendant and his attorney on the other, plainly contradict each other, while the facts and circumstances plainly preponderate in favor of the latter.

The plaintiff in his evidence, in detailing his conversation with the defendant, starts out with the idea that the defendant knew nothing about the matter, while the fact is at least presumable that he had full information from his agents, Winchester, Butcher, and Hutton, all about the matter, and, if he did not, Hutton was in position to furnish him, and was in duty bound to do so, such information at any time demanded. All he needed to sustain his case was for Winchester, Butcher, and Hutton to stand by him, and he had other lawyers to perform the heavy legal duties of his case. Hence there was not the least necessity for him to enter into such contract, unless it was to prevent his agents from becoming false to him. He was afraid of his agents, and therefore he had to treat them diplomatically. It is therefore very plain that both Mr. Mollohan and Mr. Camden, the defendant, testified fully to the truth of the transaction as they understood it, and the facts and circumstances bear them out. Nor can we say that the beneficiaries testified falsely, though contradicted. They went to the defendant to secure a certain contract from him for the information they had acquired about his business. He treated them diplomatically. From his diplomacy they may have inferred assent to their proposition.

But such inference on the consideration proposed will not justify or sustain a contract for a contingent fee, although it might sustain an action for services rendered by reason thereof upon a quantum meruit. It is therefore very plain that plaintiff is not entitled to recover on the special count under an express contract for a contingent fee, as set out in his declaration, and which he has endeavored to sustain in his evidence, but he may be entitled to recover under a general count for the value of the services actually rendered by him. Such invalid contract furnishes no criterion as to the amount that plaintiff will be entitled to recover, if anything. 5 Am. & En. En. Law (2d Ed.) 828.

From what has been said it is plain that the court instructed the jury under a mistaken view of the law, as applicable to the facts, and the court should have sustained the motion of the defendant to exclude the evidence, and direct a verdict for the defendant on the grounds that it did not sustain the special contract set out in the declaration, nor as set forth in the bill of particulars. The circuit court therefore committed no error in setting aside the verdict of the jury and in granting the defendant a new trial. As the plaintiff cannot recover on his alleged contract for a contingent fee, this court would probably be justified in entering a judgment for the defendant were it not that the plaintiff may be entitled to recover in this action, on proper allegations and proofs, for the actual services rendered by him under his invalid contract, or attempt to make a contract, being the actual services rendered by him for the defendant, and of which the defendant enjoyed the benefit.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

RORER v. HOLSTON NAT. BLDG. & LOAN ASS'N.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. March 8, 1904.)

INJUNCTION—SALE UNDER TRUST DEED—USURY.

1. The grantor in a deed of trust conveying real estate to secure the payment of a usurious debt may, in a suit in equity instituted by him to purge the debt of its usury, after having conveyed the land to a third party by deed with a covenant of general warranty, enjoin the sale of the property under the deed of trust pending the suit.

2. In such case the jurisdiction to enjoin rests upon the inherent power of the court to maintain its jurisdiction to give full and complete relief between the parties to the main cause of action by preventing either of them from interfering with or obstructing it by proceedings in pais or in a forum other than the one having jurisdiction, and also upon the lack of of any other remedy by which the plaintiff can prevent the defendant from fixing upon him inevitable liability to an innocent third party for a demand which, as between the original parties, may be resisted and defeated on the ground of utter invalidity.

3. In such case it is error to dissolve the injunction in advance of the hearing, unless it appears that the allegations of the bill cannot be, or probably will not be, sustained, or that the plaintiff is not prosecuting his suit with due diligence.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County; J. M. Sanders, Judge.

Action by Ernest Rorer against the Holston National Building & Loan Association. Decree for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Anderson & Easley, for appellant. W. Walter McClaugherty, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, P. Ernest Rorer borrowed $800 from the Holston National Building & Loan Association of Bristol, Tenn., on the 15th day of February, 1893, on eight shares of stock in said association, subscribed for by him, executing his bond for said sum of $800 and a deed of trust upon certain real estate to secure the payment thereof. The bond contained the following condition, which conforms to the provisions of the by-laws of the association, respecting the payment of premium: "Now if I pay promptly the monthly interest on said sum of $800.00-100 and the monthly premium of $4.00 bid by me for said loan, and the monthly payments on said shares of stock and any fines assessed under the rules of said association, and the taxes accruing on the lot of land described in the mortgage securing this obligation and the premiums necessary to keep the house on said lot insured in such sum as said association may require (not exceeding $800.00-100) until the said stock becomes fully paid in and of the value of $100 per share, then it is understood that, upon the surrender of said stock to said association, this note shall be deemed fully paid and canceled." Rorer paid the dues, interest, premium, and other charges until April 30, 1895, amounting to $358. In April, 1895, he conveyed the land on which the loan was secured to G. H. Wade, by deed with a covenant of general warranty, for the sum of $2,500, of which sum Wade agreed, according to the recitals of the deed, to pay $600 on the building association debt in monthly installments as Rorer had agreed to pay them. After having paid $739.50 to the building and loan association, Wade ceased to make payments, and the trustee in the deed of trust advertised the land for sale to satisfy a balance due on the loan of $567.02. Thereupon Rorer brought this suit to enjoin the sale, charging in his bill usury in the debt, and praying that it be expunged therefrom, and on the 4th day of October, 1902, on motion of the defendant, the injunction was dissolved. The appeal is from the order of dissolution.

The bill treated the property as still owned by the plaintiff, making no mention of the sale to Wade, and the order dissolving the injunction stands upon the answer of the building association, fully proven, showing the conveyance by Rorer to Wade, in consideration of $2,500. The deed recites that $600 of the purchase money was to be paid to the building association, and the balance to Rorer in three equal installments secured by deed of trust on the property, but the answer avers an assumption by Wade of Rorer's contract with the building association. It further appears from an exhibit filed with a deposition that Rorer had made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors on the 23d day of April, 1898. The record does not show any deed of trust from Wade to Rorer, nor, if it did, is there any allegation or proof that any of the purchase money due to Rorer remains unpaid. Wade's affidavit is filed in resistance of the motion to dissolve, and in it he says, "Affiant does not owe the plaintiff anything at all on account of the purchase money mentioned in said Exhibit Deed."

That Rorer may maintain a bill to purge the debt of usury, if it be usurious, is undeniable, and the only question presented is whether he can enjoin the sale. He has no title, either legal or equitable, to the property, nor any lien upon it, so far as appears from this record. Can he enjoin the sale of another man's property for the satisfaction of a usurious debt? No authority for or against such a proceeding has been furnished or found. It is urged, however, that as the plaintiff will be liable to Wade for any sum which he may be compelled to pay on account of this debt in excess of the $600 which he agreed to pay on it, he ought to be permitted to prevent the sale. But his liability to refund is not an interest or estate in the property, the sale of which is threatened, and he has his remedy against the building association to recover back any usurious interest which he may be compelled to pay. This court held in Jackson v. Kittle, 34 W. Va. 207, 12 S. E. 484, that: "As a general rule, a party cannot maintain a suit to remove a cloud or a bill quia timet, who has no other interest than the fact that he has sold the property with a covenant of general warranty; but in a case where evidence is about to be lost, or the party's inertia would result in the perfecting of an adverse title, he is not bound to lie by, but may bring his bill of quia timet." But this case is not within the rule. There a stranger set up, or threatened to assert, an adverse title with which the warrantor had no connection whatever, and which emanated from no act of his. Here the thing sought to be removed is not a cloud having the semblance of a strange and adverse title, but an incumbrance on the land by act of the warrantor which he has the right, and which it is his duty, to remove, and for which, in case he fails to do it, he must respond in damages to the extent of any excess over the agreed amount which his warrantee may be compelled to pay. Though he has no title to the land, nor any sort of claim upon it, there is a liability upon him in respect to it, which arises out of two acts of his own, the execution of the deed of trust to secure the usurious debt, and the subsequent conveyance to Wade, and from which he can only relieve himself by paying the debt or demonstrating its invalidity or nonexistence. That he seeks to do by this bill. Should he prosecute it to a finality, and obtain an adjudication that the debt has been fully paid, before any sale under the deed of trust, can it be possible that the building association could then sell the land, or that, in the event of an attempt to do so, Wade could not enjoin the sale by proving the adjudication made upon Rorer's bill? That he could do so is too plain and just to call for argumentative support. Having the right to pay the debt, and obviously the incidental right to have the amount of it settled before payment, and the aid of a court of equity to that end in the manner invoked by this bill, namely, by purgation of the usury from the debt, all independently of his grantee, it is manifestly just to allow him to prevent an attempt to sell the property, and cast upon him, in advance and anticipation of the settlement, the very liability from which he seeks to escape, and ought to be relieved, according to the allegations of his bill. It is only in respect to the land conveyed that any liability can be fixed upon the plaintiff, and the only mode of fixing it is by compulsory payment of the usurious debt, and the only method of compelling it is actual or threatened sale under the deed of trust. By enjoining the sale, therefore, the plaintiff interferes with the alleged right of no person except the creditor, and he must either enjoin or permit the usurious interest to be collected, and that from himself, not directly, but indirectly.

The jurisdiction for injunction does not necessarily rest upon irreparable injury to result from the sale of the land, however. Equity has properly taken jurisdiction of the controversy between Rorer and the building association, and, having taken jurisdiction of it, neither party would be permitted to resort to another forum for the determination of any matter involved in that controversy. A resort to a court of law by the building association for any action which would interfere with or obstruct full and complete administration of the equity jurisdiction of the subject-matter would be promptly enjoined, and obedience to the injunction enforced by attachment for contempt if necessary. State v. Fredlock, 52 W. Va. 232, 43 S. E. 153, 94 Am. St. Rep. 932. A sale under the deed of trust, pending the suit to purge the debt of its usury, though not a resort to another forum, is a proceeding in pais which would have all the effect of judgment and execution in another court. As shown by the foregoing observations, it would virtually nullify and defeat, by way of anticipation, the relief sought by the plaintiff in his bill. Without the aid of the injunction, he would be without any remedy at all to prevent the fixing upon him by the building association of a liability in favor of Wade, although not "irreparable injury" in the ordinary sense of those terms, for the injury might be compensable in damages. But it is clearly a case of want of adequate remedy at law, as regards the fixing of this liability.

The case assimilates itself also to that of an injunction to prevent the transfer, before maturity, of negotiable instruments fraudulently acquired. In such case the injury would not be irreparable any more than in this case, perhaps, as the injured party might have his action at law against the payee after having satisfied the notes in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value. But he is without remedy at law to prevent the use of the notes to fix upon him a liability which has no just or legal foundation. Therefore he is allowed to enjoin the transfer and cause the notes to be delivered up and canceled. Dickenson v. Bankers' Loan & Investment Co., 93 Va. 498, 25 S. E. 548; Devries v. Shumate, 53 Md. 211; Hullhorst v. Scharner, 15 Neb. 57, 17 N. W. 259; Jervis v. White, 7 Ves. Jr. 413; Brumley v. Holland, 7 Ves. Jr. 20. The settlement of this controversy between the plaintiff and defendant, if the case made by the bill shall be sustained, will put it beyond the power of the defendant to make any sale of the land under the deed of trust, for, if the debt be fully paid, as the bill alleges, then the court, by its final decree, will order a release of the deed of trust. These views show that the circumstance of one man's enjoining the sale of another's land is merely incidental to the exercise of the plaintiff's right to invoke the aid of equity jurisdiction and not the foundation of the right itself. In one aspect of the case, the injunction is a mere process in aid of the court's jurisdiction to give full relief in the main cause. In another, it is a writ to which the plaintiff is entitled on the ground of want of any other adequate remedy.

Though Wade might properly have joined in the prayer for the injunction in view of his ownership of the property, or could have been made a defendant, he had no direct interest in the real controversy between Rorer and the building association, and it is not perceived that he is a necessary party to the bill for the preliminary injunction. In Harper v. Middle States Loan, Building & Construction Co. (decided at this term) 46 S. E. 817, the owner of the property, incumbered by a similar deed of trust, filed a bill for injunction, making the debtor a defendant along with the trust creditor, and the debtor, by her answer, joined in the prayer of the bill, and averred an assignment of her claim for usury to the plaintiff, and this court affirmed a decree expunging the usury, prohibiting the sale, and giving a recovery of money paid in excess of the debt. But the facts in the case were different from those we have here. Wade claims to have paid the association all he agreed to pay, and on his theory there is no necessity for any action on the part of the plaintiff to prevent him from paying over on the usurious debt anything left in his hands for the purpose, as in the case above cited. The answer alleges an assumption on his part of the plaintiff's entire contract with the building association, but there is a right of retraction in the plaintiff as to this. As he may recover the money back after payment, he may prohibit the payment. If, however, Wade should be bound by the final decree so as to settle the rights of all parties interested, which would accord with the general rule that all persons interested in the subject-matter should be parties to a suit in equity, as well as the principle of giving full relief when jurisdiction attaches for one purpose, the failure to make him a party in the first instance was insufficient ground for dissolving the injunction, under the circumstances of the case. It is not too late, however, to bring him in for that purpose at the instance of either party.

Upon the foregoing views, the conclusion is that the court should have overruled the motion to dissolve, and retained the injunction until final hearing, causing all proper amendments to be made as to parties or otherwise. The order appealed from will therefore be reversed and set aside, the injunction reinstated, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

L. ROSENTHAL CLOTHING & DRY GOODS CO. v. SCOTTISH UNION & NATIONAL INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 8, 1904.)

INSURANCE—ACTION ON POLICY—BREACH OF CONDITIONS—PLEADING.

1. In an action on a fire insurance policy under the declaration prescribed by section 61, c. 125, Code 1899, if the defense is because of failure of the insured to comply with, or his violation of, any clause, condition, or warranty of the policy, though a precedent condition to recovery, no evidence is required of the plaintiff of his compliance therewith, unless the defendant file the statement required by section 64 of said chapter, specifying the clause, condition, or warranty not kept or violated. When such statement of defense is filed, the burden of proof to show compliance with the clause, condition, or warranty specified in it, if a condition precedent to recovery, is upon the plaintiff. Point 15 of Schwarzbach v. Protective Union, 25 W. Va. 622, 52 Am. Rep. 227, overruled.

2. A statement under Code 1899, c. 125, § 64, specifying a clause, condition, or warranty of a policy of fire insurance not complied with or violated by the insured, is not a plea, governed by strict principles, but only a specification, and is not open to demurrer for insufficiency. If too vague, evidence under it may be excluded.

3. A clause in a fire insurance policy binding the insured to furnish for examination books of account, bills, invoices, and other vouchers is a promissory warranty, and compliance with it in case of loss is a condition precedent to recovery, unless waived, or compliance with it is impossible.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Circuit Court, Tucker County;
John Homer Holt, Judge.

Action by the L. Rosenthal Clothing & Dry Goods Company against the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

C. O. Strieby, for plaintiff in error. Cunningham & Stallings and Will C. Guenther, for defendant in error.

BRANNON, J. In an action of assumpsit in the circuit court of Tucker county by the L. Rosenthal Clothing & Dry Goods Company against the Scottish Union & National Insurance Company to recover for the loss by fire of a stock of goods insured by a policy issued by said company, the court directed a verdict and gave judgment for the defendant, and the clothing company brought the case to this court.

The insurance company claims that there was no evidence given by the plaintiff to warrant a verdict, because the policy contained certain promissory warranties, with which the plaintiff failed to comply, and thus lost its right of action. Warranties in insurance law are of two kinds—affirmative and promissory. Affirmative warranties consist of a representation in the policy of a fact. Promissory warranties are those that require that something shall be done or not done after the policy takes effect. If the one is false, it avoids the policy; and, if a promissory warranty be not executed, this also avoids the policy. 15 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) 919, 920; 1 May on Ins. § 157. One warranty in this policy is that, before it should go into effect, the insured should make an inventory of the stock of goods; and another is that they should keep books of account, correctly detailing the purchases and sales. The insurance company claims that the clothing company failed to observe both these covenants, but it cannot have that matter considered, because it did not specify any default as to those covenants in the circuit court. Turning to the Code of 1899, c. 125, § 61, we find a short form of declaration on a policy of insurance, and that was used in this case. In section 64

we see that, under such declaration, "if the defense be that the action cannot be maintained because of the failure to perform or comply with, or violation of any clause, condition or warranty in, upon or annexed to the policy or contained in or upon any paper which is made by reference a part of the policy, the defendant must file a statement in writing specifying by reference thereto, or otherwise, the particular clause, condition or warranty in respect to which such failure or violation is claimed to have occurred." No statements were filed, pointing out failure to comply with the two warranties above specified; but the insurance company would meet this trouble with the argument that, as the making of the inventory and the keeping of books of purchases and sales are conditions precedent to recovery, proof thereof is essential to the plaintiff's case, and compliance with those warranties falls on a plaintiff to prove, and that no statement pointing out noncompliance with them is necessary. It is, no doubt, true that if a common-law declaration is filed, or, rather, by common-law pleading, the plaintiff must allege and prove compliance with those warranties, because they are conditions precedent, and the declaration must aver that the plaintiff complied with them. 11 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 411, 413; May on Ins. § 589. But the statutory form contains no such averment, and dispenses with it, and section 64 plainly renders proof of compliance with them not necessary on the part of the plaintiff, unless a statement is filed by the defendant that those warranties have not been complied with. When such statement is filed, the plaintiff is told wherein he has failed to observe the policy, and then he must prove such observance. The statute does not shift the burden of proof, but it does dispense with proof of observance of a clause or condition when there is no statement calling that particular clause or condition in question. Looking at the broad words of section 64, we cannot say that it applies to some clauses, and not to others. Common-law pleading did require the declaration to aver compliance with conditions precedent, but this statute changes that. It is a remedial statute, and must be liberally construed. Pleadings in insurance cases by common law were complicated and difficult, owing to the many stipulations in policies, and the object of the statute is to simplify. The statute allows the simple form of declaration, and it then provides for a plain plea that the defendant "is not liable to the plaintiff as in said declaration is alleged." That is the general issue, but it does not put the plaintiff on proof of his compliance with all the conditions precedent of his policy. They are very numerous, and, for this reason, in order to eliminate all conditions and clauses not really in issue, and narrow the controversy to those conditions and clauses actually in issue, the Legislature required the insurance company to file a statement as a specification of the particular clause or condition violated by the insured. All other conditions and clauses not thus brought into actual issue are out of the case. This is just, and the statute should be given such construction. It is the insurance company which complains of default, and it should specify wherein such default consists, and not compel the other party to produce a host of witnesses and ramble over the numerous clauses of the policy. The statute does not change the burden of proof; the plaintiff still carries that as to contested conditions; but it does dispense with all conditions not brought into issue by the defendant, by requiring it to specify the broken clause, condition, or warranty. The case of Schwarzbach v. Protective Union, 25 W. Va. 622, 52 Am. Rep. 227, does support the position of the defendant that the plaintiff must prove the making of an inventory, and keeping books of purchase and sales, as on indispensable call of his case, though the defendant has not filed any statement that the clause requiring such inventory and books had not been complied with; but, with great reluctance, we are compelled to overrule point 15 of that case, because it is in the teeth of the statute and emasculates its vigor and effect. To what does the statute apply? To what does it amount, under that decision? That decision is all right under common law, as proof of loss is a condition precedent to recovery, and the declaration must aver it; but the statute dispenses with that averment by the statutory declaration, and no proof of it is required until the plaintiff is warned by a specification that he has failed in complying with the clause requiring it. The case of Flanagan v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 42 W. Va. 426, 26 S. E. 513, by no means supports the position that the plaintiff must prove the precedent condition complied with, without a statement calling for it. It held, as we hold now, that the burden of proof of delivery of proof of loss is on the plaintiff when a statement demands it of him, but not otherwise. There was a statement in that case. I find the case of Adkins v. Globe Fire Ins. Co., 45 W. Va. 384, 32 S. E. 194, holds that the plaintiff need not show proof of loss until the defendant has pleaded failure to furnish it. Here we have two conflicting decisions. Which shall we follow? We think the Adkins Case the preferable one, in view of the statute. The same may be said of the iron-safe clause, which the defendant for the first time in this court relies upon.

The defendant filed a statement of the violation of a warranty in the policy that the insured "shall produce for examination all books of account, bills, invoices, and other vouchers, or certified copies thereof if originals be lost, at such reasonable place as may be designated by this company, and shall permit extracts and copies thereof to be made." The plaintiffs say that this statement did not call for proof of compliance with this clause, because it simply says, by reference to the lines of the policy containing it, that the plaintiffs did not produce for examination all books of account, bills, invoices, and other vouchers, or certified copies thereof, in case the originals were lost, and did not permit extracts or copies thereof to be made; failing to say that those papers were demanded, and there was a failure to produce them at a reasonable time and place. This argument treats the statement under section 64 as if it were a formal plea, but plainly it is not to be so treated. Look at the section. It will be seen that a formal plea is not contemplated, since all that it requires is a simple statement specifying the particular clause, condition, or warranty violated or not complied with, and it does not require further specification, or that legal certainty required by formal pleading. The office performed by such statement is to tell the plaintiff what particular warranty he must show to have been complied with. It tells him what he must prove according to the common law. By common law he would have to prove compliance with clauses of the policy creating conditions precedent to recovery, and this statute is designed simply to point out the particular one of the many clauses with which he must prove compliance. This is the view taken in Cappellar v. Queen Ins. Co., 21 W. Va. 578, where it is held that such statements are not pleas, and that they cannot be rejected for defects as if pleas, but that, if too vague, advantage is to be taken of such defects by excluding evidence under them. The statement involved definitely specifies the lines of the policy containing the warranty now under discussion, and plainly indicated its substance, and thus called on the plaintiff to prove compliance with that particular warranty singled out by the statement as required by the common law. The Cappellar Case holds that such statement cannot be rejected for defects.

Did the plaintiff fail to prove compliance with the warranty requiring the plaintiffs to produce books and papers for examination? The plaintiff firm was composed of Rosenthal, Hillelson, and Kaplan. Hillelson & Kaplan constituted a firm doing business at Buckhannon, and they and Rosenthal formed a new firm—the plaintiffs in this case—to do business at Davis. The stock of goods of the new firm was composed of the goods owned by Hillelson & Kaplan, removed from Buckhannon to Davis, and put into the new firm, and of new goods purchased by Rosenthal as his capital in the firm, and sent to Davis, and united with the goods furnished from Buckhannon by Hillelson & Kaplan, and of additions of new goods purchased at different times. There was no inventory of the goods sent from Buckhannon, amounting to $5,716. The insurance company demanded inspection of books, bills, and other papers relating to the stock. Rosenthal says he put into the firm upwards of $6,000 of goods—exactly $6,135—and in the proof of loss he says that the three firms of which he bought these goods had gone out of business, and no verification or certification of them could be gotten. Why, he does not say. The firms yet had their books, it is supposed. In his deposition he states that he sent the original bills from the houses to his partner, Hillelson, at Davis. When Hillelson was asked for them, he said that he would not send them to the company, because he was afraid that it might destroy them; that they were valuable papers for the firm, and must be retained for reference. When asked for copies, they furnished only part of them—about half. As to the large fraction of goods in the store furnished by Hillelson & Kaplan from the Buckhannon stock, Hillelson, under oath, admitted that it was impossible to get copies of bills from the parties of whom they bought, and it would entail great labor and expense to get copies of all the goods they had in stock, and from some wholesale houses it would be impossible to get copies at all. Now, here are thousands of dollars for which they furnished no bills, invoices, or inventory for examination. They claimed the stock to amount to $14,015.50. Of these, only 34 per cent. were purchased of disinterested parties, the balance being furnished by Rosenthal, claimed to be $3,542.39, leaving more than $6,000 for which no bills were furnished for examination or on the trial. The bulk of these goods were furnished by interested parties, and, without exhibiting the bills of purchase, they might put their own valuation upon them. No bills for the Hillelson & Kaplan goods were produced for examination. Moreover—what is very important—they did not produce them at the trial, showing that they were unable to comply with this warranty. They were experienced merchants, and knew that due course of business, under policies of insurance requiring the production of bills of purchase when called for, imperatively required, fairly and honestly required, the preservation of bills of purchase, so that in case of fire the insuring company might have some means, from disinterested sources, the wholesale houses, by which to ascertain with reasonable certainty the extent of the loss. The plaintiffs made no efforts to get these bills. They do not show that they were lost. They give no sufficient excuse for nonproduction. They seem to think that the company must pay the loss as fixed by their own estimate, which, at best, under the evidence—under their own evidence—is but guesswork, as they kept no good books or accurate inventory. This appears from the whole evidence in the case. Their evidence is unsatisfactory and discrepant. How material it is that the company, when loss occurs, should have these bills of purchase to go by, in protecting themselves from fraudulent claim or overvaluation by interested parties! This covenant is surely the essence of the contract. None could be more material to the insurance company. The insured party must be always ready to show his loss. Papers that were the best evidence of value were absent when called for, and absent at the trial. The plaintiffs refused to send what appears they had to Cleveland for examination by the company, but demanded that a place in West Virginia be fixed for examination of such as it appears they could present, although the policy gave power to the company to designate the place; but what does that matter, when we know that they did not have such papers to prove the full sum they demanded, since they did not produce them in the circuit court of Tucker county—that is, as to a very large portion of the valuation claimed? The company seems to have suspected foul play in the destruction of the goods, and overvaluation. The business began November 1st, and in November and December the firm took out policies from several insurance companies to the extent of some $10,000. The policy in question is for $1,500, dated 5th December, 1893. The fire was 12th January, 1894. The warranty in question was not complied with. Being a promissory warranty, this defeats recovery. O'Brien v. Commercial Ins. Co., 63 N. Y. 108; 2 May on Ins. § 465; Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Mispelhorn, 50 Md. 180. In the latter case the court said: "The very object of this eighth condition is to put means in the power of the insurer to scrutinize the claims of the insured, and to protect itself against fraud. The provision is such as the parties were competent to make, and, having made it a part of their contract, the courts have no dispensing power over it." For want of these papers, there was not such preliminary proof of loss, or proof of loss on the trial, as the policy demanded—as justice demanded—because the burden of proof of compliance with this necessary requirement of the policy was on the plaintiff. It was a promissory warranty, compliance was a condition precedent to recovery, and the burden of showing it was on the plaintiff. Flanagan v. Phenix Ins. Co., 42 W. Va. 426, 28 S. E. 513; Adkins v. Globe Ins. Co., 45 W. Va. 384, 32 S. E. 256; 4 Joyce on Ins. § 3790. The evidence to meet this requirement of the policy being thus short, and insufficient to warrant a verdict, the court was justified in directing a verdict for the defendant. Ketterman v. Dry Fork R. Co., 48 W. Va. 606, 37 S. E. 683. It is hardly necessary to say that the exceptions because of refusal of the court to allow certain questions to be answered by Hillelson cannot be sustained, because it does not appear what the witness would answer, or what he was expected to answer, so that we could see whether the answer would be material. Jackson v. Hough, 38 W. Va. 237, 18 S. E. 575; Brock v. Bear (Va.) 42 S. E. 307. See Sesler v. Coal Co., 51 W. Va. 318, 41 S. E. 216.

Decree affirmed.

HENRY C. WERNER CO. v. CALHOUN et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 8, 1904.)

SALE OF BUSINESS—CONTINUANCE OF BUSINESS NAME—LIABILITY OF FORMER OWNER —NOTICE OF SALE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. A retail merchant, who, after conducting his individual business as such merchant under a name and style similar to those commonly used by copartnerships and corporations, sells his store to another, who continues to carry it on under the same name and style, purchasing, in the name under which the business is conducted, goods from the former dealers of his predecessor, must give such former dealers notice of his retirement from the business, to avoid liability for the purchase money of goods so purchased after his retirement, unless, before such subsequent sales, such former dealers had knowledge of the change of proprietorship of the store.

2. A former dealer is, in such case, entitled to actual notice; and publication thereof in a newspaper, and changing the name of the proprietor on the sign at the place of business, do not constitute notice to him.

3. On an issue as to whether or not actual notice was given in such a case, notoriety of the fact of the change of proprietorship in the town in which the business is carried on is not admissible evidence, unless connected with other facts which, together with it, form a sufficient basis for a finding by the jury of actual knowledge on the part of the former dealers; nor is it permissible to show that, before the retirement, checks given in payment of bills bore the signature of the proprietor of the store, and, after the sale, the name under which the business was carried on for signature.

4. It is proper for the trial court to refuse instructions so framed as to direct inquiries by the jury as to facts not material or relevant to the issue, as their tendency is to mislead and confuse the jury.

5. A verdict will not be disturbed for want of a proper instruction, unless it was requested and refused, nor for failure of the trial court to so modify an improper instruction requested as to make it proper, and then give it, unless it can be seen that such failure, for some reason, such as other incomplete instructions given, may have prejudiced the party requesting it.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, McDowell County; J. M. Sanders, Judge.

Action by the Henry C. Werner Company against A. L. Calhoun and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Rucker, Anderson & Hughes and Strother, Taylor & Strother, for plaintiffs in error. D. E. Johnston and R. C. & B. McClaugherty, for defendant in error.

POFFENBARGER, P. A. L. Calhoun, doing business at Keystone, McDowell county, under the name and style of "Union Bargain House," which name, together with the addition, "A. L. Calhoun, Proprietor, H. A. Womack, Manager," was displayed on a sign on the front of the building in which the business was carried on, began to purchase boots and shoes from the Henry C. Werner Company, of Columbus, Ohio, in June or July, 1898, at the solicitation of W. T. Watkins, its traveling salesman, and continued to do so at intervals, and also to run and operate the said store, until the 1st day of September, 1899, on which date he sold the store to C. Womack, a brother of H. A. Womack, who seems to have been about the store prior to that time, and, just before that transaction, as well as afterwards, as late as December 27, 1899, goods were bought of the Werner Company and put into the store, without any notice, as the company claims, of the sale by Calhoun to Womack. This action was brought against Calhoun to recover the balance due on account of the purchase money of a part of the goods, and a judgment was rendered in the plaintiff's favor for the sum of $465.95, from which Calhoun seeks relief on the ground of alleged errors committed by the court in overruling his motion to set aside the verdict, in refusing to give two instructions asked for by him, in admitting certain testimony on behalf of the plaintiff, objected to by him, and in sustaining objections on the part of the plaintiff to certain evidence offered by him.

The two instructions refused form the basis of the principal part of the argument in the brief for the plaintiff in error. They read as follows:

"(2) The court instructs the jury that, before they can find for the plaintiff in this case, they must believe from the evidence in this case that H. A. Womack, at the time of the purchase of the goods, the price for which this action is instituted, was the agent of A. L. Calhoun, and, as such agent, had authority to purchase the said goods, or that said Calhoun received and accepted said goods; and, unless they do believe from the evidence that the said Womack was the agent of said Calhoun, and had authority to purchase the said goods, or that the said Calhoun received the goods and accepted them, then they must find for the defendant.

"(3) The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence in this case that the Henry C. Werner Company, or W. T. Watkins, the salesman of said company, knew that said H. A. Womack was the agent of said A. L. Calhoun, and that the goods were purchased by said Womack, it was the duty of the plaintiff to ascertain the extent of the agency of said Womack; that they dealt with said Womack at their own risk; and, if they believe from the evidence that the said Womack exceeded his authority as agent for said Calhoun, then they must find for the defendant in this case, even though they may believe that said Calhoun was the owner of the Union Bargain House at the time of the purchase of said goods."

Some of the goods were purchased before, and some after, the sale by Calhoun to Womack. It will be observed that instruction No. 2 says the jury must find for the defendant unless they believe that, at the time of the purchase of the goods, Womack was the agent of Calhoun, with authority to purchase the goods, or that Calhoun received and accepted the goods. It being conceded by the plaintiff and admitted by the defendant that the sale had been made on or about the 1st day of September, 1899, prior to the purchase of a large portion of the goods, for the price of which this suit was brought, it is clear that, in strictness of law, Womack was not the agent of Calhoun then, and that Calhoun did not receive the goods. But it does not follow, as will be shown, that he could not be liable for the price of the goods, notwithstanding these facts. Hence the instruction, if given, would have tended to mislead the jury, by directing their inquiries to immaterial facts. Instruction No. 3 is bad for the same reason. The real question involved, and the one decisive of the case, is not want of agency in Womack, nor the extent of his agency at the time of the purchase. The instruction suggests the ownership of the store by Calhoun at the time of the purchase of the goods—a matter admittedly not true—and presents to the jury the inquiry as to whether Womack was his agent, as such owner, and the extent of that agency. A proper instruction, directing an inquiry by the jury as to what were Womack's powers, as agent of Calhoun, before September 1, 1899, and a finding in favor of the defendant as to the purchase money of goods bought after that date, if they believed from the evidence that the plaintiff or its agent knew Womack had had no authority to purchase goods for the store while the defendant owned it, could have been so framed as not to have been objectionable on the ground of tendency to mislead or confuse the jury; and the court would, no doubt, have given it, had a request therefor been made. On that issue evidence for both parties was introduced, but it is well-settled law that a verdict will not be disturbed for want of a proper instruction not asked for. Nor is the court bound to modify an improper instruction asked for, so as to make it good, and then give it. Gas Co. v. City of Wheeling, 8 W. Va. 320; Rosenbaum v. Weeden, 18 Grat. 785, 98 Am. Dec. 787.

The only real issue in the case is whether, upon retiring from the business of the Union Bargain House, Calhoun gave notice to the dealer from whom he had been buying goods before the severance of his relations with that store, so as to relieve himself from liability for goods sold to it thereafter. Counsel for plaintiff in error do not deny that it was his duty to give such notice, but they insist that sufficient notice was given, but what is relied upon as notice is not such as is customary under the circumstances. According to his own testimony, Calhoun published notice of his sale in a local newspaper, and the sign in front of the store was changed so as to read, "Union Bargain House. C. Womack Proprietor, H. A. Womack Manager," after which, and before some of the sales were made, Watkins was frequently at the store, but is not shown to have read the sign. Then he says he had a conversation with Watkins in the month of September, 1899, on a train between Welch and Keystone, in which Watkins made inquiries about the financial standing and reliability of the Womacks. In addition to this, John Cobbs testifies that Watkins came to him about a month after the sale and asked him about the Womacks; wanting to know if he would be safe in selling to them. He further says Watkins asked him if Calhoun was with them, and was told that witness did not think he was, as they had changed the sign. Watkins does not deny the conversation on the train, or the conversation with Cobbs, but he says they occurred in July, 1900, long after the making of the last sale of goods, and that his first information of the sale of the store was derived from Calhoun the day he met him on the train. Another witness (H. A. Womack) says he notified Watkins of the sale soon after it was made. But Watkins denies it.

Calhoun testifies that, while he owned the store, he paid the plaintiff by his personal checks; and the proof is that, after the date of the sale thereof, checks were sent to the plaintiff, signed, "Union Bargain House." He offered to introduce in evidence one of the checks sent by him to the plaintiff, but the court excluded it. The court also refused to allow one of his witnesses to answer the following question: "Do you know whether or not it was generally known in that town at that time that A. L. Calhoun had sold out?" These rulings are excepted to. Whether the court erred, and, if so, whether the error is prejudicial, calling for a reversal of the judgment, depends upon the character of the notice which the law requires in such cases. The same principle governs here as in the case of the dissolution of a copartnership. "The law says that actual notice must be brought home to former customers of the firm, and notice by publication to the other persons. The meaning of these loose phrases will be discussed hereafter. The reason of them is as follows: One class of persons has become acquainted with the firm, and, by presumption of law, with its membership, so far, at least, as this is not dormant. These are entitled to the same certainty of notice of dissolution as they had of its existence, which is actual knowledge. The rest of the world, i. e., that part of it which has not given credit to the firm, became acquainted with the fact of its existence from reputation, hearsay, or their own observation. And this is to be counteracted by a publicity of the same sort, and at least measurably as widely spread, viz., proper publication, generally by advertisement in the proper newspaper. It is true that the latter class may be as much misled by want of actual knowledge of dissolution as the dealer class, yet the partners cannot know who such persons are, and, if more than constructive notice were required, a partner would, in the often-quoted language of Lord Kenyon in Abel v.

Sutton, 8 Esp. 108, 'never know when he was to be at peace, and freed from all the concerns of the partnership.'" Bates on Part. § 606. "One who has previously sold goods to the firm on credit is undoubtedly entitled to actual notice. All the foregoing phrases—'actual dealer,' 'former customer,' 'creditor,' or 'one who has trusted'—will include him." Id. § 613. "If a partner contracts in the name of a firm with a third person after the partnership is dissolved, but that fact is not made public or known by such third person, the law considers the contract as being made with the firm, and upon their credit, and they are all bound." Dickinson v. Dickinson, 25 Grat. 321.

Though this is not the case of a retiring partner, the rule in such case governs it. "Where one who has carried on business alone under a firm name sells the business to his son, who continues the business under the same name, the former is liable for goods purchased by the latter from an actual dealer with the former, who has no knowledge or notice of the transfer." Elverson v. Leeds, 97 Ind. 336, 49 Am. Rep. 458. An analogous case is that of McGowan v. American Tan Bark Co., 121 U. S. 575, 7 Sup. Ct. 1315, 30 L. Ed. 1027, in which the following instruction was approved as having correctly stated the law: "If the jury find, from the evidence, that the defendants were, prior to June 23, 1881, doing business as partners under the name of 'The McGowan Pump Company,' or 'McGowan Pump Co.,' and that plaintiff dealt with them before said date as such partners, and had no knowledge of any change in said business, then said contract is the contract of defendants, and defendants cannot avoid or escape liability thereon, even if on that date a corporation existed called 'The McGowan Pump Company,' with which defendants may have been connected, and to which they had turned over their entire partnership business and assets."

What is actual notice to which the dealer is entitled, and admissible evidence thereof, are questions now to be determined. The former is one of fact, and not of law. No particular form or method of giving such notice is prescribed by law, although the usual mode is by letter to the dealer, apprising him of the fact of retirement. Vernon v. Manhattan Co., 17 Wend. 523. In the same case, on appeal (22 Wend. 194), Senator Wager said: "As to persons having prior dealings, notice is usually given by a circular sent to all correspondents of the house, or in some other mode by which knowledge of the dissolution may be brought to the creditor." Dickinson v. Dickinson, 25 Grat. 321, holds: "Though a public notice of dissolution may be sufficient as to persons who have had no prior dealings with the firm, a person who has had such dealings must have notice or actual knowledge of the dissolution, to release the partners who did not make or authorize the making of the note." In the opinion, Judge Staples said: "If actual knowledge of the dissolution is brought home to the party, he will be concluded, although no notice whatever may have been given. Whether, in such case, the evidence is sufficient to justify the inference of actual knowledge, is a question of fact for the consideration of a jury, under the supervision of the court. Irby v. Vining, 2 McCord, 379; Coddington v. Hunt, 6 Hill, 595; Collyer on Partnership, § 332." But manifestly the evidence must be more than sufficient to raise a mere suspicion of notice. It must be at least presumptive notice, calling for rebuttal. Accordingly it has been held that notoriety among business men and in the trade, much less in a community, is no evidence of actual notice, and is therefore inadmissible on the issue of actual knowledge of retirement. Central National Bank v. Frye et al., 148 Mass. 498, 20 N. E. 325; Pitcher v. Barrows, 17 Pick. 361, 28 Am. Dec. 306; Goddard v. Pratt, 16 Pick. 412, 28 Am. Dec. 259. In Pitcher v. Barrows it seems to have been held inadmissible on even an issue of constructive notice, which is binding except as to former dealers. Upon this view of the law, it is apparent that the court did not err in excluding the check. The change in the signature from "A. L. Calhoun" to "Union Bargain House," if noticed, would have imported nothing more than a change in the form of the bank account, or that Calhoun had two such accounts, either of which theories would have been clearly consistent with his continued ownership of the store. An inquiry from the plaintiff as to the reason for the change would have been an impertinence. The proposed evidence of notoriety of the change of ownership in the town of Keystone was no evidence, as has been shown, of actual knowledge or notice to the plaintiff of the fact, although its agent was frequently in the town, without direct evidence of his knowledge of the currency of the rumor, which might possibly have sufficed to put him on inquiry, but there is no evidence of such knowledge.

On the two issues of the extent of Womack's agency while Calhoun owned the store, and notice of the sale by Calhoun to C. Womack, the evidence is conflicting, and the credibility of the witnesses is involved. On a motion to set aside a verdict, the trial court has a wider discretion than has this court. Miller v. Insurance Co., 12 W. Va. 116, 29 Am. Rep. 452; Ruffner v. Hill, 31 W. Va. 428, 7 S. E. 13; Grayson's Case, 6 Grat. 712. But even there the power should be cautiously exercised, and this court will reverse the action of the court below in granting a new trial, "when the evidence is contradictory, if, when most favorably considered in support of the verdict, it does not still appear that the verdict was plainly not warranted by the evidence." Gwynn v.

Schwartz, 32 W. Va. 487, 9 S. E. 880; Reynolds v. Tompkins, 23 W. Va. 229; Johnson v. Burns, 39 W. Va. 658, 20 S. E. 686. Where there is conflicting testimony, and a jury has to decide on the credit of witnesses, the power of the court to grant a new trial ought to be very cautiously exercised. Brugh v. Shanks, 5 Leigh, 598. Whether there was actual notice depends upon questions of veracity between Watkins and Womack, Watkins and Calhoun, and Watkins and Cobbe; and, although there were three against one, the transactions were separate, and the demeanor of the witnesses on the stand, in the presence of the jury, enters into the question. The preponderance or weight of evidence is not determined by the number of witnesses on the one side, as against those on the other. Moreover, Watkins is corroborated by at least one circumstance. He wrote to his principal, July 6, 1900, saying, "I find to-day for the first time that A. L. Calhoun sold out to Womack Brothers last Sept. on the 30th and took a deed of trust on the stock to secure himself." This was not evidence manufactured on the witness stand, nor does it bear the impress of manufactured evidence at all. It carries on its face probability of truth as to the date of discovery, for even then his information was inaccurate.

On the question of the extent of Womack's agency, the evidence is equally conflicting and the proof dependent upon the credibility of the witnesses; Watkins being corroborated by circumstances, and Calhoun's testimony more or less inconsistent. Watkins says he never saw Calhoun but once, but sold to Womack on several occasions; and part of his testimony was delivered while holding in his hands the original orders which showed that he had made the sales at the store. Calhoun says he notified the company about six months before he sold out not to sell anything more to him, except upon his personal order; but he had not paid for all the goods that were put into the store prior to the date on which he sold out, and he does not specify any bill that was ordered by Womack without authority. At the same time he protests that he has paid all the bills he owes the plaintiff. The goods had been put into the store, presumably with his knowledge, and sold by him along with the balance of his stock. Upon this state of the evidence, the court cannot disturb the finding of the jury.

For the reasons aforesaid, the judgment will be affirmed.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF HUNTINGTON v. COOK et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. March 8, 1904.)

EQUITY—BILL—PARTIES—COSTS.

1. Syllabus in case of Kellam v. Sayre, 3 S. E. 589, 30 W. Va. 198, reaffirmed.

2. In a suit in chancery erroneously brought by A. for the use of B., and B. not being a party to the suit, an order of the circuit court directing the costs to be taxed against the beneficiary, B., and not against A., is void as against B., and does not make him a party to the suit.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wyoming County; J. M. Sanders, Judge.

Bill by the First National Bank of Huntington against G. D. Cook and others. Decree for complainant, and defendant Mary M. Cook appeals. Reversed.

Watts & Ashby, for appellant. J. B. Ellison, Col. Childers, and J. W. Arbuckle, for appellee.

McWHORTER, J. At the May rules, 1897, the First National Bank of Huntington, a corporation suing for the use and benefit of C. F. Cook (of Jacob), filed its bill in equity against G. D. Cook, Mary M. Cook, Jacob A. Cook, J. R. Robinson, special commissioner, Ida Sanders, administratrix of the estate of J. O. Sanders, deceased, J. R. Robinson, trustee, W. G. Cook, and W. E. Justice, in the clerk's office of the circuit court of Wyoming county, to enforce the lien of its judgment against G. D. Cook for \$1,271.95, recovered by it in the circuit court of said Wyoming county, with interest and costs, and subject thereto the surface of several small tracts of land described in the bill as being owned by said G. D. Cook, and also to subject a tract of 123 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres alleged to have been purchased at judicial sales and paid for by said G. D. Cook, and which he caused to be conveyed to his wife, the defendant Mary M. Cook, for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors in the collection of their debts, and especially the plaintiff, and that the defendant Mary M. Cook accepted said conveyance with full knowledge of such fraudulent intent and for the purpose of assisting said Cook in his fraudulent act, and praying that the conveyance so made to Mary M. Cook be declared fraudulent and void as to plaintiff's judgment, and that the same, together with the other lands described, be sold for the satisfaction of the debts set up in the plaintiff's bill, and for general relief. On the 30th of September, 1898, on motion of plaintiff the cause was remanded to rules "for the purpose of making new parties and making such other amendments as it may be advised." The defendants G. D. Cook and Mary M. Cook filed their separate demurrers and answers to said bill. The demurrers were argued and overruled, depositions taken, and the cause referred to a commissioner to ascertain the liens, by judgment or otherwise, against G. D. Cook, and other matters set out in the order, and a report was made by the commissioner in response to said order. On the 1st day of April, 1898, the cause was heard, when the First National Bank of Huntington, by its attorney, moved to dismiss the suit upon the ground that said bank had received the judgment described in the bill as therein shown, and was unwilling to be liable for the costs of the suit. The court overruled the motion to dismiss the case, and directed that the costs be taxed against the beneficiary, C. F. Cook, and not against said bank, and again overruled the demurrers of the defendants G. D. Cook and Mary M. Cook, and overruled the exceptions to the report of the commissioner reporting the liens upon the property, and ascertained and decreed the several liens upon the lands of G. D. Cook as reported by the commissioner, and set aside the deed to defendant Mary M. Cook for the 123 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres of land as fraudulent as to plaintiff and other lienholders named in the commissioner's report, and decreed the sale of the said lands to pay the said liens, from which decree the defendant Mary M. Cook appealed.

It is shown by the bill that on the 15th of May, 1895, the plaintiff assigned its said judgment against G. D. Cook to the defendant William E. Justice for value, and that on the 10th day of August, 1895, the defendant W. E. Justice, for value, assigned the said judgment to C. F. Cook (of Jacob). Although the bill was remanded to rules for new parties to be made thereto, the bill was not so amended, and it does not appear that C. F. Cook (of Jacob) was ever made a party to the suit. It is claimed by appellee that this defect is cured by the decree of the court entered on the 1st day of April, 1898, overruling the motion to dismiss the case, and directing that the costs be taxed against the beneficiary, C. F. Cook, and not against the bank, that this was in effect substituting C. F. Cook as plaintiff, and decreed that he should prosecute the suit in his name and at his costs. C. F. Cook not being a party, the court had no jurisdiction to make an order or decree requiring him to pay costs. A decree or judgment affecting the rights of a person not before the court is a nullity as to such person. This cause falls clearly within the rulings of this court in Kellam v. Sayer, 30 W. Va. 198, 3 S. E. 589, where it is held (Syl., point 1), "A suit in equity cannot be brought in the name of one party for the use of another;" and (point 2), "Where a judgment at law was recovered in the name of A. for the use of B., and afterwards A. brought a chancery suit in his own name for the use of B., the judgment creditor, and B. was not a party to the suit, and a decree was rendered enforcing said judgment lien, it was reversed for want of proper parties, and remanded for proper parties to be made." See, also, Grove v. Judy, 24 W. Va. 294, and Neely v. Jones, 16 W. Va. 625, 37 Am. Rep. 794.

The demurrer should have been sustained. Therefore the decrees entered in this cause are set aside and held for naught, the demurrer to the bill sustained for want of proper parties, and the cause remanded to the cir-cult court of Wyoming county, with leave to plaintiff to amend its bill by making proper parties thereto, and for further proceedings to be had therein.

ELBON v. HAMRICK et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 8, 1904.)

ERROR—DISMISSAL—CONTEST AS TO OFFICE— EXPIRATION OF TERM.

1. When, pending a writ of error, without fault of a party, an event occurs rendering it impossible for the appellate court, if it should decide in favor of the plaintiff, to grant him substantial relief, the court will not decide the merits and give formal judgment, but will dismiss the writ of error without awarding costs.

2. When a writ of error involves a contest as to an office, and while it is pending the term of the office ends, the writ of error will be dismissed without decision of the case, and without judgment as to costs.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Webster County;
W. G. Bennett, Judge.

Certiorari by W. W. Elbon against Benjamin Hamrick and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Dismissed.

Linn & Byrne and W. T. Talbott, for plaintiff in error. Morton & Wysong and H. O. Thurmond, for defendants in error

BRANNON, J. W. W. Elbon was elected councilman of the town of Addison, Webster county, but upon contest before the town council he was declared ineligible because not a freeholder, and then he sued out a writ of certiorari to reverse that decision, but the certiorari was dismissed by the circuit court as improvidently granted. Elbon obtained a writ of error.

The case now presents to this court for decision only a moot or useless question, for the reason that the term of office has expired, and, if Elbon were successful, he could not take the office. Our case of State v. Lambert, 52 W. Va. 248, 43 S. E. 176, fully discusses this, holding that if, pending a writ of error to a judgment awarding a mandamus commanding a town clerk to place a candidate's name on an official ballot, the election has been held, the writ of error will be dismissed "When pending an appeal, without any fault of defendant, an event occurs which renders it impossible for the appellate court, if it should decide the case in favor of the plaintiff, to grant him any effectual relief, the court will not proceed to a formal judgment, but will dismiss the appeal." Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651, 16 Sup. Ct. 132, 40 L. Ed. 298. There a party sought a right to vote, but the election was over. Taylor v. Maynor, 46 W. Va. 588, 33 S. E. 260, is decisive of this case, holding that, where a case involves right to town offices, and the term ends during pendency of a writ of error, the writ of error will be dismissed. Only a question of costs is left in the case. The subject is fully stated in 2 Cyc. 533. There we find that the court will not hear the case merely to adjudge costs. The principles above stated, and as to costs, will be found in Ferguson v. Millender, 32 W. Va. 30, 9 S. E. 38. Having no controversy on which to base a decision, how can we adjudicate costs? Costs depend on decision of the merits. We cannot award them in favor of the plaintiff in error without determining that he has right, or against the defendant, without finding him wrong.

Therefore we dismiss the writ of error, without costs.
